Down 3-1 entering the sixth inning, the Minutewomen bats finally came around, as Aprile, Lawson, Marean and Kuchinskas all reached base to start the frame and all except Aprile scored. After a groundout by Brumm, Bush singled and was tripled home by pinch hitter Stacey Nichols. Second baseman Tracey DuEst then singled home Nichols to round out the scoring.

"After clobbering the living hell out of Army in the first game," Sortino said."I really believe we were lulled to sleep. We didn't press. We knew we were going to score again, but we didn't know when.

"It's a great feeling to have when you know you can have an explosive inning. They didn't press and had great pitch selection."

All four runs scored by Army were unearned, bringing the total number of unearned runs allowed by the Minutewomen this season to 35.

"It's purely a combination of two things," said Sortino. "One is that that was the first time we stood on our own dirt. We hadn't even had a practice outside, with the infield [in poor condition]. And the second thing that is showing in this early part, is that we don't have the cohesion in the infield, and the chemistry that we should have. But that will be generated as we go along."

GAME NOTES: The Minutewomen host Hartford for a doubleheader today at Totman Field. The Lady Hawks carry a 7-3 record after splitting a doubleheader with Yale over the weekend.

Marean was named A-10 Player of the Week for the second consecutive week. The senior shortstop, who is working on an eight game hitting streak, went 4-for-6 with two doubles, three RBIs and three runs scored.

Backing the NHL players on a strike

The players of the National Hockey League aren't going on strike. . . yet.

Just what the NHL needed. A strike. The league that mishandles everything from suspensions for fighting to expansion (hockey in Tampa Bay?) to television contracts is now faced with labor problems. As if you had to ask, they're screwing up again.

The average salary of NHL players is among the lowest in all professional sports. While some mega-stars like Wayne Gretzky, Brett Hull and Mario Lemieux make millions, most hockey players are far behind their baseball, football and basketball counterparts.

Can you really blame them for wanting a new contract?

Greg Sukiennik

And while the Boston Bruins have been playing like they're already on strike, if players and owners can't agree on a new deal by Wednesday, the April 8 Stanley Cup playoffs — the reason they even bother to play the season — could be in jeopardy.

If you thought the sixth game of the 1988 Wales Conference finals (replacement refs in yellow sweatpants) was a disaster, you ain't seen nothing yet. The playoffs are the only reason anyone remotely cares about the regular season, save the occasional Islanders-Rangers slugfest. The playoffs are when most teams make their money, because most of the games sell out.

And so we wait until Wednesday. NHL commissioner John Ziegler and union chief Bob Goodenow are both playing hardball. The league has looked into the possibility of bringing up minor league players to fill rosters. The union threatens this strike may go past the playoffs and into the 1992-93 season.

And you, the fan, lose. Again.

Free agency is the reason a new agreement hasn't been inked yet. The players want a two-year deal with easier terms for free agency. The league insists on a contract good only until the end of the season. The old agreement expired Sept. 15.

The NBA's player agreement, considered an ideal labor-management pact because of the way teams agree to control salaries and share TV revenue, would not work in the NHL. The NHL doesn't have the television market share pro basketball does — the league's fault, to be certain — and member franchises aren't nearly as stable.

Tampa Bay's expansion bid is in financial trouble and it hasn't played a game yet. Meanwhile, even the worst expansion franchises in the NBA, Minnesota, Charlotte and Orlando, are raking in the bucks. Charlotte hasn't had less than a sellout at home yet in three really bad seasons.

Baseball splits with Temple

Minutemen led by Villone and Toothaker's pitching

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Last weekend wasn't a total washout for University of Massachusetts' sports teams playing in Philadelphia. Sure, the basketball team lost but the baseball team split an important 2-day, 4-game series with arch-rival Temple University.

Led by the pitching of ace Ron Villone in the opener, the Minutemen split last Saturday's double-header with the Owls, winning the first game 8-0 but losing the nightcap, 4-1.

On Sunday, the Minutemen (4-8, 2-2 in the Atlantic 10) blew a 6-1 lead in the sixth inning of the first game as Temple scored six runs and held on to a 7-6 score. UMass needed the second game Sunday to break even for the series and Jeff Toothaker responded, pitching a complete-game 7-hitter and whiffing nine Temple batters as the Minutemen won, 9-7.

The UMass offense was led by shortstop Steve Corradi in the series finale, who banged out three hits including his second homerun of the year. Corradi's dinger in the first inning gave UMass a 2-0 lead after leadoff hitter Greg LaRocca reached base on a Temple error.

UMass scored a third first inning run when Justin Howard knocked in John Carelli. The Minutemen would have a big third inning to give Toothaker a big lead to work with.

The two big weapons in the third were the walk and the single, as UMass collected three of each for four runs and a 7-2 lead. The Minutemen added one in the fourth for a 8-2 lead.

But like the first game, the Owls (7-14, 2-2 in the A-10) came roaring back late in Sunday's nightcap before Toothaker shut their offense down. Toothaker gave up a 3-run homer to cleanup hitter Bojanowski to cut the lead to 8-6, but UMass added an insurance run in the seventh on Jay Dodig's sacrifice fly.

"Jeff's performance was big," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "There were a couple of times where the game almost went the other way but he did the job and shut them down."

In Sunday's opener, the bottom of Temple's order victimized starter Scott Meaney in the sixth inning. The big hit included right fielder Dave Hoppel's 2-out game-winning hit in the sixth, a single that gave the Owls a 7-6 lead which they held on to.

UMass started things with a bang Saturday as Villone struck out 14 Owls while walking only five. The junior lefty notched his first shutout and second complete game of the year.

The Minutemen offense was adequate but not potent as they were whiffed 12 times by Temple pitcher Charlie Kell.

UMass scored single runs in the first, third, fifth and sixth innings, but the team saved its best for last.

A four-run seventh inning iced the game for the Minutemen, who hoped their offense would carry over to Saturday's second game.

Unfortunately, the UMass bats went silent, and Temple victimized starter Rich Graham for two unearned runs. Overall, Graham allowed only three hits, but it took Jeff January's seventh inning double to break Hoppel's no-hit bid.

UMass hosts Holy Cross

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts baseball team takes the field today (3 p.m., Lorden Field) for its home opener versus Holy Cross, it will be a battle of two teams headed in opposite directions.

The Minutemen, while suffering through an 0-4 start, have won three of their last five, including a weekend split of a four-game series in Philadelphia with Atlantic 10 rival Temple.

Holy Cross on the other hand has lost three-straight, all at the hands of its Patriot League nemesis, the Fordham Rams.

While the Minutemen come into the game on a bit of an upswing, UMass starter Jim Telgheder heads into the contest sporting an 0-2 record, while carrying with him an ERA of 9.95. Holy Cross' starter has yet to be announced, although it could be Jim Liebler, who has an even 1-1 record, with a modest 4.50 ERA.

"Jim's been having a tough time of it," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We've been playing a little young, and we just need to get into a groove."

Although the Minutemen's pitching has picked up a little as of late, hitting still continues to plague UMass, as they have managed just a .249 batting average, while scoring an average of five runs per game.

"If we expect to win, we've got to start hitting the ball better," Stone said.

The Minutemen are led by Justin Howard, who has hit .381 with six RBI and Steve Corradi, who is hitting at a .359 clip while leading the team with 8 RBI.

UMass fell to Holy Cross last year, and with Holy Cross possessing offensive weapons in co-captains Jerome Fuller, Matt Morgan and Mike Neary, the Minutemen will have to play more consistent in order to down the Crusaders this year.

Axl Rose: "We're doing it to help the babes."

Heavy metal band Guns 'N' Roses will journey to the UMass-Amherst campus for Spring Concert in an effort to raise money for the beleaguered Everywomen's Center.

"We can't believe they're really coming. Axl's our idol here at the center, so to us it's like a dream come true," said Everywimmins' Director Cheryl Wallflower.

The group is performing "to fulfill a spiritual void," the group said in a press statement.

"This is like our shot to help the chicks fight the war against patriarchal oppression," said Axl Rose, the lead singer of the band. "Basically, we're doing it to help the babes."

Rose has suggested earmarking the money for:

▶ Cable TV so they can watch the latest G'N'R videos on MTV.

▶ Concert T-shirts.

▶ Upgrading the G'N'R music collection Axl said he's sure they have hidden somewhere, from cassettes to CDs.

Wallflower lost her inhibitions during the press conference, dancing wildly while singing the lyrics from her favorite song "Anything Goes."

Sophomore communications major and ex-groupie, Michelle Brennion said the song "My Michelle" was written about her.

"I'm really excited. Axl's really cute and I always knew he was an advocate of women's rights," said Brennion. "He says I'm a babe, but it's him who's the babe."

Wallflower said Rose will be opening the concert with the song inspired when visiting

DOWN THE STREET — Basketball coach John "Pass the Fuckin' Ball" Calipari went to that big Sweet Sixteen in the sky yesterday after he was struck by a car on North Pleasant Street.

"What the fu—," said a startled Calipari.

The driver, Lenny Wertz, explained he was only doing his duty.

"He stepped out of the crosswalk and I felt it was my duty to hit the lawbreaking S.O.B.," said Wertz.

Wertz is the also the refree who called a technical foul on Calipari during the UMass-Kentucky game Thursday for stepping out of the coaches' box when UMass was only two points away from the Wildcats.

Kentucky coach Rick Pitino said the Wildcats would have beaten the Minutemen even if he "hadn't slipped Lenny a couple of bills."

Witnesses said Calipari was jaywalking but would have made it across the street unharmed if Wertz had not sped up after he saw Calipari leave the crosswalk.

▶ Other witnesses claimed it was actually a second car that hit Calipari. Men wearing sunglasses and trenchcoats standing nearby silenced onlookers, however.

Wertz was an all-around asshole about the entire situation.

"I call 'em like I see 'em," laughed Wertz.

Wertz was taken into protective custody and is expected to be beaten to death by fans that are sure to sneak into his cell when police leave the back door of the station unlocked at 9 p.m. tonight. Refreshments will be served.

Basketball fans who witnessed the accident were treated at University Funeral Services for mild coronaries. After having their temperatures taken anally, they were given condoms and sent on their way.

Admidst the wailing and wearing of ashes and sackcloth on campus, a multitude of fans wearing Sweet Sixteen T-shirts and carrying "Cal 4-ever" signs blockaded North Pleasant Street late yesterday afternoon and have taken up residence on the site of Calipari's death. They have vowed to stand vigil until they get bored.

▶ Pope John Paul II called from the Vatican to express his deepest regret and to see if there were any UMass Sweet Sixteen T-shirts left.

▶ "Eat my shorts," said Chancellor O'Moretuition.

▶ Funeral services are scheduled for 3 p.m. tomorrow at the Curry Chicken Cage.

Tickets will be tossed out randomly to a stampeding crowd of crazed fans at an unspecified time tomorrow in what promises to be about as organized as anything the ticket office arranges where basketball is concerned.

Casualties are expected.

Stupid Whitmore screws up, again

It may not matter much if you follow the beat of a different drummer, but be sure you follow the right tour guide.

When local media visited the University yesterday they had been originally scheduled to meet with campus building officials for a tour of the most badly damaged academic and administration buildings but they instead ended up on a regular student tour.

"It was a total screw-up," said Karin "Watermellon" Sherbert, University propagandist.

About 20 high school seniors with parents in tow who had expected an impressive tour through the idyllic campus instead endured a jaunt through all the deteriorating buildings by the Physical Plant head Pete McWoznak.

"I couldn't understand why the campus would show us outright how bad it is," said one exasperated parent. "Boy, this school really sucks."

The reporters expected a tour through the shabby buildings, leaking roofs and exploding water pipes which now grace the sprawling campus.

However, members of the press were instead treated to the attributes of the "wonderful" library system, the "diversity" of the student body and the "thrilling" night-life on campus.

▶ University officials believe a local saboteur may to be blame for the embarrassing error.

▶ Officials also said some members of the media were so impressed by the presentation by the "official" student tour guide that they may enroll themselves.

Today's debate is on PERSONAL GRATIFICATION - BY HAND OR WITH ELECTRONICS and what the USA government should support.

Masturbation: reach out and touch yourself

OUR VIEW Masturbation, within some limits, is a preferred form of personal expression on par with freedom of speech.

Manual manipulation is a fine private act between oneself and one's genitals. For most people it is more than just a safe outlet, it is a high art. The power to control one's orgasm is an intensely personal and highly rewarding experience.

Here at UMA TODAY, with a predominance of single, unattached people, masturbation has developed into a bathroom sport.

And in these days of sexual disease, masturbation is exceedingly clean and safe. For those especially afraid, a condom may be worn with little loss of sensitivity—and it makes clean-up a breeze.

Recently Dear Abby received a letter from a 13-year-old girl whose parents had caught her auto-eroticizing. The punishment: her parents removed the doors from her room and now watch her carefully.

Why? It is perfectly healthy. It is her parents with the hangup.

Our position is simple: Masturbation is a privilege and one that should be promoted by the USA government.

Nintendo is way cool

OPPOSING VIEW Nintendo is a useful, socially acceptable pastime cherished by the United States.

Why twiddle your thumbs when you can help Mario and Luigi save the princess with them?

Nintendo and its clones are as much a part of the USA's culture as MTV, pro wrestling, Beverly Hills 90210 and other mindless diversions. Kids love it and it's good for them.

By Michael Mornssey, a UMA TODAY columnist based in Amherst, MA.

Although kids in the USA suck at math and science, abuse alcohol and drugs and listen to Slayer, they play Nintendo better than anyone else in the world. What's wrong with that?

While kids in Japan and Korea go to school all year, kids in the USA blow off stress by playing Nintendo. What would you prefer for your child: a study-happy nerd, or a cool dropout with lots of friends who kicks ass and takes names on Double Dragon II?

Nintendo teaches hand-eye coordination. It teaches basic values like the importance of sports and killing as a solution to problems. It gets kids interested in technology; namely, how they can buy more of it. What's more American than the profit motive?

Some say masturbation is better than Nintendo. But you can play Nintendo for hours on end without becoming sore or dehydrated. And you don't get that tired feeling after.

U.N. approves sanctions against Libya

Security council bans arm sales,

By PETER JAMES SPIELMANN
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The Security Council on Tuesday branded Libya a terrorist state for shielding six men accused of blowing up Pan Am Flight 103 and a French airliner, approving sanctions that ban flights and arms sales to the North African country.

Wearing black for mourning, relatives of some of the 270 victims of the 1988 Pan Am bombing watched from the visitors' gallery as the council imposed the sanctions by a 10-0 vote.

It was only the second time the Security Council has imposed sanctions on a single country for flouting its demands on peace and security. The first was after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait.

George Williams, whose son Jordy died when the plane blew up over Scotland, said: "Libya has been indicted, the finger has been pointed at them as having been deeply involved in the bombing of Pan Am 103."

Susan Cohen, whose 20-year-old daughter Theodora also died in the Pan Am bombing, said: "It's not nearly enough. We need an oil embargo. We won't get the truth unless a lot more goes into this."

Although the resolution prohibits the sale of arms, airplanes and aircraft parts to Libya, it includes no broad trade embargo, meaning Libya's oil exports will not be affected. The resolution also calls on member states to expel most Libyan diplomats.

Hours before the vote, Western diplomats said Libya was preventing some foreigners from leaving the country, raising fears that they could be held as hostages. The State Department said none of the 500 to 1,000 Americans in the country were having trouble leaving Libya.

The sanctions are scheduled to take effect April 15, but will not be imposed if Libya surrenders the six suspects sought by France, Britain and the United States and takes steps to fulfill all the demands of the resolution.

The ban on flights to and from Libya means those wishing to leave would have to take boats or drive either to Cairo or Tunis.

The resolution says Col. Moammar Gadhafi's government must renounce such acts and "cease all forms of terrorist actions and all assistance to terrorist groups."

The destruction of the Pan Am jetliner and a 1989 bombing attack on a French airliner over Niger were "no anomaly but unfortunately part of a long, well-known history of support for terrorism and efforts to destabilize other governments," U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering said.

Western diplomats have refused to say what steps Libya will have to take to prove it is not a supporting or harboring terrorista, but observers expect Britain to seek information on the Irish Republican Army, which is believed supported is part by Libya.

China, Zimbabwe, Morocco, Cape Verde and India abstained on the resolution, which also calls for the payment compensation to families of the 441 victims from 32 nations who died in the two bombings.

A Security Council resolution requires nine affirmative votes to pass, if none of the five permanent members—the United States, Russia, China, Britain and France — kills it with a veto.

The United States and Britain have indicted two Libyan suspects in the Pan Am bombing. France wants to try four Libyans in the bombing of the French UTA airliner over Niger in 1989 — an attack that killed 171 people.

Brown takes second win over Clinton

By CHRISTOPHER GRAFF
Associated Press

MONTPELIER, Vt. — Jerry Brown beat Bill Clinton in Vermont's Democratic presidential primary Tuesday night, saddling him with a second straight setback and gaining headway for their high-stakes primary battle in New York.

This time it was a runaway for Brown, to go with his narrow upset victory in the Connecticut primary a week ago.

Uncommitted Democrats were gaining more caucus support than Clinton.

The outcome left he Arkansas governor lamenting that his earlier victories had cast him in the unpopular role of the insider.

Brown said he's gained a strong showing against "what has been the front-runner."

While Vermont Democrats chose sides, Clinton and Brown argued about taxes, big-city problems and policies in New York, which holds its presidential primary next Tuesday.

With 90 percent of the Vermont's 246 cities and towns reporting, Brown had 47 percent of the vote, Clinton 16 percent. Uncommitted Democrats accounted for 25 percent, and Paul Tsongas, who has dropped from the campaign, had 9 percent.

Brown was leading for 6 of the 14 Vermont delegate votes, Clinton for 3, with the rest uncommitted.

With those gains, Clinton now has 1,018 of the 2,145 delegate commitments needed to claim the Democratic presidential nomination. Brown now has 159, according to the Associated Press delegate survey.

"That's a very strong showing," Brown said. "I'm very pleased but this is a very tight race. Governor Clinton is ahead in delegates and we've still got to fight."

"You may have thought two weeks ago that I was the assured nominee, but I never did," Clinton said after the evening debate. "By being the outsider and winning, you become the insider."

Outside his New York hotel, Clinton claimed he'd be elated with three delegates in Vermont, saying, "We had so much to do here and in Wis-

Keg law gets mixed reviews

Purpose, effectiveness of new policy is under fire

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The new keg policy, which the Amherst Select Board voted unanimously to implement on April 13, is getting a mixed reaction from students, merchants and Amherst town officials.

"The keg law has been a long time coming," said Chief Donald Maia of the Amherst police.

The bylaw states, "To protect the health, safety and welfare of its inhabitants, this bylaw shall permit the town of Amherst to regulate the possession of kegs containing malt beverages, and the dispensing of malt beverages from kegs."

"People who want permits will have to be responsible," said Maia.

There has been some concern from students that the police are going to make a list in order to help pinpoint where parties are going to take place.

"You don't need a road map to know where all the parties are in Amherst, all you have to do is get on a PVTA bus and follow the crowd," said Maia.

"The main reason [the bylaw was implemented] is that there is approximately 200 kegs being sold in the area on a given weekend and there is a fair bet that some is being dispensed to minors or being sold without a license," said Barry Del Castilho, the town manager of Amherst. "This is an attempt to get some idea of who has the kegs and what they are doing with the beer."

But Thomas D. Whitney, an attorney in Amherst who specializes in student representation, does not agree with Maia or Del Castilho.

"The game has changed. It is more like the 1890s than the 1990s because of the enforcement of the law, and also the police are pro-active. The police don't wait for the crime, instead they are looking for crimes before they are committed," Whitney said.

The penalty for violation of the keg law includes a fine of $200 for the first offense, and upwards of $300 for each subsequent offense.

"Basically the keg licensing is another band-aid that isn't going to solve the real problem," said Ted Chambers, Commuter Area President for the Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts.

"We don't blame the town for a problem with [on-campus] housing policies at UMass that they didn't create and can't possibly solve," said Chambers.

"They're [town of Amherst] not going to solve the problem until they are willing to join students in standing up to the University housing policies. The real problem is the town isn't taking a stand against these policies," he said.

Anne Hynnes, a teaching assistant in the Peer Alcohol Education Program at UMass, agrees that the alcohol policy at the University has to be reworked and is indeed in the process of being reviewed.

"The University is trying to work with the Amherst community, for instance by looking at the alcohol policy that is now in place and reorganizing it, as well reviewing the current alcohol residential education," she said.

"Being 21, I do not like the idea of having to get a license to get a keg," said Mark Delcore, a junior history major.

"I think that it is just another nail in the coffin of the University, because it is just one more thing that is making this school less appealing," said Mike O'Niel, a junior resource economics major.

The new bylaw, although it affects students, is also going to have an affect on area businesses.

"It will definitely increase my business," said Mark D. Forsyth, the owner of Twister's Tavern. "However, as I look at the overall picture, this is just one more message from the town to the students that they're not wanted here."

"I don't believe that the amount of people going into area bars is going to change," said Michael Fagerson, beverage superintendent at the Top of the Campus Lounge, as well as a 1977 graduate of UMass. "Although some people who have parties are irresponsible, there are others that are victims of circumstance."

POWER plans march for freedom of choice

By KIMBERLEY A. REYNOLDS
Collegian Staff

"We Won't Go Back — We Will Fight Back." That is the slogan for the Freedom of Choice March taking place on Sunday, April 5 in Washington, D.C.

Three buses will leave the University of Massachusetts on Saturday, April 4 at 11 p.m. Approximately 160 people have already signed up for this trip and another bus will be added should there be demand.

The Progressive Organization for Women's Rights is organizing this bus trip with help from the National Organization for Women. The cost is $40 — there is a sliding fee scale.

"There have increasingly been incursions into women's reproductive rights since 1989 when the Supreme court ruled on Webster v. Reproductive Health Services," according to Melissa Weinberger, a sophomore STPEC and Women's Studies major, and a member of POWER.

The Webster ruling involved a Missouri case which severely restricted abortion rights in that state and opened the door for other states to impose restrictions.

"This march is both a protest of those incursions and a way of letting legislators and voters know that this, an election year, is an important one for this issue," said Weinberger.

There will be a meeting of marchers beginning at 8 p.m. Saturday on the Concourse to make signs and banners to carry on the march. Buses will leave Haigis Mall at 11 p.m. and will arrive in Washington at approximately 7 a.m. There will be no stops en route, and those going may bring pillows and blankets and any food or drink they might need.

Upon arrival at the Pentagon marchers will take the Metro to the Ellipse. Starting at 10 a.m. they plan to march down Pennsylvania Avenue, past the White House to the National Gallery of Art, a route of approximately 1 mile. At the National Gallery there will be a rally and speeches lasting until about 5:30 p.m. They will return by Metro to the Pentagon, and bus home.

According to Weinberger, "In light of recent events (the Tyson and Kennedy trials, etc.), there's a huge backlash to force women back into the family and traditional roles. We have to avoid that. Reproductive choice has traditionally been a way for women to assert themselves. We have to continue that."

The National Abortion Rights Action League is also sponsoring some other events in the city, such as electoral training on Saturday, and a Congressional Lobby Day for the Freedom of Choice Act on Monday.

The Freedom of Choice Act seeks to codify Roe v. Wade (the landmark pro-choice ruling), putting in place a national right to choice.

"The April 5th weekend is a key to pro-choice activity in this crucial year — and students are absolutely critical to the success of the event," said NARAL.

Panelists cite evidence of intelligence crimes

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

Three panelists spoke last night at the University of Massachusetts on crimes committed by U.S. intelligence agencies over the past several decades

Joe Baltar, a UMass alum who devotes part of his time exposing FBI activities, said the FBI had a role in the assassination of Harry and Harriette Moore in 1951. Harry Moore was president of the NAACP at that time.

"Today there is evidence that the FBI carries out phone taps on Supreme Court judges," Baltar said.

Ken Lawrence, a Mississippi resident investigating FBI activities for the past 20 years, said the FBI is really a "national political police whose role is to disrupt, discredit and neutralize organizations working for progressive change."

Addressing the extent of the FBI's surveillance operations, Lawrence said the FBI had opened a file on him since he was 16 years old, for "buying a socialist newspaper."

Information on the FBI's activities was uncovered in a major way in 1961, when concerned citizens burgled an FBI office and discovered the COINTELPRO (Counter-Intelligence Program) papers.

"Part of this operation involved the assassination of major Black Panther party leaders in the 1960's," said Lawrence. In fact, the FBI never protected civil rights workers, according to Lawrence. "The movie 'Mississippi Burning' is one of the biggest lies of that time," he said.

Louis Wolf, co-founder and co-editor of the "Covert Action Information Bulletin," said it is significant that the FBI actively supported the production of the movie "Silence of the Lambs," which just won so many Oscars.

The film depicted a favorable image of the FBI's role in preparing psychological profiles of serial mass murderers, Wolf said.

He then went on to expose possible FBI connections in the assassination of Martin Luther King.

"A number of mysterious developments are coming to light, such as the altering of King's hotel reservations to a room with a balcony, just two days before his assassination," Wolf explained.

He said the CIA may also have had a role in such an operation by providing false identification papers to the hit man. Elements of the police force in Memphis, where King was assassinated, also cooperated in the conspiracy, Wolf said.

Addressing international operations of U.S. intelligence agencies, Wolf said the CIA has been responsible for the murders of Third World leaders like Salvador Allende in Chile, Maurice Bishop in Grenada, and Walter Rodney in Guyana.

Wolf said he was in Laos and Phillipines in the 1960's, witnessing the havoc of CIA operations. "One of my Laotian friends died in my arms as a result of a raid facilitated by the CIA," Wolf said. "I was 26 years old at the time, and it had a profound effect on me," he explained.

In the Phillipines, Wolf, as a conscientious objector, was able to uncover a death squad trained and equipped by U.S. forces.

Lawrence added that in El Salvador, the FBI provided death squads with lists of opponents based in the U.S.

He said the FBI and CIA are only some of 18 federal intelligence agencies. One such organization is the National Reconnaissance Organization, which specializes in satellite surveillance.

Lawrence said the NRO is developing remote sensing facilities which will enable it to track an automobile from coast to coast in the U.S., regardless of obstacles like weather or tunnels.

Wolf added that three-quarters of NASA flights carry NRO payloads.

The event was organized by a group of students as a requirement for a UMass class on women's struggles for liberation.

UMass to host writers

Conference looks at 'Art of Nonfiction'

By SARAH LEVESQUE
Collegian Staff

A literary conference scheduled for tomorrow and Friday at the University of Massachusetts will present a panel of eminent writers discussing their craft.

Top nonfiction writers will speak on a various topics in "The Art of Nonfiction — A Writer's Conference," to be held at Memorial Hall throughout the day. The event is free and open to the public.

In conjunction with the conference, Larry Massett, host of the nationally broadcast public radio documentary show, "Sound Print," will talk about the art of creating broadcast narratives and play several of his aired tapes tonight at the East Lecture Hall in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College from 7 to 10 p.m.

Tomorrow the first panel of nonfiction writers will discuss the topic, "Capturing the Spirit of Time and Place," at 10 a.m. The writers speaking include Mary Morris, author of two traveling memoirs, Nothing to Declare and From Beijing to Berlin.

This conference, the brainchild of Professor Madeline Blais, a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist, focuses on the emerging genre of "literary journalism." Blais and Professor Norman Sims are the co-organizers of this conference.

"Literary journalism is characterized by the immersion reporting," said Sims. "[It's] attention to character, narrative and personal voice in a way that separates it from newspaper writing. It's writing in a creative form of nonfiction."

This conference highlights these topics: Thursday — "Capturing the Spirit of Time and Place," 10 a.m.- noon; "Editors and Writers", 2-4 p.m. Friday — "Memoirs", 10 a.m.- noon; "The Art of Researching the Nonfiction Book," 1:30-3:30 p.m.

In place of Phil Caputo and Cynthia Gorney, two new writers will join the panel discussion, "The Art of Researching." Joseph Nocera, a columnist for the magazine GQ, is presently writing a book about the money culture of the 1980s. The other new panelist is Mark Kramer, a writer in residence at Boston University, and author of Invasive Procedure and Three Farms.

"The Art of Nonfiction" is sponsored by the Journalism Department and the Five-College Consortium. The first conference was held in 1989.

Rap artist Chuck D. to speak at the FAC

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

Self-proclaimed "media pirate" and rap vanguard Chuck D is bringing his noise to the ears of UMass.

The booming voice behind rap group Public Enemy will be descending upon lucky ticketholders tonight in the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

Carlton Ridenhour, otherwise known as Chuck D, grew up the oldest of three children in the Long Island, N.Y. suburb of Roosevelt. In an appearance at Smith College in February, he recalled how he was interested in architecture, but Roosevelt High School had no such program. He was bused to a high school in the all-white suburb of Westbury, New York.

He remembered one white student commenting that he thought all black people were just like those on the television show "Good Times." Chuck D said his objective now is to "let the white mainstream know the black perspective."

It was as a student at Adelphi University in the early 80s that he became interested in the then fledgling world of rap. He did some recordings at the university radio station, and he and some friends started radio shows and club promotions.

After three years of coaxing by Rick Rubin of Def Jam Records, Chuck D finally signed with the label, and the outspoken would-be architect began building his rap career.

The first Public Enemy album, Yo, Bum Rush the Show, saw the light of day in 1987, and it was uphill from there. However, it was a rocky uphill climb, as the band has had to survive bad press, public criticism and record company hesitance over its controversial songs.

Since then, PE has released four albums with platinum success, including It Takes A Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back, Fear of a Black Planet and most recently Apocalypse '91: The Enemy Strikes Black.

The FAC opens at 7:30 tonight.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Collegian editors embarrassing

The Collegian Board of Editors' vacuous and piddling candidate-endorsement editorials for the Presidential primaries were an embarrassment. The editors offered so little information and analysis regarding the candidates that they actually had to enlarge the type to fill the column.

The section on the Democratic candidates included exactly one fact, that Paul Tsongas has once served on the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education. This trivial observation was not even supplemented with any information about what Tsongas did while on the Board. Nor did the editors even examine the records of Bill Clinton and Jerry Brown in the area of public education even though both have been state governors. About the latter two candidates, all the Collegian editors said was that their names "were brought up" for possible endorsement. Gee, what political astuteness! What insightful analysis! What journalistic responsibilty! Completely absent was any reference to any of the candidates' positions on the economy, health care, abortion, foreign policy or any other issue.

The Republican endorsement piece was only marginally better. It briefly itemized a few of President Bush's most well-known international activities, and asserted that Bush has "pushed through Congress" the Highway Restoration Act. This last statement was, at best, a very long stretch of the truth. Work on the Highway Act began in Congress long before President Bush expressed any support for such a bill. The real spearheads for the bill were Senator Moynihan and Representative Roe, both Democrats, and many of the provisions President Bush advocated were not included in the final version. Bush made a grand public display of signing the bill once Congress passed it in order to give the appearance of it being his own, but his administration was threatening to veto the final version almost until the moment Congress voted for it. President Bush's latest proposed budget does not even fully fund the bill to the levels it authorizes; in particular, Bush underfunded the bill's programs for public transit by more than 40 percent!

Without providing any rationale, the Collegian Board of Editors asserted that among Democratic candidates, the "pickings are slim." The real slim pickings seem to be among Collegian editors who have a clue about the issues and candidates of the Presidential campaign.

We're not gonna take it...

"There I was, there I was, there I was, — in the Congo."

What's the gig with our lame duck UMass administration? You would think with all the crap they give us students that they were hired to cause us emotional distress. The administration should be rallying the people and marching nude in downtown Boston in protest of the decimation of public higher education. Alas what they are doing is inventing new ways to screw us hard working students.

Provost Glen Gordon has now ordered that most courses offered through the Continuing Education Program will no longer count towards graduation.

Why, you might ask?

David Rivera

Well he feels that some students are taking advantage of the cheaper courses and may just be getting ahead in life. These turkeys are trying to convince folks that this will save us a ton of money, come on Glen get real. Most folks are having a hard time getting out of here as it is, and this administrative distraction tactic won't save us enough money to spit. Most people understand what you're really up to; you glorified civil servants with titles are just trying to keep us students from becoming threats to YOUR job. Give him a call folks, let him know we's pissed and we's not gonna take it no more.

Who's next?

Aaaaah yess the Athletic Department of course. Little by little the athletic dept. is trying to eliminate every varsity sport, except basketball. Now I've come to conclusion that within five years they will succeed, leaving a ton of bureaucrats in Boyden with nothing to really do. So why not start getting rid of some administrators.

The plan goes like this: for every varsity sport and or academic program that is eliminated we eliminate two top administrators. It's sort of a terror tactic but I have a feeling it just might slow the ever so popular termination trend of our programs.

With all the extra money (their salaries) we attain from terminated administrators we can give tribute banquets to coaches, professors, and students that have fallen to the toppled dingbats.

Let's talk tennis team. Those poor hard working guys put up with having their final season called "terminal", then woodja believe they were almost denied receiving their varsity awards. It's was sort of like:

"Yeah you're terminal and here's some battery acid in ya eye".

Well, they finally were given the OK to get their earned dues, but had to form a club for the spring. Good luck guys, you'll be a lot better off with out the Boyden bureaucracy and the NCAA clowns on your back. Show them how it's supposed to be done.

Let's talk library. I think the library hours have been whittled down to about six hours per week. But that's understood when you consider there's only about 12 books in the entire monstrosity. Hey — wait a minute, rumor has it that Tricky Dick, Richard O'Brien, our beloved Chancellor, has a nice little house on the prairie which has an equally nice little library. I'm sure he wouldn't mind if you drop by one night and asked him a reference question: "Excuse me Chancellor O'Brien, could you help me find the Barrons guide on transferring schools?" He resides the big white house hidden by the trees in central. We know where you live. Come out with your hands up. Give him a call, Tell him we's pissed and (you know the rest).

Did you guys read the Globe on Sunday? Rumor has it (this guy rumor is great) that this flim-flam-scam of combining all the state universities has turned into a disaster because all the glorified civil servants with ties can't agree when to do lunch. Tisc, tisc, get with it guys you don't have much time before this place falls to the ground.

Can someone tell me where our Swan goes for the winter? Every year Harold (I call him Harold) disappears from the pond during break and someone sold me on the story that he has a duplex in Boise. Please find out the facts and write me c/o the Collegian.

Last, but not least, I want to thank the Men's Basketball team and Coach Cal for one hell of a season. With all the crap that this state has been having to endure, turning to the sports page the last couple of months has been sheer bliss.

Isn't it weird how a group of talented athletes have done more for this state's morale than any elected official or glorified civil servant?

Thanks guys, you've done us all proud.

A close up look at shoplifting: when is stealing all right?

He gave me a light for my cigarette and I looked him in the eye, smiled and said "thank you." A few minutes later, a $10 bill fell from his jacket onto the floor. I picked up the money with full intention of giving it back, and instead surprised myself. I pocketed the bill, returning conscience-free back to my conversation and cigarette. I looked around the room expecting to be stared down by many eyes wide with disgust, but only saw a group of students chatting happily, unaware of the crime I had just committed. For there was no one to accuse or judge me, I felt I had done nothing wrong.

A few days later, I found a wallet in the women's bathroom. It was thick with money and credit cards. I could not resist taking the money before returning the wallet to Lost and Found.

Again, I was free from accusations. Twice in a week my conscience was tested and twice I surprised myself by taking the money. It was so easy to steal. I felt a great change take over me and of which my friends and others were unaware. My long standing values to earn rather than steal crumbled before me as anonymity gave me freedom.

Then I began to judge myself. I imagined the man and woman reaching for their wallet or $10 bill, and felt their loss. The money no longer seemed so free. To steal or not to steal? Should I feel guilty? These questions played with my mind for the rest of the week. Finally, I convinced myself it is better to steal and learned not to feel guilty. I came up with a few reasons to clear my conscience.

Jen Naumes

A year ago, I would have returned the wallet, money and all. Now I am tired of being the loser. For years I waited in lines to pay while my friends shoplifted department stores. They would wear brand-names, while I could only afford second hand. I decided to no longer be the victim, but take advantage of others' carelessness. I had a friend who walked with his eyes scanning the streets and sidewalk for fallen, rumpled bills.

I used to laugh at him then and advised him to get a job and a life. I was jealous of his unearned fortunes compared to my frequent losses. He was able to support himself well and made his own hours.

Secondly, I've learned to take what I can, because if I don't someone else will. Most of those eyes wide with disgust are usually jealous of not finding the fortune themselves. This revelation encouraged me further, but there are rules one must follow in stealing. There must never be any chance of getting caught, for legal reasons as well as keeping the conscience free. As long as my gains are never premeditated, it is not stealing but taking advantage of a profitable opportunity. And those who know me need not worry for I would never steal from friends. I promise.

All was going well until one fateful night at Subway. A friend and I went for a late-night sub and along the way I lost my wallet. Money, credit and identification cards, and phone numbers were gone. After jumping up and down a few times, angry at my own carelessness, a horrible, sick feeling took over my stomach. I realized this is how my victims must feel.

I accepted my loss as punishment and went home after failed attempts to get into bars without any I.D. Then a telephone call from Subway, telling me someone had turned in my wallet, money and all, made me think that maybe it is better not to steal.

We rallied around our hoop team, who will rally to save our school?

Whether you call it apathy, conspiracy, "privatization" or whatever, our school is going down the tube. It is not our fault. But it is up to us to fix it.

We have shown how we can rally around a basketball team, now let's get together and rally around the library! We can form an organization, Save Our School, and coordinate rallies and other media events, legislature phone-a-thons, massive write-ins to papers and radio/TV stations. We could enlist the expertise of the ROTC and the reserves on campus to throw up defenses around our battered library. We could sell flowers and raffle tickets to raise money. Greek societies could have "Bash Boston Beer Blast" parties to raise money. Musicians could play benefits. Theatre people could do street theatre in the streets of the Valley and even Boston. PIRGers could go door-to-door informing and eliciting support from all over Massachusetts. Privately funded programs, such as Polymer Science, could enlist the aid of large corporations' lobbying efforts to preserve their investment in this university.

It is the responsibility of this "commonwealth" and its taxpayers to make university education available to all qualified people who want it. It is the obligation of the "commonwealth" and its taxpayers to ensure an electorate which is capable of informed decision-making, and it is also its responsibility to ensure financial stability by cultivating a work force not only skilled in productive areas, but skilled in the ability to learn new concepts and procedures. A university produces minds, not things.

Boston trolley crash leaves seven injured

By FRANCIS HOPKINS
Associated Press

BOSTON — A trolley operator was trapped and six passengers received minor injuries when their transit car slammed into the rear of a disabled trolley Tuesday morning.

The crash occurred during a rain shower along Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority tracks near the Dorchester-Milton line around 8:45 a.m. Authorities had difficulty reaching the injured because the accident site lies in the middle of the Cedar Grove Cemetary in the city's Dorchester section.

One trolley was disabled on the tracks just beyond a curve. The operator walked outside to the rear of the trolley hoping to warn others, but it was too late, said James Ball, an MBTA spokesman.

Ken Schaefer of Boston, a passenger on the second trolley, said the transit car was traveling at full speed and the driver tried to hit the brakes.

"There was about 10 feet, and there wasn't really time for the braking to do anything," said Schaefer, who was sitting behind the driver and was not injured. "At the time you felt a jerk of the brakes, we hit."

The front of the second trolley smashed inward and the windshield shattered, spraying the passengers with glass. The rear of the stationary trolley was bashed in.

Emergency crews had to extricate the driver of the second trolley, who was trapped by twisted metal. She suffered a serious leg injury, said Richard Serino, deputy superintendent of Emergency Medical Services.

There were about seven passengers on each trolley, said Schaefer.

Two passengers on the stalled trolley and four on the second trolley suffered various injuries, including facial cuts from broken glass, he said.

The injured passengers were released from area hospitals by mid-afternoon. John Halley, MBTA general manager, said the injured operator was still being treated. He declined to release the names of the passengers or the operators.

Schaefer and Peter Jones of Milton, another uninjured passenger on the second trolley, assisted the injured, then flagged down an oncoming trolley.

Halley said according to tape recordings, the operator of the disabled trolley failed to notify transit authorities by portable radio that her trolley had stalled.

The speed limit for the track is 30 mph, but drops to 6 mph for the curve, said Halley.

Court eases restrictions

Allows courts to step out of integration

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court said Tuesday racial integration of public schools may be achieved piece by piece, making it easier to stop supervising broad desegregation efforts.

The 8-0 decision permits an end to federal court supervision over student enrollment in DeKalb County, Ga., even though schools there have never been fully integrated.

A five-member court majority also emphasized it generally is not unlawful for blacks and whites to attend different schools if they live in different neighborhoods .

"Racial balance is not to be achieved for its own sake," Justice Anthony M. Kennedy wrote. "Residential housing choices and their attendant effects on the racial composition of schools present an ever-changing pattern, one difficult to address through judicial remedies."

The ruling could affect hundreds of school districts nationwide, many of which still engage in massive busing for racial balance as part of court-supervised desegregation efforts.

Christopher Hansen, the American Civil Liberties Union lawyer who represented black parents in DeKalb County, said, "It's a difficult decision to comprehend, but we are very disappointed by it and its overall tone."

He predicted the ruling would cause "an explosion of litigation, and given its lack of clarity who knows how that's going to turn out." He said many school districts now will seek to end court supervision over some aspects of their desegregation efforts.

"It seems the court's majority is growing weary of its commitment to racial justice. It is not prepared to abandon that commitment, but it is clearly frustrated," Hansen said.

Kennedy, writing for the court, said, "Federal courts have the authority to relinquish supervision and control of school districts in incremental stages, before full compliance has been achieved in every area of school operations."

Kennedy said judges should give "particular attention to the school system's record of compliance."

No one in DeKalb County, a middle-class suburban area east of Atlanta, argues that the county's schools ever have been fully integrated.

Senate passes retirement bill

BOSTON (AP) — The Senate voted Tuesday for a bill to provide incentives for several thousand state employees to retire early, but Gov. William F. Weld was expected to send the measure back if it reaches his desk.

The Senate gave the measure all but final approval on a 23-9 vote after adding several amendments that required it to return to the House for further action before it could be sent to Weld's desk.

In general, the bill would allow state workers to add five years to either their age or their length of state service to boost their pension benefits, to allow them to retire early.

State employee pensions are based on years of service. Normal retirement ages differ, depending on the job.

The bill would allow about 7,000 state workers to retire, but would limit the number eligible who hold direct care positions.

The bill as it now stands does not include a provision backed by Weld that would have given retirement benefits to some younger workers with as few as 15 years of state service.

On Monday, the day the House endorsed the bill, Dominic Slowey, a spokesman for the Executive Office of Administration and Finance, said the bill failed to achieve the $50 million in savings next fiscal year the Weld administration had targeted.

Slowey said the bill would cost $30.9 million this fiscal year and save $9.5 million the next fiscal year, a net loss of more than $21 million.

Weld is expected to propose amendments to the bill if it reaches his desk, rather than veto it outright.

The Senate adopted a handful of amendments before approving the bill.

Doctor continues to practice despite claims of misconduct

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Associated Press

BOSTON — A psychiatrist is continuing her work under the watchful eye of the state while authorities investigate claims she drove a patient to suicide through a sexual affair and by making him pretend to be her child.

After a marathon meeting, the Massachusetts Board of Registration in Medicine ruled early Tuesday that Dr. Margaret Bean-Bayog had engaged in "substandard care" but refused to suspend her license pending further investigation.

The family of the patient, Paul Lozano, accuses the doctor of luring him into a sexual affair when he sought counseling while studying at Harvard Medical School.

The family says Lozano, 28, committed suicide in April 1991 after Bean-Bayog ended her relationship with him.

Bean-Bayog, 48, had denied the charges, and the state medical board concluded that her practice did not "constitute an immediate or serious threat to the public health, safety, and welfare."

But Massachusetts Secretary of Comsumer Affairs Gloria Larson, who oversees the board, said Tuesday she wanted to determine whether the regulatory panel responded quickly enough to complaints against the doctor.

"It is a matter of public record that I have long had concerns about the delays in investigative and disciplinary practices at the Board of Medicine," Larson said.

Lozano's family in El Paso, Texas, has filed malpractice and wrongful death suits against Bean-Bayog. Attorney Andrew Meyer, representing the family, contends the board received complaints for months before acting.

Larson said the board began an immediate review in February 1991 but added she would investigate whether it was proceeded at "an acceptable pace."

The board ruled Bean-Bayog could continue to practice under supervision of a psychiatrist approved by the board.

The board also referred the case to the state Division of Law Appeals for a formal hearing, which sill makes a final recommendation to the medical board.

The family has collected letters and notes that relatives say were written by Bean-Bayog to Lozano. One mentions their "phenomenal sex."

Bean-Bayog "wrote explicit fantasies which may have related to Paul Lozano," the board's statement of the allegations said. "Her failure to terminate or otherwise address these fantasies did not conform to the standards of accepted medical practice at the time."

This week's movies on HSCN

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to the Campus Cable Connection. If you're observant (like I know you all are), these movies are repeats from earlier this semester. You could be saying "Oh God, not again" or "Well, I missed it last time, so I can catch it this week." Either way, I'll still be reviewing, so I hope you enjoy the movies. Within the next few weeks there will be some classic flicks nobody in his or her right mind should miss.

Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, April 1. (P.S. This is not part of the parody issue. I really do enjoy writing these reviews and I honestly hope you are enjoying the movies. If you have a comment on a movie that you would like to see this semester, contact your residential area government — they pick the flicks.)

The Sound of Music — Julie Andrews, Christopher Plummer, Eleanor Parker. Like Lawrence Of Arabia, this movie really must be viewed on a movie screen to get the full effect, but it's always fun to watch the movie that inspired those songs your third grade teacher made you sing constantly. The film won five Oscars, including Best Picture, Director, and HA! Score Adaptation. (Doe, a deer, a female deer. . .) 1/2

Critters — Dee Wallace Stone, M. Emmet Walsh, Billy Green Bush. Good Lord, another film that thinks it can pass itself off as Gremlins. . . NOT! Give me a break. How can hairballs with teeth possibly be a premise for a movie? And can you believe it, it has a sequel. Have they no shame? NO STARS.

Dead Poet's Society — Robin Williams, Robert Sean Leonard, Ethan Hawke. Call me biased. I'm an English major with a passion for poetry, and I think Robin Williams is one of the most talented people in the world. I thought this was a great movie. Set in 1959 at a stoic New England prep school, the film is infectious, somewhat over dramatic, but extremely powerful. Don't miss it! ****

For Keeps — Molly Ringwald, Randall Batnikoff, Kenneth Mars. Okay, I'll give it points for being a relevant subject matter for teens (and a film they'll watch), but I have a hard time holding back my hand from the remote control to change channels. Ringwald is a high school girl who gets pregnant, decides to keep the baby and gets married. The plot is there. I'm not very partial to these teenybopper flicks. *

The Grifters — John Cusack, Anjelica Huston, Annette Benning. I give Cusack credit; his roles are getting much more challenging as the years go by. He is wonderful in this film about a professional con-artist who will do just about anything to make a buck. Huston (as Cusack's mother) is so sly, she seems to just ooze across the screen. Beware of the ending scene; it's a shocker. An all-around cinematic masterpiece. ****

Hot Shots — This is the comedy with Charlie Sheen and airplanes. I didn't get a chance to see it. Sorry!

Little Murders — Elliott Gould, Marcia Rodd, Vincent Gardenia. Wonderful early 70s black comedy about life (sometimes good, sometimes horrible) in New York City. A little bit too depressing in parts. Overall a good film, and splendid acting. 1/2

The Long, Hot Summer — Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward, Orson Welles, Anthony Franciosa. Made in 1958, this is the Newmans' first film together. Based on a blend of some William Faulkner short stories, the film is a delightful drama that was later remade into a TV movie. ***

House — William Katt, George Wendt. A Vietnam Vet is plagued by demons in his aunt's house. It's pure schlock, and ridiculous on the whole, but watching George Wendt (Norm from "Cheers") is enough to catch the film. *

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles — Judith Hoag, Elias Koteas, voices of Bobbie Rist, Kevin Clash, Brian Tochi, David McCharen, and Corey Feldman. Comic book creation of Kevin Eastman and Peter Laird, this movie is definitely aimed at the younger crowd. Oh sure, there's a few of you out there my age who are die-hard TMNT fans, but this movie annoyed me. It was badly directed, poorly acted, and if I hear the word "Cowabunga" one more time, I'll have to shoot somebody. Great costumes by Jim Henson's people, though. *1/2

Real Genius — Val Kilmer, Gabe Jarret, Michelle Meyrink. Stylish satire about a bunch of whiz kids who are being exploited by a very slimy William Atherton. The premise is kind of blah, but the acting, especially by Kilmer, is light and funny. I guarantee at least a few good laughs. ***

Revenge of the Nerds II: Nerds in Paradise — Robert Carradine, Curtis Armstrong, Larry B. Scott. Yes, the first one was cute, but this one made me want to vomit profusely. The Lambda Lambda Lambda nerds go to Ft. Lauderdale for a fraternity conference; it's predictable and generally stupid. It also angered me thoroughly that the people who made this film know very little about Greek life today. NO STARS.

Treasure Island — (The people at HSCN give me the movie lists, but when it comes to cases like this where there are four different versions, I have zero clue which one they are talking about, so I'll give it a shot in the dark and go for the 1950 version. If it's not that one, then don't blame me!) Bobby Driscoll, Robert Newton, Basil Sydney. Disney version of Robert Louis Stevenson's classic, set in England. A little too violent, but still FANTASTIC. 1/2

Ruthless People — Danny DeVito, Bette Midler, Judge Reinhold. Ah, another fun film with the Zucker brothers (Airplane!). Sleazy DeVito plans to murder his wife (Midler) to run away with his lover, who is planning to get rid of DeVito and run away with HER lover, but the plan is thrown off when Midler is kidnapped and held for ransom. Vicious, but DeVito is perfect. ***

Splash — Daryl Hannah, Tom Hanks, John Candy. Very likeable comedy about an average Joe who suddenly gets his own mermaid and subsequently falls in love with her. Hanks is sweet and funny. Hannah is outstanding in this role, and how many great things can I say about Candy? He's a barrel of laughs — literally! A little lengthy. 1/2

Summer School — Mark Harmon, Kirstie Alley, Robin Thomas. One time when I worked in a video rental store, a guy came in just at the one scene with all of that fake gore and tried to get me fired for showing such a violent movie. How does one explain the film to such a gent? The film's gonna be a classic someday for people our age, I can tell you that. Harmon's a gym teacher who gets suckered into teaching English in summer school. One laugh after another. ***

Tin Men — Richard Dreyfuss, Danny DeVito, Barbara Hershey. Two guys, one a rustler and the other a loser, are both in the aluminum siding business. They lead two separate lives until one day when they get into a minor car accident. A very different yet rewarding role for DeVito. 1/2

Turner and Hooch — Tom Hanks, Mare Winningham, Craig T. Nelson, and a big, sloppy, drippy yet cute dog. The aforementioned mutt, named Hooch, is the only witness in a murder case and he must "work" closely with Hanks who's a detective hot on the trail. Some moments that dog owners like myself can sympathize with, but the script falters and the ending is a disappointment.

Movies that are HSCN this week but are not reviewed are: . . . And Justice For All, The Big Chill, and Blind Date.

Tyson refuses to play by rules

By DOUG RICHARDSON
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Mike Tyson's refusal to eat and abide by rules in prison shows he might not obey conditions a court set in releasing him on bond, Indiana prosecutors argued Tuesday.

In a brief filed with the Indiana Court of Appeals, prosecutors said the former heavyweight champion's refusal to cooperate with correction officials should be weighed by an appellate panel considering Tyson's request to be set free pending an appeal.

Department of Correction officials said Tuesday that Tyson still was refusing to eat solid food. He also faces disciplinary action for giving his autograph to other inmates, in violation of a prison rule, officials said.

"Tyson's willingness to obey any conditions for release are contradicted by his refusal to obey even the simplest rules of his incarceration, or to cooperate with correction officials in feeding or evaluating him," wrote Marion County Deputy Prosecutor David Dreyer.

Tyson went to prison Thursday after being sentenced to six years for convictions for rape and criminal deviate conduct. He was found guilty of assaulting Desiree Washington, a Miss Black America beauty pageant contestant, in his Indianapolis hotel room last July.

Tuesday, appeals court judges were reading trial transcripts and other briefs as jurists considered whether to override Marion Superior Court Judge Patricia Gifford's decision to send Tyson directly to jail.

PHI BETA KAPPA

Nu Chapter of Massachusetts

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

The Coordinating Dean of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Lee Edwards, and Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa are pleased to announce new members elected from the Junior and Senior classes. Phi Beta Kappa is the oldest and most prestigious American honor society in the Liberal Arts. It was founded at the College of William and Mary on December 5, 1776. Yale's chapter was formed in 1780, Harvard's in 1781. During the next century additional chapters of Phi Beta Kappa were added and in 1883 a national organization called the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa was created. At present, only 237 liberal arts colleges or universities have been accredited by the national organization and permitted to form chapters. In New England only six public institutions are so recognized.

Candidates do not apply for membership nor is application made on their behalf. They are nominated by the chapter's faculty members on the basis of their academic records as shown on their transcripts. Candidates must be majors in one of the three faculties of the College of Arts and Sciences and must satisfy certain grade point, foreign language, and distribution requirements set by the national organization. Approximately 3% of Seniors with the strongest academic records are elected each year; one half of 1% of Juniors are selected.

For information on Phi Beta Kappa and its chapter at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, visit the Phi Beta Kappa display near the card catalog in the Tower Library.

alphabet soup organizations. The NCAA, the NBA, the NHL (not a real strong endorsement at present), the CBA and the WLAF (we're an equal opportunity campaign).

We're not in this ourselves, but since I am taking Coach Cal with me to the Oval Office, it might be nice for him to drag me along when and if he heads for greener pastures.

This is a campaign based on the belief that sports, above all else, will get us through the rough times.

We need support. Call 1-800-SCOTCAL. Thank you.

Softball team takes two over Hartford, 5-0, 15-0

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team made short work of the Hartford Lady Hawks at Totman Field yesterday, winning 5-0 in the opener of the doubleheader, and 15-0 in a five inning blowout, improving their record to 6-7, and 3-0 at Totman Field.

Darlene Claffey, who was questionable before the game with a sore back, pitched brilliantly, allowing only two hits while striking out nine and walking one. The junior increased her record to 2-2, and lowered her earned run average.

The Minutewomen scored the only run they would need in the first inning, as centerfielder Holly Aprile beat out a bunt for a single and was sacrificed to second by Rachel Lawson. Aprile went to third on a ground out by Barbara Marean, and then scored when the Hartford first baseman dropped a throw on a grounder by UMass' Sherri Kuchinskas.

Lisa Melz led the UMass fifth inning off with a double, and went to second on a single by Jen Devlin. Aprile then laced a triple to right-center, scoring both runners, and scored on a ground out by Larson.

Marean kept the right fielder running by hitting another triple up the gap in right-center. After Kuchinskas grounded into the second out, Angyla Brumm hit the Minutewomen's third triple of the inning, again to right field, scoring Marean.

"We knew we would reach her [Hartford pitcher Michelle O'Toole]," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "Our second time around we had better contact, and the third time around we ripped the ball."

The second game was a blowout from the beginning, as the first inning saw the Minutewomen send 13 players to the plate, scoring seven runs on nine hits.

In the second inning UMass sent 10 more batters to the plate, scoring six runs on five hits, the big blow being another triple by Morean, and were helped by several Hartford fielding miscues.

Aprile, in improving her record to 2-1, gave up only two hits while striking out six and walking four.

The Minutewomen banged out 27 hits in the two games, including nine for extra bases.

Scott 'n' Cal in '92

Now that H. Ross Perot has thrown his hat into the ring, it's time for D. Ross Scott to do the same.

Before the Red Sox can steal all my headlines, it's time to announce my candidacy for President of the United States. My platform is vast but consists mostly of proven sports concepts, guaranteed to garner widespread support.

I had planned on waiting until 1996, but we are in dire straits and the Lenny Worst/Wertz situation made me realize that we have waited long enough for the "Sports First" ticket. Forget the bozos in Congress, let's get rid of the clowns running the sidelines.

David Scott

My political advisor, Paul "Tsing A" Tsong-tous, has recommended naming a running mate as soon as possible and there is but one choice, Coach John Calipari. If nothing else, we will have the best ties in the race, an important factor for undecideds.

When Cal urged fans to clear the court after the West Virginia game, it was like a instant parting of the sea. Any guy who can control 2,000 screaming lunatics can surely handle the Senate.

Cal's a new breed that voters like. He's energetic, photogenic and says what people want to hear. He also has a good rapport with Jim Valvano and that will certainly bring in some more votes. On second thought maybe we don't need Jimmy V in our camp.

Chris Berman from ESPN has joined the Scott/Calipari crew and will be in charge of our (negative) advertising campaign. So far the King of Nicknames has come up with George "Not Prudent to Drink" Bush beer, Jerry Garcia Brown and Slick Willie Clin-turn-on the lava lamp and pass the bong.

It's a grassroots campaign and at every stop there's to be a Will Herndon dunk show. Coach Cal will have his Rick Pitino mask when we hit Kentucky to confuse Wildcat fans, still reeling from the Duke game. (Best college hoop contest I never saw).

Larry Bird has promised Indiana's vote and America's heartland is what this campaign is all about. Sure health care and abortion are vital issues, but it's sports that draws this country together.

Look at the NCAA Tournament. For two weeks the entire UMass campus, minus a few get-a-lifers, were focused on the progress and prosperity of Coach Cal's Pals. Windows in Whitmore were adorned with "Beat Kentucky" signs, small t-shirt stands sprang up and the fiscal woes that have demoralized workers and students alike were forgotten.

That's why "Sports First" is more than a campaign slogan, it's going to be a way of life, a way to bring America together in one common cause — crowning the Red Sox World Series champs.

So far we have found support from all the

Baseball wins home opener

UMass defeats Holy Cross 3-2 on controversial HR

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Justin Howard's controversial leadoff homer in the fifth inning proved to be the game winner as the University of Massachusetts baseball team beat Holy Cross 3-2 yesterday at Lorden Field, in the Minutemen's home opener.

On the pitch preceeding the homer, Howard had apparently grounded back to Holy Cross pitcher Michael Garrity. But the first base umpire ruled the ball had caromed off Howard's foot, nullifying the out, and sending Holy Cross coach Jack Whalen into a fit of rage.

"It was a tight ballgame," Whalen said. "I don't think the ball ever hit [Howard]. Him hitting that home run just killed us."

Howard's home run gave the Minutemen a lead they would never relinquish, as Jim Telgheder (1-2) picked up his first victory of the season in front of the home crowd, pitching 5 and 2/3 innings while giving up two unearned runs.

"I wasn't really pleased, but it's a win," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I was pleased about the fact that Jim [Telghader] pitched well for the first time this year, but other than that I was a little disappointed."

The Minutemen almost let victory slip right through their hands, and if not for the stellar performance of Rich Graham out of the bullpen (3 and 1/3 innings pitched, 0 runs, 4 strikeouts), and the superb defense of third baseman Joe Mattivello, the Minutemen could have been looking at a loss.

Graham came into the game in the bottom of the sixth, with the Crusaders rallying, and struck out Mike Neary, the Crusaders' leading hitter, to squelch the two-out rally.

Mattivello made several fine plays at the hot corner, including an inning-ending tag-him-out, throw-him-out double play with Holy Cross speedster Jerome Fuller on second and the Minutemen clinging to a 3-2 lead in the eighth.

"Joe played a great game," Stone said. "He played really aggresive, and it was great to see."

UMass got on the board first, scoring a single run in the first inning on a walk by Greg LaRocca, a double by Howard, and a sacrifice fly by senior captain John Carelli.

After that, things started to get a little sloppy for both teams, as they combined for four errors and three unearned runs. Telgheder threw two wild pitches in the bottom of the sixth.

In the top of the second, the Minutemen scored their second run in less than orthodox style. Mattivello doubled, followed by a Andy Pelis walk before the madness began.

The next UMass hitter, Jay Dodig, hit a hard grounder at Holy Cross shortstop Jerry Tabler, who bobbled the ball but recovered in time to nip Pelis at second, while Mattivello raced around from second to put the Minutemen on top 2-0.

Holy Cross finally got on the board in the fifth, as Neary reached on UMass shortstop Steve Corradi's error before coming home on designated hitter Terrence Butt's double to right which UMass' Bill Knight appeared to lose in the afternoon sun.

Howard's dinger in the bottom of the inning put the Minutemen up for good, as Holy Cross was able to muster only a single run in the sixth, as UMass held on for the win.

"I was a little disappointed with our execution," Stone said. "We had a chance to bury them, and we let them back into the ballgame."

Lacrosse team hosts Hofstra

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

It's not every day that nationally-ranked lacrosse teams meet on the same field. But April Fools Day isn't every day.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team (1-1), ranked No. 16 in the latest U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll, faces No. 20 Hofstra at 3 p.m. on Upper Boyden field. The only fools, however, will be lax fans who pass up this game.

"It should be a hard-hitting, high-scoring lacrosse game," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "I know I'm going."

The Flying Dutchmen (2-3) are looking to break out of a three-game losing skid which has played like a bad April Fool's joke. Maryland-Baltimore County, Cornell and Notre Dame all benefitted from Hofstra's fourth quarter lapses.

"We're a young team," explained Hofstra coach Jim Danowski. "In our three losses we've been up after three quarters, but in the fourth we're struggling mentally. It's very frustrating.

"I can't say we're doing anything badly but I can't say we're doing anything great," he said. "It's very strange."

For Hofstra, today's game presents a chance to unload that losing streak against a top 20 opponent.

"They seem very talented," said Danowski of the Gorillas. "Playing a good team like UMass gives us an opportunity to refocus and play. Losing is no fun. . . it would have been a tough week if we had to wait until Saturday."

While sophomore attackers Andy Carlson and Dom DiNardo lead the Dutchmen in scoring with 14 points apiece, they aren't carrying the load entirely. Other Dutchmen in double figures include Joe Barra (9 goals) and Kevin Jacobs (7 assists).

The Dutchmen also feature a solid defensive unit. Goaltender Kevin Barry is described by Danowski as an athletic, aggressive goalie who isn't afraid to come out of the crease.

Garber is most concerned about keeping the Gorillas on the field and out of the penalty box. UMass has spent much of two games in man-down situations, which nearly cost the team an upset loss against St. John's.

"We have to stay out of the penalty box and play good, fundamental lacrosse," Garber said. "You can't play the game in the penalty box."

Tom LoPresti will make his second start this afternoon in goal. Gary Wood is still listed as probable due to a hip flexor injury and will be replaced by Kenny Randazzo and Jim Panetta.

Gorilla Notes: Hofstra assistant Rich Donovan is a 1978 UMass graduate. He was a short-stick defender and team captain for Dick Garber's Gorillas. . . The game can be heard on WMUA 91.1 FM with Mike Fagerson and Joe Donovan describing the action.

TODAY'S TIP-OFF

CONDOM INSTRUCTIONS – BEFORE SEX

Use a new condom every time you have sex – before foreplay, before penis gets anywhere near any body opening. Handle condom gently. Put condom on as soon as penis is hard. Be sure rolled-up ring is on the outside. Squeeze tip gently so no air is trapped inside. Hold tip while you unroll condom... all the way down to the hair. If condom doesn't unroll, it's on wrong. Throw it away. Start over with a new one.

TODAY'S TIP-OFF was brought to you courtesy of Ancient Horaics condoms.

TOMORROW IN UMA TODAY: What to do after sex. Don't miss it!

A QUICK GLANCE ON THE TOILET AND YOU'RE IN THE KNOW

CHEW ME, BABY: A University of Massachusetts graduate student received a grant to study the purpose of Starburst fruit candies. "I think I'm on to something pretty big," said Lou Zer, of the department of food and inanimate objects. "I've found evidence that Starbursts could be intended to get the crap out of your teeth. This could mean total liberation from that toothbrush craze."

100% CORRUPT COTTON: The J. Crew clothing company is denying allegations it has been using the UMass-Amherst campus as a testing ground for college clothing. The numerous catalogs found in every dorm mailbox on campus are "probably a postal service error," said Rich Iam, J. Crew founder and recovering natural fiber addict. A University graduate, Iam declares he is not trying to rehabilitate the so-called "crunchy campus" into khaki and blue chambray. "I honestly had no idea those barn jackets would go over so well," he said.

SEX SHOW: In an effort to boost STD awareness on campus, University Unhealthy Services and Housing Disservices has made plans to co-sponsor a special HSCN game-show program featuring University students. The show, called "Name That Body Fluid," is the brainchild of Healthless Services Dr. I.M. Able. "Any forum to discuss condoms is OK by me," Able said while putting a Trojan on a nearby banana. Housing Director Rip U. Off hopes the show will "force students to live in on-campus housing because that's the only way they can watch their friends on the show, tee hee." Malt beverage major Jack Kingoff, one of the students slated to be a contestant, said, "Hey, I know as much about body fluids as the next guy. I'll blow 'em away."

Bert and Ernie aren't really bachelors

Bi Tamster Monogamous
UMA TODAY

Bert and Ernie, of Sesame Street fame, announced yesterday that they are breaking down the Lego walls: they are coming out of the closet as gay lovers.

"It was love at first sight," Bert said. "I took one look at Ernie's rubber ducky and I had to have him."

Ernie disagreed and classic Bert and Ernie bickering ensued.

"It wasn't until the second date that you even saw my rubber ducky!" Ernie protested.

They then broke into giggles and even smooched for the paparazzi.

Sesame Street stars expressed support for the couple.

▶ "I was the one who helped them with their apartment," said Gloria, a longtime friend and confidante to the couple. "Contrary to popular stereotypes, not all gay men can decorate."

▶ "Although nothing was ever said, most of us knew. It just wasn't an issue; no one really cares," said Big Bird.

Viewer reaction was mixed.

▶ Henrietta Homophobe, a housewife and mother of three, said "My children will never watch that disgusting show again. Its only ThunderCats and She-Ra from now on."

▶ The revelation came as a shock in the wake of allegations by North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helms that PBS promotes homosexuality and other leftist agendas.

"This is just the sort of immoral filth that our God-fearing citizens are being forced to fund because of leftist-commie liberals," Helms said. "I always thought those guys were a little funny."

Potential military cuts imperil ROTC

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Reserve Officer's Training Corps could suffer from the 8,500-position loss to the Massachusetts National Guard and reserves in the next two years if proposed national defense cuts are enacted by Congress, local military officials said.

The Pentagon proposed drastic cuts last week in the non-active service budget which area military officials claim can harm local business and Reserve Officers' Training Corps programs.

"What might be at risk are the state tuition wavers that some of our cadets receive," said Lieutenant Colonel Christy Outchunis, a UMass professor of military science.

Outchunis added that the UMass ROTC program is "one of the best in the region" and was concerned that these cuts could lead to the disintegration of units both active and inactive.

"Those of us in uniform have been aware of these impending cuts for over a year," she said, "but now the question of reservists are totally an new part of the story."

The proposed cuts were expected among Pentagon officials, but surprised those on Capitol Hill and have seen little support from the Congress.

According to published reports, Rep. J. Joseph Moakley (D-Boston) had strong reservations about the proposals, saying it was "outrageous that Massachusetts would absorb 16 percent off the nationwide total reductions."

Moakley added that the state had suffered enough when local area bases were closed last year.

"Along with the closing of Fort Devens [these cuts] are devastating," Moakley said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy told the Boston Globe the Bush administration was unfairly targeting Massachusetts and added that congress will have to make the decisions regarding the "grossly disproportionate cuts."

According to published reports, Gen. Colin Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, stressed the fall of communism and global political changes as the main factor in the Pentagon's new objectives.

"The likelihood of a global war, and especially a major war in Europe, has disappeared before our eyes," Powell said.

Powell also added that changes in demographics had made the Northeast region vulnerable to budget cuts and thus less guard units are needed.

"So there's going to be a significant draw down of National Guard combat units up there. . . ." Powell said. "You're not getting enough people to support those formations."

U.S. Rep. John W. Olver of Amherst said Powell's reasoning was unsupported and misleading.

"It doesn't sound credible at all to me," Olver said. "[Powell's reasoning] doesn't hold any water whatsoever."

The Pentagon plan proposes most of the nationwide cuts are to be absorbed by the Army National Guard with 80,000, and the least cuts to the Air Force Reserve with 740.

The Massachusetts Guard units to be disbanded this year are 114th Forward Support unit, based in Webster; the 104th Infantry, based in Westfield; and the 104th Infantry, based in Chicopee.

Many more units are scheduled to close in 1993 but opponents believe that Congress will intercede and amend the Pentagon proposal.

Chuck D. calls rap sparkplug for new revolution

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Correspondent

Last night over 2,000 people filled the Fine Arts Center to hear "A message from Chuck D.", a lecture by the lead artist of the rap group Public Enemy. A self-proclaimed "media pirate", Chuck D. discussed a variety of issues concerning racial politics, the rebuilding the Black community, and the power of rap music in influencing social change.

Chuck D. described rap music as "a sparkplug for a new revolution" citing its powerful appeal to people of different backgrounds.

"Rap music is educating more and more Whites about Black culture," said Chuck D. He affirmed his belief that rap music "builds a tunnel of communication" and stated that "communication is the best way to build better relations."

Chuck D. shared some insight into why he wrote and recorded the song, "By the time I get to Arizona."

He said the song is a reaction to the state of Arizona's refusal to recognize the Martin Luther King holiday. The song's video sparked a national controversy by depicting the assassination of Arizona state government officials in retaliation.

Chuck D. defended his video against criticism for condoning violence on behalf of Martin Luther King.

"Peace where possible, violence where necessary," he said, using the political assassinations of Martin Luther King and Malcolm X as justification for such retaliation.

"Every Black leader we've known was assassinated by the U.S. government," he said. "For decades, Blacks in America were either lynched or assassinated."

Chuck D. reminded the audience that he himself is not a violent person, and said the video is "just a picture of what could be."

Comparing this year's quincentennial celebration of Columbus Day to "celebrating Hitler Day in Europe," Chuck D. called Columbus' voyage "the beginning of our genocide." He described the extermination of Native Americans by the Spanish, as well as their role in the establishment of the Atlantic Slave Trade.

Saying that rap should have "meaningful titles," Chuck

Weld pushes for tax reductions

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. William Weld, flanked by an array of business leaders and academics, lobbied legislators Wednesday on his plan to reduce taxes by $192 million.

The governor said the changes would encourage companies to hire more workers and buy more equipment — ultimately lifting the state out of its recession.

But some analysts testified there are better ways to spur economic growth without sacrificing state revenues. And human service advocates say the Republican governor has drafted a proposal that helps the rich, while jeopardizing programs for the needy.

"We're going to create a positive climate for future investment in Massachusetts by letting people know that we are committed to fiscal stability when it comes to our tax code," Weld said in an unusual appearance before House members of the Legislature's Taxation Committee. Senators on the committee did not attend.

Weld outlined a plan that includes eliminating the capital gains tax, trimming the income tax rate and providing bonuses to firms that develop job training or child care programs.

"Our package puts money back into the hands of every single person who pays taxes in this state," he said. "Our plan is predicated on a rational, behavioral response, rewarding those people and companies who invest in Massachusetts and invest in jobs."

James Braude, executive director of the Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, said slight cuts in the income tax and eliminating capital gains taxes favor high-income residents.

"His idea of tax reform is to give nothing to the poor, pennies to the middle class, thousands to wealthy investors

Casino Night offers gambling to fight cancer

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Correspondent

Closet gamblers can get their fix and benefit a good cause tonight at the third annual Casino Night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The event, held from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m., benefits The Brain Tumor Society of Boston.

"It's a fun event. We are trying to create a 'Vegas in the Valley,'" said program coordinator John Lovering, a junior communications major.

A $5 admissions fee opens the door to a night of Black Jack, Craps, Roulette and the Wheel of Fortune. The revenues generated will go to the Brain Tumor Society of Boston.

"Two years ago we gave the biggest donation out of the schools that participated in the Campuses Against Cancer fund-raising. We donated $10,000," said Lovering.

The Campuses Against Cancer include Dartmouth, Boston College, Wesleyan, Syracuse and Tufts.

The winnings from the games will be awarded in cash. Other prizes include a dinner for two. The evening includes refreshments, hors d'oeuvres and live entertainment.

The Board of Governor's Program Council, a group responsible for coordinating a wide range of educational events within the Campus Center/Student Union Complex, will be hosting the Casino Night.

"Through this fun event, we will try to make people aware of the effects of cancer, and at the same time raise money through Campuses Against Cancer," said Lovering.

New SGA president blasts tuition plan

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

Although last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting was cancelled due to lack of quorum, the newly-elected Senate President took the opportunity to urge undergraduates to actively oppose Gov. Weld's tuition retention proposal.

Jennifer Wood, a junior Japanese major who officially assumed the senate presidency yesterday, told 29 senators that top university administrators have cast their lots in favor of full tuition retention and have made it clear that the rank-and-file employees should fall into line behind this decision.

"If you talk to university administrators, they are going to tell you that the official university position is that tuition retention is what we want," said Wood. "They have been told by people at the top that this is what they are to say. Many lower level administrators probably don't think that, but they're not going to tell you differently."

Tuition retention refers to the current proposal by Gov. Weld that state public colleges and universities retain all tuition money received as revenue.

According to Wood, this policy would allow the state to drastically decrease its funding of public higher education, and it would allow university administrators to raise tuition and fees or fire state employees when they needed more revenue.

Many local politicians have opposed the governor's proposal, saying they believe it precludes the less affluent from obtaining an affordable college education.

Amherst Democrat Ellen Story, elected as the district's state representative two weeks ago, has said she favors a plan where tuition is capped at one-third of the University's budget and state appropriations compose the other two-thirds.

The UMass/Amherst campus currently retains 30 percent of student tuition.

Wood said she believes House Ways and Means Committee Chair Thomas Finneran (D-Boston) might be sympathetic to students' plight. This committee formulates the state budget, and Wood said getting the attention of Finneran and other key legislatures could decide the fate of tuition retention.

"We need to look at who's with us, who's against us, and who we have the best shot at persuading [to support us]," Wood said.

The senators assembled suggested several ideas to influence the state legislature to oppose tuition retention. Among them were a proposed State House rally, a letter writing campaign and a plea to "high profile" alumni like Julius "Dr. J" Erving, Bill Cosby and Marjorie Claprood to write editorials or do television spots opposing tuition retention.

Wood said the unions on campus should be enlisted to aid undergraduates in their fight. She said Student Government leaders recently attended a Leadership Coalition meeting with the heads of all campus unions, and she made it clear that unions should play a role in the struggle against tuition retention.

"We as undergraduates have been there for unions through all their struggles [with the university]," she said. "We need to sit down with the heads of the unions and say, 'Look, we've been there for you, and we need you to be here for us now.'"

Danny Colbert is beginning to walk and talk like any other typical one-year-old. But what Danny and his family have faced in his first 12 months has been far from typical.

Paul Colbert's little brother Danny has a rare form of leukemia which could end his life in a matter of months. Colbert, a sophomore CASIAC major, has spent the past two months posting flyers around campus asking for blood marrow donors and monetary donations to save his brother Danny.

"If a donor is not found in the next few weeks, then other measures will have to be taken," said Colbert. Two-thousand people, including UMass students, were tested last month but Colbert's family has not yet heard the results.

Colbert, who is from East Boston, said the donations go toward the $60 cost of the test which determines whether the donor matches Danny's marrow. There is a 1 in 20,000 chance that a match will be found.

Danny spent his first five months in the hospital after being diagnosed with his disease at only four weeks. "Luckily, Danny doesn't know he's sick. Right now, he looks really good. He's very energetic and constantly on the go," said Colbert.

The Greek Area and local businesses have joined in the fundraising campaign to save Danny. Panhellenic Council Vice President Denise Tinger of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority visited many local businesses last week, asking for prize donations and organized a raffle.

"We raised $900 for Danny by selling raffle tickets on the Campus Center concourse. It was so amazing how many people bought tickets and

Some experts believe key to 400-year mystery found

By GARY DEANE
Collegian Correspondent

One of the oldest unsolved puzzles in art history appears to have been uncovered by a University of Massachusetts graduate student.

Randall Skalsky, a graduate student in classics, has unfurled a two-thousand year old archeological mystery involving the ancient Roman Portland Vase.

"It's the longest-standing scholastic mystery," said Skalsky, whose discovery awaits publication in the May issue of Arion, a journal devoted to the classics and humanities.

Since the vase was discovered in the 16th century, the scenes have been subject to 44 widely varying interpretations.

The ultimate meaning of the carving is "love can be heaven or love can be hell," Skalsky said.

The key to the new theory lies in the arch at the very left of the scene, which Skalsky recognized as symbolizing the Greek letter pi. The name of the figure within the pi-like structure, he concluded, would begin with the letter "P," such as the mythological hero Peleus.

This led Skalsky to a poem by the Roman poet Catullus, "The Marriage of Peleus and Thetis," which holds the "answer to understanding the vase," he said.

Since then, Skalsky has been overwhelmed by the media attention he has received.

"I've gotten phone calls and letters from all over the country, all of which have been positive, warm and encouraging," Skalsky said. "The support from the Five-College area has been fabulous from the beginning."

Classicists, a group known for its conservativism, originally were extremely skeptical of Skalsky's 29-page monograph. Editors of several scholarly journals rejected his work for the twelve months after it was completed.

Skalsky's work did not receive positive national attention until recently, when Dr. Richard Brilliant, a professor of art history and archeology at Columbia University, offered to publish the paper in his journal.

In unraveling the mystery of the vase, Skalsky found it to be "remarkably simple but remarkably complex."

Realizing that many scholars mistakenly began interpreting the meanings of the figures in the scene and other details within them, Skalsky instead looked to the other components of the picture for the hidden meaning of the vase.

"All of a sudden it hit me," said Skalsky. "It was the architecture that played a crucial role."

Herbert Golder, a professor of classics at Boston University and editor of Arion, said in a report that the find will "completely reorient the study of Roman glass."

"Blacks in America are treated as if they are the enemy," he said. "If you look at our logo you will notice that it depicts the Black man as a target."

"There is apartheid here in America," Chuck D. said.

"We must rebuild the Black man" he affirmed, and stressed the importance of building strong family structures. Chuck D. also expressed the need to "build our own schools and our own institutions." Of extreme importance, he said, was to establish Black businesses and "control our own economy."

Junk mail is not for me

I like mail. But not the kind I usually get.

Half of the letters I receive at my residence are addressed to "occupant." The other half have my name on the address label, but only because I somehow made it onto a mailing list stored in some computer somewhere. All it took was one subscription to The Sporting News when I was in high school, and my name was theirs. I couldn't get as much mail if I sent letters to each of my friends and relatives every day.

And none of these people know me in the slightest.

Greg Sukiennik

For example, Citibank keeps sending me credit card applications. "Dear Gregory Sukiennik: now the credit card you want and need is easier than ever to get."

Only my father calls me Gregory. Usually an unmown lawn or an unweeded garden has something to do with it.

If Citibank, located in that banking capital of the world, Sioux Falls, S.D., knew anything about my spending habits, they wouldn't be sending me credit cards. They'd send their competition's credit cards instead. That's why, although they say I need and want a card, I won't get one. My wanting a Visa is like Joan of Arc asking for gasoline.

At least Citibank isn't cheezy about it. Publishers' Clearing House likes to pretend they're on close terms with me by inserting my name throughout their sweepstakes propaganda. "Just think, Gregory Sukiennik, 10 million dollars to spend any way you want."

Unfortunately, to win the dough one usually has to subscribe to such established journals as Redbook, Us, Cosmopolitan and Highlights for Children. While I never miss an issue of Highlights when visiting the dentist, this is truly a steep price to pay for 10 million dollars.

Some higher-brow publications such as Land's End and the ever-popular J. Crew (also known as J. Screw for their price scale) offer the option of keeping your name off these insipid lists. Naturally, that doesn't stop them from sending you multiple copies of their catalogue. Show me people who look like J. Crew models in real life and I'll show you Amherst College.

In marketing circles, imitation isn't just the sincerest form of flattery, it's the law. Which explains why the University is so keen on this mass-mailing thing. If it isn't a phone bill or a catalogue, it's junk mail from UMass. If it's postmarked "Whitmore" or "Housing," I just throw it away. No use in even opening those.

Here's a brief message along those lines for my pals at Berkshire House: for the last time, I do not want a MicroFridge! I don't care if it operates on one plug, holds a half-gallon of ice cream and scales fish with the push of a button. I don't care if it holds three cases of Keystone — although that is a handy feature, come to think of it.

Housing did, however, send me a birthday card wishing me "a cake and a smile." I'm still waiting for my cake, folks.

The "important" mail goes right in the circular file, too. Like threat letters from the Bursar. They want me to pay them bills else they'll "administratively withdraw" me. After the fifth one, they start sending by registered mail. That's when it's time to pay up.

Letters from the Chancellor are fun, too. It's nice to think he actually knows who I am [though after reading this, that may change]. Maybe you saw it and hoped he knew you, too.

O'Brien spoke in soothing tones about the relatively small size of our 4 percent tuition increase and hoped I'd be able to finish my degree program here. No problem, man. Just don't throw me out if I don't pay my Bursar's bill right away.

By the way, we are going to party

We are going to party. We are going to party. We are going to party. You must realize that no matter what you do, we are going to party. Why must you make our lives so miserable? When will you realize that the students are this town? Amherst would be nothing without the students. We are going to party.

First, the university disallows us to party in the dorms. Now, all the dorm rats are forced to party in the "bars" uptown or at off-campus parties. We are going to party.

Then, they say no more off-campus parties by slapping a tag on the kegs. We are going to party. Then, they call in the ABC to the "bars" uptown. We are going to party. Why must you make everyone's lives so miserable? Where do you suggest we go now? Now we must get a license to get a keg. Are you kidding me? We are still going to party. How about at your houses this weekend?

Why don't you strap a beer to your face and relax for a little while? You are really taking the students for granted. You are also taking our money, the money that keeps this town alive, for granted. We are going to party, why don't you?

Meet Jackie. She's a seventeen-year-old from Cape Cod who was chosen from among thousands of other applicants to spend her spring semester in Washington, D.C. as a Congressional Page.

Now what exactly is a Page? Inquiring myself, I asked Jackie to share a typical day and explain just what it is Pages do.

5:15 a.m. Alarm clocks inside the O'Neil Building, a block from the Capitol, ring loudly. Reluctantly, 60 sleepy seventeen-year-olds brush their teeth, wash the sleep from their eyes and put on their uniforms. By 6 a.m. they're off to breakfast.

Felice Cohen

6:45 a.m. In the Library of Congress, school begins. Trudging from class to class, Pages drag their tired feet from chemistry to calculus to French. All the while absorbing formulas, equations and tenses.

10:00 a.m. Homework assignments packed away, they head to work at the Capitol. There they scramble to their posts. Some to the Senate, others to the House of Representatives. Some work for Congressmen, some for Senators. And some are Democrats and some are Republicans.

As a Page, their main job is to help out "on the Hill." Looking out over "the Mall," some Pages are runners, delivering and picking up messages and packages from building to building.

Other Pages work in the Cloak Room, where "Congressmen hang out, nap or eat," says Jackie. The Pages also answer phones and must know what is going on "on the floor" at all times. Most importantly, they must be able to recognize each Congressman by face. This would seem to be the hardest part, for to me they all look alike.

Living together in a converted hotel, Pages eat, sleep and breathe politics. When the check-bouncing scandal first came out, the Pages ran to each other's rooms, gossiping about their own Congressmen and Senators, seeking inside information.

Every morning after school they "work until 5 p.m. if we're lucky," says Jackie. "Or until Congress gets out of session, which could last until 3 a.m.!"

But despite the hard work and long hours, meeting politicians can be exciting. One incident in particular, Jackie recalls, "I was doing runs in the Senate and found myself on the elevator with Senator Kennedy. He asked where I was from and I said, 'Oh, about a mile down the street from your mother.' " His surprised look quickly turned into a warm smile.

A handful of Pages arrive in Washington with dreams of becoming politicians, while others are there to learn more about their government. In either case they will return home having learned more than they ever imagined. Though some run the risk of having their dreams crushed by burned-out politicians.

On an elevator (a hot spot for meeting politicians), Jackie overheard a conversation between two Senators.

Sen. 1: "Why are you doing this?"

Sen. 2: "Because it will help provide shelter for these people.

Sen. 1: "Well, what's in it for you?"

Sen. 2: "Nothing. But at least 50 people die a year from fires in inadequate housing."

Sen. 1: "Million? If you don't put a million behind it, it doesn't mean anything to me. Oh, (looking at Jackie) I forgot, we can't say these things in front of a Page, she still is a young one with ideals."

Needless to say, Jackie was stunned, though she assures me her ideals are still intact.

Only a junior in high school, she has blossomed from a little girl, who once refused to sit at the kitchen table unless her paper napkin was folded "the right way" (she has since stopped using them - save trees), into a mature young adult with a deep caring for her future and how it will fit in to helping the environment.

But no matter how big she gets in Washington, one thing will remain the same. She will always be my kid sister.

President Jerry Brown

I'm going to skip a long essay this week because I want to touch on several different issues.

First of all, on the presidential race I have been accused of ignoring: Like my t-shirt says, "Lick Bush in '92."

Actually, I like Jerry Brown. He's got a history of support for gay rights. I especially appreciate his appointment of several openly gay judges in California. We need our people on the bench!

Trystan Skeigh

Jerry's intelligent, not afraid to get specific, and frankly folks, the fact his issues have changed (I say improved) over the years is a mighty big plus. Wouldn't most of us rather have a progressive president who's open-minded and flexible as opposed to the usual rigid puppet following the ol' party-line?

He's always been progressive, opposed big government and been pro-environment. Jerry's getting blasted because he's the only legitimate candidate (I discount KKK members and right-wing fanatics) gutsy enough to go on record with ideas on specific issues. Besides, you've just gotta love a guy who puts on a U.A.W. jacket.

Okay, enough about big boy politics. Next let's talk about my favorite loaded topic — problems within the GLB community at UMass: You know, I really miss my three lesbian friends who moved off campus in December because they said they felt more comfortable in Northampton than within the predominantly bisexual LBGA community here.

Honestly folks, there's something wrong when lesbians don't feel welcome or safe within the only student organization on campus supposedly committed to their needs. And you know something? I'm getting pretty darn tired of knee-jerk charges of "bi-phobia" everytime I bring up the issue of safe space.

Lesbians and gays benefit from spending time in separate space. They have a chance to relax, relate, heal and celebrate their homosexual identities in safety. It's not about disliking or rejecting anyone else, it's about celebrating homosexual community. Currently the LBGA schedules separate community meetings for bisexuals, but not for lesbians or gays.

On a related note, a lot of folks have been throwing around the term "lesbian separatist" without knowing what it means. Let me give you a clue — a lesbian separatist wouldn't be at this campus, because there are men here. Nor would she work for a newspaper that employs male staff, work on a Pride March that includes men, live in a dorm with male residents, or publicly acknowledge she has a twin brother named Greg. (By the way I saw him over break — he's doing great!) Have I made myself clear?

In order for lesbians, gays and bisexuals to form a "queer community" we have to be willing to accept a few basic differences about each other. For one thing, we're not all going to share the same experiences or views of sexual relationships.

Bisexuals need to understand and accept the fact that some lesbians and gays feel uncomfortable around folks involved in opposite-sex relationships. Many lesbians and gays need to relinquish their dualistic (everyone is either gay or straight) attitude about sexual orientation. We all need to remember the biggest source of our oppression is the heterosexual mainstream, not each other.

Last, a different topic: Please don't leave me out on a limb about RA's! Economic exploitation is wrong. Graduate students worked for fair treatment and got it. RA's should do the same! Although a lot of RA's love their jobs, many burn out because the workload is too high and the money too low. RA's need to start talking about this problem. Write in! Agree or disagree! The First Amendment works! I'm still here, living proof you won't get fired!

Feminism is not being a victim

Stacy Malone's op/ed piece on Thelma and Louise made me very worried on at least two levels. One, does this mean that some (how many?) young Americans lack the cultural literacy and sophistication to interpret contemporary popular culture, never mind "real" culture? And two, do they understand the historical underpinnings of feminism?

The writer does not seem to understand that Thelma and Louise were not just "two women who were friends," but that they are symbols and that the plot of the movie was a parable portraying the position of women in modern American society.

When Thelma, away from her loutish, domineering husband for the first time in her life, is flattered and picked up by the local womanizer, she innocently has a good time with him on the dance floor.

It was stated explicitly and truthfully in the movie by Louise that hundreds of witnesses and any jury would confirm that she was "asking for it." Rather than have them rebel and try to save their lives in the only way they could, Malone would prefer to see them martyrized in order to "show how unfairly rape cases are tried," i.e., have them assume the familiar feminine role of the victim.

It apparently escaped the writer completely that Louise had been raped before in Texas before she moved to Arkansas, even though it was alluded to a number of times throughout the movie. The statistics on the number of women raped in this country should speak for themselves, and Louise is a representative of all those women and the rage and shame that they carry with them. It is that accumulated rage and shame that made Louise shoot Thelma's rapist, not that "they were harmed by one man."

Feminism is about not being a victim anymore.

That Thelma and Louise went over the edge into a life of crime is a metaphor meant to express the fact that the pervasive oppression experienced by women in this society is criminal, and the movie is trying to show its audience what would happen if women started to give back as hard as they got from men.

The film was littered with men inadequate to the responsibility of being a partner to a woman.

Thelma's husband took pride in being an irresponsible adult-child.

Louise's partner was unable to fully commit to their relationship and gave information to the police when pressed. Thelma's hotel-room lover was a heartless cad.

The detective portrayed by Harvey Keitel tried to understand them, but was condescending to them as if they were errant children.

All of Malone's advice in the final paragraph was directed at women who have already been raped. It was all sound advice, but it had nothing to do with the message of Thelma and Louise: we're not going to take it anymore.

It is this rejection of victim status and the failure to respond in the accepted fashion that disturbed so many viewers, male and female, of one of the best American films ever made.

Closing 'loophole' is wrong

On Monday the administration announced the creation of a new University policy regarding the Division of Continuing Education. The policy is designed to close a "loophole" which enabled many students to complete their degrees through Continuing Education. In a memo dated Mar. 23, Provost Glen Gordon asserted that when students take advantage of the old policy it is "unfair to those students who pay the full bill of attending the University as regular students." That may be true enough, but why is no one questioning the fairness of increasing tuition and fees that are forcing them to do so?

Jen Wood

The growing numbers of students withdrawing from the University to complete their degrees through the Division of Continuing Education is just one symptom of a larger problem. The tremendous increases in tuition and fees that the students here at UMass have been hit with over the past several years have driven many of them away from the University. Furthermore, decreases in the financial aid pool have left many of those remaining struggling to pay their bills without benefits of the state's assistance. Some of those students have been relieved to discover that they can complete their degrees, but only if they take their senior year in absentia. Essentially, that means that they withdraw from regular University enrollment and take the remainder of their credits through the division of Continuing Education. For example, this can allow an in-state student carrying 15 credits to save just under $900. For many, this $900 can mean the difference between flipping through books or flipping burgers.

By merely closing the "loophole" that has allowed students to complete their degrees, the administration is doing a great disservice to the hundreds (their estimate) of students who look to Continuing Education for the opportunity to finish their education.

As undergraduates, we should ask ourselves why the administration is always looking to address the symptoms of our state funding crisis instead of practicing the preventive medicine necessary to alleviate those symptoms. If they had been actively pursuing more state support and funding instead of lobbying for tuition retention things might have turned out differently here in Amherst. Maybe enrollment wouldn't have dropped to 17,000 students. Perhaps, if they hadn't instituted all sorts of new fees and increased the ones we already had in an attempt to push the burden of the budget crisis onto the backs of students and their families all these darn students wouldn't be trying to enter the University through the "back door."

It has come to the point where students are going to have to be the ones to take the lead. If we don't work right now to put together a coalition to fight for the long-term interests of the public higher education in Massachusetts, UMass in particular, we won't be able to look forward to anything but more attempts like this to limit access to a University education. If the administration isn't going to take a stand against the privatization of the public higher education through tuition retention then we are going to have to take our own stand.

Policies like this new Continuing Education policy have once again demonstrated that what is best administratively is not necessarily the best thing for the students. We are the "public" in public higher education and we must force the legislature to recognize privatizing UMass means excluding much of that "public" from the benefits of a quality education.

Many students have taken a stand against tuition retention, now is the time for action. With the active support of all of the unions on campus, we can really make that stand mean something.

Is the U.S. taking tranquilizers?

Has this country been given a tranquilizer? Let's give George Bush four more years to do whatever he couldn't do in the last twelve. There's a resinous feeling in the air. Those who push for change are coined "radicals" come election year, and they are stuffed away by a stuffy population that can't bear to see anyone else's stuff. It's moved beyond symptoms — we're showing the signs of a bad case of "fear." We're no longer a world power. We have lost our industries, as we can only service what others make. Japanese business booms because they use the tool of vision; the ultimate plan of where they want their company to be in 200 years.

Let's face it, those that are happy will want to keep the same creature in the Oval Office. Those that are not cannot keep waiting for someone else to make the difference. Pass it on. Well, don't pass it on to me! I'm too busy dealing with the cobwebs in my head and a fuzzy outlook on my future. I'm looking for a new job right now. Someone has got to give the college graduates a chance, and please don't humor us by putting a suggestion box outside your big business door.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Occasionally, Josh "Superman" Reynolds will want a day off, and I'll come up swinging the bat in my half-hearted style, popping out to the catcher, no doubt, but delighting the fans anyway. Let's hope so. . .

Well, it's spring again in the Valley full of Pioneer — it's a wondrous kind of time everywhere, spring, but at UMass especially, because this is the only season when this college campus actually looks beautiful. When that scent is in the air, (you know, that spring odor that's so hard to describe without using the dull adjectives 'fresh' or 'fragrant'), the sun is blaring all over the place, all over all the buildings that usually look so bleak, all over your dorm room through the window as you wake up, some guy is blaring music down the hall, but you don't mind anymore because it's actually warm outside, and people are acting different: the cynicism that sums up our generation (especially in this part of the country) has eased up a bit, people aren't overly friendly to one another exactly, just loopy.

And school work? Forget it! It ain't possible. Spring is a new thing and who has time to read when there is such beauty being born just outside. OK wiseass, bring that book with you outside for that sunny lie-down we all know you deserve? Well, how's the reading going? Thought so. . . you've been eyeballing the dude over there with the frisbee and the green hair, or that old lady just standing around, looking perplexed and out of place, or that bee that's been hovering around you, trying to explain that it is still groggy from the long rest, or the ducks. . . the crazy ducks all leave the pond and wander off all over the place. That's my favorite part of spring at UMass: I've been here since '87 and every spring, without fail, the ducks up and leave the pond area. Most end up walking around Central hill, but they can be seen everywhere. It's like suddenly they can't deal with each other anymore and just need some space (although they always seem to travel in these heart-breaking love triangles — always a girl duck escorted by two boy ducks. Hmmm. . .) or they finally have the bravado to see what else there is to do other than swim around. Why did the duck cross the road? Because he saw another duck heading to Northeast and thought he'd see what's going on.

Ari Vais

So happy spring and don't worry when your GPA begins to plummet — what sort of scrooge would make you feel bad about celebrating the return of the warmth instead of studying? I once made a mistake that I'll always regret and it had to do with spring: it was spring of '88, back when UMass still had some shadow of having been ZooMass, when some people that attended ZooMass were still around and the place still had a subtle scent of craziness. Anyway, Fishbone and the Red Hot Chili Peppers were playing a free, outdoor show in the Northeast quad, but me, I was worried about this massive Afro-Am paper and decided to do it in the Tower Library, from where I could see the masses slamming and hopping and having the time of their lives. Afterwards, I reemerged on the ground, finished paper proudly in hand. The show had ended and my friends ran by me in drunken stupors, donning Chili Pepper shirts that were wet and said 'Rock out with your cock out!' on them and I began to feel slightly moronical. But not nearly as moronical as I feel now. I tell you, missing that show for a lousy paper was a really stupid thing to do — learn from my mistake — don't do anything like this, ever.

There's a new presidential candidate on the horizon. I really don't know a damn thing about the guy except that he looks really fragile and sweet and is a zillionare. His name is Perot (no relation to that Amherst woman that digs for urine) and I guess that he is going to pay off the national deficit from his own pocket! I can't believe it! Or was someone just pulling my leg? (You're right, Jon Starr, I'm an absolute bafoon.) Anyway, read up about this guy because nobody seems to like Bush anymore, and the Democrats are, let's be frank, not going to win. .

I want to get a mohawk or grow one of those beards that are just a few violent-looking, long hairs that point angrily from the chin, I want a tatoo or to shave my head again. "So why don't you do it, you [expletive], instead of wasting trees talking about it?" Because I'm about to graduate and even though I've got a rock 'n' roll heart, I still have to eat and pay rent and maybe even have health insurance, so I can't look like any damn freak. That's what it all comes down to, all this collegy-type stuff about individuality and looking any old way you want without being judged, that's all cool, but only until graduation. Then, unless you can manage to get really rich, or deal with being really broke, your individuality will have to come from within — you'll have to be a secret freak. Not that anybody wants to look like a weirdo these days.

If it ever becomes too much to handle, I recommend that you take a free bus to Mt. Holyoke College, find a nice, secluded area and just stretch out and not think for a while. It's really so gorgeous and peaceful there, and far enough away from everything to bring relief (yet not so far that it costs money to get there). I did this once, but unfortunately I was driven out by the school's security because some woman spied me as she was entering her dorm, became alarmed, and suddenly, headlights in my face! Who can blame her, in this day and age? Not me. Besides, I was plastered and stumbling about, bawling about something, and at one point, I fell into their brook.

donated money, along with the local businesses who were so nice to donate the prizes," said Tinger.

Tinger added that every sorority on campus helped with the raffle, and Phi Mu Delta has also helped raise money for Danny.

Colbert said one Wednesday night last month, Delano's Restaurant in Amherst had a one-dollar cover charge and sent him the proceeds. "Everyone has been so supportive. My family is really happy with the response, and very grateful," he said.

Colbert said his brother Joe is running a Las Vegas night on Saturday, April 4 at the Holiday Inn in Somerville, beginning at 7:30 p.m., to benefit Danny.

Tinger said she is organizing a mailing of flyers next week to every student on campus. The flyer will explain Danny's situation, and inform students they can drop off monetary donations in the Greek Affairs office in Whitmore, Tinger said.

Although she has participated in many fundraisers, Tinger said this one has definitely meant the most to her. "Raising money for Danny is different. This is about saving a life," she said.

Donations can also be mailed to Paul Colbert, who lives in room 1002 of Kennedy Residence Hall.

and heirs and millions to big businesses that don't need it," he said.

Under the administration's plan, firms would also collect tax credits by increasing the payroll.

But some critics say the language can be deceiving.

Peter Enrich, an associate professor at Northeastern University School of Law, predicted firms would cut health benefits, raise salaries and then collect the tax credits.

Robert Tannenwald, an economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, agreed Weld's plan could have long-term benefits. But he said it is risky.

"I call it a bad bet," Tannenwald said. "There are fairly certain and immediate costs; the benefits are long-distance and uncertain."

The most obvious loss is the $192 million in tax revenue.

Tannenwald and others advocated spending money on infrastructure projects — roads, bridges, water systems — and public education.

A smashing good time in Springfield

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Staff

Want a watermelon smashed in your face? A carton of chocolate milk? How about a gigantic water balloon?

If the answer to any or all of the above is "yes," go to Springfield tonight, because Gallagher is here.

Gallagher, the "King of Cable Comedy," will be performing with his trademark Sledge-o-Matic at Symphony Hall at 8:00. He is the second featured performer in the 1992 Bud Light Comedy Series.

His particular brand of humor is unique in the field of stand-up comedy. Unique and messy. He doesn't tell stories like Bill Cosby, nor does he tell straight jokes, like George Burns. What he relies on is the visual and physical aspects of humor.

For example, he brings strange objects with him on the road, such as a gigantic couch, or huge shoes.

But what he is most famous for is smashing things.

Wet things.

The Sledge-o-Matic, in case you don't already know, is a giant wooden mallet. Gallagher uses this mallet to smash apples, oranges, cottage cheese containers (full of course), and watermelons — just to name a few things.

He will, of course, smash just about anything that will make a big mess, and front row audience members usually come prepared, wearing rain coats and hats. They sometimes bring large strips of plastic sheeting to protect their clothes.

Gallagher's humor, though, extends to the verbal too.

He makes jokes about words: "Why do you own a pair of pants, but only one bra?"

He makes jokes about absurdity: "Why do they put locks on the doors at 7-Eleven stores when they're open 24-hours a day?"

His humor is funny and always original, and there aren't any other comedians quite like him.

"My humor makes people think," he says. "I want people to look more closely at this country and their lives."

Anyone who goes to see Gallagher in concert will certainly be in for a unique experience in comedy.

Gallagher has appeared in ten cable comedy specials — more than any other comedian — and has had five best-selling video tapes.

Anyone who goes to see Gallagher in concert will certainly be in for a unique experience in comedy.

Gallagher will be appearing tonight only at Springfield Symphony Hall.

Ruby needs some polishing

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

After seeing Ruby, you'll never believe that Jack Ruby killed Lee Harvey Oswald as a patriotic gesture or as a fall guy for a conspiracy. In fact, you really may not know why at all.

Ruby fails as a factual biography precisely because it's not structured that way at all. Ruby is a fascinating, if not satisfying, journey into the man (excuse the cliche) behind the myth.

Ruby unmasks Jack Ruby (Danny Aiello) as a confused low-ranking mobster who was much more a showman in his Dallas nightclub than a mafioso. Always kept in the dark and a step behind, the film makes the contention that Ruby was as much a patsy as Oswald.

Instead of the all-encompassing conspiracy offered by JFK, Ruby probes a CIA-Mafia connection that supposedly killed the President. Jack, manipulated by a smug CIA agent (Arliss Howard) and the mob, emerges as nothing more than a fringe player, an explosive historical footnote.

As the film builds to the assassination of JFK, Ruby departs from its almost play-like format (it originated on the London stage) to a cheap spin off of the much superior JFK assassination sequences. The comparison ends there, as Ruby's main attempt is more to explore the life of Jack Ruby than to deluge the audience with complex facts and theories.

The only fictionalized part of the movie discusses Ruby's involvement with a stripper named Candy Cane. Sherilyn Fenn (Twin Peaks) expertly plays the blond bombshell styled after Marilyn Monroe. Ruby tries to draw parallels between Cane and Jack but he ends up like a like an overprotective father, dazzled by her beauty and innocence. Her character, however, is too ingrained in the events to be taken as fictional. Candy Cane sleeps with JFK and even shows up in Dealy Plaza in front of the grassy knoll, gawking at the gunmen behind the fence.

Political manipulations of 'God' examined

By JAY ALLAIN
Collegian Correspondent

The Window of Vuinerabillity: A Political Spirituality
Dorothee Soelle
Fortress Press: Minneapolis

Despite a wholesale exodus from organized religion in the sixties, the United States' population still insists — about 80% — that it believes in God.

What the actual content of this espoused bellef is, however, is less easy to glean. And critics' charges (that religion is in collusion with state power and the status quo) generally have been rather slow to yield.

Aware of the need for serious change, in 1968 the bishops of Latin America met in Medellin, Colombia and christened the new field of "liberation theology." Chiefly a Third World phenomenon, it has attempted to forge a living faith amidst the squalor of economic exploitation, political disempowerment (and repression) and pervasive oppression.

Most Western religious leaders and theologians, the Pope included, have attempted to localize this insurgent development by associating it with Marxism, guerilla priests and heresy. Yet the intrepid German theologian Dorothee Soelle, in the eclectic essays in The Window of Vulnerability, forges a bridge between the Third and First World. Yet in keeping with the spirit of Medellin, it is not merely an intellectual/ethical construct but rather a call to active resistance against the forces of oppression, chief of which she terms "the project of death."

However, she challenges not only those involved in the manufacture of weapons of mass destruction but those who unconsciously embrace the psuedo-security it offers even as the poor sink into greater misery.

Again and again, in exposing the stark underside of our obsession with "national security" and our demonization of those who maintain different ideological world views, Soelle goads us to take sides — to "choose life."

It is a work bound to elicit strong praise and harsh condemnation; it does not equivocate.

For example, in an essay entitled "The White Rose Is Blooming," Soelle draws upon the name of a tiny resistance cell in Nazi Germany to confront a judge on his complicity in plans to destroy the country, and indeed, the entire planet.

Recalling to the court the solitary witness of Rosa Parks, the 382-ay bus boycott that Martin Luther King, Jr. helped lead and the freedom of Daniel Berrigan, she goads the court into confronting their subservient role towards the United States.

"Is German justice," she asks, "being employed as a bailiff for these rulers?"

In the various essays, one begins to grasp the diverse sources for Soelle's fiery brand of Christianity — historical, psychospiritual and feminist. Again using the rhetorical question, she takes on the patriarchal structure of Christianity and asks, "Why should we women worship and love a being who does not transcend the moral level of the present, male-determined culture but only stabilizes it?"

Yet her radical feminism can be inclusive as well, as when she writes, "The desire for another conception of God, other symbols and other hopes, is important for those who need a different God because they are insulted, humiliated and disgusted by the culture in which we live and think."

Women and men must confront the sins of: "underdevelopment of the self, conformity to the dominant structure, lack of pride in being a woman, disobedience." In other words, adjusting to a sexist, militarized culture.

Soelle challenges us to rethink such beliefs and habits of devotion. For those who seek a dynamic faith that provides a counterforce for a troubled world, she is a sturdy guide — a nonviolent Joan of Arc, a crusader for life, without apology or capitulation.

Ruby

Danny Aiello (Moonstruck) is excellent as Ruby, giving the character who we all know but know nothing about a depth and resonance in an attempt to make him a tragic figure. Ruby succeeds partly because it makes him such an engaging, deep character. However, as Jack breaks down in a jail cell after killing Oswald, the audience is left to make up its own mind about his actual motives for the shooting. This means that the viewer just sat through a 100 minute movie with no payoff.

With such a far-reaching subject as the Kennedy assassination we may never know the real facts. But while Ruby gives us a slightly better understanding of the man Jack Ruby, making him seem less like another untouchable character in the twisted cast of the JFK conspiracy, it offers none of the why.

Ruby works much better as a film about a struggling man in over his head (the film actually creates sympathy for the man) who just happened to be Jack Ruby. As a factual account, however, Ruby seems as remote as the lone-gunman theory.

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

Arrested Development
3 Years, 5 Months and 2 Days in the Life Of . . .
Chrysalis Records

When you first listen to the Arrested Development album 3 Years, 5 Months and 2 Days in the Life Of . . . you realize that it is not an ordinary rap album. Instead of sounds from the street, there are sounds from the countryside where the group grew up outside of Atlanta.

The six-member group is comprised of Speech (lead lyricist), Headliner (DJ), Aerle Taree (back-up vocals), Montsho Eshe (choreographer), Rasa Don (jack of all trades) and Baba Oje (advisor and spiritual leader).

Speech tries to bring forth intelligent and message-sending lyrics on many of the songs on the 15 track album, and for the most part he succeeds.

An example of these intelligent lyrics appear on the song "Mama's Always on Stage." "Brand new mama/ I understand. It's hard as hell to be a young mother and...you need support your conscience told you/not to abort so to your child you're a hero, of some sort. But hey, the worst is over. . . you're ready to do this."

Other songs which display Speech's lyrical power include, "Fishin 4 Religion," which looks at the politically weak American black baptist churches, "Mr. Wendal," which deals with the treatment of the homeless, and "Give A Man A Fish" which uses the old proverb 'Give a man a fish, he'll eat for a day. Teach him how to fish and he'll eat forever' to get its hopeful message across.

The background music from the album is both refreshingly different and disturbingly different. The song "People Everyday" nicely incorporates the chorus from the Sly and the Family Stone classic "Everyday People".

Other background highlights include the live instruments played in some of the songs. A good example of this is the searing harmonica that can be heard in the cut "Mama's Always on Stage".

For the most part the country-tinged background sound is monotonous because you really can't get into it. The beats in some songs are solid, but overall they do not get the job done because they are weak, and really don't make you want to move.

Much like De La Soul, the samples used by Arrested Development are off-the-beaten path. But unlike De La Soul, most of AD's samples are obscure.

Arrested Development's debut is both enlightening and disappointing. Speech's lyrics are very good and they have to be listened to, but most of the music can be thrown out with the rest of the trash.

Twins to play Pearl Street

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

it's not very often that you'll find a band consisting of identical twins.

This Saturday night will see the Herschler Brothers bringing their dynamic electric folk act to the downstairs room of Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. This is an opportunity to spend an evening listening to some really great songwriting.

JABBERWOCKY

Mark and Mathew Herschler are identical twins distinguished not only by their wild manes of blonde hair, but by the thought-provoking and melodic music that the two write together.

Gravel-voiced Mark is the extroverted, guitar slinging genius behind the group, whereas introspective and sensitive brother Matt provides the heart and soul of the duo. Both complement each other in such a way that it's dificult to imagine them performing without each other.

Mark Herschler is a professional busker by trade who spends his summers in Europe playing the crowded street corners and cafes of Paris, Amsterdam and Switzerland. He spent six years touring with the aptly named Lost Wandering Blues and Jazz Band before moving to this area three years ago to work with his twin brother.

Mark is a one-man jam session just waiting to happen and he is known around these parts for showing up at gigs, guitar in hand, to sit in for a song or two with local bands. The guy can play just about anything. At a recent solo acoustic gig he performed strictly Spanish flamenco music.

Matt Herschler is the quiet one who prefers hours spent at home composing and arranging songs on his piano versus the limelight of performing in the public eye. He has developed quite a reputation for his songwriting abilities via songs he has written and donated to the Have a Heart benefit concerts every year. This year's "We the People," recorded by the Have Heart Chorus, was penned by Matt Herschler and it received extensive airplay on area radio stations.

Together the Herschlers write powerful anthemic music that is compelling and stirring. You hear their tunes and you remember it. They have been compared to Scotland's Proclaimers, the Spanic Boys, and the legendary Cat Stevens.

The Pearl Street show this Saturday is special because it will feature the Herschler Brothers in the trio format of bass, drums and guitar that they are accustomed to working with when arranging and rehearsing their material. Normally they bring in musician friends, such as pianist Tom McClung, to create an ensemble for their shows.

But according to Matt, "The trio gives Mark some room to let loose on his guitar. He can get crazy this way."

Opening for the Herschlers will be Laurianne Fiorientino, a folk singer who is known best locally for her former work with the Bobby Darling Show.

Ugly Kid Joe's album not pretty

By SCOTT KESNER
Collegian Staff

Don't buy Ugly Kid Joe's new release, As Ugly As They Wanna Be. It's not worth the price of the brown bag that it comes in.

Those of you who subscribe to the menacing bile of the hit single, "Everything About You," are as emotionally stunted as the inept songwriters who allured you.

Ugly Kid Joe is having a musical identity crisis. The enigmatic quintet can't decipher the dichotomy of being a bad metal band or a diluted funk outfit. They're undistinguished either way.

For instance, the album's opening track, "Madman," is an inane prevarication babbled by a demonic — or shall I say moronic — tourist that shanghais an unsuspecting female, accompanies her on Disneyland's rides and then reveals, "I sure ain't Mickey Mouse, I'm a killer in disguise." The band surrounds its lyrical crassness with a raunchy paste of abusive guitaring. "Madman," is a tune that even Ratt would be afraid to do at a sound check.

On the opposite end of their limited spectrum is "Funky Fresh Country Club," which is either an obvious tribute to the Red Hot Chili Peppers, "Stone Cold Bush," or an oversight, ripping them off.

Somewhere in the six song mini-LP is the voice of Whitfield Crane. His vocals largely resemble those of former Motley Crew siren Vince Neil. Who in their right voice would want to emulate him? Prior to looking at the album sleeve, I thought that Vince Neil had found his new home, but rationalized that even a rapidly aging no talent like him would never be desperate enough to join this band.

Ugly Kid Joe are a tawdry bunch of varlets who amuse themselves with their own preoccupation with death and violence. This band belongs in a psych ward, where they should remain until they swear to never attempt album making again. I HATE EVERYTHING ABOUT THIS ALBUM!

NHL players on strike after contract rejection

By KEN RAPPOPORT
Associated Press

TORONTO — NHL players have voted almost unanimously to reject the owners' latest contract offer, setting into motion the first league-wide strike in history on Wednesday.

"There will be no games tonight," NHL Players Association executive director Bob Goodenow said at a news conference yesterday that started less than a half-hour prior to the announced 3 p.m. EST strike deadline.

After the players announced their rejection of the owners' deal, negotiations were expected to resume at a midtown Toronto hotel in an effort to save the rest of the season and the Stanley Cup playoffs, which start next week.

Eight members of the owners' committee and four from the union met in separate sessions at the hotel where they had broken off negotiations over the weekend.

Speaking from a crowded podium surrounded by several players, including the NHLPA negotiating committee, Goodenow confirmed that a meeting was planned with NHL president John Ziegler later in the day.

"If we can reach an agreement, this would enable the season and the playoffs to go forward," Goodenow said. "The question is: Are the owners prepared to continue the negotiations and use the time constructively?"

The players couldn't have been more decisive in their response to the balloting.

They rejected the owners' offer by a vote of 560 to 4.

"The vote results prove the players' dissatisfaction with the owners' final offer," Goodenow said. " A vote to reject was a vote to strike by 3 p.m. April 1, 1992."

Goodenow said that the NHLPA has made arrangements for the three teams on the road Wednesday to return to their home cities.

There are 27 games left in the regular season. Three were lost Wednesday night.

"The general joys of playing the games come into conflict," Goodenow said. "And that's the case today. I don't think there's anybody happy about this. But it's a step that the players collectively decided was necessary."

Added Mike Gartner of the New York Rangers, one of the members of the players' negotiating committee:

"We have to continue to negotiate and the window of opportunity to keep the playoffs alive is very small," Gartner said. "I think we have to take advantage of that opportunity over the next few days and try to get some kind of agreement.

"If we can't, I don't think there will be any playoffs and we'll be well into next season."

It was the second time the players had voted on the owners' latest offer, presented over the weekend during marathon negotiations in Toronto.

Lancaster teenager killed by grenade

AYER, Mass (AP) — A Fort Devens bomb squad searched a high school for unexploded munitions after a teen-ager was killed by grenades he found on army base grounds, officials said Wednesday.

A group of students at the Nashoba Regional High School in Bolton probably slipped into Fort Devens a number of times to look for military gear as souvenirs, base spokesperson Alex Fletcher said.

"We think they've got a cache somewhere," she said. "We really feel that there have been other people in on this."

Eric Dudley, 16, of Lancaster died Tuesday evening in a wooded training area of the base after at least one of two grenades he found exploded in his knapsack, officials said.

A high school friend who was with him, 18-year-old Dale Leferman, also of Lancaster, was unharmed. No charges have been filed against Leferman.

Fletcher said she believed the teen-agers had been onto the base before, possibly with other friends. Investigators who searched the Nashoba high school Wednesday found nothing.

Fort Devens officials appealed to the public to call authorities if they find shells and other ammunition on or off the base.

"That's very frightening to us," Fletcher said. "There's no way to tell a dud from a real one."

There is no security problem at Fort Devens even though some areas are accessible to civilians, officials said. Warning signs and barbed wire fencing clearly mark the South Post training area where the two teenagers found the grenades.

"You have to make an extreme effort" to get into the area, Fletcher said.

A similar incident occurred about 10 years ago when a man was injured by munitions he found on base grounds, she said.

Lancaster Police Chief Eric McAvenue said he would request more patrols by military police on the base to deter trespassers. He said he had heard cases of people bringing ammunition off the base in the past.

"It's one of those things that is kept reasonably quiet," McAvene said.

Gary Sanborne, a Lancaster resident, said it was, "common practice for kids around here to go into Fort Devens and pick up whatever they find, you know, hang on their wall — needles, bullet shells, whatever."

Although Fort Devens has been slated for closure, Fletcher said the area where Dudley found the grenades will stay open for National Guard and reservist training.

Deadlock remains on redistricting

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — A federal judge urged the state to devise a 10-seat map of congressional districts, but the governor and the House Speaker remained at odds Wednesday over how to proceed.

The result is that candidates attempting to determine where they will be running still have no clear idea how the lines will be drawn if Massachusetts loses its bid to keep 11 seats in the U.S. House.

U.S. District Court Judge Edward Harrington refused to step in and order the state to redraw congressional districts, but "suggested, in accordance with the dictates of prudence, that the provisions (of a previous order) be voluntarily complied with."

The state was originally scheduled to lose a congressional seat, but a panel of three federal judges rule in Massachusetts' favor last month.

The Supreme Court has agreed to take up the case and last week suspended judges' ruling pending a final decision.

Gov. William F. Weld said the state should comply with the Harrington's suggestion. "I think we should come up with a 10-district plan just so we're prepared against all contingencies," Weld said.

But House Speaker Charles Flaherty, D-Cambridge, said the governor already agreed to a 10-seat plan with Democratic leaders last month.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

I was just sitting around today when Mr. Peterson came up and sat on my lap.
I scratched her back and she purred.
She looked at me and closed her eyes then opened them, like a slow-motion blink.
Then she got comfortable and fell asleep.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

Today I just sat around and watched TV.
I watched a bit of an "Alf" rerun then didn't feel like watching TV anymore.
I got on the floor and relaxed every muscle in my body.
I heard Mr. Peterson chewing and batting around a crumpled piece of paper in the other room.

It's rather complicated
First I comb my hair and put on my favorite red sweating jacket...
I splash on a little of my most expensive jog perfume...
Then I prepare the finest microwave dinner anyone would ever want to eat... Fantastico.
I greet Sashine with a kiss, and whisper sweet nothings in her ear...
Kiss, nothing, nothing nothing...

By JEANE DIXON

SCORPIO (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A profitable academic or business collaboration is featured. Gains made through cooperative efforts now are greater than those you could make on your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your misgivings about an event may be justified. Your mate encourages you to regain your earlier self-confidence. Be careful not to risk resources you cannot afford to lose.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get several opinions if faced with a major decision. An intuitive friend may have the correct slant on things. Postpone an an important career move until more information is available.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19): The emphasis now is on getting your finances in better order. Keep a list of expenditures to see where you can cut costs. Jealousy could undermine an important relationship. Speak up.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20): Let your imagination run wild for a change. Greater personal initiative is all you need to put your long-range plans into action. Try out original methods.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day to kick around intriguing ideas with close friends. Put your special talents to work for a favorite charity or cause. Quiet contemplation is favored tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The world is your oyster today! Make phone calls, put in a public appearance and heed what you learn. You can reap substantial rewards if you stay on the ball.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Happy days are here again! A business prospers. Your powers of persuasion are at a peak. Others are putty in your hands. Think of yourself as a leader and move forward with confidence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get the green light for a project and can take to the road. An influential friend may be willing to pull strings. Love needs nurturing. Be more affectionate with romantic partner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Career and financial matters dominate the day. An executive who understands your needs will take steps to help you or your job crew. Cycle for fitness or flex your muscles at the gym.

LIBRA (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Prove your point by submitting detailed report. An important introduction takes place at a social gathering. Put your best foot forward, but don't trip over it.

Tournament grumblings

Let's start off with Christian Laettner. He might have won the game against Kentucky, but he lost a lot of people's respect when he stomped on Kentucky forward Aminu Timberlake.

Doesn't Laettner remember how he felt when UConn center Rod Sellers mistook his head for a basketball last year? Obviously he doesn't, and just like Sellers, he should be suspended.

Since Michigan beat Ohio State, I've been hearing about how the Wolverines will be in the Final Four all four years that the Fab Five are there.

I have a feeling though, that it will be extremely hard to keep all five immensely talented freshmen in Ann Arbor. With money being handed out in the NBA like food stamps at welfare offices, it'll be very surprising if all five (especially Chris Webber and Jalen Rose) players remain Wolverines for four years.

Jeff Crofts

Memphis State's Anfernee Hardaway will be the next Steve Smith, you can count on that.

What was Syracuse's Lawrence Moten thinking when he went to the barber? That haircut is awful. He looks like JJ on Good Times. And for that matter someone better tell Kentucky's Gimel Martinez and Richie Farmer that their moustaches have to go. . . fast!

Will Herndon will be in a national dunk contest Sunday night at 9:30 (It will be televised by ESPN.) Of course, I like Herndon to win it, but watch out for Texas-San Antonios' Keith "Airborne" Horne. The man can dunk and might take home the trophy.

I'm sure I'm not the only one who wants to see a Duke-Michigan rematch in the championship game. Also, I'll bet I'm not the only one who'd want to see Duke get their butts kicked like they did by UNLV two years ago.

Bobby Knight's press conference on game faces was perhaps the funniest thing in the tournament so far. I never knew Knight could be so animated, and I was impressed.

I want to play Ohio State's seven-foot center Bill Robinson one-on-one at the Cage. I really think I could beat him. He's one of the biggest stiffs ever to wear a basketball uniform, and the only reason he's playing is that you can't teach or coach height.

Postseason camps will be coming up soon and let's hope Jimmy McCoy shows off his skills against the best of the nation. I wonder who'll come out of the woodwork this year in postseason camps like Scottie Pippen, Dan Majerle and Dee Brown have in the past.

One other thing, has anybody seen former Louisville high-flyer Jerome Harmon? After leaving school early (and the Cardinals could've used him against UCLA) Harmon is nowhere to be seen, he's simply vanished, and I miss his awesome aerial acrobatics.

It is now time to announce my All-American team for the 1991-92 season, here they are (players had to be moved to different positions).

Center: Shaquille O'Neal, LSU — The man's a monster, plain and simple. He's too good for the college game, he can't be stopped. His shot blocking exhibition against BYU was absolutely incredible.

Forward: Alonzo Mourning, Georgetown — His intimidating presence alone made a playground-quality Hoya team successful. Mourning is a warrior and like fellow Hoya's Patrick Ewing and Dikembe Mutumbo will find success in the pros.

Forward: Christian Laettner, Duke — As much as it pains me to say this, Laettner deserves this. His all-court game has improved and as the Kentucky game proved, he's a winner.

Guard: Jimmy Jackson, Ohio State — Jackson has incredible all-around skills and he really knows how to play the game. He, like Laettner, takes over come crunch time.

Guard: Harold Miner, USC — One year ago, Miner was an underrated guard on a mediocre team. This year he was "Baby Jordan" on a great team . . . 'nuff said.

Honorable Mention: Walt Williams, Maryland, Jamal Hashburn, Kentucky, Rodney Rogers, Wake Forest, Byron Houston, Oklahoma State, and Don Mclean, UCLA.

Millon leads UM lacrosse to 17-4 victory over Hofstra

University of Massachusetts attacker Mark Millon takes Hofstra University defender Jeff Cole one-on-one in action yesterday at Upper Boyden Field. The 16th-ranked Gorillas, led by Millon's five goals and three assists, handily defeated the 20th-ranked Flying Dutchmen, 17-4.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team put on a clinic yesterday, demonstrating how the game should be played in a 17-4 rout of 20th-ranked Hofstra at Upper Boyden field.

The Gorillas (2-1), ranked No. 16 nationally, controlled the contest from start to finish with a patient, ball-controlled offense, stifling defense and a minimum of mistakes.

"We worked really hard the past two days," said UMass coach Ted Garber after the victory. "I threw a little Bobby Knight at them — I yelled pretty hard. I told them to just play. I think they did."

Hofstra, meanwhile, left its game somewhere between Amherst and Long Island. It was unable to keep possession and as a result never got its offense going. The Dutchmen (2-4), now losers of four-straight, also struggled defensively and were unable to stop UMass' transition game.

"We're young and struggling and UMass did everything well," explained Hofstra assistant coach and UMass grad Rich Donovan. "Their defense did a great job taking the ball away, and that leads to transition goals."

Attacker Mark Millon doubled his season scoring totals, scoring five goals and assisting on three others to lead the Gorillas. Mike Cain added a hat trick and John Schlipf and Wes Depp added two goals each.

"We mostly wanted to execute and make our shots count," said Millon of UMass' game plan. "We worked on our shooting for half an hour [Tuesday]. I think it paid off."

UMass racked up six scores in both the first and second quarters, eliminating any doubts as to the outcome. The plan of attack was cautious to the point of resembling an extra-man situation, as passing and ball control were the rule. UMass held possession for two to three minutes at a clip, neutralizing the Hofstra offense and wearing down its defense.

"Tom [Carmean] and Tim [Soudan] did a great job running the offense," said Garber, complimenting the Gorillas' assistant coaches. "Our players really did the job."

After two Bill Edell assists, one apiece to Cain and Schlipf, Millon took matters into his own hands. The junior attacker from Huntington, N.Y. scored a hat trick within the last four minutes of the first quarter, scoring a hat trick on three consecutive scores in four minutes. The highlight of this run was a rush from behind the crease in which Millon shook a defender and jammed the ball past Hofstra goalie Chris Barry (20 saves).

Cain closed the scoring in the first quarter with his first of two goals, a jump shot from the left side of the cage to make the score 6-2. Dave Barra and Michael Ricigliano scored in the first for Hofstra.

UMass equaled its first quarter scoring output in the second to put the game away. Millon dished out three assists, including two to Depp. Edell and Mario Guaglianone added a score apiece for the Gorillas.

Millon's other assist went to Schlipf, who made a sharp cut and found himself wide open in front of the Hofstra crease.

While UMass could seemingly do no wrong, the wheels were falling off Hofstra's game plan. When the Dutchmen did manage to gain control of the ball, they either threw it away or had it taken from them courtesy of UMass' checking. They managed only three shots on goal in the second quarter.

"Hofstra got caught in a buzzsaw and they couldn't get out," said Garber of the Dutchmen's current losing skid. "When you start losing, it just snowballs on you."

With the game over for all intents and purposes, Garber substituted freely in the second half. Senior goalie Ray Suris replaced starter Tom LoPresti in the fourth and stopped six shots. LoPresti finished with nine saves.

UMass next faces Brown on Saturday in Providence, R.I.

UM Softball on roll, hosts Vermont in twinbill

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

After a 2-7 trip to California over spring break, the University of Massachusetts softball team has begun East coast play in style, winning all four games it has played since returning.

Today the Minutewomen face the University of Vermont in a doubleheader beginning at 3 p.m. at Totman Field.

During the four-game stretch, UMass has outscored its opponents 37-4 in 24 innings. The success has been generated by solid starting pitching and a lineup that boasts a .321 average and a slugging percentage of .464.

"Overall, I'm pleased with the pitching," said coach Elaine Sortino. "The walks are being cut down and they're moving pitches. It's very important to them that they're getting called strikes on moving pitches."

The hit parade is led by catcher Barbara Marean, who is batting .488 with nine runs batted in, and whose seven triples contribute to her .907 slugging percentage.

"I've never seen someone with a slugging percentage like that," said Sortino. "Never. In all my years of coaching."

"I don't have to get a bullwhip out to get them hitting," she said. "But I'm trying to prepare them for the day when they only get one or two runs."

When that day does arrive, Sortino hopes her squad will be executing the "short game" as well as they have been during the past four games. This part of the game usually occurs in a close game, and involves getting a runner on base, and sacrificing possible big hits to get bunted down that will increase the likelihood of advancing the runner.

"I don't look at it as who we're playing," Sortino said. "It's the same UMass team that plays each opponent."

In the case of inclement weather causing cancellation of games, they will be played tomorrow, at the same time and place.

GAME NOTES - After pitching a shutout Tuesday against Hartford, Darlene Claffey's ERA stands at 1.62. Holly Aprile, who also threw a shutout, lowered hers to 2.43.

SPORTS NOTICE

Open tryouts for the UMass Men's Tennis Club will take place Monday, April 6, and Tuesday, April 7 at the Upper Boyden tennis courts from 3:45 to 6:00. Anyone interested is invited to attend.

Protests rock Libya after UN embargo

Security Council members targeted

AP photo

United States Ambassador to the United Nations, Thomas R. Pickering, left, speaks with Venezuelan Ambassador Diego Arris, center, and Ambassador Jose Ayala Lasso of Ecuador yesterday at the United Nations. U.N. sanctions against Libya were criticized by Syria, Tunisia, Lebanon and the Arab League.

By NEJLA SAMMAKIA
Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya — Young Libyans with firebombs sacked the Venezuelan Embassy and tried to storm the Russian mission Thursday during a day of protests aimed at countries that voted for a U.N. air and arms embargo.

Diplomats said the attacks appeared to have been orchestrated by Col. Moammar Gadhafi's government.

Hundreds of students smashed furniture and ripped up the garden at the Venezuelan mission. Others tried to storm the Russian Embassy and destroyed four cars when they were turned back. Peaceful but boisterous protests were held outside the Belgian, French and Italian embassies, but rocks were thrown at the Austrian mission.

Women and schoolgirls carried flowers to the embassies of India and Morocco, two of the five U.N. Security Council members that abstained in Tuesday's 10-0 vote to impose sanctions after Libya refused to turn over suspects in the bombings of two airliners.

Venezuela's Foreign Ministry issued an unusually harsh protest to Libya, angrily denouncing the assault on its embassy and demanding an official explanation within 48 hours.

The U.N. Security Council held an emergency session in New York to draft a statement demanding an immediate halt to the attacks in Tripoli.

"This is so transparently and obviously directed to bring pressure on members of the Security Council," said U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering.

The United Nations later issued a statement saying Libya had apologized for the embassy attacks and claimed Gadhafi opposed the violence.

The sanctions were imposed after Libya refused to surrender six alleged intelligence agents sought in the bombings of Pan Am Flight 103 in 1988 and a French airliner in 1989, which killed a total of 441 people.

The sanctions will take effect on April 15 if Libya does not hand over the suspects.

Many Arabs reacted with anger to the vote. But Thursday, President Hosni Mubarak of neighboring Egypt said his nation would honor the embargo.

It was only the second time the Security Council voted to punish a country for ignoring its demands on peace and security. The council took similar action against Iraq after the Kuwait invasion.

The official Libyan news agency JANA said dozens of demonstrators were hospitalized after clashes with riot police. Western diplomats said they had no reports of injured protesters or embassy personnel.

Diplomats said the protests appeared well-planned.

Advertisement sparks debate

Campuses react as group denies Holocaust details

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

A widely-circulated advertisement which has caused controversy on a number of college campuses throughout the country by claiming that certain details of the Holocaust are a "hoax" was denied publication by the Collegian last week.

The ad, titled "Falsus in Uno, Falsus in Omnibus. . . The 'Human Soap' Holocaust Myth," has sparked controversy on college campuses nationwide and has increased concerns of a rising tide of anti-Semitism.

The ad is from the California-based Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust. The group claims, among other things, that no soap was ever manufactured from the fat of exterminated Jews.

It also claims that if the human soap issue is a fallacy, than other aspects of the Holocaust, such as the gas chambers, must also be untrue. The committee uses the First Amendment as justification for getting their ad published and targets college campuses because college students tend to be more open-minded than the general population, committee members said.

According to Bradley R. Smith, author, playwright, director of CODOH and spokesperson for the Institute for Historical Review, the "human soap" ad is thoroughly documented with references and "there is nothing in the ad that is anti-Jewish.

"To simply argue for open debate is to be considered anti-Jewish," Smith said. "This is the only event in the history of the West that is not open to free inquiry."

Smith said he is targeting college newspapers because he believes the student population is younger than the metropolitan population and they "haven't propagandized" about the Holocaust.

The ad has been published in a number of college newspapers, including Duke University, Cornell University, the University of Michigan, Northwestern University, Louisiana State University and Vanderbilt University.

Rutgers University and Ohio State University chose to run the the ad as a news item, alongside rebuttals and editorial denunciations. Neither college accepted payment.

The executive board of the Collegian last week declined to accept the ad. Editor-in-chief Marc Elliott said, "While the Collegian believes very strongly in freedom of speech, I do, however think there is a point where you just have to say 'no.'

"I don't want to ignore the fact that hate-mongers like these are alive and well in America, but I don't want to advertise for them either," Elliott said.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel, a Jewish organization at UMass, said "I'm pleased that the Collegian has put sensitivity to people's feelings and regard for the truth above the profit motive. Denying the Holocaust is not only a preposterous lie, it is also incredibly hurtful to people who live with the reality of that terrible loss everyday," Perlmutter said.

The Harvard Crimson also declined to print a similar ad from the same committee. "First of all, there was a very strong ethical consideration. . . it's not an opinion or an issue, it's something that happened. There's the ethical dilemma of taking money from people who are promoting hate speech," said Daniel Jacobowitz, magazine and business manager at The Harvard Crimson.

"We thought this was an issue of hate speech, not one of the First Amendment. . . and we didn't want to take part in propagating a lie and this was out and out hate speech," Jacobowitz said.

The Chronicle, at Duke University, took a different stance. "We felt that running the ad was in keeping with the doctrine that the First Amendment embodies," said Ann Heimberger, editor-in-chief. "I was uncomfortable with the idea of turning a newspaper editor into a censor anymore than he or she has to be."

Heimberger added that The Chronicle was "horrified with the content of the ad" but thought the best thing to do was to get it out in the open "so people would have the opportunity to publicly refute the content of the ad.

"We felt it would be good to get the snake out of the grass so you can hit it over the head and know you've

Dukakis offers veteran's view of 1992 election

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bill Clinton should view the rowdy New York primary as a blessing in disguise that can make him "a better candidate," suggested a Democrat who walked the same path four years ago.

Michael Dukakis, the 1988 Democratic nominee, said Thursday that Clinton has "an opportunity, as frustrating as it may be, to define himself as he wants to define himself" in his one-on-one battle with Jerry Brown.

By the time Dukakis got to New York in 1988, the Democratic field had narrowed substantially. His closest challenger was Jesse Jackson, who waged an energetic campaign not unlike Brown's bid this year.

The former Massachusetts governor's New York win gave his campaign for the nomination crucial momentum. Unfortunately for him, Dukakis reminisced, "We screwed it up" in the general election contest against George Bush.

"If he (Clinton) can do reasonably well after what he's had to put up with, after Tuesday it will be a plus for him," said Dukakis, who will teach political science this spring at Northeastern University in Boston.

"I think he will be a better candidate for it," he said in a telephone interview.

Of course, if Clinton loses in New York on Tuesday "then obviously we've got a contest," Dukakis said.

Asked if he thought another Democrat might get into the race under those circumstances, Dukakis said: "Nothing is inconceivable."

What about Brown going on to get the nomination?

"It's very difficult for me to conceive of that," Dukakis said.

"I've always had difficulty understanding Jerry Brown," he added.

Does he feel frustrated being on the sidelines?

"No. I had my shot and unfortunately I blew it," Dukakis said.

He said the focus in New York this time "on trivia" by the news media is causing "an enormous

High court to review drug law

BOSTON (AP) — The state's highest court will review a law automatically suspending the driver's license of anyone convicted of a drug offense, even if it is not related to driving.

By agreeing to hear the case, the Supreme Judicial Court could set a national precedent. This is believed to be the first challenge to reach the highest court in any state.

The suit the highest court will hear was brought by three individuals, who are represented by the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and maintain the law is unfair because no connection has been proved between possession of drugs and safe driving.

They also claim the punishment is excessive because loss of a driver's license can mean loss of a job.

Two of the three plaintiffs were driving who lost their jobs — one of them after being arrested for possession of a marijuana cigarette. The third may lose his factory job because of difficulty getting to work.

Congress made such laws a condition for states to qualify for federal highway construction money. The idea was to reduce casual or recreational use of drugs.

Supporters say fines and probation are not so likely to deter young, middle-class people from using drugs.

Many of the state's district attorneys back the license suspensions.

John Reinstein, a lawyer with Civil Liberties, said older people, some with families to support, rather than young people should get help instead of being subjected to an additional, civil penalty, he said.

He also said it amount to double jeopardy because offenders are punished twice.

Police investigate defacing of mural at Fine Arts Center

Compiled By MARK PRESTON

A student reported Wednesday afternoon that a mural which was being painted at the Fine Arts Center was defaced.

Police said a male subject later in the day made derogatory remarks to the painter and admitted that he was responsible for defacing the mural. Police said the matter is under investigation.

amount of public resentment" and making the contest much nastier than when he ran.

"I've got to tell you, if the media, particularly the electronic media, don't do a better job of covering campaigns, no one's going to run for office."

Dukakis dismissed the significance of Brown's back-to-back wins in Connecticut and Vermont, noting "I got creamed in Michigan and Illinois before going into New York."

Dukakis was beaten by Jackson in Michigan and Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., in Illinois.

Dukakis said he hadn't endorsed Clinton because "up here in Massachusetts most of us felt strongly about Paul (Tsongas)." Tsongas withdrew from the race last month.

Still, Dukakis said, "Bill Clinton is one of the ablest people I ever worked with in public life."

killed it," she said.

Smith asserts that his ad is truthful and encourages anyone who can find an error in his ad to notify him of the correct information, for which he would be "grateful."

Although Smith said his group "never tries to deny the catastrophe that the Jews suffered during Hitler's regime," he also said he no longer believes the gas chamber stories.

Because April is the month Jews commemorate the death of six million Jews killed by the Nazis, Smith said the timing is "just coincidence," adding that he has been publishing this ad since October.

University banks on cash from hoop season

By LUKE ERICKSON
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts administration is looking to cash in on the recent success of the men's basketball team in the NCAA tournament by selling officially-licensed T-shirts, sweatshirts, mugs and souvenirs.

Consideration is being given to contracting with a national licensing company that interests manufacturers in making merchandise with University symbols and helps police against unauthorized use and sales, University officials said.

UMass Auxiliary Services currently handles the merchandising of UMass paraphernalia, which includes products such as keychains, coffee mugs and pennants. Merchandise is sold at the main University Store at the Campus Center as well as the mini-stores, located in the Student Union Building and at the Dining Commons across campus.

Auxiliary Services is in charge of the operation and oversees student-fee-based services, such as the University Bookstore, the Bluewall Cafeteria, the Hatch and the Top of the Campus Lounge.

David Curley, merchandising manager for the University Store and the chief contact between the University and the retail manufacturers, says that sales have risen dramatically since the beginning of the NCAA tournament.

"I have ordered six or seven thousand T-shirts since this began and sources told me at UConn that I could expect to sell as many as 16,000 by September," Curley said, speaking between meetings with salesmen at the University Store.

Administrators say they are now debating whether to contract with a national licensing organization, or to try and do it themselves, led by the Auxiliary Services and Curley.

The process of licensing would earn money for the University by selling the rights to use its trademarks, copyrights and logos, such as the basketball uniform lettering or the Minuteman logo used on sweatshirts and caps.

A typical contract provides that for every item sold, a royalty will be paid based on a percentage of wholesale cost, usually between six and eight percent. The national licensing company usually retains one percent of the royalty, and the remainder goes to the University.

For example, a T-shirt with a $6 wholesale value would earn 45 cents in royalties. The licensing company would retain six cents and the University would be paid 39 cents. If 10,000 of these T-shirts were sold, the university would earn $3,900 and 100,000 would earn $39,000, according to officials.

Under the proposed contract, the University is not responsible for unsold merchandise and thus does not have to make a large advance payment to either the national licensing company or the manufacturers.

Additional terms for the proposed contract might include the territory covered, such as New England, or the entire Northeast, length in years, a minimum guarantee of profit or advance payment to the University from expected royalties.

The national licensing company being considered currently contracts with over 100 colleges and universities, including Boston College, Boston University and the University of Connecticut in our region.

Vice Chancellor of University Relations and Development Daniel Melley says there is also debate about where the increased revenue would go.

"Some universities give it all to the athletics, others give it to the general university fund," Melley explained.

There was discussion with the campuses at Worcester, Boston, Lowell and Dartmouth, who wanted to stake a claim to royalties, especially those that would be earned by a national licensing contract.

Melley believes that conflict will be resolved quickly and peacefully because "the basketball team is ours" and the success has pulled everyone together so much that the "guys from out east who went to Philadelphia are all wearing 'UMass-Amherst' jockeys."

"I think we should 'go national' and sign on with them [the national licensing company] for at least a short-term contract, perhaps two or three years and then decide if we want to do it ourselves," Melley said, adding that "once you're 'in', a big department store will pick (UMass merchandise) up."

Melley also said there is some problems with the university team name, the Minuteman, saying that it "doesn't sell well by itself."

He said it has military connotations and is associated with Lexington and Concord in eastern Massachusetts, while Amherst is in the Pioneer Valley.

In addition, Melley said some sportswriters are confused whether to call the different teams 'Minutemen', 'Minutewomen' or 'Minutepersons.'

Melley pointed out that the team name was changed in the mid-1970s from the Redmen owing to pressure that is now being felt by other teams with nicknames that refer to Native Americans, such as the Atlanta Braves and the Washington Redskins.

Women discuss identities

By STACY MALONE
Collegian Correspondent

Women must understand their own identities before attempting to understand those of other groups and before working to combat oppression, according to a Hampshire College student activist.

"Racism and some degree of competition or distrust is part of our culture and womenhood," said Tracy Turner, a Hampshire College student and speaker at the Women Studies Brown Bag Lunch Series on Wednesday.

"White women all want to divide up, because we remind each other of the guilt of our past," she stated in her talk entitled "Reproductive Rights, Student Activism and Anti-Racist Organizing in the White Community."

Turner's activism in reproductive rights spurred her to become involved as a student in the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Department at Hampshire College. Her activism caused her to realize "how important coalition building is" as she participated in organizing national newsletters to inform students of ongoing events and a conference to bring women together from all over the world.

She said she discovered how important it is for her, as a White Protestant woman, to know she is White and to understand her background. "When you hear the word 'woman' it usually means a 'White woman,'" she said. "A group of White women is still a very diverse group."

Organizing with various groups of White women, Turner said "a lot of women want to disown where they came from in order to be anti-racist, but it is important to own it."

She finds in becoming anti-racist many White women "look to women of color instead of working together to understand their own identity." One has to understand their own culture before attempting to understand a culture which is foreign to them, Turner said.

"A lot of White women would be perceived as patronizing women of color if they submerged themselves in a community of a different race," she said. Turner believes an important place to begin in anti-racist work is "by looking inside of the institutions where they is all some form of hierarchy."

"We immediately don't look at each other to get through issues we have to deal with because we are afraid to," Turner said. She said it was difficult to resolve how to instill anti-racist attitudes in communities but said women have to learn to deal with these issues.

Festival of breaking off the fast

"Eid al-Fitr" or Festival of breaking off the fast, begins April 3 or 4, depending on the lunar calendar. This religious holiday, also called the Minor Festival, occurs on the first day of the month immediately after Ramadan fast. The day stands in sharp contrast to the preceding thirty days of fasting and self-denial. It begins in the morning with a visit, mostly by the men folk, to the mosque for the morning prayer. This is followed, according to the Sunna of the Prophet, by a visit to cemeteries. These more solemn religious expressions then change into a happy festival in the homes of the families. It is an occasion for dressing up in ones best clothing.

The thematic shift from death to life is expressed in several ways. More significant is the joyous return for all to normal life without the symbolic denial of vital processes of life-giving activities like eating and drinking. In many places, this festival lasts for three days, and in many lands it is also a national holiday. Islamic laws also require from Muslims a very important role: giving out the "zakat al-fitr" or the "alms of breaking off the fast" to the poor. This festival is connected with the performance of duty of fasting and sacrifice. A day of happiness following the performance of duty is intended to show that true happiness lies in the performance of duty. One characteristic of this Islamic festival is an underlying, deep, spiritual meaning. Muslims gather in as vast a congregation as possible and fall prostrate before their great maker, giving thanks to HIM for enabling us to perform our duty and make a sacrifice.

I want to remind Muslim students that "Eid prayer" is going to be at the West Springfield Mosque. Students will gather at Haigis Mall at 7:45 Friday or Saturday, April 3 or 4. Also, there will be a feast for Muslim students at the Campus Center, room 904-908, Saturday, April 4.

Space Hillbilly vs. cops

I am a Hillbilly from outer space. It's a tough life; I sometimes feel I am a far reach different from most others around here.

While on this planet, I try to do my existence justice by feeling comfortable with myself and my surroundings. It always looked like this was the best way to assimilate, to please myself without affecting others negatively. I am now doubting the simplicity of such a strategy.

Mike Levy

A few evenings ago, I was being entertained by some acquaintances, drinking, playing cards and intermittently grooving to a newly discovered song by the Vaughn brothers. About an hour after our last "groove," which consisted of bopping around the room in a mellow fashion, we were greeted by a knock on the Brittany Apartment door.

"Come in, that is," said a friend, "unless you're an Amherst policeman."

Well it was. And he did. What he also did was question the two residents in a way that was puzzling.

"Reports say you were dancing and singing," the police officer said in a very official, distanced tone.

I was attentive before, but my journalistic instincts (Hillbillies from outer space can be reporters, too) made me grab a pen and get some quotes. The "arm of the law" continued.

"You don't stop, you're going to jail."

Pause. Tension. Confusion.

"Now, what are you gonna do?"

He actually waited for an answer, as if either of them would act like a high school rebel and say, "Go ahead. See if I care if I go to jail." Wrong. But the officer went ahead and pushed each person individually for an answer to his question. One friend put it best saying, "I feel like I'm in Footloose."

We all held our snickers until Mr. Police Officer left. We found the whole situation funny, yet the essence of what just happened was not revealed until later. I am still confused about the human race, so I will lay it on you in question form. Ready?

Who was it who called to police, and would it not have been more polite and understanding to ask us to be quiet?

Why did the cop need to be so abrasive and inhuman? Did he think we would be wielding rifles?

What about this whole "dancing and singing" thing? This is what confuses me the most. Did the officer realize the extent that his comment was ridiculous? "Reports say you were dancing and singing," he said. We repeated that over and over in hysterical tears. Maybe the police would get less flack if they treated their wards with more respect. We are, though some may debate, adults. What would happened if the officer simply said, "Listen. You guys are wreaking havoc on the neighbors. Could you please quiet down?"

I guess that would have been a risk. We might have been uncaring and self-righteous, and seeing no power to stop us, go back to our evil ways. The officer might have had to come back and really do something. We were treated like children of the state, and we wanted to act that way. The harsh approach almost resulted in a return of the police officer. We rallied behind the wacky idea of blasting the music and actually being arrested "for dancing and singing." One level-headed friend talked us out of it.

Concerning the neighbors, I would like to note that we were hardly dangerous to approach. Really, there was little happening that was on the frightening level. If neighbors had a problem, we would have understood and respected direct communication. Instead they "told on us." The police acted like parents of a too-large extended family. Hey, if you had 50,000 children, wouldn't you carry a gun?

I can now reveal that I am not really extraterrestrial. "Hillbillies from outer space" is the title of the Vaughn brothers tune with which we had so much fun.

We will still groove to "Hillbillies" and will probably do so quite often. However, we will groove either during the daytime or somewhere else. Dancing and singing are okay, but you should be responsible about it.

By the way, we never sang. "Hillbillies" is an instrumental.

So, tell me, just who is this mysterious, uninformed author, anyway?

I just received a letter from someone named Richard O'Brien. In it, this person wrote about some good news for me, a student at UMass.

He writes that "a new era of stability has arrived" at the University, that the "days of budget cuts are behind us," and about how nice it is that we may be level-funded next year, and about how fortunate it is that our faculty/student ratio has improved. (Is this by hiring more faculty or losing students?)

Who is this mysterious author?

He can't be someone who is very involved in the University because if he was, he would realize that it is not so great to be level-funded during a time when costs are increasing and after recent budget cuts.

I think we should find the rock that this poor, delusional man has been hiding under, turn it over and allow him to see.

Perhaps, if we help him, he may develop the capability to run a large university.

Why do the 'town fathers' want to spy on our keg parties?

Fast forward to 2005: In a confrontation marred by bloodshed and fatalities, Amherst police today quelled a riot on North Pleasant Street that was started by students of the University of Massachusetts. Witnesses said the students, who had escaped from the University by burning a section of the campus' barbed wire fence with a blow torch, simply wanted to buy themselves "a keg of beer."

UMass Chancellor Richard O'Brien said that more precautions will be used in the near future "to keep those students in their place." O'Brien said additional personnel may be used in the Washington watch tower, and suggested replacing the barbed wire chain link fence that surrounds the University, which is nearly 12 years old, with an impervious 200-foot brick wall.

Does the following scenario look at all possible to you? It does to me. The point is, when Amherst historians look back to the start of totalitarianism within the community, they'll point Monday, March 30, 1992. Do you know why?

This was the date when the infamous "beer keg license law" was passed. The keg license law is the most blatant in a series of slaps to the face of UMass students. As it has been said before in this column, the discrimination of people due to their age is inherently illegal and should be stopped. The keg law is just another attempt by the "town fathers" to stop us, their wayward sons and daughters, from gaining equal rights.

What can you say about a community that has continued to stab at one of the biggest cash cows in the state? Those in charge of the legislation passed against college students should be ousted.

Let's start from the beginning: Once upon a time, there was a little town in the middle of nowhere called Amherst. Nobody lived there. It was lonely.

Then, one day, an agricultural college moved in, as did Amherst College. More people lived there. The town began to make money off of the college. It wasn't so lonely anymore.

Michael Morrissey

In the course of history, the "Aggie" was changed to UMass and at one point, ZooMass, and the town made more and more money from the students, their parents and others who flocked to Amherst.

Today, not only have the "town fathers" encouraged undercover citizens to spy on students who venture uptown, but now they have initiated an absurd, ineffective keg law. This law will have a few consequences, although one of them won't be the reduction of loud, raucous parties in Amherst.

First of all, underage students will begin drinking more on campus. Oh, that's just wonderful. Moreover, they'll probably increase the number of parties in the dorm rooms which will result in more confrontations between students and RAs, more broken glass in the dorms, more 4 a.m. fire alarms, and more elevator surfing.

If you're a town father who voted for the keg law, you're probably mumbling, "good, let 'em tear up their own school, I don't care." Unfortunately, it doesn't stop there.

The students living off-campus will begin having punch bowl parties, which are a hell of a lot more dangerous than keg parties. Let's realize that vodka is a little stronger than Busch. If the alcohol is stronger, it's going to get more people smashed quicker. The drunks will leave parties in their cars being more wasted than they would've been if they'd have drunk Busch.

This is where the community comes in. Some idiot somewhere is gonna kill an Amherst townie because he was wasted on vodka. I'm not saying it won't happen with beer, but it's more likely with hard liquor.

Finally, it's bad business. Don't the liquor store owners realize that a UMass student won't buy a case of beer in Amherst, but go to Hadley for a keg. It doesn't work that way. The liquor stores in Amherst won't get any business from UMass students.

Why does the town want to spy on our parties? A kegger isn't the most interesting thing one could go to. Like the police don't have better things to do than to try to stop misdemeanor crime before it happens.

Students, stop this totalitarianism now! Keep the keg parties open, and make them bigger! If Amherst doesn't want our money, let's go to Hadley. If they pass a law, go to Northampton. If they pass a law, let's all get the hell outta here!

Anyways, for those with a rebellious heart who will be having a keg party this weekend, you have my support. Screw the law, and screw the town! If you need extra support Friday or Saturday night, look me up in the directory and give me a call.

Cafe Ashley is no HoJo's

A cool place to hang out, delicious food awaits

By LISA J. CURTIS
Collegian Staff

It LOOKS like a Howard Johnson's. It FEELS like a Howard Johnson's, except it has a whole lot more shrubbery hanging around while you eat.

But it's Cafe Ashley on route 9. Just a hop, skip and a jump away to this restaurant and it's Library Bar which have the best desserts in the world. We're in college now, so you can eat dessert first no matter what your mother used to tell you.

My recommendations are the WHITE CHOCOLATE CHEESECAKE and the GRAPENUT PUDDING, which is often hard to find. They also have all the traditionals like apple pie, carrot cake, and ice cream.

The Library Bar struck me as a cute place to hang out with a cup of coffee, one of these enormously fattening desserts and your textbook.

The Teriyaki Twins are a tantalizing entree marinated and grilled to perfection, and served with rice pilaf. Prices aren't bad here, either.

Every Saturday, Cafe Ashley has a prime rib special, much the same caliber as the Dining Commons. When the entree arrived so rare it fell screaming to my table, the waiter cheerfully reheated the dinner for me.

May I take a moment to say that the carrots were fresh and crispy and quickly erased all of my distaste for cooked vegetables which I have harbored since I was a child.

But if your date picks the most expensive item on the menu, Cafe Ashley has a nice selection of inexpensive salads: Cajun Chicken Salad, served with spicy grilled chicken, jalapenos, tomato, cheese and croutons, and Cobb Salad, containing chicken, guacamole, tomatoes, hard-boiled eggs, bleu cheese, and bacon. They also have a selection of their own homemade dressings.

Cafe Ashley is very big on CHICKEN. The Cafe was heavily populated with senior citizens savoring the mind boggling array of Chicken dishes. Chicken in your salad, in your munchie platter, in your quesadillas (which are the most mouth watering item to hit this Dining Commons hardened palate in a long time), and even glazed with honey dijon.

Cafe Ashley serves lunch and dinner but they are famous for their weekend brunches for those in-the-know.

Their motto is "Fresh food, at reasonable prices with friendly, quick service." And that service was red hot. I got my coffee reheated almost every third sip. I was high on caffeine at the end of the dinner. A natural high, within the limits of the law, mind you.

The wait staff is very eager to please, and quick on their feet. (Take a minute to notice the high quality sneakers these ushers of culinary delight are wearing.)

All of the menu items are also available for take out, which of course the standard meal plan for any of us working down here in the campus center basement.

THE CHICKEN QUESADILLAS and the MUNCHIE PLATTER are appetizers, but they're huge. Definitely share these monstrosities with a friend or you won't have room for dessert. (If you didn't take my advice and have your dessert first.)

The sandwiches, for you in the lunch-bunch, are served with their homemade cole slaw and pickle. The ASHLEY GRINDER is a fresh, breaded veal cutlet with grilled peppers onions and melted provolone cheese on a torpedo roll. (Sounds dangerous doesn't it?)

A wide selection of chicken sandwiches and innovative burgers complete the lunch menu.

And by the way, Cafe Ashley is an independently owned and operated establishment. They only look like a Howard Johnson's.

The casual atmosphere and good eats at Charlie's

A place 'where everybody knows your name'

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The quintessential casual dining experience can be found at Chalie's Tavern in Amherst.

Casual to say the least.

My friend, Matt Tryder, and I entered Charlie's and after a few moments waiting to see if there was a hostess we helped ourselves to a table. We spent some time watching Cheers on television basically waiting to see if a waitress would notice us.

"'Dan's dinner's ready' warmed the cockels of my heart with memories of home. And the food I got was just as good."

No chance of that happening since there are no waitresses. I finally approached the bar and asked for a couple of dinner menu's.

The menu's made up for the waiting. Charlies boasts of 65 new menu items and these items fall perfectly into my idea of good taste and good prices. Plenty of burgers, appetizers and sandwhiches all varying in price from $4.00 to $8.00.

Matt and I selected some nacho's to start with but, of course, we had to hail the bartender so we could order. She took the order and then handed us our paper place mats and silverware so we could set our table.

At this point we wondered whether or not we were supposed to help cook or maybe wash some dishes.

During our wait we got to play pool, which is a tremendous bonus for our dining experience. I, clearly the superior player, had Matt beat but my mind must have been on the impending nachos because I choked on the eight ball and he stole the victory.

Fortunately, I was able to drown my sorrows with a mountain of very good nachos (the cheese was melted perfectly) and an ice cold Coke. I gave up drinking on school nights for Lent. However, if that had not been the case Charlie's would have been a good place to tip a couple back. The tavern offers a multitude of beer and jumbo drink selections.

Soon it was time for us to go and pick up our dinner at the bar. One good thing about this system was the bartender had found out my name and then whenever she needed me she use it to get my attention.

"Dan, dinner's ready" warmed the cockels of my heart with memories of home. And the food I got was just as good.

I dived into the "Cheesy Chicken" which basically was chicken sandwhich with American cheese on it. Matt had the Steak Sandwhich with cheese and mushrooms on it. We both got a half a pound of fries on the side.

My "Chessey Chicken" was great. The chicken proved to be a good sized hunk of poultry which was cooked just as I liked it. Matt claimed his steak was a little bit fatty but overall gave it a passing grade.

One things for certain neither of us left the table hungry.

Some added delights to Charlie's was we were able to watch the first quarter of the Celtics-Bullets game while we ate and their looked to be a good pinball machine in the corner. Unfortunately I didn't get to play because a couple of other guys were using it.

The thing which both Matt and I agreed was that after you get the "casual system" down, Charlie's is a good place. It was a little awkward at first but the food was worth it.

Don't come to Charlie's looking for candlelight, violins or place settings, for that matter, but get ready for some good food, at reasonable prices and place where you get called to the dinner table by your first name.

Talking Mexican food is talking Taco Villa

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

I never thought a South Amherst bus could carry me far enough south to take me beyond the border. And without my passport.

Yes sir, burritos. Yes sir, tortillas. Yes sir, salsa. Yes sir, Taco Villa. It's definitely an experience that must be had by all.

Taco Villa's entrance is one of the things that makes this restaurant so distinctive. The trip south may not be long but it sure is narrow. As you walk towards the Amherst Common along the left side of Main St. you can see the Taco Villa sign arched over the entrance of a long and thin alley which leads you down to the restaurant itself. Don't try to ride a mountain bike down this alley. I saw someone try it. Not a pretty sight.

Of course the real reason you're going to Taco Villa is for the food. And even if you have to climb over the wreckage of dozens of erstwhile mountain bikers, it's worth it.

Inside, the place looks like a cross between a fast food restaurant and the Alamo, only a whole lot cleaner and more comfortable.

I marched right in and got myself something that can only be described as a burrito on steroids.

"It's a chimichanga," said the man behind the counter.

"It's huge," I thought to myself.

Cheddar cheese and your choice of filling (bean, beef, chili, refrito, chicken, sausage) wrapped up in a flour tortilla, deep fried and topped with enchilada sauce and more cheese than you can shake a nacho at. All this together equals one thing, a meal. If these things don't fill you, see a doctor about your metabolism.

Did I mention nachos? Whoa. Not only are the tortilla chips served warm (not like those things they sell in the munchy stores), but they have real salsa to eat them with (not like that stuff they sell in the munchy stores).

Wanna burn a hole in your tongue? Just ask. 'Course most stuff is prepared mild so the average Joe or Jane can chow without fear. This place is people-friendly. They don't want to scare anyone away with flaming hot sauce that could heat a dorm room for a semester. Not unless you ask. But if you do, and then find you can't handle it there's plenty of water on tap in case of spontaneous combustion.

What's more, THEY'VE GOT A LIQUOR LICENSE! Boy o' boy o' boy, nothing like a good Mexican meal with a beer to wash it down. Absolutely nothing.

I'll tell you this much, anyone who went to Mexico for Spring Break sure went to far for Mexican cuisine. Oh sure, the sun. Overrated. Remember skin cancer? Play it safe, go to Taco Villa instead.

Seasons isn't just the place your parents take you

By MELISSA MACAULEY
Collegian Staff

If you're looking for a place that has great food, class, and atmosphere, then Seasons is definitely the place to go.

Seasons has long been famous for their Sunday Jazz Brunch, but it is a very enjoyable and reasonably priced place to go for dinner.

They now offer Early Dinner Specials, which change weekly. Among the selections are a Three Cheese Vegetable Pasta, Grilled Pork Tenderloin Dijon, Chicken Bianco, Grilled Tuna Steak, Roast Prime Rib and Veal Francaise.

These dinners are offered Sunday thru Friday* from 5:00p.m. to 7:30p.m. and range in price

A restaurant where the food is tasty, affordable

from $7.95 to $9.95.*(Seasons serves dinner nightly from 5:00 to 10:00 p.m., but they are closed on Mondays.)

"The bar at Season's is upstairs. If you are looking for an elegant place to have a cocktail, then this is where you want to be."

Dinner at Seasons always includes these little mini-loaves of bread (that are baked right in the restaurant) and you create your own salad from their expansive salad bar.

Also in addition to their regular menu and their Early Dinner menu, they have a little known "Upstairs at Seasons" menu.

This menu is great if you're enjoying a cocktail near the picture window upstairs and you want some vegetables and dip to nibble on. Also, you can order Shrimp and Sausage Jambalaya, Pasta Primavera or New Orleans Muffaletta (which is a big toasted ham and cheese on french bread, served with fries), just to name a few items on that menu.

These are priced pretty much in the same range with the Early Dinner Specials.

Contrary to popular belief, Seasons isn't just the place that you make your parents treat you to.

It is affordable, it is really very nice and it's even on the bus route!

You'll probably feel more comfortable there if you do dress up a little, but you don't have to.

The food at Seasons is really of the highest quality. The portions are very generous, and the meals are very tasty! Everything is excellent.

Don't worry if you can't finish everything; you can have the rest of your dinner wrapped up so you can take it home and enjoy it.

Be sure to notice the desserts on the cart as you enter the restaurant. And yes, they are there to tempt you!

These desserts are as good as they look, possibly even better. And you can have things heated or served with ice cream, too. (Why not have coffee and dessert upstairs, where you can stretch out a little bit?)

The atmosphere at Seasons is really hard to beat. Because the building is a renovated barn, it has a rustic but very elegant feel to it. The lighting is nice (there are small oil-lamps on each table) and classical music plays in the background. Works done by local artists hang on the walls, and add to the ambience.

The staff at Seasons is knowledgeable and friendly. They are very professional and courteous, and will make sure that you enjoy your meal at Seasons.

The bar at Seasons is upstairs. If you are looking for an elegant place to have a cocktail, then this is where you want to be.

There is no television at the bar, so if you are looking to get away from that T.V. scene, this place is for you.

There are even comfortable couches in one nook of the upstairs, so that you can relax. They have provided a comfortable and more relaxed place for their patrons than a table and chairs.

Seasons shouldn't just be the place where you go with your parents for your birthday, or with your girlfriend/boyfriend on your anniversary (although it is a very nice place to go for these occasions.) It is not too expensive or too far.

Once you walk through the door at Seasons, you know that this is a restaurant of the highest caliber, and that you will enjoy your evening there.

Chinese Food

A great spot for excellent Chinese food

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

In the center of Amherst, this luxuriously informal restaurant has perhaps become an unobserved backdrop to the daily lives of many of us.

China Garden, 13 N. Pleasant St. removes the customer from the hectic streets of Amherst and into the quiet friendliness of its plush interior. George, the proprietor instantly made us feel completely at home. His friendliness, coupled with the speedy service, made us feel immediately welcome and well-looked-after.

Not only was our food delicious, but it was also beautifully arranged on the dishes, in beds of fresh fruit and vegetables.

We began dinner with soup. My dining partner selected the traditional Wonton Soup with Dumplings, I could tell by the speed with which he ate it that he was far from displeased with his choice. I went for the Vegetarian Bean Curd Soup. It was absolutely delicious, with fried tofu in a dark, rich broth.

Sizzling Seafood Platter followed; the absolute highlight of my dinner - shrimp, lobster, crab and scallops, intermingled with very fresh and very lightly steamed vegetables of many different varieties. The ensemble arrived bathed in a delicate, pale sauce which allowed each of the individual flavors to shine forth.

What delighted me most about the dish was the absolute freshness of both the sea food, and the vegetables. The broccoli, mushrooms, baby-corn, carrots and water-chestnuts were crisp and tender, and perfectly steamed.

My dining partner chose General Gao's chicken, perhaps because it was a house special. It was equally as delicious as my seafood platter, but perhaps not as colorful or beautiful. Large pieces of chicken which had been marinated with "Scorched Red Peppers" graced his plate, nesting in a spicey, crispy sauce. Although the dish was completely different from the one I had chosen, the rich spiciness coating the tender chicken brings back mouth-watering memories..

Perhaps what makes this restaurant different from many other Chinese restaurants is its extensive and very varied vegetarian menu.

Hunan Gourmet is delicious and high class

By ARI VAIS
Collegian Staff

When I walked into Northampton's Hunan Gourmet, I had already been told by several confidantes that the food there was unbeatable.

Entering the establishment, I was instantly struck by the lovely, posh interior. This was a nice place.

Usually, Chinese restaurants are a cross between classy dining and fast food — in other words, the ambiance is generally quite casual and informal. Hunan Gourmet is up there with all your five star establishments that look plush.

A large, dim room with pink interior and a beautiful silver/blue vase as the centerpiece.

I was instantly served water, tea and ordered the steamed shrimp with wukabi sause.

This dish arrived promptly, care of the friendly staff, and was delicious! Large, succulent shrimps with divine sause.

I also enjoyed my personal favorite, cold noodles in sesame sause. These were done just right — the noodles were not as thick, nor the sesame sause as spicy as I was used to, but the discreetness of the dish was consistent with the restaurants atmosphere.

The first thing I thought upon receiving my entree, the Tai Chen chicken with walnuts, was that there was certainly a lot of food.

Served with traditional brown or white rice, the Tai Chen chicken is a must. Among the succulent strips of chicken breast were celery, garlic, red and green peppers, baby corn, mushrooms, and, ofcourse, the tasty, roasted walnuts. Such a fresh medley of vegetables was certainly a pleasant surprise and added much to the dish.

As good as the Tai Chen chicken tasted, there was simply too much food on my plate and I got to enjoy my lovely left-overs at home the next night.

Prices at Hunan Gourmet are more than reasonable. For a restaurant with such a pleasant, relaxing atmosphere, fast and friendly service and massive portions of delicious Chinese food, ten dollars (give or take a dollar) for the priciest dish is a bargain.

Located on King Street, just beyond the Stop and Shop, Hunan Gourmet prepares their cuisine Hunan, Szechuan, Mandarin or Cantonese style and has easy take out service.

When dinner was over, I was brought a plate of fresh fruit salad and, ofcourse, a fortune cookie. My fortune read "There is a good chance of a romantic encounter soon" and on that happy note, I finished my dinner. When I was brought my 'doggie bag' (a term that, perhaps, doesn't work

Hunan Garden for students and families

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

What a delightful surprise to discover Hunan Garden Restaurant on Belchertown Road, a mere ten minutes by bus from Amherst center.

This restaurant specializes in Mandarin and Szechuen cuisine, and offers a full menu daily, but the highlight of this restaurant must be its buffet. Served every day, except Friday, this restaurant offers a hot buffet of thirteen freshly made dishes from 5 to 8 p.m.

This help-yourself service shows no limits, no one oversees you stay or regards the amount of servings you treat yourself to. Eat as much as you like, or can for the standard, total, bargain price of $5.99.

The dishes, all hot, seemed bottomless: the more we ate, the faster they were replenished. Each time we made the move to reapproach the buffet table, our waitress miraculously reappeared with clean plates and fresh glasses of water, and smiling encouragingly.

The wide variety of dishes on offer will certainly please every taste, and also offer a unique opportunity to taste those foods which otherwise perhaps you may not have ordered. The buffet last week included Spicey Rice, Vegetable Noodles, deliciously fresh Broccoli in Oyster Sauce and soups.

The meat dishes were plentiful, some were spicey, others rich, and some were delicately flavored and bathed in light subtle sauces. The Chinese Berbeque Pork particularly sticks in my mind, as do the House Special Chicken, the Sweet and Sour Chicken and the Beef with Green Peppers. In fact, every dish on that buffet table was delicious, and each was completely different from the last.

The restaurant itself is large, clean and friendly, and is in possession of a marvellous acquarium fully stocked with delightful fish of every variety.

Service was quick and efficient (when it was needed), otherwise I enjoyed the informal luxury of being able to take my time, and eat my numerous helpings at my leisure.

Go to Cafe DiCarlo if you want to impress

By ARI VAIS
Collegian Staff

There are restaurants where one goes to eat, and then there are restaurants where one goes to dine.

Amherst's Cafe DiCarlo falls, without a doubt, into the latter category.

This place is truly a class act. The minute we set foot in the door, the head waiter showed us to our table addressing us in the most dignified manner, and promply brought over two glasses of dry white wine.

Sipping the beverage, a crisp, pungent number with a slightly sour aftertaste, we got a chance to observe the restaurant's atmosphere:

Dim lighting, soft jazz, GQ type wait-staff and quiet, civilized conversation. Not many students were spotted because for students especially, dinner at Cafe DiCarlo is an event, something around which an entire evening is planned.

The students we did see were dressed smartly and, like us, clearly impressed by the fine quality of this restaurant.

There were professors, dignified residents entertaining guests from afar, there was the thirty-something crowd and an odd family.

After ordering the appetizers, we were surprized at how quickly they arrived. Not for a moment did we find ourselves without water, without wine, without a clean ashtray.

My friend had Cafe Bread, a mild, delicate and delicious medley of vegetables with prosciutto, roasted red peppers, brie and asiago cheese, baked with mozarella on, you guessed it, bread.

For those of us who don't know better, this dish could be loosely compared to pizza. To those who do know better, this comparison might seem insulting for Cafe DiCarlo's Cafe Bread was far too delicate, far too subtle to appear like the crude, savory as heck slices most of us know and eat.

I was served up one of the restaurant's appetizer specials, their Mussels in White Wine. The real reason that I ordered this dish is that usually, I cannot handle sea food, and this would serve as a real test of Cafe DiCarlo's quality.

They passed with flying colors.

The mussels arrived, once again without a noticeable wait, and I opened the first one. Again, tenderness, delicacy and subtleness are the keys here: I have had mussels before and disliked their chewey/gooeyness. I would be a liar if I told you that Cafe DiCarlo's mussels did not melt in my mouth. There was really very little chewing to do.

There were just the right amount of shells to treat my taste buds to paradise without making me too full for the entree. The mussels were drenched in ample wine, garlic and chopped tomatoes. They had a deep, dark flavor, and, if you must know the truth, writing about them, I am suddenly very hungry.

The entrees came next, Pollo al Marsala for my friend and Vitello e Gorgonzola for myself.

The former was a healthy portion of lightly breaded chicken breasts sauteed with sundried tomatoes and mushrooms in marsala wine cream. It is a dish that I would strongly recommend to any chicken lover.

Again, let me stress that this is not any kind of chicken that we usually eat. This is eating art. Not only because it looks beautiful when served up (as did all the dishes), but also because it would take a culinary artist to prepare food with such taste. As a chicken lover, I almost felt bad eating such amazing chicken: "I am not a good enough man yet," I thought "I need time to improve my character before I feast on quality like this."

My dish consisted of medallions of veal with braised spinach and red cabbage, served with a gorgonzola cream.

As tasty as these medallions were, kudos goes to the sause. Never before have I tasted a finer sause. I can still taste it . . .I would even go as far as to recommend this dish, this restaurant, on account of the gorgonzola sause alone.

Before ending our evening, we were treated to dessert. Mark my words, if you go to Cafe DiCarlo with no intention of having dinner, try the Terimisu: served in a glass, terimisu is ladyfingers soaked in frangelico and cream — the absolute highlight of our evening. Remember: Cafe DiCarlo is not a place to go if you have a pocket full of loose change, but considering the superior qualities of every aspect of this restaurant, it is far from expensive.

Barbeque

Bub's BBQ: down home and tasty

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

"Pig out in Style" is their slogan and real Southern style barbeque is their business at Bub's Bar-B-Que.

Located a short distance from UMass on Route 116 in Sunderland, Bub's Bar-B-Que is legendary around these parts for the tasty food they have been serving up since 1977. The secret to their success is the barbeque sauce, which has won national competitions, along with their meats which are hickory smoked on the premises.

The atmosphere of Bub's is informal, down home and fashioned for comfort and convenience. Upon entrance one finds an intimate candlelit seating area for those seeking private dining. Further inside are large picnic tables with red checkered table cloths and plenty of paper towels at the ready.

The main focal point of the restaurant are the flaming grills where diners can watch meals being cooked from their tables while savoring the distinct aroma of barbeque. Prominantly displayed on the walls are framed articles about the restaurant from newspapers and magazines ranging from the Times-Picayune of New Orleans to USA Today Weekend.

The eatry features the standard fare of barbeque such as Chicken, Ribs and Keilbasa along with an expanded menu of Seafood dishes such as Shrimp and Swordfish Steak. The entrees range in price from $6.95 for Ribs to $8.95 for Shrimp. There is also a sandwich menu and a children's menu.

What makes eating a Bub's such a great dining experience is the "all you can" eat hot and cold bar featuring homemade soups, barbeque baked beans, wildrice, sweet potatos, hickory potatoes, french fries, collard greens, bean salad, potato salad, cole slaw, salad and bread. This is one place where second helpings are always in order. Everything is simply delicious and those of you

ACME BBQ for weekday blues

'You are not doing your job if you don't get up for thirds'

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Feeling hungry and got those weekday blues?

Tuesday evening is always "Bar-B-Q-'n'-Blues" day at the ACME Bar-B-Que restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley. Not only will you find one of the best buffet spreads in the area, but some of the top local blues musicians as well. All for one very reasonable price.

Of course ACME doesn't just offer any old buffet special, because the focus here is on barbeque cooking and there is plenty to sample from. The keyword here is "all-you-can-eat". As owner Jerry Hewitt likes to point out to patrons "you aren't doing your job if you don't get up for thirds."

ACME Bar-B-Que began in Easthampton a few years ago and moved to the Hadley location last year for what Hewitt called "simple economic reasons". The present location makes the restaurant more visible and very accessible to UMass students and Route 9 traffic. It is located in the same plaza as the Hadley Pub.

Business was brisk this past Tuesday night as Thomas Major of the Nightcrawlers and Ralph Pelletier, host of Sheehan's acoustic open mike, belted out the blues to an appreciative audience. The real focus however was on the food.

Offered were barbequed chicken, ribs, and keilbasa along with a hot and cold bar featuring spicy french fires, barbeque baked beans, home fried potatoes, potato salad, macaroni salad, garden salad, and bread among other dishes.

Everything was suberb. The ribs are juicy and particularly tasty at ACME with lots of the dripping barbeque sauce that owner Hewitt makes himself. The keilbasa was exceptional and the barbeque baked beans and spicy fries make a fine complement to rounds of second and third helpings. This is no place to be shy. The buffet is a reasonable $9.95 considering all you get, including the entertainment.

The dining at ACME is informal and relaxed. The decor features pigs and porker paraphenalia of all shapes and sizes which lend to an overall festive environment. Prominant throughout the establishment are ACME mascots "Eatmore" and "Seemore" who bear an uncanny piggish resemblance to Blues Brothers Jake and Elwood. The back of the ACME menu contains a very humorous piece on the "History of the Pork Brothers" and their "search for the Holy Grill." Would you believe these delinquent pigs were raised in a reform school by nuns?

The restaurant features a full liquor license along with pitchers of beer and soft drinks. Worthy of mention is the Lone Star Beer from Texas that ACME serves as the house special. You don't find this beer at many local establishments and the price is not only right but it adds to the Texan flair of the barbeque eats.

Ready for something sweet? If you've still got room in your belly there is a dessert menu that features a dandy pecan pie.

The ACME Bar-B-Que features a full dinner menu ranging from seafood to traditonal barbeque offerings, but Tuesdays are an especially great way to expose yourself to what this place has to offer by sampling the buffet. The music isn't too shabby either, as local blues folks such as Ed Vadas and Wildcat O'Halloran perform there regularly along with other local musicans who drop by to sit on the session. Eat, drink and merry at the ACME Bar-B-Que.

who are vegetarians or trying to watch what you eat can order the hot and cold bar separately for only $3.95.

The ribs at Bub's are simply amazing. They are crispy outside, tender and juicy inside, with plenty of tangy sauce. Portions are enormous and those who can't finish what they eat can wrap it up in foil and take it home. The barbeque Chicken is literally a whole half of a breast. Bring an appetite with you when you come to this joint.

Of course what good is all this great food without something to wash it all down? Bub's serves cold draft beer and soft drinks along with red and white wine. Pitchers are available in large and small sizes and the Mason Jar wine carafes provide an authentic Southern touch.

This may actually be the only place around for miles that has a free jukebox with selections ranging from the Kentucky Headhunters to Elvis. There are also coloring books available for the kids and a video game for while you wait.

Bub's Bar-B-Que also does parties and functions and they offer a full catering menu. Their award winning barbeque sauce is available for takeout at $4.15 a quart. This is makes a tasty additive to burgers cooked on the grill at home.

Bub's Bar-B-Que is a really fun and inexpensive place to go with a group of friends or the family. When you're leaving don't forget to purchase one of Bub's cool bumper stickers.

The restaurant offers nine main dishes for vegetarians, and numerous other appetizers and vegetable side-dishes.

Our dinner was completed with a dish of fresh fruit, sliced and arrayed intricately on a plate, followed by fortune cookies.

George chatted with us amiably throughout the course of the evening and explained about his clientel, the students that are ample during the year and absent in the summer, the prime location of the restaurant, which, unlike any other Chinese restaurant I can think of, is impossible to miss whether one is one foot or in a car or bus. Hunan Garden Restaurant welcomes large parties: What better way to spend an evening than dining at your leisure, eating as much as you want, and not giving a thought to the cost!

An ideal place for hungry or malnourished students to meet friends and enjoy the delicious food and the unhurried atmosphere

A fellow diner, making her contented way back to the buffet, paused a while at our table, to offer her personal opinions of the buffet. She said that she has been a regular customer at the Hunan Garden Restaurant for some five years, a resident of Amherst, she said she finds the self-service atmosphere relaxing, and the variety of foods delicious.

The restaurant boasts a full cocktail menu and a take-out service. The buffet is certainly an excellent and cheap way to dine.

One Eyed Jake: A quick peek at a local band

By ALYSSA MARCHESE
Collegian Correspondent

Almost every follower of rock and roll's colorful history has likely come across a band telling the story of their first live performance. Disastrous events generally occurred ranging from petrifying stage fright to faulty equipment and bruised egos. Few can actually make it work right off the bat, but local band One Eyed Jake is seemingly an exception to the rule.

"Our first gig was at Fitchburg State College, about four years ago," said lead guitarist Steve Brenner. "We'd never rehearsed with one of the guys before, but it went really well anyway. We pulled songs out of the air and pretended to know what we were doing. I think the audience might have been too drunk to notice our mistakes."

Hailing from Swampscott and Marblehead, Massachusetts, the band initially got together six years ago. Their present line-up include Brenner, lead vocalist, bassist and pianist Bob Mullins, drummer Tom McGrath and the Rock Bottom Horn Section, trumpeter Brooks Holmes and alto saxophonist Avrum Heafitz.

The band maintains a constant presence in the Amherst area, playing local venues on a regular basis. "I like to play frat houses, because anyone of any age can pretty much come and see us," says Brenner. "I like to play at Twister's a lot, too." Adds Heafitz, "We're also treated very well at the Hadley Pub."

Gleaning inspiration from musical sources as varied as Rush and John Lee Hooker, the band's collective heroes and major influence is never-say-die Boston rockers, Aerosmith, who Brenner and Heafitz dream of touring with one day.

"I think we'd all want to open for Aerosmith, except maybe for Brooks," says Brenner. "He'd probably prefer Mozart." Brooks Holmes is a classically trained trumpeter.

Brenner had the opportunity to meet his idols two years ago when Aerosmith toured in support of their album Pump. The gods of good fortune provided Brenner with the right connections, and he found himself hanging out backstage with the Boston Bad Boys. Did they have any advice for up and coming bands? Says Brenner, "Brad Whitford told me, 'It's a tough life — Don't even try it.'"

One Eyed Jake recently released a three song compact disc City Ride, after spending time recording it last summer at Synchro Sound Studio in Boston.

After recording two demo-tapes, they decided to get technologically serious. "We had to record a CD because the radio stations around Boston don't play cassettes," says Brenner. Their decision yielded positive results, as they are currently receiving air play on commercial radio stations locally and in Boston.

"Majority rules" is usually the standard the band follows when making decisions. "If someone writes a song and one of us doesn't like it, we'll say so, and try to work something out," says Brenner. Band members contribute mutually to the musical composition, and they are currently trying to put more emphasis on original songs. "We'd like to break out of the cover band status, but in a college town like Amherst, people want to hear cover tunes," says Brenner. Heafitz would ideally like to concentrate on originals. "I wish we could," he said remorsefully," But we don't have the time to work on them."

Whether writing or covering a song, the band's rule of thumb is "anything that feels good to us" says Brenner. "We look for hooks, riffs, catchy lyrics . . . something that catches your ear."

They maintain an equilibrium by not surrendering to the life- sucking elements of rock and roll. "Music doesn't rule our lives entirely," says Brenner. Heafitz and Mullins are presently job hunting, while Brenner and McGrath are finishing up at UMass. Holmes teaches music at Easthampton Middle School.

And what about their curious name? Is it as as obvious a phallic reference as it seems? "It's not phallic , really. We like to keep its true meaning undercover. It's actually quite innocent in a funny kind of way," explains Heafitz. "The name has definitely caused some speculation. Some people probably like us because of our name, and if they do, I'm glad I don't know 'em!"

As for the future of One Eyed Jake, their attitude is down-to-earth. "For now, we're taking it day by day," says Brenner. "We all have the classic rock and roll dream that everyone wants: to be successful and make lots of money." Both agree that the band will call it quits when playing music together is no longer fun for them.

One Eyed Jake will bring their horn-drenched medley of rock and blues covers and originals to the Hadley Pub this Friday, April 3 and will headline at Pearl Street in Northampton on April 11. Film footage from both shows will be added to previously taped clips for a video they've been working on with UMass students in the Communications department.

Superchunk: The band Bill and Ted would play for

By DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Staff

If Bill and Ted played for a band, they'd play for Superchunk. Were Wayne and Garth not so funny, they would play garage rock, just like Superchunk. But you wouldn't like them when you first listened. Not at first.

These four musicians (four people with instruments, anyway) hail from Chapel Hill, North Carolina and seem to be on the track they want to be.

Their second LP release, No Pocky for Kitty, includes such songs as "Punch Me Harder" and "Throwing Things," and it's their gritty guitars and even grittier vocals (sometimes inaudible due to feedback) that are just as masochistic as their song titles.

However, it is Superchunk's simplicity and daring philosophy of 'wambam, thank you distortion' which comes from the roots of garage rock. They play to wake the neighbors, freak the parents, and scare the cat.

The tape sleeve tells the whole story. "Superchunk is Laura on bass, Chuck on the drums, Jim playing the guitar, and Mac singing and playing the other guitar. They wrote all the songs on the record."

No one else would admit that they wrote this stuff, but these guys (and gal) have guts. They're real.

Their music is just as real. It's the organized chaos of melodic noise that make Superchunk a new soul on the alternative scene.

The Union Program Council is bringing Superchunk and their noise to the Blue Wall in the Campus Center tonight. Doors open at 8:30 p.m., and there will be a cash bar. Tickets are $5, for UMass students and $7 for everyone else.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Creative and artistic pursuits can bring great pleasure today. Welcome an opportunity to quietly indulge a whim. A one-on-one encounter holds greater appeal than group activities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Look for ways to liven up a social gathering or journey. A friend or neighbor makes a useful suggestion. Confiding in your mate about a delicate situation will get you interesting feedback.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone close to you may need extra attention now. Avoid those who are ill-natured or reckless. Some gossip you hear could upset you. Consider the source and ignore it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Go ahead and revive an old relationship. Things could be much better the second time around! Do not let someone's secret actions put you in an emotional bind.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Business you have not been able to handle until now can be successfully dealt with today. Loved ones are willing to lend a hand with tasks that would be boring if done alone.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although your morning is likely to be uneventful, the tempo will pick up after lunch. Use discretion when handling sensitive personnel problems. A great time to reach out to those you admire.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The pressure on you to make a commitment remains powerful. Insist on obtaining more data. Confiding in an associate who has your interests at heart strengthens your resolve.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The day starts promisingly enough. But if you give your ear to false financial concepts, you risk heavy losses. Keep quiet about your intentions. By next week, you could change your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This should be an ideal day to celebrate your arrival at a major milestone. An artistic venture could be involved. Share your aspirations with your family.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If your financial position appears sound, let well enough alone. This is not a good time to take risks. Call close friends with good news. Try an innovative approach in the arts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is very important you work out a specific plan of action and line up trustworthy allies. Any mistakes in this area could impede progress. Offer wise counsel to your mate and family.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You cannot expect things to crack wide open on your first try. Be persistent! The idea of eventual success keeps you forging ahead. Continue to add to your storehouse of specialized knowledge.

The Gorillas enter Saturday's game on a full head of steam, courtesy of Wednesday's 17-4 dismantling of Hofstra University. They looked considerably sharper than they had in two previous games and stayed away from needless penalties.

"It's a definite momentum builder, but only if we use it," said Garber of Wednesday's game. "If we rest on our laurels and don't continue to play disciplined and work with each other on field we won't be be there. If we do then we'll be there."

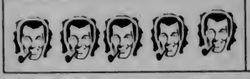
The Gorillas have provided balanced scoring in three games, although Mark Millon has taken the scoring lead to absolutely no one's surprise with 10 goals and six assists. Wes Depp and Mike Cain have scored five goals apiece, with Cain adding three assists, while junior transfer Bill Edell has three goals and three assists.

"Brown and UMass are similar teams," said Starsia. "We both have a tough defense, athletic midfielders and are dangerous in unsettled situations." Starsia sees consistency as his team's biggest problem, especially among the Bruins' midfield defenders.

"The pressure's on [Brown]," Garber said. "They're the higher ranked team, which makes us the underdog. "

Garber said he was leaning towards starting Tom LoPresti in goal tomorrow. Gary Wood is still day-to-day because of a hip injury and Rip Correnti will be out for about four weeks due to his collapsed lung of a week ago.

Game Notes WMUA 91.1 FM will carry tomorrow's game with pre-game coverage beginning at 1:45 p.m.



Duke should do it again

Duke: the best. Indiana: the best-coached. Cincinnati: the longest absent. Michigan: the youngest. These are the four teams in the 1992 Final Four, a marvelously surprising collection of teams with a rich tournament history between them.

Duke is the favorite to win it all, and why not? They did so last year, and this year's team is nearly the same. And Christian Laettner's overtime, turnaround game-winner to topple Kentucky in the East Regional final convinced me that Duke is invincible.

Ted Kottler

But if any team can burst the Blue Devils' bubble, it is Indiana, largely thanks to the clever coaching of Bob Knight. Several of Knight's previous teams rarely played to potential because they were intimidated by the media and opponents. But Knight's eyebrow-raising press conferences and interviews have drawn the media's attention to him and away from his team.

So, the Hoosiers, who can't deal with pressure the way Knight can, will be able to concentrate on playing their best basketball, which they'll need to in order to win tomorrow.

Cincinnati was once the Duke of today. Cincy's last NCAA Tournament appearance was in 1977, but they're singing sweet melodies by the Ohio River again, as coach Bob Huggins has brought the team from the college hoops doldrums much as John Calipari did for UMass.

Is it then any wonder that the Bearcats are much like the Minutemen? They are a quick, "no-name" bunch that plays the most relentless defense you'll ever see, trapping opponents to death. There are no outstanding stars on the team, but all the players are equal in their strong capabilities.

Picked to finish fifth in the inaugural season of the Great Midwest Conference, the Bearcats won the conference and beat league foe Memphis State for the fourth time in the Midwest Regional final to bring the program its first glory in many years. But because the story of Cincinnati's opponent, Michigan, is an ever greater one, I believe the Bearcats season will end tomorrow.

Experts were unanimous in calling the Michigan recruiting class of 1995 the best ever assembled, but few thought it would gel for at least a year. Well, someone threw a catalyst in the Michigan mix, because the Fab Five (the five freshman starters) improved as a unit with each game this season.

They were functioning together so well by the time the Southeast Regionals arrived that they knocked off the region's top two seeds, Ohio State and Oklahoma State, to crown one of the greatest achievements in college basketball history.

I foresee a Duke-Michigan rematch in the title game that should be as thrilling as the team's previous overtime meeting, but the outcome won't change. Duke repeats, but for Michigan there's next year, and the next year, and the next year...

Softball records two more shutout wins

Catcher Rachel Lawson looks to the sideline for instructions during yesterday's doubleheader against the University of Vermont at Totman Field.

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The train known as the University of Massachusetts softball team kept rolling along at frigid Totman Field yesterday, dismantling the University of Vermont (4-6) twice, 14-0 in five innings, and 5-0.

The wins were the third and fourth straight shutouts for the Minutewomen (6-7), who have now won six in a row.

Both games were marked by outstanding pitching, as freshman Kelly Daut threw a two-hitter in the first game [which was UMass' third such performance in a row], and Darlene Claffey took a no-hitter into the seventh before settling for a one-hitter.

In game one, Holly Aprile scored the only run the Minutewomen would need, as she singled and was sacrificed to second by Rachel Lawson. After Peggy Bush singled her to third, a throw came into the catcher to hold Aprile at third. The catcher neglected to call time out before walking the ball back to the pitcher, and Aprile hustled home.

In the second inning UMass sent nine batters to the plate, scoring five runs on four hits, including a triple by Marean and a doubles by Sherri Kuchinskas and Angyla Brumm.

The bottom of the second saw two errors by Daut, sandwiched around a single, which loaded the bases with one out. No damage was done as she struck out the next two batters.

The fourth inning was another successful one for the Minutewomen as they sent 10 batters to the plate, scoring six runs on four hits. The highlight of the inning was a bases-loaded triple by Brumm, who finished the game with four RBIs.

Daut finished the game with four strikeouts and no walks.

Game two was a bit more interesting, as Claffey, who had pitched a no-hitter earlier in the season, walked the third hitter on a 3-2 pitch, and proceeded to set down the next 18 Catamount batters before Erin Metzger blooped on an off-field single with two outs in the last frame.

First game

Vermont	00000	— 0
Massachusetts	15260	— 14

Quinn and Metzger; Daut and Kuchinskas, Lawson (4). W-Daut (3-4). L- Quinn (3-2)

Second game

Vermont	000 000 0	— 0
Massachusetts	010 002 2	— 5

Baron and Metzger; Claffey and Lawson. W-Claffey (3-2). L-Baron (2-3).

Claffey was not scheduled to pitch the second game, but Aprile complained of a sore pitching shoulder during warmups, and the junior got the call.

In the bottom of the second inning, Tracey Duest singled to second and was sacrificed to second by Lisa Melz. Laurie Dondarski, in her first at-bat of the season, then ripped a single to left, plating DuEst.

The score remained 1-0 until the sixth inning, when Bush walked and went to second on a passed ball. Stacey Nicholls singled her to third, and Nicholls took off to steal second base on the ensuing pitch. Bush left for home on the catcher's throw to second, and beat the return throw to the plate with a slide. Nicholls then scored on a single by Dondarski.

"My hat is off to them [UMass players]," said coach Elaine Sortino. "They were physically and mentally tough in this weather."

GAME NOTES - Marean's four hits increased her hitting streak to 14 games. She is shooting for her own record of 16 games.

The Minutewomen begin Atlantic-10 play this weekend with a doubleheader tomorrow against St. Joseph's, and another twinbill against Temple on Sunday.

Minutemen win 17-13 in 10

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

It wasn't pretty, but it was a win.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team finally broke out of its season-long hitting slump, pounding out 24 hits en route to its third straight win, inching themselves closer to .500 with a 6-8 record.

"We really crushed the ball against Hartford," senior captain John Carelli said. "And Russ [John Russell] threw the ball real well."

Joe Mattivello continued to play well for the Minutemen, going three for three with two RBI's, while Keith Richards and Greg LaRocca each pounded home runs for UMass.

The Minutemen will try to continue their winning ways this weekend, as they play a crucial four-game series with Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island at Lorden Field.

The Rams have hit the skids as of late, compiling a 2-13 record while bringing an eight-game losing streak to Amherst for this weekend's series.

While URI has been ice cold, UMass has been red hot, winning five out of their last seven, including two against A-10 foe Temple last weekend.

"We're going to have to play well this weekend," Minuteman righty Rich Graham said. "The weather's not going to be that good, and anything can happen."

UMass took three out of four from the URI last year, and will look for a possible sweep of the floundering Rams this year.

"This year we're all pulling for each other, and we have some real good pitching," Graham said. "We've got a lot of big games coming up, and we'd like to take all four this weekend."

With a sweep this weekend, the Minutemen can climb over the .500 mark, which last season eluded UMass for most of the year.

The games this weekend begin at 12:00 p.m., and will take place at Earl Lorden Field, which is located directly behind the Mullins Arena, with parking available in E Lot.

Men's track opens at home

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

After a successful indoor season, (8-1) opening day is upon the University of Massachusetts men's outdoor track team and so is its first test, as the Minutemen will be at home to face Springfield College, the University of Vermont and New Hampshire tomorrow afternoon (12:00 p.m.) at Llewelyn Derby Track.

The meet promises to be very exciting if UMass' last meetings with Springfield and UNH are any indicator. During the indoor season, UMass beat Springfield and UNH, but not without some difficulty.

Springfield put up quite a fight and UNH was neck and neck with the UMass tracksters until the last event, when UMass pulled away for a five point win.

UVM, however, is a big question mark as UMass has yet to face them this this year.

"I'm very uncertain about what kind of team UVM has," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "But I'm not worried too much about that because I know that we're a talented team that can beat anybody.

"Indoor, we had a tough time with UNH but ended up winning anyway and I'm hoping that the same will apply outdoors," he said. "But everyone knows that an outdoor track is different in that it's geared more to sprints as opposed to an indoor track, which is geared more to middle distance events.

"How that will affect us — I don't know," O'Brien said.

Key performers for UMass are seniors Kevin Walters in sprints and Steve Brown in middle distance. Jeff White has been performing well in hurdles.

"In addition to those guys, I look for Joe Kourafas in the decathlon to do well for us as well as Jeff Peterson," O'Brien said. "But there are a number of other guys who could have great meets too — it will be a team effort."

"This meet will be a real challenge for us," UMass junior middle distance runner Jim Avery said. "We had trouble against UNH and UVM should be tough but I think the depth that this team has will help us to prevail in the end."

O'Brien agreed, "Our strength is that we have no weaknesses."

Track notes: For those of you who don't know where Derby Track is and want to go to the meet at 12 noon tomorrow, it's in back of the baseball field which is beside the Mullins Arena construction site.

Gorillas seek third straight versus Brown

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

If tomorrow's lacrosse match between the University of Massachusetts and Brown University is anything like the last three collisions between the two New England powers, it should be a classic. Game time is 2 p.m. at Stevenson Field in Providence.

The last three meetings between the Bruins and Gorillas have decided two New England Championships and a berth in the semifinal round of the NCAA tournament. 1990's regular season-ending 21-18 slugfest gave former UMass coach Dick Garber his 300th collegiate lacrosse win. The two teams met again two weeks later in a torrential downpour on the Hill, which Brown won 12-9.

Last season's match-up went to sudden death overtime before the Bruins escaped with a 13-12 victory.

Do you sense a pattern here?

"I think it's one of the biggest rivalries in college lacrosse," said Brown coach Dom Stasia. "In the 22 years I've been at Brown it's been a spirited game. I expect the same on Saturday."

"This is the game of the week for the New England poll committee," UMass coach Ted Garber said. "Which is fun... that's why you play. You find out a lot about yourself in competitive situations. That's when your competitiveness and playing ability come out."

The eighth-ranked Bruins are, quite simply, loaded. Their attack has racked up 46 of the team's 101 scores, with Darrin Lowe leading the way with 15 goals and 26 assists. Fellow attackers Oliver Marti and Neil Munro have added 18 and 13 scores respectively.

"But we have a strong defense, too," Garber pointed out, "and our midfielders match up real well. It should be a classic... it'll come down to who plays best."

Iran bombs rebel base on Iraqi soil

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian warplanes bombed an Iranian rebel base near Baghdad on Sunday, the first air strike by Iran on Iraqi territory since a 1988 cease-fire halted their eight-year war.

Iraq claimed its forces shot down one of eight Iranian fighter-bombers and captured the two-man crew. State-run Baghdad radio, monitored in Cyprus, called the raid an act of "blatant and unjustified aggression" and warned Iran of "grave consequences."

Rebel supporters in Europe responded by attacking Iranian embassies in at least six countries.

The air raid marked a sharp deterioration in relations between Iran and Iraq, which have not signed a peace treaty to formally end their 1980-88 war and have been waging increasingly strident propaganda campaigns against each other.

Tehran said the air strike was in retaliation for a raid by guerrillas of Mujahedeen Khalq, or people's Holy Warriors, on two villages in western Iran on Saturday. It also blamed the Mujahedeen for recent attacks on Iranian diplomats in Baghdad.

But the raid may have been an attempt by Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani to shore up support five days before parliamentary elections, in which he is trying to crush opponents of moves to improve relations with the West.

The air attack was the most serious clash since March 1991, when units of Iran's Revolutionary Guards crossed the border during Kurdish and Shiite Muslim rebellions and clashed with Iraqi troops and their allies.

Democrats square off in debate

By JOHN KING
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bill Clinton and Jerry Brown sparred pointedly over abortion rights and Brown's flat tax proposal in a lively debate yesterday as each faced a fresh personal controversy two days before a crucial primary triple-header.

The debate was emblematic of the campaign itself — full of unusual twists and confounded by controversy. After spending the first half hour on the attack, the Democratic presidential rivals turned gentlemanly, complimenting each other and taking a few shots at President Bush.

With voters in New York, Wisconsin and Kansas, going to the polls Tuesday, Clinton, the Arkansas governor, was leading in New York and in a tight race against Brown in Wisconsin, according to polls.

A wild card is former Massachusetts Sen. Paul Tsongas who suspended his candidacy two weeks ago but said Sunday he would consider re-entering the race, depending on how well he and Clinton did in New York. Tsongas is still on the ballot and a draft-Tsongas group is airing ads.

Clinton's new controversy had an old ring to it: more questions about his draft status at the time he promised to enter an ROTC program to avoid military service in Vietnam.

Clinton, who said he had a high lottery number and was never called to serve, acknowledged this weekend he received a draft notice while he was at England's Oxford University in 1969, before before he pledged to join ROTC — something he did not disclose when asked about his draft status earlier this year.

"I have never had anything to hide ," Clinton said.

Not Bread Alone feeding many people in need

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Hungry? Quiche, chicken, stew, pizza and meat loaf are some of the meals served at Not Bread Alone, which offers free meals and groceries to people in need.

"We serve the meals family-style," said Kim MacDonald, the part-time coordinator of Not Bread Alone. She said there are also toys in the corner for children to play with. "Everyone is welcome." Not Bread Alone incorporates the use of a kitchen, a food storage closet and a dining room at the First Congregational Church in Amherst.

Marion Arnold, a member of the church, has been a volunteer since it first began under the title of "The Soup Company." After the Soup Company "folded," Not Bread Alone began three years ago.

"I feel I'm doing something good for the group," said Arnold, who works as a dishwasher every Sunday after church services.

"We try to have a pretty broad range of choices, because people have different tastes, health standards and preferences. But, we have to work with the food we can get," she said.

Included in the food storage closet of Not Bread Alone are canned potatoes, carrots, turkey, marble cake and dining packets, which originally were to be sent to Desert Storm. MacDonald said these left-overs from Desert Storm are called Desert Share.

MacDonald said 75 percent to 85 percent of the food comes from the Food Bank in North Hatfield. "The Food Bank is a large warehousing facility," she said, which holds donations of food from companies, such as Nabisco.

MacDonald said 10 truck-loads of food may be donated, and the Food Bank simply stores the food. Salvage food, or dented cans, from grocery stores are also found at the Food Bank, she said. Volunteers go grocery shopping for additional food needed.

"Organizations must apply to be members of the Food Bank," MacDonald said. "We pay 14 cents per pound for food (which includes a maintenance fee). Boston houses the only other national Food Bank in Massachusetts.

Will Gosnell, a volunteer for two-and-a-half years, a member of the Church Youth Group said the food is "excellent."

"A mixed crowd uses the program, which include single men, single women and their children, senior citizens and handicapped," said MacDonald. MacDonald said currently single men use the program the most.

Arnold noted the large number of men said, "There are not as many mothers with children as in the past."

"They may have lost their jobs or have military service disability," she said. She said the group, who does use the program the most, does change.

"We see a lot of regulars, but there are a lot who come sporadically," she said. MacDonald added an anonymous survey was taken and revealed that one third of the guests were homeless.

MacDonald is the only staff at Not Bread Alone, but there are many volunteers. "The volunteers work once a month, and are from Amherst College, the First Baptist Church plus other individuals," said MacDonald. MacDonald said other volunteers include the Jewish Community of Amherst, the Grace Episcopal Church and the affiliated ARK Fellowship of the University of Massachusetts and the Girl Scouts.

Rebecca Lundin, 13, of Amherst has been volunteering at Not Bread Alone for a few years. "It's nice to cook and then have it for other people."

Will Gosnell of Amherst, has been coming to No Bread Alone for two and a half years. He said he wonders where all the money comes from, but said "I think it's a really good service."

"Other volunteers are on the advisory committee for fundraising, go grocery shopping and pick-up donations for food drives," MacDonald said.

"People are very responsive to being volunteers," she added.

"There will be another food-drive by the end of the month," she said. "The food-drive's are usually student organized."

Dialogue focuses on Latinos

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

The dialogue between administrators and community leaders who were instrumental in the closing of three cultural centers last semester continued on Friday, with the discussion concentrating on issues pertaining to Hispanic students.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien and community leaders met to continue a discussion of the issues and demands made by the leaders to the administration since the closings.

"We feel like we have succeeded," said Alexander Nguyen, leader of the United Asia Cultural Center, at the beginning of the meeting. Nguyen said he feels it is the administration's responsibility from now on to work on these demands and issues.

The two-hour-and-15-minute meeting also concentrated on a summary of the meeting held by Native American students with the Chancellor weeks ago, concerns on curriculum issues in Social and Cultural Diversity, ethnic studies programs and majors (which is an issue for the Academic Matters Council) and space concerns.

"I'm very anxious to get things into reality," said O'Brien.

Native American students expressed concerns on their quality of life at UMass with O'Brien some weeks ago. The Native American students asked for three professionals — an academic advisor, a recruiter and a cultural center administrator. Presently, there is one person performing these tasks while the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center is closed.

For Hispanic students, the administration said it is going to continue to support the Bilingual Collegiate tion force, said one of its fighters was killed and several others wounded when its base near Khalis, 30 miles inside Iraq and 40 miles from Baghdad, was showered with cluster bombs on Sunday morning. It denied attacking the Iranian villages.

Ali Reza Jafarazadeh, a Mujahedeen spokesman in Baghdad, said: "The real reason for today's attack was the tremendous political crisis facing the Tehran regime inside Iran over the parliamentary elections." He spoke by telephone with The Associated Press in Nicosia.

Iraq said eight U.S.-built F-4 Phantom jets "heavily pounded" the Iranian base and that Iraqi troops shot down one warplane and captured the two crewmen.

The rebels said 12 F-4s attacked in five waves.

The official Iraqi News Agency said President Saddam Hussein met with his military commanders after the attack. It did not give details of the discussions.

Baghdad Radio said Iraq's Foreign Ministry sent a letter of protest to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali. His predecessor, Javier Perez de Cuellar, angered the Iraqis last year by blaming Iraq for the Iran-Iraq war.

Mujahedeen Khalq issued a statement in France saying its leader, Massoud Radjavi, sent a telegram to Boutros-Ghali asking that the U.N. Security Council condemn the attack and embargo oil and arms trade with Iran.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

WHY YOU SHOULD START PLANNING FOR RETIREMENT WITH YOUR EYES CLOSED.

For retirement to be the time of your life, you have to dream a little—about the things you've always wanted to do: travel, explore, start a business. Just imagine...

With a dream and a plan, you can make it happen. Your pension and Social Security should provide a good basic retirement income, but what about all those extras that make your dreams possible? You'll probably need some additional savings.

THE DREAM IS YOUR OWN. WE CAN HELP YOU WITH THE PLAN.

TIAA-CREF Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs), tax-deferred annuities for people like you in education and research, are a good way to save for retirement and save on taxes now. SRAs are easy—you make contributions through your institution before your taxes are calculated, so you pay less tax now.

You pay no tax on your SRA contributions and earnings until you receive them as income. And saving regularly means your contributions and their earnings can add up quickly.

What else makes SRAs so special? A broad range of allocation choices, from the safety of TIAA to the investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity; no sales charges; a variety of ways to receive income, including annuities, payments over a fixed period, or cash. You may also be able to borrow against your SRA accumulation before you retire.*

All this, plus the top investment management that has helped make TIAA-CREF the largest retirement system in the country.

So start dreaming and planning for the time of your life. Because the sooner you start your SRA, the greater your savings and your retirement will be.

Authors discuss their life in literature

•Importance of good editors stressed

By SARAH LEVESQUE
Collegian Staff

A distinguished panel of writers and editors spoke about the literary industry and the symbiosis of writers and editors in part two of "The Art of Nonfiction: A Writer's Conference last Thursday.

Richard Todd, Tracy Kidder, Linda Healy and Lary Bloom discussed their professions, as Bruce Wilcox, director of the University of Massachusetts Press, moderated. This annual event, co-sponsored by the Journalism Department, was at Memorial Hall.

Bloom, editor of Northeast magazine of the Hartford Courant and author of The Writer_Within spoke of how "every voice needs to be heard." He stressed the point, "Editors couldn't exist without writers. We need you." Bloom also offered the observation, "Those writers with a lifetime commitment, they have succeeded in their field."

Todd, former editor of The Alantic and of New England Monthly, is currently editor of Richard Todd Books and editor for Tracy Kidder, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for The Soul of a New Machine, and author of the best-selling books House and Among Schoolchildren.

Todd spoke of the need for "intelligence and brevity" in query letters to the publishers for writers who want to be published. "Voice and a mustering of credentials, who you are, what you've done. . ." also impress publishers.

Kidder first started writing in college. "I started writing a novel just for the fun of it. I didn't worry about whether or not I'd be published. Write the book!"

Healy talked about her role as a former publisher at Farrar Straus and her first job which was as an editorial assistant at the New York Times.

Healy, discussing the industry truism that publishing is an accidental profession, said she "had wanted to be an editor early on" in her life.

Healy said, "Writers make a world fresh for editors." Later on, she discussed the "take-over of small publishing firms" and the opening of bookstores like Crown Books as two of the main factors in the building of a "publishing industry machinery".

"Once this began though, people had to keep feeding the machine and unfortunately writers got lost in the process," Healy said.

Writers must immerse themselves in their work, and do extensive research in order to capture the spirit of time and place, according to a panel of four writers that opened the Art of Nonfiction Writers Conference Thursday morning in Memorial Hall.

The panel, moderated by Mary Jo Salter of Mt. Holyoke College, featured Ted Conover, author of Coyotes, Rolling Nowhere and Whiteout; Larry Massett, creator of broadcast narratives for National Public Radio; Mary Morris, author of Nothing to Declare and From Beijing to Berlin and Nick Lemann, author of The Promised Land and Out of the Forties.

Panel members spoke to a capacity audience about their methods of reporting and writing, tools of the trade and techniques for getting the story.

"To me, writing nonfiction is 95 percent about research and 5 percent about writing. . .the research is by far the most important thing," Lemann said.

"In writing about places, in writing about anything, the essential point to me is to go there and spend a lot of time there, talk to as many people as possible, and find out as much about the place as you can."

A graduate of Amherst College, Conover discussed his first book, Rolling Nowhere, in which he tells of his travels with railroad hobos. "I too, use time to illuminate place," Conover said. "What I have added to my work is my self as a first person narrator."

Conover said researching his second book, Coyotes, was difficult, but it was the key to the book. In writing the book Conover travelled with Mexican immigrants, and not knowing Spanish proved to be a disadvantage. "It was hard to find out about their world," but, he said, "bit by bit you make inroads. . . the consolation is the more trouble you have, the better the story."

In writing his third book, Whiteout, a book about Aspen, Conover immeresed himself in the atmosphere, taking a job as a cab driver. His strategy with Aspen was to let the reader know where he or she is, but also "to understand what I'm seeing and feeling and thinking. . . the five senses are always a good place to start," he said.

According to Morris, who writes both

Balance key in teaching GLB themes

By AARON-JOHN RICADELA
Collegian Correspondent

Balancing the interests of heterosexual and homosexual students and working through inevitable conflicts are difficult problems in teaching gay, lesbian, and bisexual themes, according to a faculty forum held Wednesday.

Five professors from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst College, Hampshire College, and Mount Holyoke College discussed their experiences incorporating GLB themes into curriculum and classroom discussions in a panel discussion sponsored by The Five College Faculty Committee on Lesbian/Gay/Bisexual Studies.

"Students don't expect to address sexual orientation issues in a general education course," said UMass English professor Paul Puccio, who teaches Men and Women in Literature. "For many of them, the Gay and Lesbian texts in the course will be the first and last that they read."

Because both gay and straight students take his course, Puccio said he encounters problems with guarding against homophobic speech while encouraging heterosexual students to think through and respond to issues.

"Above all, you need patience to teach a course like this," he said.

Another sensitive issue was coming out to students, said the panel. "I try to find very gentle ways of coming out to my students, such as talking about my partner or my experiences in lesbian politics," said Jean Grossholz, professor of Women's Studies at Mount Holyoke College.

"I want them to see this as completely ordinary, because of course it is," she said.

Michelle Barale, professor of English, and Women and Gender studies at Amherst College, said while she will come out openly with upperclassmen, she won't reveal her sexual orientation to freshmen until the end of the semester.

"I don't want to panic them until before Christmas break, when their parents and psychiatrists can deal with them," said Barale.

Telling students he is gay is no problem at Hampshire College, where being gay is a status symbol, said Stashu Kybartas, who teaches Film and Video, and Media Criticism there.

"The logic at Hampshire is that if you're anything other than a rich, straight, white kid, you're cool," said Kybartas.

The classroom discussion of Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual themes often defies instructors' expectations, agreed the panel. Austin Sarat, who teaches Political Science at Amherst College said he was surprised that students often read heterosexual themes, such as date rape, into homosexual texts.

"The difference in expectations among my students is often so great that we can't have a civil discussion," said Grossholtz.

"You must be willing to share your life and your politics with your students. Teaching gay studies isn't for the fainthearted," she said.

Grossholtz said that the effective teacher must have clear goals and preparation for high animosity.

"All of the niceties which keep students from yelling at each other go out the window when you have a room full of dykes," she said.

Time and energy pays off big

County raises $3,000 for American Cancer Society

By SARAH VOISIN
Collegian Correspondent

Hampshire County community businesses and community leaders donated time and energy last week to raise over $3,000 for the American Cancer Society, channeling more money to programs instead of to administrative costs, said a representative of the organization.

The first annual "Daffodil Fashion Show" was held at the Northampton Quality Inn on Wednesday. The event is affiliated with "Daffodil Days," when, during March, daffodils are sold to benefit ACS. The event raised a $30 donation from each of the 175 guests.

Before the show, Linda Fidnick, ACS representative, told the audience where their donation money would go, saying, "about 30 percent of the profit would be used to research all types of prevention and care."

The next percentage of money will go to fund the wide variety of services offered by the organization. These programs are provided free of charge.

The $30 paid for a pool-side cocktail reception, dinner and the fashion show, and raffle tickets were also sold. There were over 50 prizes which ranged from a vase of roses to a $100 U.S. Government Savings Bond.

The models, ranging from ages 6 to 60, donated their time, and local merchants supplied the clothes.

REACH TO RECOVERY is a program is available to women who have had breast cancer surgery. The program trains women who have already undergone surgery to make visits to new patients.

WE CAN WEEKEND, a retreat for adults with cancer and their families, promotes family togetherness in a relaxed setting.

LOOK GOOD. . . FEEL BETTER is designed for cancer patients undergoing chemotherapy or radiation therapy and addresses the side effects of treatments.

ROAD TO RECOVERY is a transportation program for cancer patients who need rides to clinics and hospitals.

Fidnick says about 20 percent of the profits will go to public education. A good example of this is the "Great American Smoke Out." This nationwide program is created to encourage people to quit smoking.

LeeAnn Foucher, ACS assistant area director, said "once people make it through the first 24 hours without smoking, they realize they can stop." She said it's "low pressure and they make it fun."

Valerie Thor, agent for Springfield's Prestige modeling Agency, said she has done work for ACS for years. The agency has also donated their services to the Arthritis Foundation, Cystic Fibrosis and Jesse's House, a homeless shelter in Northampton.

"With the economy being tight," said Thor, "I am eager to help worthwhile causes."

Arianna Wilson, booker, coordinator and model for Prestige said, "we don't turn down a charity event." She also said that it provides the girls with the experience on the runway."

Omayra Rentas, an eighth grader from Holyoke Jr. High, has found an interest in both aspects of the event. She is a model for Prestige and is also a volunteer three days a week at the ACS.

She said she was a little nervous about going on stage. "I'm not nervous now, but I will be when I get up there."

Jillian Ofcarcik, senior at Agawam High School, said she was happy to model for the ACS "for the good feeling involved."

Earlier in the campaign, Clinton said he expected to be drafted that summer but never said he actually received a draft notice and received permission to complete the term. "I would have been more than happy to tell you this if it ever occurred to me to bring it up," Clinton told reporters.

For Brown, a newspaper report suggesting that as governor he awarded judgeships to big financial backers was a jarring contrast to his campaign's central theme that political contributions have corrupted the system.

"It's false if there's any implication that I was influenced by any campaign contributions," Brown said of the Los Angeles Times story.

Both Brown and Clinton, in their Sunday morning debate, owned up to personal imperfections, an exchange that served as a reminder of growing worries within their party that its candidates might not be able to beat a vulnerable incumbent president.

"I'm a Roman Catholic and I believe in going to confession," Brown said after acknowledging he was once the democratic Party's premier fund-raiser.

Another way to stop rape

How many times has this happened to you? You're strolling through the graveyard on your night off and suddenly your nostrils are accosted by a scent that tickles the skin and soothes your world-weary soul. Passion takes you unaware and a magical night of bliss unfolds.

Tony Wescott

In this day and age of the year 1992 A.D., it seems we Americans are obsessed with sex. Unfortunately, I don't believe this is a healthy obsession. Sex has somehow taken on an evil connotation so much so that lives are ruined and destroyed all for that ephemeral pleasurable feeling. There is no excuse for the rape of another person but it will happen as it always has unless we can (a) change our cultural view of sex as something evil or (b) find an alternative.

You know and I know the former is impossible given the fact that most people are incapable of thinking. However, I propose we jump into those graves referred to in the first paragraph and let our animalistic instinct run wild.

Once a person has died for the final time in their life (of course, by then, they couldn't technically be said to be in ownership of a life any longer, yes, no?), they cease to exist as a living being and their body, now dubbed a "corpse," is an object. Making love to a corpse is about the same thing as making love to a seashell, something that once was part of a living organism but has now permanently passed the expiration date. Necrophilia, or "necking," as I affectionately refer to it as doesn't harm anyone or anything and there are enough corpses for all would-be rapists to share.

Am I boring you? OK, then, I'll get to the good part. After years of field work in this area and an impressive black book of grave rubbings, I think I've become a happier, healthier person as a result of "necking." True, some of you would be somewhat turned off by decay, but for you novices, there are morgues to break you in. But look at it this way. You don't have to pay for any movies or dinner (although your buddies who run the morgue always appreciate a tip) and corpses never say no, they never make you feel sexually inadequate or guilty (queasy is another thing) and they don't sue you or get pregnant or get bored.

Now I realize experts on rape (meaning those who know a lot about it, not meaning those who engage in it often) will contend that rape is almost exclusively a male practice and I have to agree. Unfortunately, "necking" doesn't particularly lend itself to exploitation by females of males for obvious reasons. Still, it is not my motive to turn everybody on to this new fad, rather to divert males from turning living females into objects and potentially damaging them in some way to satisfying their urge to commit such an act by performing it upon something that will be no worse off than it already is.

Another point to be dealt with is the fact that rape is not so much a sexual act as a violent one. Rapists want their subjects to put up a fight. I wouldn't know about this aspect of it myself, but I could suggest finding one of those beds that vibrate a lot and going house with that.

Recently, we've seen a certain Jeffrey Dahmer's exploits brought to light in which he murdered people and then performed upon them: This I cannot condone. That is sick and disgusting. I can't believe someone would murder another person and then have sex with them. Especially when there are so many corpses to go around! What a thoughtless waste of human life! How selfish of him!

It really makes me sad when I think of how people use each other for sex, how they inconsiderately act when making love. Something in our heads (speaking from a male perspective) takes over at one point and the person with us is dehumanized into something to conquer, something to take advantage of, something called a something. I can't quite put my finger on what it is but it is there. I can't believe it is a biological trait — that would be truly depressing to think the desire for male domination is ingrained into our thought processes by nature. Conversely, I have to convince myself it is an environmental trait reinforced by our culture, one that tries to portray women as both people and objects whether it is through magazine ads, music videos, movies, or media messages that don't even necessarily have to be visual. It comes down to either putting our natural resource of corpses to some good use or changing our cultural conventions about sex and losing a lot of our media's potent advertising power in the process. Or do we even care about women enough to try?

Hullo . . .my apologies to all the writers who have submitted something and have not seen it in print. It would sound funny for me to say, "Keep writing," but that's all I can think to say. An unpublished piece certainly is discouraging, but I have such a massive backlog of material and a lot of it will never run. So it's nothing personal, it's just that the market is competitive right now, in a sense. A handy tip: don't hand in any long essays, I don't have room! Make your point and get on with it. Be careful.

What a frightening world

It's really frightening living in this world right now. Things are becoming worse every day and I'm starting to wonder if it will ever turn around. I'm beginning to realize that people are actually choosing this ignorance causing themselves to fear and violently hate what they don't know.

Seana Barnhill

The other evening I was watching the news. Violence against homosexuals, or gay bashing, has increased 31 percent in the United States. "It's gone down in Boston, though," claimed the bright and sunny newscaster auspiciously, "It's now at 43 percent." Then there was a clip shown of (hubba, hubba) Buchanan, every liberal's sweet patootie, declaring homosexuality to be, ". . . perverted sex, morally wrong and sexually destructive." No doubt we're allowed to print my feelings at that very moment in this eon. Evidently, our homegrown Senator Kerry has analogous views. Whatever happened to liberty and justice for all?

The newscaster put it this way, "The hatred of homosexuals isn't being nurtured, but is being tolerated." I think that hatred is putting it a bit too mildly. Funny, Joe Straight is beaten to death, there are stronger words than 'hate' used to describe it.

If two people find each other, it's wonderful. Plain and simple. Whether it is a couple of the same sex or different, it is so infrequent for anyone to really find love now. If a homosexual couple has found it and they stick together, they should be admired for it. Think about it, the masses of this world aren't rooting for them by any means.

An affectionate gay couple doesn't bother me in the least. An overly affectionate gay couple bothers me as much as an overly affectionate hetero couple does. The only reason that bothers me at all is because I'm jealous. I'm not offended by anyone flaunting their sexuality. I helped a friend dress up in drag a few times and we had a blast. But I detest being told what my sexuality is by people who have never met me or being told that I've been merely trained by society to be a heterosexual. Even if I have just been trained, that's the way I am, and that's the way I like it. Despite what anyone says, I personally have to be sexually stimulated before I have an orgasm. And I have yet to meet someone of the same gender that turns me on.

I do find it repugnant and totally unacceptable to be accused of hating the gay population because I am not part of it. There definitely needs to be more acceptance on both sides. Live and let live. I'm apathetic to my friends' predilections, but I don't toss it to the side. I see this as part of their whole. If they weren't gay, firstly they wouldn't be themselves and second, they would be miserable.

It's unnerving how ignorant people are. Isn't it asinine that we can be so frightened by and become so violent towards other people because of a small deviation? I don't know what I would do if anyone ever assaulted a friend of mine. What is even more frightening is that I don't even know if there is anything I can do.

Thank you, Collegian staff

Worried that patriarchal values might be overthrown? That sexual harassment might be taken seriously? Never fear, the Collegian is here.

After viewing the Collegian's April Fool's Day issue, which featured a photo of Chancellor O'Brien supposedly dreaming sexual exploits with GEO Co-Speaker "babe" Emily Isaacs, I feel compelled to write to thank the entire Collegian staff.

Thank you for proving to the entire community that the Collegian is dedicated to maintaining the status quo. (Some feared you were trying to promote racial, gender, sexual orientation and class equality — what a silly fear!)

Specifically, thank you for reflecting the prevalent view on powerful women. Powerful women aren't strong because of their intelligence, their ability to bring about policy changes or their achievements: no, these women are powerful because they're cute!

Thank you for reflecting the dominant view on professional relations between men and women. Men don't respect, fear, deal with, hire, or otherwise acknowledge professional women for their intelligence, merit or power: oh no, men do these things because they need food for their lecherous fantasies and maybe, just maybe, they'll get to . . .well, you know.

Thank you for reflecting the dominant view on the validity of sexual harassment. Sexual harassment isn't morally corrupt or criminal: oh no, it's just silly! Further, you can use sexual harassment to make really funny jokes. I feel much better after reading your April Fool's edition — don't you?

Emily Isaacs

Sexually transmitted diseases affect everyone: get support

I never thought something like this would happen to me. It was second semester of college and I was having a blast. I was especially excited when I found out that a guy on my floor whom I had a crush on was also interested in me. I began to trust him, and our relationship grew. I was careful, however, to take it slowly. I was very apprehensive about sleeping with him only because I was not sure how he really felt about me. However, as we all know, you can do a lot sexually without actually having intercourse. Eventually, I stayed with him in his room.

A couple of weeks later, I began to feel very strange. I had an itching sensation and burning when I went to the bathroom. I went to Health Services with no doubt in my mind that I had a urinary tract infection. I had no clue as to how much my life was about to change. In a calm, matter-of-fact voice, the nurse told me, "you have genital herpes."

My eyes filled with tears as I insisted there must be some mistake. I hadn't had intercourse with my boyfriend — just oral sex. I was devastated. I left Health Services with a few informational pamphlets and tears streaming down my face. What followed for me were two weeks of absolute hell. It was finals week and I could barely walk. I was in unbearable pain, like nothing I have ever experienced in my life. Apparently, I was experiencing a 'primary' outbreak of genital herpes. Besides the physical aspects of all of this, I had no idea how to cope with the emotional trauma of this diagnoses. Suddenly, I found myself with an incurable illness that I would have for the rest of my life. I needed to get support but I didn't actually want to tell anyone about this 'horrible' thing. I felt guilty, dirty and angry.

I couldn't even speak to the man I was seeing because he must have been the one who transmitted the virus to me. Eventually I told him, but he denied that he had anything. I later found out that people can transmit herpes without having symptoms or even knowing that they are infected. The relationship just sort of faded away over the next couple of months.

When I came back to school the next semester, I realized that I was still emotionally affected by my diagnoses of herpes. I didn't feel good about myself and I definitely didn't see how I could start another relationship with someone. Just when I was going through this really difficult period, something happened which really began to turn things around for me.

I saw an announcement in the Collegian for a Herpes Support Group. Part of me really wanted to go. I thought it might help me deal with this illness and with all of my feelings about it. But part of me was scared. I wondered to myself, who will be there and what if I see someone I know? When the night of the group came, I got up the courage to go, but I was still extremely nervous. I walked in and my worst fear came true! A close friend of mine was also attending the group. The irony of this whole situation is that what began as my ultimate fear turned out to be one of the best things that could ever have happened! The moment she walked in, I thought to myself, I'm not alone, and this can happen to anyone — I'm going to be OK.

In the group, we shared our stories and experiences, and talked about all the emotions that are tied up in such a stigmatized illness. I felt so relieved to finally talk about all of this with people who could fully understand. Although the group met only that one time, now I had someone who I could talk with anytime. We had a common bond and we became much closer friends.

My friend and I decided that we would like to organize another group for people living with herpes to support them in the way that we have felt supported. We feel that there are probably many more people out there trying to deal with this, and it helps to know that you are not alone. We would like to share our experiences, and especially the technique that helped us learn to deal with this illness. I know how it is to feel embarassed and scared, but the truth is that sexually transmitted diseases effect good people like you and me all the time.

If you're interested or can relate to my story, please attend the informal support group meeting on April 8, Wednesday at 7 p.m. at the University Health Center, room 304.

fiction and nonfiction, "stories have to sort of happen to you. . .you can't go out and plan it."

Morris likened her feeling of place to the Trobriander Islanders who don't believe intercourse causes babies. They believe you stand in water and the spirit of the child comes to you, she said. "I feel that way about place, I feel that the spirit of place comes to me, that I don't go looking for it or trying to get it, that somehow, I'll go somewhere and something will happen or it won't happen."

Morris cited research and personal experience as important techniques for good nonfiction writing.

Recognizing other cultures is important, Massett said. "There are all sorts of different senses of time, and ours is not the only one."

It is also important as a journalist to just let people talk, Massett said. If you wait for them, they often say things they didn't know they'd say, Massett said. "You have to stay there for as long as it takes."

For the last two months, local businesses in Amherst have been approached to help Not Bread Alone. They are being asked to either sponsor or co-sponsor a meal for $200, MacDonald said. "A lot of businesses have been sympathetic to our cause," she said.

"Not Bread Alone grew in the beginning, but has now leveled off," she said, referring to the number of guests. Flyers are posted about Not Bread Alone at places like bus stations, laundromats, and apartment buildings, but "there is a lot of word of mouth," she said.

MacDonald said the number of people served on the weekends has varied from 19 to 80 people on one day. The average is about 45 people a day, or 90 people a weekend.

David Kroodsma, 13, of Amherst said it was his first time volunteering. "It's nice to be feeding all these people."

Lundin said some of the guests attend the church service before-hand.

Not Bread Alone is open year-round, and meals are served for free every Saturday and Sunday from noon to 2 p.m. in the dining room of the First Congregational Church at 165 Main Street in Amherst, and also on Thanksgiving and Christmas.

MacDonald said guests need not let Not Bread Alone know before-hand that they will be coming.

"The First Congregational Church donates the space and provided a volunteer group responsible for the start of the kitchen," she said.

Not Bread Alone opened April 22, 1989, and is a program of the Center for Human Development. It is a non-profit, community-based project. MacDonald said April would mark their third anniversary.

In addition to providing meals, Not Bread Alone also has a help-yourself groceries and left-overs, so guests may take home food for the rest of the week.

"I like it when they say thank you," said Jeremy Waterman, a volunteer and member of the Church Youth Group.

Broken Child is an incredible production

By Shawn McDonnell
Collegian Correspondent

"This looks just like one of them Norman Rockwell paintings," says Shelly (Jennifer Costello) as she arrives at the childhood home of her boyfriend. The house is old and strange, yet as instantly familiar as the sound of the rain which relentlessly pounds against the mildewed roof.

Grandpa sits on the couch, pulling his blanket tight around him and enjoying the TV; Pa sits on a stool, husking corn from the garden. The image would seem at home on the cover of the Saturday Evening Post. But beneath the dusty film of Americana—which lays like dirt over a buried child—there lurks a terrible past, and an unspeakable present.

The Curtain production of Sam Shepards Buried Child is so utterly and audaciously daring that it seems almost an act of insanity to have tackled it in the first place. In the hands of a lesser cast, or director, this bleak and depressing drama would surely have fallen flat. As staged by Keith Oliver, however, it is an unquestioned triumph. The silence which followed the play's conclusion came not from lack of enthusiasm, but from fear of breaking the mood.

Mood is what this play is all about. Everything in this production—from John McDermott's homey set design and Thomas Morgan's intimate lighting, to the wonderfully understated sound by Lori Dawson— combines to create a sense of quiet foreboding, as if you have returned to a familiar place where something just seems wrong.

This is certainly the feeling of Vince (Tony Maestrone), who returns home after six years to a family who do not recognize him. His grandfather Dodge (Gary Sommers) seems oblivious to everything except his desire for whiskey, and his father Tilden (Edward Jewett) is now a lumbering halfwit, who marks his only son's appearance with uncomprehending stares. It is not until Shelly learns the "family secret"—that there is a dead child buried in the backyard—that anyone is able to cast a light on the painful events which have torn this family apart.

The path of the story is filled with disturbing visions of hatred and amorality, and sickeningly grotesque images—such as a one-legged man being subjected to psychological torture in order to regain

Humor at Iron Horse

Funny Gay Males
Iron Horse
April 4

If you are on Cape Cod this summer (and pity those stuck inland, like in Amherst) then go see Funny Gay Males in Provincetown. It's a triple packed show not to miss.

The premise is simple. Three males, funny in more ways than one, each do a separate stand up routine after doing a short introduction set, together. Unless you have a problem with homosexuality, Funny Gay Males Danny McWilliams, Bob Smith and Jaffe Cohen will leave your cheeks aching.

Not all the jokes revolve around their sex lives, although it lays the foundation for much of their material. Smith, a Buffalo, N.Y. refugee now living in the Big Apple and the funniest of these three guys, tells how he broke the news that he was gay to his mother.

"I told my mother at Thanksgiving. "Would you pass the gravy to the homosexual?," he said deadpan. "Yes, but no dessert, faggot," she answered.

As explained by Smith, parents of gay children go through three stages of acceptance. "First, they don't talk about it, then they talk about it and then they talk about it on Oprah."

As the recovering Catholic of the trio, Smith remains troubled by his faith. "Catholicism says you can be a homosexual, you just can't practice," he said. "That's interesting, I feel the same way about Catholicism. I think you can be a Catholic, just don't practice."

Smith is returning home next week for a "dysfunctional family reunion. Bring a casserole and an unresolved issue."

McWilliams, who grew up in Queens, is the impersonator of the group. He tends to overdo the Joan Rivers, but then has wonderful routines about a receptionist at a large New York law firm, Betty Davis as Dorothy in the Wizard of Oz and a hysterical version of Cora, a Queens woman "with the heart of gold and the mouth of a sewer."

McWiliams funniest moment of the night was his technique for combatting gay bashers. In the voice of Glinda, the good witch of Oz, with arms in the air, he says, "Oh, no you have no power here. Get away before someone drops a house on you." Makes 'em run, he says.

Unfortunately, the man who seemed the funniest during introductions fizzled once onstage. Jaffe Cohen (a double shot Jewish name) seemed more amused by himself than the audience was amused by him.

He had a few good lines ("I dated a Orthodox Jewish man who was in the closet with two sets of dishes," and "Kosher, how do you explain kosher—basically, we don't eat anything that tastes good.") but the set was just a tad egocentric.

The Holly Cole Trio, making its New England debut, opened the night with a stunning performance.

The trio did songs from their recently released album "Blame it on My Youth."

Go out of your way to hear her sequel to Tammy Wynette's "Stand by Your Man." Wynette, who criticized Hillary Clinton for standing by Bill when the press was eating him alive for allegations of adultery, would undoubtedly nod her head with approval to lyrics like "God will, I won't, God does, I don't. That's the difference between God and me."

Too bad they don't vote in this country.

his stolen limb. The emotions are bold and unremitting, and leave the audience as spent as the actors who have shared their journey.

As the driver of this wild ride, director Keith Oliver shows remarkable skill and ability. Some of the most impossible stage situations—such as a monologue from an offstage character, or scenes of non-verbal communication—are executed brilliantly. The ensemble cast, led by taciturn giant Edward Jewett, is nothing short of sensational. Both Jewett and Jennifer Costello display immense talent in their emotionally wrenching roles, and only space keeps me from praising the work of other cast members. There were no weak links in this chain of stars.

That this production came from our own Theatre Department seems almost miraculous. Just two years ago, the Department was a stumbling mess—with dismal and lifeless shows, lacking both excitement and talent. Yet, what I have seen of the Department this semester would cause me to place it on the level of some of our country's most accomplished theatre groups. There is nothing that Stage West, Long Wharf, or the Manhattan Theatre Club could do that is not being done right here at this University. The artists abiding in our formidable Fine Arts Center can no longer be dismissed as amateurs or children—they are utter professionals, in every sense of the word.

one out in the top of the seventh when shortstop Barbara Marean backhanded a sharp grounder in the hole and threw out St. Joseph's Lisa Pasano by a half step.

UMass' bats were uncharacteristically quiet as St. Joseph's pitcher Bridget Smith held the Minutewomen to seven hits with only one runner reaching third before Aprile's heroics.

With two outs in the seventh, UMass' Lisa Melz blooped a double down the right field line and Aprile plated her with a long fly ball which landed at the base of the fence in left.

The second game wasn't as close, as UMass scored three runs in the first on two hits, a walk and an error.

The Minutewomen erupted for five more in the fifth as Aprile led off with a single, was sacrificed to second and scored as the next four UMass hitters reached base and scored.

While the UMass hitters were taking care of business, pitcher Darlene Claffey was throwing a nifty four-hitter with seven strikeouts and no walks, improving her record to 5-2.

Temple provided the first real test the Minutewomen have faced in eastern play. Lefty pitcher Angie Cardamone threw a lot of off-speed stuff which kept the Minutewomen swinging ahead of pitches and hitting grounders to the left side of the infield.

In the bottom of the 10th, UMass' Kelly Daut singled with one out and was sacrificed to second by Tracy DuEst. Aprile again played the role of hero as she hit a single up the middle for her second game-winning RBI of the weekend.

Claffey threw the shutout, her second of the weekend and sixth of the season, allowing five hits while striking out three and walking none.

UMass scored one run in the first inning of the second game. Marean walked, reached second on a fielder's choice and came home on a throwing error.

The Owls pulled ahead in the fourth by scoring the first runs which UMass pitching had given up in the previous 54 innings.

The Minutewomen tied it in the bottom of the fifth. Melz was hit by a pitch, went to second on a sacrifice and scored on asingle by Marean which was bobbled by Temple's center fielder, Carolyn Kibelstis.

Temple threatened in the top of the sixth as Prinos doubled and advanced to third, but was stranded there.

In the bottom of the seventh, UMass' Aprile singled and went to second on a sacrifice and stayed there as Marean hit an infield single. A passed ball advanced both runners and Sherri Kuchinskas was walked intentionally to load the bases. Bush grounded into a fielder's choice, forcing Aprile at the plate and loading the bases with two outs.

Nicholls slapped a grounder to the hole between first and second and second baseman Terri Galazin dove to stop it, but the speedy Nicholls easily beat the throw to first as Marean scored.

Villone on a roll as UMass beats URI

By CHRIS CUDDY
and MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Backboned by the one-hit pitching of Ron Villone, the University of Massachusetts swept the University of Rhode Island in Sunday's doubleheader en route to taking three out of four games against the Rams this weekend at Lorden Field.

Villone (4-1) continued his assault on opposing lineups in the first game of Sunday's twinbill, striking out nine while going the distance for the Minutemen (9-9). In his last 25 innings, Villone has given up only six hits, while striking out 45 and twice being named Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week.

"Ronny gave us a great performance today," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "A windy day like today is a real tough day to pitch, and he was still throwing up in the high 80's."

While Villone got going early, striking out three in the first two innings, the offense got going in the second inning with RBI singles by freshman right fielder Bill Knight and catcher Jeff January which gave UMass a 2-0 lead.

Rhode Island countered with an unearned run to cut the lead to 2-1 in the third when Vin Scandura led off with URI's only hit, advanced to third on a passed ball and a sacrifice bunt, and scored when Hiram Barber beat out a potential double play ball.

The Minutemen put things away with a 2-run fifth inning when Knight scored on Jay Dodig's single, and captain John Carelli brought Dodig in on a sacrifice fly. UMass added a run in the sixth on Knight's RBI single which brought home Steve Corradi for the 5-1 score.

Villone finished the game with a flash, whiffing three of the last five batters in front of a dozen major league scouts.

"I just threw my fastball today, and snuck in a slider once in a while," Villone said.

UMass couldn't build off of Villone's awesome performance, falling behind 4-0 after the first two innings of the series finale.

Starter Scott Meaney looked as if he would have trouble getting past the first inning, but came on strong after the offense came through for a seven run third inning, holding on for a complete-game 7-5 win.

URI scored three runs in the first inning on a 2-run single by Joe Afanasiv, who drove in Barber and Ralph Cerrato. Chris McCarthy scored the third Rhode Island run when Carelli botched Scandura's potential double play grounder.

The Rams racked Meaney for three more hits in the second, with the key blow being an RBI single by Scott Newkirk which put the Minutemen down 4-0.

University of Massachusetts pitcher Ron Villone (29) threw a one-hitter at Rhode Island yesterday afternoon in the Minutemen's 5-1 win at Lorden Field.

The undaunted Minutemen found their hitting in the third inning, sending 12 men to the plate and knocking out starter Everett Jackson. Jackson was shelled for six hits in the third before righty Jim Casey came in.

Third baseman Kevin Correa's clutch 2-run single was the big hit in the third. It scored January and Knight and gave the Minutemen a 5-4 lead which they would never relinquish.

Dodig then got his third RBI of the weekend with a groundout to second and Justin Howard knocked in the last UMass run with a line single to right field for a 7-4 lead.

Meaney cruised through the middle innings, but had trouble in the sixth and seventh innings when the cold wind started swirling around Lorden Field. He faced 11 batters in the last two innings but allowed only 1 run to cut the final score to 7-5.

On Saturday, the Minutemen split with the Rams, dropping the first game 4-1, before gaining their composure and winning the second game 4-2, behind the inspired pitching of Jeff Toothaker, who ran his record to 2-0.

In the first game, UMass starter Rich Graham pitched well, settling down after some early inning control problems. However, the Minutemen bats were quiet, mustering seven hits, with Howard driving in the only run with a sixth inning single to left, plating Lou Oliveri.

As the second quarter unfolded, so did the Gorillas' composure. Frustration, fueled by unruly student fans behind the UMass bench, led to penalties, which Brown converted into goals. It also led to retaliation fouls which threatened to turn the game into a free-for-all. Marti and UMass' Kenny Randazzo, after a loose-ball scrap, nearly went after each other and were assessed one minute non-releasable fouls at 11:09.

After Brown scored three more times to open the second, Garber substituted senior goalie Ray Suris for LoPresti, who made six saves. Suris finished with 13 saves.

"Sometimes you're on and sometimes you're not," said Garber of his decision to pull LoPresti and go with Suris. "Ray did the job. It was good to see his success in goal."

Suris made a strong showing despite the circumstances, especially on a two-man down situation in the second. After an uncharacteristic frustration foul by Mario Lopez put UMass down two, Suris faced a barrage of shots within the space of a minute and stopped all of them but the last, as Lowe scored to give Brown an 11-2 advantage. Lowe led all scorers with six points.

Levi and Lowe finished Brown's run before Cain shot two blistering 20-yard grounders past Flynn in the last two minutes of the half.

To their credit, the Gorillas battled back in the second half. Garber said he reminded his team there were still two quarters left with which to compete at halftime and they responded, cutting the lead to six by the end of the third. Brown responded with four more consecutive goals in the fourth, making the lead 21-12 and ending the Gorillas' comeback hopes.

"At halftime I knew we had a problem," Starsia said. "I had to convince them we had 30 more minutes to play. . . give UMass credit."

"We were hitting on all cylinders," noted Brown coach Dom Starsia. "We played as well as we've played all year."

"They beat us to ground balls and did more with the ball," said UMass coach Ted Garber of Brown's effort.

Brown took control midway through the first quarter and didn't let up until the second half. The Bruins took nearly every face-off and challenged every clear, reducing UMass' time of possession. When the Gorillas (2-2) did get the ball in the Brown zone, they were met by a defense which controlled the crease and forced the attack to start from outside the Brown zone.

"Our defense is very solid," Starsia said. "There's no star name but they're very solid and play well together."

Eventually the disparity in time of possession wore down the UMass defense and goalie Tom LoPresti. Brown took a 6-2 lead in the first and was ahead 13-2 before the Gorillas could respond with two long-distance cranks by Mike Cain at the end of the half. Although UMass re-grouped in the second half, playing Brown even at 9-9, the damage had been done and the Gorillas suffered their worst loss since falling to Syracuse at the Carrier Dome in 1990.

What ended as a rout didn't start that way. The Bruins and Gorillas played up to their reputations in the first, exchanging outstanding offensive and defensive play.

Millon's second goal, an around-the-cage rush, gave the Gorillas a 2-1 lead at 8:40. Brown then responded with two goals, as Tom Peters and Rich Levi connected to put the Bruins up 3-2.

Bruin midfielder Chris Martinelli split two defenders and walked in on LoPresti, making the score 4-2. Neil Munro got an assist from Marti to boost the lead to 5-2. Levi closed the quarter scoring at 0:55 as he found himself alone at the crease on the receiving end of a Darrin Lowe assist.

Softball takes two twin bills

Four games, four wins, three in last at-bats.

It was a successful weekend for the University of Massachusetts softball team as it swept doubleheaders from Atlantic 10 rivals St. Joseph's University (1-0 and 9-0) and Temple University (1-0 in 10 innings and 3-2) at a windy and cold Totman Field.

The Minutewomen, who increased their overall record to 12-7 (4-0 in the A-10), have now won 10 in a row.

UMass pitcher Holly Aprile had quite a day for herself in the first game against St Joseph's, as she tossed a no-hitter and knocked in the game's only run with an RBI double with two outs in the bottom of the seventh.

The Hawks' Meghan O'Brien reached base on an error with one out in the third inning, but Aprile retired the next 14 batters, allowing only one ball out of the infield. She finished with four strikeouts and no walks, while improving her record to 4-1.

The Minutewomen defense, which has been steadily improving over the last 10 games, came up with some fine plays to preserve the no-hitter. The biggest test came with

UMass guarantees transfer admissions

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

HOLYOKE — The University of Massachusetts will guarantee admission to transfer students from community colleges in a bid to bolster enrollment and revenue at the hard-pressed schools, officials said Monday.

The accord represents a step toward making the state-supported colleges and university function as one unified system. It calls for the participating schools to begin coordinating their academic programs and even exchanging faculty in fall 1993.

"In an era of limited budgets and increased competition for students, this type of collaboration should serve as a model for public colleges across the state," said Katherine H. Sloan, president of Greenfield Community College.

It is one of five community colleges participating in the dual admissions program beginning this fall. The others are Bunker Hill, Holyoke, Middlesex and North Shore. Officials intend to expand the program to all 15 community colleges in Massachusetts within three years.

Under the new program, a student enrolling at one of the community colleges would be assured admission to the university's Amherst campus if that student maintains a 2.5 grade-point average at the two-year school.

About 400 community college students transferred to the University of Massachusetts this year, University spokesperson Kay Scanlan said. If 10 percent more do so with the new program, they would bring an additional $195,000 in tuition and fees to the Amherst campus, she said.

At the community colleges, the university's new commitment could help hold or even expand their enrollments. "It makes us more attractive because basically, they're saying, 'If you go to a community college first. . . we'll take you,'" said Erica Broman, a spokesperson for Holyoke Community College.

Richard D. O'Brien, chancellor of the University of Massachusetts, said the arrangement "illustrates the importance of public higher education working together on all levels to the benefit of the individual institutions and to the students."

The University accepted limited numbers of community college students during the 1980s as it improved academic programs and, more recently, as state support dwindled for three straight years.

The schools have decided to sharpen their coordination with undergraduate enrollment down to 16,000 at the university and decreasing numbers of college-age youth in the general population. Enrollment at the Amherst campus hit a peak of 20,000 in the mid-1980s.

"It took a long time for four-year colleges to accept this, but now they need this," said Bill Reinhard, a spokesperson for the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges.

He said universities and community colleges in some other states, including Florida and Texas, have also set up programs to expedite transfers.

Fee hike proposed

Trustees to vote on 3.6% increase

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

A trustees committee voted last week to hike mandatory fees by $120 and room and board costs by $106 at the University of Massachusetts. The full Board of Trustees is planning to vote on the proposal tomorrow at the UMass-Dartmouth campus.

The overall rise in tuition, fees and room and board with this proposed fee increase will be 3.6 percent for in-state undergraduates at the Amherst campus.

If the proposal is acted on tomorrow, the fee boost would come on top of a $82 tuition hike and bring the total cost of attending the Amherst campus to $8,757 this fall.

Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Student Senate, said he could see the committee's justification for the fee increase but says the room and board hike is unnecessary.

"I think Housing should look into being more efficient," he said. "If you watch them, the [trustees] are trying to be efficient. If you look at Housing, they're not trying to cut back."

If Housing was more attentive to student needs, Monaghan said, it would lure more students to stay on-campus and bring

Conservatives, LBGA complete civility plan

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Members of the Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Alliance, the Minuteman, the Republican Club and the Young Americans for Freedom unveiled yesterday an unprecedented "ground rules" agreement to alleviate tensions and promote civility between the groups.

Members of the Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations worked with the groups to develop an agreement meant to eliminate harrassment between the groups, which has consisted of anonymous notes and harassing phone calls.

The agreement is also intended to de-escalate tensions surrounding the "Straight Pride" rally sponsored by conservative groups the week following the LBGA's Awareness Week.

Already some members in the agreement have suggested that they repudiate the ground rules.

Bill Amrhein of the Young Americans for Freedom, who did not attend the press conference, said YAF has never agreed to the ground rules.

"I'll keep [the ground rules] in mind," he said later.

He said he was concerned about a breach of First Amendment rights, "It would be dissolving the organizations to agree to this."

"We want to raise the level of communication to be more honest, direct and pro-active," said LBGA treasurer Ali Woolwich, senior film video production and social change major.

Woolwich said they hope to increase communication and eliminate infighting between RSOs.

"There is a stigma involved in calling yourself a conservative or a Republican at UMass," said Editor in Chief of the Minuteman Greg Zenon, a sophomore majoring in journalism, political science and English.

One provision of the agreement requires members of RSOs to not hold a rally with the word "pride" in the title for the spring 1992 semester.

Woolwich said the "Straight Pride" rallies traditionally held by the Young Americans for Freedom had come to equal "homophobic rhetoric."

Woolwich said the provision was meant to clear up is

Sci-fi author Asimov dies at 72

By RAYNER PIKE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Issac Asimov, whose nearly 500 books ranged from science fiction foretelling an era in which mankind and benign robots spread across the galaxy to science fact, histories and humor, died Monday at age 72.

He died of heart and kidney failure at New York Universty Hospital, said his brother, Stanley Asimov, a vice president of Newsday.

The most popular of Asimov's novels and stories were excursions into a future in which Earth is forgotten by a humanity that spreads through the stars, ruled by a galatic "Foundation" and served by robots.

He set a standard that has been followed by other authors when, in "I Robot" in 1950, he laid down a set of three laws for robots, the essence of which was that robots may not harm people or stand by and let people get hurt.

Asimov also was one of the most widely read popularizers of science fact, as well as a prolific writer on subjects that amused or interested him, including literature, humor and opera, light and grand. And he was an associate professor of biochemistry at the Boston University School of Medicine.

A hallmark of his fiction was that science, sometimes mindboggling, was nonetheless convincing.

One exception, he conceded, was "Fantastic Voyage," about a medical team being miniaturized and injected into a dying man's bloodstream. It was made into a 1966 movie starring Raquel Welch. The miniaturized characters were so small that a molecule of oxygen would have been too big to breathe, he later said.

In his last entry in Who's Who, Asimov credited himself with 467 books, and listed titles of 249.

"Forward the Foundation," which Asimov finished about a month ago, will be brought out by Doubleday later this year. The novel is the 15th in Asimov's epic, 1.5-million-word Foundation-robot series, written over a span of 42 years.

The next issue of Fantasy and Science Fiction, the magazine to which Asimov contributed 399 science columns since 1958, will have a one-page goodbye he wrote when he realized he was dying, publisher Ed Ferman said.

Asimov was born at Petrovichi in the Soviet Union on Jan. 2, 1920, and was brought to the United States when he was 3.

His first published story, "Marooned Off Vesta," ran in the October 1938 issue of Amazing Stories. His first novel, "Pebble In the Sky," came out in 1950, followed by "Foundation".

Anti-Semitic graffiti found at Hillel office

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

Anti-Semitic graffiti found outside of the Hillel office in the Student Union early yesterday morning has prompted the Jewish community to question what the administration is doing to combat anti-Semitism on campus.

A swastika, a symbol associated with racism and anti-Semitism, was found scrawled across the bulletin board outside of the Hillel office by Steven Sparling upon opening the office.

"The real issue behind this was not that there was a swastika put up or a menorah run over but that anti-Semitism is everywhere and it's not just an isolated incident." said Sparling, a junior Afro-American studies major.

Hillel's office have been struck by anti-Semitic graffiti in past years and a Hanukah menorah put up by the Chabad House on the Student Union lawn was destroyed last December.

Sparling cited the recurrence of racist incidents as evidence that the administration's efforts are lacking.

"The operation has to be stepped-up, we need active work in the community on these issues," he said.

According to Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith statistics, there were 101 anti-Semitic incidents reported at 60 college campuses in 1991. A survey conducted earlier this year by Project Pulse at UMass found that roughly 40 percent of Jewish students have faced harassment by fellow students.

"This is a classic anonymous act by someone who is too much of a coward to identify themselves in public. It is clearly a violation of University policy and may be a violation of the Massachusetts Criminal Civil Rights statutes as well," said Grant Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations.

Ingle added that the Office of Human Relations is involved in efforts to educate the campus and help combat racism through education about the Massachusetts Criminal Civil Rights statutes, surveys regarding anti-Semitism, education around legal remedies for hate crime and efforts to improve harassment policy and procedures.

In a prepared statement Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jo-Anne T. Vanin said "I know I speak for the entire administration when I express my anger and frustration at this latest example of anti-Semitism that persists in our community. The defacing of the Hillel bulletin board was a cowardly act by individuals who do not represent the values that this institution stands for.

"To the Jewish community I want to reaffirm the University's commitment to eliminate such expressions of hate," she said.

Vanin said the incident is under investigation by Public safety and urged anyone with information that may lead to identification of the perpetrators to come forward.

MassPIRG to aid community

UM students, faculty participate in 'hunger cleanup'

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group branch on campus has organized a "hunger cleanup" this Saturday for the area.

The project consists of students and faculty from the University volunteering their time on Saturday from 12 to 3 p.m., according to Maria Tobin, the project coordinator.

"The main objective here is to develop a sense of community working together," she said.

Volunteers will travel to different areas of need that have been contacted and offered the services of the students and faculty and help out in any way needed.

The services being offered include cleaning, painting and rebuilding in any form. Target areas include The Mass Food Bank, The Salvation Army, Amherst Adult Daycare and The Goodwill located in Northampton.

This project will be the largest of four this semester which MassPIRG has chosen to concentrate on, said Tobin. She said combined efforts from all Five Colleges make this event possible. Each college has agreed to organize teams of up to 200 people to participate in the event.

"The response has been positive so far," said Heidi Hill, a MassPIRG organizer.

There will be three-hour shifts for each college, and the University of Massachusetts' time slot will not interfere with the Run for Runaways that will also be taking place.

Sponsor sheets will be given to each team as they sign up, so friends and family can support the campaign by donating money towards the hours that are put into the project.

Tobin said the donated funds will not go to MassPIRG, but will be divided equally between the National Hunger Organization and a shelter in the area.

Nonfiction writers discuss research and memoirs

• Memoir writers discuss inspirations

By SARAH LEVESQUE
Collegian Staff

A panel of three accomplished writers discussed their inspirations and the importance of memoir writing in the contemporary world at "The Art of Nonfiction: A Writer's Conference" last Friday, the final day of the conference.

Mary Morris, Shirley Abbott and Brent Staples spoke to a capacity crowd at Memorial Hall during the two hour talk, co-sponsored by the Journalism Department and Five Colleges Inc.

Mary Morris, author of Nothing to Declare: A Woman Traveling Alone and Wall to Wall: From Beijing to Berlin, said she found her inspirations and book ideas in the "copious journals" she kept.

A self-declared compulsive traveler, Morris said she has a spiritual outlook on memoir writing.

"My whole life already lives within me," she said, with her travels around the world being "dream journeys," or experiences pre-destined.

Staples, a member of the The New York Times editorial board and author of a memoir to be published in fall 1992, explained that usually when he is asked about his book — "always at a dinner party" — he lies due to the intimate nature of the topic.

Brent's memoir, Parallel Time, is about the impact of seeing the police photos of his murdered 22 year-old drug-dealer brother and a disorder he had as a child.

At age 13, he questioned the happiness of his childhood. "I realized that I would never recall all these different moments of time, of happiness."

Looking at the evidence photos years later, the memories of his brother and his childhood "came screaming forth, and ripped down" his world. "I could never think or look at the world the same again."

Abbott, the author of The Bookmaker's Daughter and Womenfolk: Growing Up Down South, said she started writing both books as fiction, but soon realized, "I was so bored."

"It's terrifying to have the freedom to make everything up [in a novel]," she said.

In a visit to her hometown, she found her childhood home made into a parking lot. "I had to rebuild my house in my head even to remember what took place in that house," she said. "Writing a memoir is the struggle to understand."

All three of the panelist agreed that the video culture was having a negative effect on, in the words of Brent, "the richness of memories."

Brent said he worried about the possible tendency, "to film life, to live it later." He also questioned such importance put on "visual evidence."

Abbott spoke of watching a home video which she felt "painfully, obviously exposed" the competition between two of her relatives, yet ironically, after watching it, "I was the only one that perceived this."

• Writers stress creativity in research

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Four eminent nonfiction writers discussed the delicate art of researching the nonfiction novel at a writer's conference on Friday.

Co-sponsored by the Journalism Department and moderated by Mark Kramer, a writer-in-residence at Boston University, the two-hour forum discussed everything from the "research frenzy" of writing to going undercover to unobtrusively mix in with your subjects.

"If you go out and stir some trouble, life can be more interesting in some ways," said Ted Conover, author of Coyotes, Rolling Nowhere and his most recent work, Aspen, which details the posh life of that exclusive community.

In order to gain access to the upper echelons of Aspen, Conover said he joined the "fitness temple" of the Aspen Club to insert himself into celebrity status.

He explained how he got into "Don [Johnson] and Melanie's [Griffith] party" because his publicist by chance knew Don and Melanie's publicist. Conover said he impersonated a guest to get in.

"The key to access is either clout or creativity," he said. "I refused to take no for an answer."

The winner of two Pulitzer Prizes, J. Anthony Lukas, author of Common Ground, a tome about three families in Boston, told stories about how he was on the trail of essential information about one of the families.

When he traced a relative all the way back to a slave ledger in Georgia, "it was one of the most exciting days of my journalistic life. I hope some of you will experience the kind of pleasure that this research holds."

But Lukas advises that you can't follow the crowd when writing nonfiction. "If you play along with the game, it's often useless."

Mark Kramer, who is now working on a travel book about the Soviet food supply, said he dressed up as a farmer to fit in with his sources.

He met a combine driver who taught a 17-year-old Mikhail Gorbachev how to drive one and a KGB agent who said, "Sylvester Stallone, Da!"

Joseph Nocera, a columnist for GQ, is working on a book about the middle class and their money. "Part of the challenge is just to find this story and put it together in an interesting, compelling way," he said.

"To do this, you have to travel all around the country and knock on a million doors," he said. But when a writer can't get access to an important source for a story, he said, speak to 20 friends of that person.

"If you're writing a book, you really want to get into their skin," he said.

About the art of the writing itself, Lukas explained how he put his book together. "I'm not trying to write grand literary

Why think for yourself?

You should drink "dry" beer. You should shrug off the checks bouncing a mile high over the heads of our leaders in Washington. You should eat lite potato chips. You should ignore Jerry Brown's criticisms of Bill Clinton. You should watch a lot more TV.

Jeff McKenzie

If people would just become a bit more trusting, many of the problems in our country would be solved. Americans today are too careful sifting through the megawatts of knowledge available to be transferred into our brains electronically via television.

This resource, some say, has the capability to feed important and accurate information directly into our heads. If there is one thing that will slow down the learning process, it is actually having to think. Many Americans undermine the incredible efficiency achieved by television by re-processing this information using their own values, morals and plain common sense.

It is no wonder that the United States is falling behind other countries in education, productivity and ingenuity.

How can we expect to keep pace if we continue to misuse one of our most valuable resources? Too few of us recognize that this is predigested information with no need to be scrutinized again.

Vital sources of knowledge such as MTV offer ideas and information that has been so well formatted that it seems like entertainment. Not only is it unnecessary to use your own experience and values to draw your own conclusions from mountains of events, but your values themselves can be molded into ones that will allow you to best understand our world.

Compared to information sources such as reading, which can force you to make comparisons and draw likely invalid conclusions, MTV and other image-related mediums are far more efficient. Unfortunately, our society seems to prefer to learn the hard way.

People are all too ready to question the actions of government, from the local level right on up to Washington. How can officials get their work done when their actions are constantly being monitored?

Take the check bouncing scandal, for instance. Why would this kind of information be kept from the people? Obviously it was not very important. When a respected member of the U.S. Congress says he didn't know he bounced 947 checks, then he didn't know.

Once again, most Americans wasted the time and energy to find out this kind of thing happened a lot, rather than simply accept the response tailored to suit their needs.

We should realize that we wouldn't be given this information if it weren't true. If people would start to allow television's powerful imagery and ideas to enter their minds easily and unchecked, then we would be a lot better off.

We should take a lesson from the beer company and adopt a new national motto: "Why ask why?"

Letting men decide the future of women's rights

The U.S. Congress is supposed to represent the people. What people? The last time I looked our society wasn't over 90 percent White males. Seems to me the minorities are the majority in our nation and they are not represented. Women are the majority in our nation, yet they are referred to as a minority and oppressed constantly. The future of women lay in the hands of Congress — a White male Congress.

Stacy Malone

Do you remember when Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas was going through his appointment procedures when a silly little well-educated female lawyer (alias: Anita Hill) temporarily caused some conflict? Can you recall as the television cameras scanned across the faces of Congress any more than a couple of female faces who could possibly identify with Ms. Hill's predicament?

Interesting, isn't it? We are letting men decide the future of the women in this country. We are letting them tell us whether we can get an abortion. We are allowing these White males decide if a sexual harassment law should be passed to implement education and training of sexual harassment in the work place. We are letting them appoint a judge to the highest court in our nation for the rest of his life with serious complaints of sexual harassment without a true investigation.

It is about time some serious laws were passed to protect women. We can't wait to see how the Supreme Court will allow us to act. We can't allow the government to determine every move we make according to their own morals. We can't let the government's puppet woman Supreme Court justice influence what we, as women, should have the right to decide for ourselves.

We have to tell Congress who we are and that we demand respect, as women and as people. We deserve the respect to decide whether an abortion is appropriate for our individual self. We deserve the respect to be protected by sexual harassment in our work place to excel as people without being inhibited by the oppression of men.

Women shouldn't have to wonder if they are able to reign over their own bodies. Women shouldn't have to hope for sexual harassment laws to protect them in their place of employment. Women should expect them as citizens of the United States.

Just as a footnote, two men assisted me selecting the topic of this editorial. There are men out there that believe women should be equal and protected by the law.

Why isn't Congress representing these views? Disgustingly enough, we have to make them represent us. Vote those in who are in favor of helping minorities excel. Vote the candidates out who don't represent the people. Let Congress know that women are citizens, too.

Celebrate, but do it responsibly

Enough is enough. The column in the April 2 Collegian stating "we are going to party" prompts a response.

No one, I repeat, no one, in Amherst town government or the citizens who complained about student drinking behavior has ever said that students should not enjoy their free time. Recreation is necessary for psychological health. That's why I myself became a high school and college track official.

There is a world of difference, however, between enjoying one's self in a reasonably considerate manner and feeling like one has the right to do anything one wants to pleasure one's self, and to hell with anyone else.

Yes, the town is much richer because of its student population, but not necessarily monetarily. In fact, I spend at least as much money in Amherst as any on-campus student, probably considerably more, and I pay taxes besides. The University does not, yet it takes advantage of all the same town services.

Let's face it. You need our money as much as we need yours. We should acknowledge this mutual dependency by helping each other out, not by arguing about it. As a Town Meeting member I have fought and will continue to fight for more student inclusion in town government.

The real richness of our student population comes not from their pocketbooks, but from their ideas. Summer in Amherst is sleepy and idyllic, but my favorite season has been fall. There is a vitality coming from the student population that gives renewed vitality to us over-40 types.

So yes, celebrate life, absolutely. But don't hurt other people in the process. That's all I or anyone else complaining about "student rowdiness" has ever asked.

And by the way, ask yourselves who is really exploiting students for their money. Is it the townspeople who want to make sure that codes are obeyed so a tragedy like last year's fire doesn't occur again, or is it the bar owners who take your money and pack you in without regard for your safety. Maybe you should be issuing some "complaints" of your own to the offending bar owners.

Happy spring.

How the 'ideal' figure on TV makes women miserable

It is Friday afternoon, and "Club Dance" at the White Horse Cafe is on the Nashville Network. Before a Patty Loveless song is played, it is interrupted for commercials.

Suddenly, I feel very inadequate. I am an Amazon with hips of record-breaking width, an enormous rhinocerous of a woman, a frighteningly oversized specimen of a female Homo sapien. I ought to be ashamed of myself.

A slender blond woman struts across the screen, boasting in a bubbly voice,"... I went from a size 12 to a size 6. Now YOU can do it, too!"

I wear a size 12.

With the exception of a few bothersome allergies, I am basically a healthy person. I am a vegetarian who occasionally indulges in fattening goodies like french fries, Swiss almond cream pie and chocolate chunk cookies. I am quite active: besides walking around to my classes at UMass, I go for a brisk 3-4 mile long walk with my fuzzy dog every day and do some running.

I happen to come from a family where most of the women have heavy bone structures, broad shoulders and wide hips. And I happen to take after most of the women in my family.

To squeeze into a size 6 pair of jeans, I would probably have to go on the Bataan Death March or eat my brother's cooking for the rest of my life.

The truth is, the media and diet companies present an image that is impossible for most women to attain without damaging their health.

Lisa Hamelin

In order to reach this ideal, thousands of American women torture themselves every year. They subsist on diets that wouldn't provide the average gerbil with its required daily caloric intake, and some of them have surgeons insert carcinogenic materials into their breasts. One must also not forget the numerous other women who, having failed to lose that excess poundage through dieting, have a surgeon suck it out with a hose.

For those women who are sick of being told that they're fat if they wear a size 8 or above, and who feel inadequate because they're not into D cup bras, I recommend the following diet:

1. Kill your TV set. This may sound drastic, but it will have its benefits in the long run. No longer will your self esteem be eroded by images of unnaturally thin models and actresses, and abstaining from watching Donahue and Geraldo may actually cause you to become a thinking person.

2. Go on a jerk diet. I know a woman who was married to a jerk. This man repeatedly showed her pictures of models and informed her that she was too fat. She eventually became anorexic, and she went from a healthy 140 pounds to a pale, weak, emaciated 80 pounds. She had to be hospitalized and receive counseling. Fortunately, she divorced the jerk not long after her treatment started. She would have saved herself a lot of trouble if, instead of getting rid of the weight, she would have gotten rid of the jerk in the first place.

3. Donate to charities. If you are still convinced that you must lose weight, you can always donate the money you spend on junk food to charities. The people who run United Way always appreciate some money to buy new suits and dresses. Or, you can order a party-size pizza covered with three layers of broccoli and have it delivered to 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, DC. The pizza can be accompanied by a note that reads "Courtesy of Bill Clinton" or something to that effect. The possibilities are numerous.

In the meantime, have fun living in a society in which Marilyn Monroe would have thought her hips were too wide and Rita Hayworth would have felt like a fat blob.

Third World Affairs

Shock: The World Bank plan to pollute Africa

Recently released information regarding the patterns of thought at the highest levels of the World Bank have exposed the moral depths to which it has sunk.

Initially, it had been thought by those skeptical about the Bank and its collaborators that it had really hit bottom with its plan to rip aside the final vestiges of independent sovereignty in the poorer parts of the Third World, especially in Africa. This is euphemistically referred to as "political linkage," to give "aid donors" control over all aspects of the domestic public policies of "aid recipients," as opposed to "economic linkage," which had been restricted to dictating economic policy.

Western agencies have used their power of blackmail in Africa in the past to restrict development to the production of cash crops for export to the West at bargain basement prices, and systematically blocked all serious efforts at the development of industrial and manufacturing capacities. The new resolve to dictate all aspects of daily life bodes very ill for Africa.

In the North, the Cold War arguments of anti-communism that had been the traditional justifications for post-war imperialism, are dissolving into a new form of "White Man's Burden," the lofty rhetoric of spreading "democracy" and "human rights," modern equivalents of the 19th century "civilizing and Christianizing" colonial mission. The World Bank's obnoxious and hypocritical campaign for "good governance" is the version targeted at Africa.

A leaked memo from W.B. Chief Economist Lawrence Summers to his "senior staff" enthusiastically advocates the active dumping of Northern toxic waste on the South, and proposes a World Bank led plot to pollute the Third World. The thinking exhibited in the memo is mind boggling. Summers begins by suggesting, "Just between you and me, shouldn't the World Bank be encouraging more migration of dirty industries to the LDC'S [Third World]? I think that the economic logic behind dumping a load of toxic waste in the lowest wage countries is impeccable and we should face up to that." This from a senior official of an institution supposedly dedicated to development, but always skewed to benefit the West. African countries become the developed world's municipal land fill, the toilet of the West.

Hussein Ibish

Summers argues that the costs of what he calls "dirty industries" are to be measured in human lives and the loss of wages and earning potential resulting from early death caused by pollution. He actually wrote that "the cost of pollution depends on the loss of earnings from increased morbidity and mortality and these costs are lowest in the countries with the lowest wages." Thus, to the World Bank, the lives of those who live in a society whose economy has been so devastated by centuries of colonial abuse that they earn relatively low wages, are literally worth less than the lives of the rich Westerners.

Sinking deeper still, he suggested that the air in the Third World is just too clean and needs to be deliberately polluted by the World Bank (because that's good economics, right?). "I've always thought that under-populated countries in Africa are vastly under-polluted, their air quality is probably vastly inefficiently low compared to Los Angeles or Mexico City." Summers' standards of efficiency are rather astonishing, but not as much as his open suggestion that it is his job to make sure that Africans must pay for the filthiness of Western behaviors they don't share.

Besides, he goes on to suggest, pollution doesn't matter as much in countries so poor that people die young anyway. "Concern for an agent that causes a one in one million chance in the odds of prostate cancer is obviously going to be higher in a country where people survive to get prostate cancer than in a country where under-5 mortality is 200 per thousand." So, since they're going to die sooner anyway, who cares if they ingest large quantities of toxic waste before they go? Again the assumptions are that economics is to be measured in terms of (totally commodified) human lives, and that the rich Northerners are worth more (and hence superior) to the poor Southerners.

Like many forms of modern racism, the old rhetoric of cultural and genetic superiority gives way to recoded "economic" arguments. Nonetheless, White supremacy is pretty unmistakable, and the old patterns of colonialism and domination are alive and well.

Alive and well and living in the World Bank.

• Organizaciones inútiles

Quizás bajo las circumstancias, es apropiado explicar porqué es necesario que este artículo sea bilingüe, en espanol e inglés.

Necesitamos demostrar la coexistencia armoniosa de dos culturas que se definen por medio del lenguaje, como parte de un movimiento general para el respeto de todas las culturas del tercer mundo. Los intentos de los latinos de generar un ambiente de respeto a nuestra lengua en los E.E.U.U. han sido continuamente atacados por movimientos uniculturales reaccionarios, y "English only". El imprimir este artículo en las dos lenguas es una demostración institucional que ilustra la coexistencia de igualdad. Los verdaderos latinos, y todos los de buena fe, no deben tener dificultad en comprender y apoyar esto.

La comunidad latina de UMass se caracteriza principalmente por un espíritu de apatía. A la mayoría de nosotros no nos importa nada acerca del racismo y las injusticias que existen en la vida diaria tanto en el campus como en otros lugares. Es patético. Sin embargo, más desilusionante aún, es ver cómo algunas personas que dicen ser defensores de la comunidad han fracasado al no responder ante estos abusos, cuando ésta ha sido atacada.

Las supuestas organizaciones "latinas" en el campus sufren de graves defectos. Primero, estas organizaciones deberían ser identificadas como organizaciones puertorriqueñas, ya que éstas excluyen a latinoamericanos. La exclusividad que caracteriza a estos grupos universitarios, es notable. Todos saben que los que no son puertorriqueños no son bienvenidos. Es increíble la hostilidad expresada por estos grupos de personas hacia los latinoamericanos. Yo personalmente he vivido, observado, y he escuchado de otras personas estas actitudes discriminatorias. Sin embargo, es asombroso cómo personas que no son ní latinas han sido bienvenidas por razones extremamente sospechosas.

Segundo, estas organizaciones fallan totalmente en sus esfuerzos para combatir el racismo. En realidad, no hacen absolutamente nada. Tan sólo responden a críticas de los latinos. Sin embargo cuando algunos miembros de la comunidad angloparlante lanzan ataques racistas, guardan silencio.

Por otra parte, estas organizaciones fracasan como medios de expresión de la cultura latina. Desafortunadamente, nuestra gran cultura ha sido reducida a festejos: salsa (la música) y salsa (la comida), en manos de ignorantes e incompetentes.

Estos asuntos se relacionan claramente con el "cierre" del "centro cultural." El cierre sería una excelente idea, con la condición que no se vuelvan a abrir, sin cambios radicales. ¿Qué podría ser más penoso para cualquier comunidad con plena identidad cultural, que en vez de usar los fondos otorgados por la administración de una manera responsable los desperdician en festejos? Yo no necesito que Whitmore me enseñe a comer arroz con habichuelas, y si ustedes necesitan que les enseñen, tal vez tienen un problema. Esto no es lo único que tenemos que enseñar a los angloparlantes.

Luisa Quintanilla

Está claro, hasta que no haya cambios definitivos en el uso de estos recursos, la meta principal de los latinos que tienen orgullo es mantener cerrado este ridículo "centro cultural." Si queremos expresar nuestra cultura, por medio de fiestas, lo debemos hacer sin la caridad de la administración. No tiene ningún sentido tomar los fondos, si no se van a utilizar de una forma constructiva.

No es ningún secreto mencionar que estas organizaciones están corruptas en todos los niveles. Dado al "mal manejo financiero," y el endémico y notable hostigamiento sexual, el "liderazgo" de estos grupos avergüenza a los latinoamericanos.

Finalmente la ineptitud de estos grupos demuestra como una sobredosis de la cultura hegémonica estadounidense, afecta la mentalidad colectiva de los grupos latinos, pues terminan con poco o ningún sentido de su propia cultura. La apatía reina la mente colonizada. La única manera de demostrar que no estamos sufriendo de una mentalidad colonizada es por medio de la resistencia a la opresión, ya sea que ésta venga directamente de la comunidad dominante o se filtre por medio de "latinas" vendidas.

Solo existe una esperanza. Los puertorriqueños tienen que deshacerse de sus actitudes exclusivistas y discriminatorias, y los latinoamericanos tenemos que participar activamente en nuestras organizaciones. De otro modo, todos nosotros merecemos que las organizaciones que llevan nuestro nombre caigan en manos corruptas. No debemos tolerar más abusos de la comunidad dominante. En este punto, tanto los puertorriqueños y nosotros los latinoamericanos debemos ponernos de acuerdo y cooperar.

Luisa Quintanilla es estudiante de UMass. Las opiniones en este articulo no son necesariamente las del Collegian.

• Useless organizations

Perhaps under the circumstances, one should begin by explaining why this needs to appear bilingually, in Spanish and English. We need to demonstrate the harmonious co-existence of two cultures defined by language, as a part of the general drive towards respect for all Third World cultures. The attempts by Latinos to generate an atmosphere of respect for our language in the United States have been continuously assaulted by reactionary and retrograde monocultural "English only" movements. The printing of an article in both languages, side by side, is an important institutional demonstration of the principle of equal co-existence. All real Latinos, and everyone of good will, should have no trouble understanding and sup are nowhere to be found.

Further, as vehicles for the expression of Latino culture, they fail even more miserably. In their ignorant and incompetent hands, a great culture is reduced to party-time food and music, to be precise salsa (the songs) and salsa (the dip).

These two issues seem to dovetail nicely in the "closing" of the "cultural center." This was actually quite a good idea on one condition — it must never reopen without a radical change in attitude. What could be a greater embarrassment for any community of cultural identity than to have the authorities fund our organizations and then toss the opportunities aside on useless partying? I don't need Whitmore to teach me how to eat arroz can habichuelas, and if you do, you're in deep trouble. This is not what I want to teach to the majority community. So, until there is a definite change in the use of these resources, clearly the main goal of all proud Latinos should be to keep those silly places closed. If we want to party, or express our culture, we can do so perfectly well on our own, without the charity of the administration. There is no point in taking University money unless it be used for constructive purposes.

Finally, I will not be revealing any state secrets when I point out that these organizations are corrupt at every level. From "financial improprieties," all the way down to endemic and infamous sexual harassment, the "leaderships" of these groups are nothing but an embarrassment.

In the final analysis, perhaps this uselessness is the ultimate demonstration of what overexposure to hegemonic U.S. culture can do to one's collective brains. People end up with little or no sense of their own culture. Apathy reigns supreme in the colonized mind. The only way to demonstrate that one is not suffering from a colonized mentality is to resist oppression, whether it comes directly from the majority community, or is filtered through "Latinas" sellouts.

There is only one hope. The Puerto Ricans must snap out of their particularist and discriminatory attitudes, and Latin Americans need to start to get involved in what ought to be our organizations. Otherwise we all deserve to have the groups bearing our name fall into corrupt hands. Above all, no more nonsense must be tolerated from outsiders, particularly the majority community.

On this at least, Puerto Ricans and Latin Americans ought to be able to agree and co-operate.

Pearl Jam at SUB

By DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Staff

"Once upon a time," there was chaos. Then man learned to communicate and there were wars. Then there was music. Now there is Pearl Jam at the Student Union Ballroom.

It's been a long time for man to wait but Jeff and Stone and Dave and Mike and Eddie have finally assembled to bring you Ten, their Epic debut. Tonight they bring their music to UMass.

In the mid-80's Stone Gossard (guitar) and Jeff Ament (bass) played in a band called Green River. Stone was "a funny city rock guy with a marshall." Jeff was "a serious Montana skate punk with a basketball."

They moved on to the underground phenomenon Mother Love Bone, where they refined their loud antics and style. Their second album release was marked with the death of lead singer Andrew Wood. Jeff and Stone teamed up with Soundgarden's Matt Cameron and Chris Connell to record a tribute project, "Temple of the Dog," in which Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder on vocals and Mike McCready playing guitars.

Their success was almost instantly projected. Upon first hearing Stone and Jeff's new work Eddie said, "it was a beautiful thing, that this music would hypnotize me. I would just let it wash over me and keep letting it go." Eddie wrote lyrics for those three tracks the next day. Pearl Jam was completed.

Pearl Jam recently toured with the Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Smashing Pumpkins on the East Coast, and Nirvana on the West. Now they are headlining their own tour, with fellow basketball fiends Eleven (Jack Irons of Eleven and Eddie Vedder of Pearl Jam used to play hoop weekly back home) opening the show.

Eleven has toured with Mary's Danish and Soundgarden, and received attention for their song "Break the Spell," which was on the "Freejack" soundtrack. Drummer Jack Irons and guitarist Alain Johannes were once part of Anthym, a high school band Flea played with.

Pearl Jam will be at the Student Union Ballroom tonight, Tuesday April 7. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. and the show starts at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $8. for UMass students and $10. for all others. Tickets are available at Tix Unlimited on campus, For The Record in Amherst and Main St. Records in Northampton.

Club Sin at Vertex every Tuesday night

By MARGARET GATES
Special to the Collegian

Every Tuesday night, Valley night life undergoes a very special transformation.

The Vertex (formerly Katina's on Rt. 9 in Hadley) has joined forces with WAMH-FM radio to conjure up an event called "ClubSIN," which offers fans of progressive music an opportunity to show their attitudes while dancing to a unique mix of sounds.

The event debuted on March 10, and continues to thrive as a weekly alternative to the primarily Top-40 dance clubs in the area. WAMH DJ's head to the Vertex every Tuesday to spin a combination of techno, industrial-dance, goth, new wave, alternative rock and progressive pop.

Departing from the local custom of catering to suburban mall-boppers with big hair, the Vertex and WAMH bring a new, permanent addition to the area night-life, and offers sanctuary to a breed of club-goers who like to dance to a different beat.

Black leather jackets and Doc Martenses are suddenly replacing the bland polo shirt/penny loafer Valley club uniform.

According to Eric Keenaghan, the night tends to be extremely diverse, and offers something for virtually every progressive musical taste ranging from Depeche Mode and The Cure to Ministry and Nine Inch Nails, Bauhaus and the Pixies.

"The atmosphere at 'SIN tends to be really friendly and open," Keenaghan said.

Last Tuesday, ClubSIN brought Skinny Puppy's new album, Last Rights, to the area with a special record release party. They gave away a number of copies of the new CD single, "Inquisition," plus posters and two Skinny Puppy discographies. ClubSIN's grand opening celebration in early March also included a release party for KMFDM's new album, Money.

Keenaghan said WAMH organized ClubSIN together with the Vertex in response to a perceived void in the Valley's club scene.

"We all felt that a lot of interest in alternative music in the Valley had virtually no outlet to express itself on a regular basis," he said. "You see the same faces at concerts and on the street, and recognize people immersed in the same musical scene, but until now, there has been no venue catering to this particular facet of the alternative subculture around here.

"We wanted to create a place where all of these different elements dispersed throughout the area could come together once a week and develop a scene with some sense of cohesion."

The Vertex's doors open at 8 p.m. every Tuesday for the 18-and-over ClubSIN, though things usually get kicking around 10. Keenaghan said a chain link fence has been set up around "the pit" and dance floor for added effect.

"The response so far has been really fabulous!" he said.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

I was sitting at home today when I heard a scratching sound.
I went to see what it was.
It was Mr. Peterson, playing with the phone cord, which was chewed in half.
while I held it, Mr. Peterson batted at it.

I got some tacos for lunch today.
Dan came with me.
As we sat down, we noticed that we both ordered two soft tacos and a coke.
Dan commented on how most of the people in line seemed to prefer soft tacos to the hard-shelled kind.

Quote of the Day

"An alcoholic is someone you don't like who drinks as much as you do."
-- Dylan Thomas

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Unfamiliar and distant locales hold the promise of adventure. Postpone major business and career moves until more information is available. A favorable verdict is announced.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be careful not to plunge into anything. A hasty announcement could gum up the works. A secret love affair could alter your life forever. Confide in your friends before going public.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Long-range financial planning is essential now. Someone at a distance could become a benefactor. Keep a low profile. A run-in with someone in authority could jeopardize career progress.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Allies both near and far are at your disposal today. Team up for a fruitful collaboration. You are poised to win support from those holding the money cards.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Away from the limelight, your spirits might wilt. Be adventuresome and explore new territory; you could wind up center stage after all! Keep up with your studies if still in school.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can reach your top stride in both employment affairs and personal relations today. Utilize established lines of communication and you will cruise right along.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People may not be all they seem. Stay on your guard when dealing with strangers. Romance could be a let-down. Maybe you need an evening to yourself. Read a novel or watch a video.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Surprising news or an unexpected encounter could leave you walking on air. Rubbing elbows with VIPs helps you raise money and get favorable publicity. Romance is favored!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Beware of indulging in office gossip today; it could prove quite damaging. Keep in touch with distant contacts — they can play a major role in a business triumph. Keep appointments on time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have a tendency to splurge in the name of fun. Ask yourself, "Is it worth the cost?". Great things happen when you get reacquainted with a former co-worker.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use the phone, mail or fax machine to get your ideas on the table. A timely discussion is essential. Be bold. Romance intensifies when you reveal what is in your heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your sensitivity and compassion help you draw extra close to people. Joining an organization will let you fulfill your wishes. Great results come when you trust your instincts.

in more revenue. Then such increases would not be needed, he said.

The proposal would bring total mandatory fees to $2,930.50 for undergraduates. This would mean that total mandatory fees will have risen by $1,866 in four years.

Including the $120 room and board hike, the proposal includes a $8 increase in the current $61 monthly telecommunications charge.

Student trustee Kevin Newnan, who was present at the committee meeting, called this latest proposed hike "minuscule."

"With the 4 percent tuition hike, [the Board] was saying 'It's not that bad,' " Newnan said. "What they're doing is in of itself not ridiculous."

In 1964, the total in-state cost of attending the Amherst campus was $939, in 1974 it was $1,870 and in 1984 it was $4,055.

The 3.6 percent is considerably lower than the 1988-89 total cost hike of almost 15 percent.

"They have the basic economic explanation to justify the costs," Newnan said.

A recent letter from Chancellor Richard O'Brien mailed to University students stated that the increase in tuition and fees "will be the smallest for many years, and is likely to be smaller than any other large university in this country."

Collegian staff writer Brooke C. Wheeler contributed to this report.

semantics and misunderstanding. She noted that LBGA Awareness Weeks include heterosexual allies.

Other provisions involve personal attacks against RSOs and their members and grievances between RSOs and RSO publications.

Zenon said it was important to distinguish the RSOs which have informally been referred to as the Conservative Alliance as three distinct organizations.

Kevin Jourdain of the Republican Club, who also did not attend the press conference, expressed optimism that this agreement would ease tensions between the groups. However, he said that he did not want this agreement to suggest that the Republican Club condones or validates homosexual activity.

"I'd like to remind the campus that this is not the mainstream. I will never persecute a homosexual, it's homosexual activity I disagree with," Jourdain said.

As part of the agreement representatives were required to "jointly contact the Collegian to provide an explantion of this agreement."

Members in the contract will reconvene in May for an evaluation of the agreement.

"This is a document-in-progress. It is part of a working relationship between two RSOs," Woolwich said.

"There is definitely a spirit to this agreement. Both sides agree that while we'll never completely agree we can agree to disagree and we can do it civilly," said Zenon.

"This event is historically significant and historically unusual. I think now we can look forward to the two organizations to co-sponsor a dance," said an LBGA affiliate Sean Sullivan, a sophomore cultural studies major.

Sarah Boy, associate to the vice chancellor for student affairs and a member of the commission expressed her approval and admiration.

"It is very encouraging that you all made it through this," Boy said.

"The spirit behind this agreement is that there is a need, particularly on this campus community to have civility and discourse between organizations," said Matt Malone, sophomore history major and LBGA media coordinator.

Food, dancing and fun at International Fair

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

With music, dances, loads of food and about 50 tables representing 40 countries and 10 organizations arranged with an unlimited creativeness, thousands of students were attracted to the annual "International Fair on Saturday.

The fair, sponsored by the International Students Association and the Student Activities Office, showed the diversity of the world with flags, handcrafts and maps pointing out the locations of countries.

International Fair student coordinator Elsa Moriz, from Azores, said this year the fair is different because graduate and undergraduate students got together to organize the fair.

"The Student Activities Office has been a great help to us," she said.

But on the other hand, she feels that the University has not supported the fair and international students because they have to do all the work in publicity and advertising the fair.

Although Angelos Angelidakis, from Greece, said he liked the fair because of the varieties in culture, he did not approve of the table of the Turkish Republic of Cyprus because it is not recognized by the United Nations.

One student from Singapore showed a photo alice of a fountain in the shape of a lion-half-fish. He said that the symbol of Singapore is the sealion and that the name of the country means "sealion."

"This is the symbol of India," said Ranga Devulapally, civil engineering major, showing a peacock made of silver.

There were tables from all around the world, distinguished for their originality. There were students dressed in their country's typical costumes, and others were selling or giving food for free. Some were selling handcrafts or writing your name in their native language. There was always someone dancing on the stage to the tune of their country's music.

"Food is excellent. . . there's lots of cultures, that's good," said Malkes Gomes, a Cape Verdean student and president of the Cape Verdean Students Alliance.

sentences. I'm trying to write good, clean, comprehensible prose," Lukas said.

"What is phenomenally difficult is how to take that huge mass of material you've gathered and make of it an artifact which will organize it in a way that is comprehensible."

Project Pulse

Student Affairs University of Massachusetts at Amherst

On Wednesday, October 30, 1991, Project PULSE conducted a telephone survey for the Information Data Bank (IDB), operated by the Dean of Students Office. The survey examined levels of student awareness and use of the IDB. PULSE interviewers attempted to contact 840 students selected randomly from the undergraduate student population, and 430 agreed to be interviewed. The response rate for the survey was 51%.

All of the students sampled, regardless of whether they had heard of or used the IDB, were asked which resource they use most to obtain academic information.

Next, students were asked which resource they use most to obtain non-academic information, such as information about clubs, sporting events, UVC, arts events, etc. (see Figure 2).

Finally, students were asked how the IDB could be effectively advertised (see Figure 3).

More than half (51.1%, n=217) of the students said through the Collegian.

Opening day means classes come second

Dear faculty — Greg is unable to attend class today due to the fact that it is Boston Red Sox opening day. Please excuse him. — Greg's mom.

Really, I realize I'm here to learn and all, but I hope my professors will understand. This isn't the usual "I don't feel like it" or "I'm hunting llamas in Peru this week."

Much like the swallows return to Capistrano and salmon swim upstream, the Red Sox return to Fenway Park for yet another summer. Like always, there will be hope this is the year. The fact that those hopes will probably be dashed on the rocks in October doesn't cross the Sox fan's mind in April.

Of course, I do firmly believe this is the year.

An energetic young manager. The best one-two combination of starting pitchers in all of baseball, Roger Clemens and Frank Viola. A whole season of Mo Vaughn. The kind of tradition Seattle fans could never even fathom.

So of course I'll be watching. Where or for how long, I'm not certain because I probably should go to class, but it doesn't really matter. What counts is that I see the first pitch, the first Clemens strike out, Wade Boggs' first double to deep left, Mike Greenwell's first shot over the right field fence.

Count yourselves lucky, BoSox fans. You could have been born in Philladelphia, where the field is two miles away from your seat, the hot dogs are five bucks each and the only thing going for the team is the lovable Philly Phanatic, sports' best mascot.

Greg Sukiennik

No, you were blessed with the holiest shrine in the American League, Fenway Park. You have never known the sadness of artificial turf, exploding scoreboards and sound systems that play Debbie Gibson or Poison.

I won't tell you to blow off physics, because that's your call. It doesn't really matter — it's a holiday. Eat a hot dog for lunch and buy some peanuts.

A couple observations about Brown University, where the UMass Gorillas came up short this past Saturday: first of all, the campus itself was absolutely dripping in money. At UMass they name buildings after faculty and politicians, but at Brown all you have to do to immortalize yourself in brick is give, give, give.

There were small plaques everywhere describing how such-and-such donors "gave $250,000 for the office furnishings in this building."

Second, unlike the prevailing trend at most schools with big-time sports programs, the athletes at Brown are smarter than the student fans in the stands.

Attacker Darrin Lowe, who owns the school assist record, spoke less like a player and more like a coach when I talked to him after the game. If only the fans behind the UMass bench were as classy as he was.

While rudeness and obscenities aren't out of the ordinary among student fans, Brown really took the prize. You'd think people who averaged 1400 on the SAT would have a little more restraint. Unless, of course, they were drinking. . . which, in fact, they were. It's no secret that rudeness and mayhem in the stands is usually caused by alcohol. Even in the Ivy League.

Besides these flaws, Stevenson Field is a great place to watch a lacrosse game. The grass is in great shape, the concessions are decent and there are plenty of places to sit. There's even a hill on one side, except that it's considerably smaller than the one at Upper Boyden (soon to be Garber) Field.

NHL means Nitwit Hockey Leadership: It seems doubtful we will ever see the Stanley Cup Playoffs this year, and all because the National Hockey League's powers-that-be are willing to cut off their nose to spite their face.

NHL franchises make most of their money in the playoffs. NHL players are treated like dirt and should have free agency. But the owners and the league's president, John Zeigler, are either too stupid or too stubborn to recognize this. If an agreement can't be reached, the NHL deserves what's coming to them.

Softball travels to B.C. with 10-game win streak

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

After a 10-game homestand in which it won all 10 games, the University of Massachusetts softball team will travel to Boston College today for a 3 p.m. doubleheader against the Eagles.

The Minutewomen, 12-7 overall, 4-0 in the Atlantic 10, are on a roll as the pitching of Darlene Claffey, Kelly Daut and Holly Aprile has yielded a total of six runs and 31 hits in the last 67 innings.

The three are holding opponents to a .183 batting average.

UMass hold a 11-1 series advantage over the 7-6-1 Eagles. Included in B.C.'s six losses is a 3-0 loss to Temple, a team UMass beat twice over the weekend.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino says the series record is more impressive than it sounds because she believes umpires in the Boston area squeeze the UMass batters' strike zone because of what she believes is a general dislike for the school.

"I don't think it's in my mind," she said. "I think it's very apparent that there are two different strike zones. I'm saying this coming away winning, not coming away losing where you would raise your eyebrows. We know that when we go to Boston College the team needs to be a little sharper and just a little bit better, because it's not going to be easy."

GAME NOTES — Apologies to Kelly Daut, who was not credited with the victory in her 10-inning, 1-0 shutout of Temple in the first game of Sunday's doubleheader. The win evened the freshman's record at 4-4, and lowered her ERA to 1.69

•The no-hitter pitched by senior Holly Aprile in the first game of Saturday's twinbill against St. Joseph's was her fourth career solo effort and second against the Hawks. She has also combined for one with another pitcher. Her record now stands at 3-1 with an ERA of 1.87.

•With her two wins over the weekend, Claffey raised her record to 5-2 (including four shutouts) with an ERA of 1.26

Freshman Kelly Daut, the third pitcher in the rotation led the Minutewomen to victory Sunday against Temple.

•Barbara Marean, who was named yesterday as the A-10 Player of the Week for the third week in a row, continues to rip the ball. The senior shortstop has team-high statistics in batting average (.525) and slugging percentage (.902). Included in those numbers are nine triples, which ties the team record, and a 16-game hitting streak. The old record was 14 games, set by Marean last year.

Boston, New York in 1992?

The 1991 season will be a tough act to follow — tight division races, especially in the AL East and the NL West, the rise from worst to first by Minnesota and Atlanta, creating a matchup in the World Series that lived up to expectations and will be remembered as one of the greatest Series' of all time, perhaps surpassing the 1975 and 1986 Fall Classics

New managers take the helm in Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, New York and Seattle and five of the seven are rookies — reflecting a trend to go with 1970s-type baseball throughout the majors.

Here are my picks for the 1992 season.

AMERICAN LEAGUE EAST

1. Boston Red Sox — An abundance of solid, although average starting pitching will carry this team in a weak division.
2. Toronto Blue Jays — Solid defense, but the offense cannot sustain any major injuries. Questions of depth in pitching.

Luke Erickson

3. Milwaukee Brewers — A fast finish in '91 (40-19), but will they avoid injuries that has kept this team down since '87.
4. Baltimore Orioles — There is only so much Cal Ripken Jr. can do himself. Promising young pitching and best defense in majors. 5. Detroit Tigers — Mr. Anderson, welcome to earth. Long ball hitting will not be enough to overcome aging pitching staff.
6. New York Yankees — Tartabull will help, but they lost Perez and Howe to drug accusations and addictions. Watch the youth movement.
7. Cleveland Indians — Offseason dedicated to clearing out the older and expensive players. Could be a contender. . . in 1995.

AMERICAN LEAGUE WEST

1. Chicago White Sox — They're young. They're hungry. And they're tired of second place. Adding Sax and Bell makes the difference
2. Oakland Athletics — They're old, but they're too talented and have something to prove in baseball's toughest division.
3. Minnesota Twins — Trade for Smiley was very smooth, but not enough to make up for the loss of Morris. Can Erickson stay healthy?
4. Seattle Mariners — Wrecked their bullpen to get Mitchell, but the outfield combined could hit 100 HRs. Still missing a closer.
5. Texas Rangers — This team can HIT, but beyond an aging Ryan and Juan Guzman, the pitching is pathetic. Watch catcher Ivan Gonzalez.
6. Kansas City Royals — If Jeffries, Joyner and McReynolds have career years, this team could surprise, but pitching is suspect.
7. California Angels — The best starting pitching in AL, but doesn't have the legs for its NL-style offense.

NATIONAL LEAGUE EAST

1. New York Mets — The best off season re-tooling in recent memory. Comebacks by Gooden and Fernandez could make it a runaway.
2. St. Louis Cardinals — Second place in '91 was for real and it will be repeated. Not enough pitching and defense to make the cut.
3. Pittsburgh Pirates — They will survive the loss of Bonilla, but not the pressure to win to keep Bonds and Drabek.
4. Philadelphia Phillies — A strong finish (45-35) to escape fifth place, but a bit too raw to sustain a pennant chase.
5. Chicago Cubs — New manager Lefevbre's enthusiasm will not be enough to resurrect the success of 1989.
6. Montreal Expos — Wallach and Martinez should polish their resumes. Waiting for expansion to have equal competition.

NATIONAL LEAGUE WEST

1. Los Angeles Dodgers — Strawberry and Davis now have their boyhood dream. It will be an L.A. Story in '92
2. Cincinnati Reds — This is still the team that led wire-to-wire in '90. Adding Belcher and Swindell offsets any "loss" of Davis.
3. Atlanta Braves — Can they really afford to stand still like they did in the offseason? Not a fluke, though.
4. San Diego Padres — The starting pitching is aging and ragged, the offense is unreliable. Riddoch could be the first to go.
5. Houston Astros — This is not a typo. The road trip from hell in August means the role of spoiler in September.
6. San Francisco Giants — These Giants aren't nimble, these Giants aren't quick, these Giants don't belong in Candlestick.

A.L. Champions: Boston in 7 games — too much experience for Chicago

N.L. Champions: New York in 6 games. Hershiser can't match '88.

World Series: Boston in 7 games. The drought will finally end. The Fenway faithful have waited long enough.

Clinton seizes the lead in New York

Brown buried in Kansas landslide

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

Front-runner Bill Clinton thumped Jerry Brown in the brutal New York primary Tuesday and added a Kansas landslide for good measure, advancing his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination despite persistent voter unease over his integrity.

Campaign dropout Paul Tsongas made a surprise bid for second place in New York, but deferred a decision on whether to reenter the race.

Brown said he would press ahead with his candidacy, but Clinton's showing prompted party elders to suggest the Arkansas governor was all but assured to the nomination.

If so, it would propel the 48-year-old Arkansas governor with the soft Southern accent into a fall campaign against President Bush in a time of exceptional turmoil overseas and economic hardship at home.

Tsongas was elated over his unexpected showing.

"Let me say, the message survives and the message lives and the message has real power. I've spoken to a number of people who asked me not to make a decision tonight or tomorrow and to wait until Friday, so there's a lot of analysis that has to take place. . .I have an obligation to do something that is deliberate and thoughtful."

Bush won Republican primaries in Kansas, Wisconsin and Minnesota over the deflated conservative challenge of Patrick Buchanan. He was gaining nearly all the delegates at stake, and seemed on track for clinching a nominating majority when Indiana, North Carolina and Washington, D.C. hold primaries on May 5.

Bush's victory margin ranged from 62 percent of the vote in Kansas to 69 percent in Minnesota and 78 percent in Wisconsin.

The president's campaign manager was pointing at Clinton already.

"We're taking comfort from the fact that voters in New York particularly do not seem to find any of the Democratic candidates particularly acceptable," said Fred Malek.

He was right about that. Interviews with voters in several states reflected continuing concern with Clinton's integrity. The Arkansas governor has been besieged with controversy throughout his campaign over alleged womanizing, the use of marijuana, his record in office and his draft record during the Vietnam war.

Against that backdrop, his triumphs in New York and elsewhere were testimony to his polished campaign machine and his remarkable political skills.

Clinton's victories were probably enough to dampen any hopes Tsongas — or anyone else — harbored of a late run for nomination.

Tsongas and Bush discuss US economy

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush and Paul Tsongas discussed the country's economy before a high-powered business audience Tuesday in a contrast of problems, solutions and politics.

"Over the last several years, deadweights have begun to slow the engine of growth, inefficiencies a competitive economy simply cannot tolerate," said Bush. He emphasized five areas: the legal system, health care, trade barriers, education and the civil justice system.

"The country is ready for a hard-choice, pro-economic growth government," said Tsongas, reiterating the themes of his Democratic presidential campaign which was abandoned but may be revived.

"The consumer confidence index is not a reflection of what people think is true about the recession but what they think is true long term, and they see the United States in relative economic decline," Tsongas said. "People are terrified and they're ready to begin the road back."

The men spoke, several hours apart, before the American Business Conference, a 10-year-old organization comprised of 100 chief executives of companies with annual revenues of at least $25 million and growing at twice the rate of the economy.

"When our legal system becomes incapable of resolving disputes in a timely and civil manner, business loses the incentive to innovate and take risks," said Bush. "When health care costs escalate, business picks up much of the tab. When government imposes barriers to trade, business pays the price in opportunities lost.

"When our children leave schools without rudimentary skills, business bears the burden in lowered productivity. And when government freezes in gridlock, business can no longer plan rationally for the future."

Those were the same points the president makes when he is out campaigning, though this speech was described as "official" and not political.

To Tsongas, the political establishments in both parties are in a state of confusion, almost unable to move.

'Right to choose' demanded

One million marchers descend on Washington, D.C.

By KIMBERLY A. REYNOLDS
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The March for Women's Lives will be memorable for sheer numbers alone — one million women, men and children gathered April 5 to say, "We will not go back," sending a message to legislators that pro-choice voices are alive and well in this country.

The program began at the National Mall in Washington, D.C., at 10 a.m. with short and concise speeches by women such as Bella Abzug; Robin Morgan, editor, Ms. Magazine; Mary Crisp, Chairperson of the National Republican Coalition and Susan Lederman, president of the League of Women Voters.

While the primary focus was on the abortion issue, speakers touched on many topics pertaining to women at the all-day rally. From the "gag rule" to childcare, electing women or those sensitive to women's issues to public office to better health care for women, there was something for everyone.

The march route itself was rather short, with marchers leaving the National Mall, turning down Pennsylvania Avenue and going past the White House, Department of Justice and the Internal Revenue Service building before returning to the Mall.

Mounted Capitol Police, along with other police units, were in evidence all along the route but were unobtrusive. The security was quite heavy on the White House lawn, and the marchers were most vocal there.

Surprisingly, anti-choice forces were not a factor. While there were scattered pockets of pro-lifers, their numbers were so small as to render them almost unnoticeable.

The afternoon program began at 1:30 with more speeches and music. Among the afternoon speakers was Jesse Jackson. In a rousing speech, he said, "We need to spend money on HeadStart, daycare and prenatal care, rather than welfare and jailcare." Jackson spoke longer than most others, but so eloquently no one seemed to mind, save the woman whose job it was to time the speakers.

Patricia Ireland, president of the National Organization for Women, said, "...for seven years I was a stewardess. For seven years I took people's trash and said, 'Thank-you, thank-you.' We've been doing that with Congress for too long now."

Alan Cranston, senator from California and author of the Freedom of Choice Act in the Senate, said, "We will support Roe v. Wade regardless of what the Supreme Court does."

The Hollywood Women's Coalition was represented by actresses Jane Fonda, Cybil Shepard, Morgan Fairchild and Callie Khouri, the screenwriter of Thelma and Louise. Said Khouri, "I wrote a movie about what happens when women have no choice and they're driven over the edge."

Fonda and presidential candidate Jerry Brown were the focus of most media attention backstage in the press area. The press went into "no holds barred to get a quote" mode, leaving overturned chairs and people in their wake.

Cyndi Lauper sang a song from her new album, and spoke about the necessity of choice for all women.

Oddly, the most moving and emotional speeches were made by men. The women who spoke leaned toward the pragmatic and were geared to solutions. Some men, including Jackson, Ron Silver of the Creative Coalition and Bill Bell Jr. spoke passionately of the need for women to have free choice.

Bill Bell, whose sister Karen was the Indiana teenager who died last year from an illegal abortion, spoke of the need to repeal restrictions on abortion, asking the crowd to repeat after him, "No more Karen Bells, no more Karen Bells." If it were not for parental consent laws, he said, his sister would be alive today.

Those on the Mall were there for a variety of reasons, some because they'd had abortions or knew friends or relatives who needed the procedure. Some were there because, as one woman said, ". . .if we aren't allowed to make the most fundamental choices about our bodies how can we expect parity in pay and access to the full range of options available in our lives?"

Modern mysticism considered

By DAVID MOHEBAN
Collegian Correspondent

Rabbi Zalman Schachter-Shalomi, the founder of the P'nai or Religious Fellowship, shared his thoughts on the central teachings of Hasidism and Kabbalah with audience members last Thursday night at Amherst College.

Rabbi Zalman discussed aspects of Jewish mystical traditions and elements of other faiths.

"The topic in general has to do with Jewishness," he said to an audience of students, faculty and local residents. Rabbi Zalman also addressed the issues of how a Jew must live with the times, and what it means to be modern.

"Kabbalah uses symbolism as a way of saying there is hidden stuff in every level of the Torah," he said.

Kabbalah is an ancient Hebrew practice that embodies mysticism and spirituality. It personifies God as having both a masculine and a feminine side, represented by the physical attributes of the earth and the solar system, Rabbi Zalman explained.

Rabbi Zalman was born in Poland and was ordained from the Lubavitch Yeshiva in 1947. The recipient of a Ph.D. in Hebrew Letters from Hebrew Union College, Rabbi Zalman also served as a professor of religion at the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg and at Temple University in Philadelphia. He is the author of several books, including Spiritual Intimacy.

By exploring various religions and faiths, Rabbi Zalman has brought new meaning to his own religion, and has revived the ancient Kabbalist traditions.

Speaking on the upcoming Jewish holiday of Passover, he said, "If there is something that reaffirms that you're not an accident — on purpose a child of God — matzah eating does that.

"The seder creates in our being a connection that touches us so much that most Jews sooner or later come out of the woodwork to renew that Jewish self."

Rabbi Zalman also discussed the religious aspects and symbolism in dreams. "We have looked to dreams as a key to psychopathology. We have put them down. Near death experiences and flying dreams mean that being in the body is not the only way."

Rabbi Zalman added that the sources of mysticism may be closer than they think. "People have been looking for the sources of mysticism in the East," he said. "I would like to suggest to start looking in your own back yard."

Poet's spirit preserved

Dickinson home is a piece of history

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian staff

Dorothy Kissam says she always feels a presence when she stands in Emily Dickinson's bedroom.

"She was a brilliant scholar," said Kissam, a tour guide in Dickinson's home.

In the window sill of the bedroom lies a gingerbread box she once filled with cookies and let down with a rope to visiting children outside her window.

"She was part child herself," said Kissam.

The Dickinson Homestead, located in North Amherst, is both Emily's 1830 birthplace and where the famous poet wrote over 1,800 poems and more than 1,000 letters.

Partly as a result of Martha Bianch's publications, more people became aware of Dickinson's poems, though scarcely a dozen were printed in her lifetime.

Kissam said Dickinson was so busy only selected visitors were invited in, but she always made time for the children.

"She had a normal social outgoing life. She was a judge at the county fair and won prizes for her bread recipes."

When the house was built in 1813, it was considered one of the finest houses in town.

For the most part, the house Dickinson knew in her life still remains.

There are long French doors and Italanate marble mantels surrounding the fireplaces in the double parlor.

Today, the rooms and halls of the homestead, owned by Amherst College faculty, are open to the public. Many possessions as well as other pieces identified with the family are still contained in the home.

Also displayed are a number of family portraits and various other pictures reminiscent of the life that took place in the homestead more than a century ago.

The focal point of the tour of the homestead, Dickinson's bedroom, contains many personal belongings. There is a small table and chair where Dickinson is thought to have sat. There is one of her prized white dresses encased in glass.

"She had a passion for wearing white. Part of a metaphor that she was living was that she considered herself a vestal virgin," said Kissam.

Outside the bedroom is a cradle believed to have rocked the Dickinson children. Throughout the house are pictures of important people in Dickinson's life, as well as a small silhouette of herself at age fifteen.

Since 1963, the homestead, located at 280 Main St., Amherst, has been designated a National Historical Site.

Portions of the homestead, including the poet's bedroom, are open to visitors by appointment Wednesdays through Saturdays, from May through October.

Network offers help for natural childbirth

The president of the Birthing Network said she wants to assure natural childbirth options and help people have the best birth experience possible.

The Birthing Network Inc. is a non-profit volunteer childbirth organization which provides resource, referral, education, support and counseling services to pregnant women, families and childbirth professionals.

Although the president of the network, Vicki Elson, supports natural childbirth, she thinks a woman shouldn't feel she's failed when intervention is needed.

"We wanted to keep birthing options open in the Valley and support new families making choices; choices that they can feel good about," said Elson.

The network is a consumer advocate, but one working with the hospitals and local midwives to support new families, said Elson.

Elson said one of her jobs is to counteract the media.

"People need to understand birth long before they get pregnant. People get ideas about birth on TV and in most cases a woman goes into labor and starts screaming. It's just not like that," she said.

"Everything crosses the placenta including drugs which can make the baby less responsive at birth and cause delayed physiological effects. They want to be fully alert when they look at each other for that first incredible moment. It makes moms feel how strong and courageous they are," said Elson.

"Many moms feel more capable in all areas of life after having given birth. Bonding is enhanced when both mom and baby are fully present."

In a lot of cases women have a quicker and easier recovery too," she added.

Elson said she feels natural childbirth is a good start to life and parenthood.

"The mother finds out what a powerful person she is and how capable she is," said Elson.

"Before I had my first baby I felt like a wimp. After she was born I felt I could do anything. It was an amazing experience which changed my life."

Elson said she was hopeful that more families would utilize the Network's resources.

Panel discusses role of media and Third World

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

At a panel discussion sponsored by WMUA's Department of Third World Affairs, three UMass faculty members spoke on the media, the Third World and the New World Order this past Monday night.

David Dubois, visiting professor in the Journalism and Afro-American Studies Departments and founding president of the W.E.B. Dubois foundation, said that 80 percent of the world's population resides in the Third World, which accounts for 67 percent of the land mass on the globe.

"But I detect a terrible provincialism in the attitude here in the U.S.," he said. Dubois, who has spent the better part of the last 32 years in Egypt, said that when he came to the United States, he noticed in the people here a general lack of knowledge as well as lack of interest in his experiences.

"The general attitude seemed to be that the people in the Third World didn't really count or matter," Dubois said. Furthermore, most Western coverage of the Third World dwells only on conflicts, on the exotic, or on catastrophes, he said.

He said the struggle continues in Third World countries to break all ties of dependence with their former colonial rulers. "The development of an autonomous media is an important priority," said Dubois, "but it is hampered by lack of resources."

Addressing U.S. coverage of the Gulf War, Dubois said very little was mentioned here of the flurry of activity among Arabs to resolve the dispute between Iraq and Kuwait.

Dubois, who was in Egypt at the time, said the issue then changed to concern over the protection and welfare of the entire region, due to the build-up of Western military forces in the very heart of the Islamic world. The U.S. media did not even hint at the widespread internal resistance to Egypt's participation in the coalition, or the severe repression used to quell it, said Dubois.

He added that after the war the extent of the destruction and slaughter was the issue in Egypt, and remains so today.

Addressing global use of communications technology, Dubois said there seems "little hope for improvement" because the trend seems towards "consolidation of a position of continual dependence and control." Only the Inter-Press Services, a news agency centered in the Third World, appears to be on the ascent, he said.

Ketu Katrak from Bombay, India, a professor in the English Department at UMass, then spoke on media and culture, alternative media, and the role of women in it.

"A critique of imperialism should address economic and military as well as cultural issues," Katrak said. "We must address the questions who produces knowledge, where, and for whom," she said.

Choosing as a case study the role of Indian women in alternative media, Katrak said that popular culture is used as a platform through song and street theatre. "This is particularly important in largely non-literate societies," she said.

India is the world's largest producer of commercial films, but the depiction of women leaves a lot to be desired, Katrak said. As for films made on the Third World by the West, she quoted Salman Rushdie who said, "These films make us bit players in our own history," by depicting Third World people merely as "backdrops."

She ended her presentation by playing an uplifting Hindi tune sung by women during marches and rallies.

Henry Geddes Gonzalez from Peru, an assistant professor in the Communications Department at UMass, spoke on the global connection between economics and culture.

"The ascendance of capitalism and its cultural manifestations can be traced back 500 years," he said. "We now have a culture with a universal nature unlike anything before," Gonzalez said. "Culture has now become the centerpiece of expansion in unprecedented ways."

The print and electronic media have helped sustain Western commerce, culture, and the West's perceptions of the Third World. "Racism as a set of values and perceptions still remains a persistent quality in the West," Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez described the situation in Peru, where U.S. military advisors have been stationed and military aid for counter- insurgency is pouring in to battle popular movements. "My country is being depicted as top on a list of "unstable" nations with leftist guerilla movements and drug trafficking," Gonzalez said.

Addressing the global communications network, he said that a few large conglomerates, such as Time-Warner, are essentially "selling culture, selling the U.S. way of life, and even selling the act of selling and buying as a way of life."

An interesting discussion followed, with some irate members of the audience claiming that the notion of dominance is "essentially ingrained in the minds of Westerners," who seem "very comfortable and supportive of global structures of dominance."

Dubois responded that a distinction needs to be made between "U.S. people and the military-industry-media complex." Katrak added, however, that it is too easy to "let the U.S. population off the hook," and that there was definitely a certain degree of accountability and complicity involved.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Tall fences make for bad neighbors and little sense

Passing through apartment complexes on my way home, I approached a chain-link fence. I did not expect it and I did not expect my reaction to it.

The fence blocked my path, and as I approached it my heart beat quicker than before. My pace slowed to an eventual stop just four feet away. Who was to stop me from hopping over? Who was to care whether I did or not? From what I could see, there was nothing wrong with crossing this border. Something, however, left me uneasy and nervous.

There is something about a fence that is hurtful, some fences more than others. This particular barrier was pointless. Was its purpose to stop people from crossing from one complex to the other? No. If their owners were concerned thusly, they would have security guards at the front entrances. The only reason for that fence which I could fathom was to mark land for legal reasons. A fence would seem like the easiest way, but there must be other ways to accomplish this without boxing people within walls. The fence could also provide a barrier for liability. If some kid falls and breaks a tooth or something, everyone knows who to sue.

Mike Levy

If that is indeed the main reason, I dislike that fence even more. When all the accounting is done, it helps nobody. Children will fall and get hurt. It is their nature. The legal owners of the land cannot stop this; they should not be blamed. But they act in defence (note the makeup of this word) and restrict the openness of the environment while setting up a new danger. Certainly there have been accidents on that fence.

But the repercussions of a fence go beyond the individual level. Society seems to take on this "fence" mentality, separating themselves from the problems and concerns of neighbors. A chain-link will still let you see what is going on the other side, but you have less pressure to move across and get involved.

Fences let people ignore problems they have among themselves. The Flintstones had a short stone wall separating themselves from the Rubbles. They were the best cartoon friends on television, yet the Rubbles needed that wall. Fred was quite a greedy and manipulative character. However close the families became, there had to be some divider, a line where they could say, "This is ours."

The family of a friend of mine lives in their own fenced-in world. The front door is closed all day, winter and summer. The atmosphere inside is very protective and defensive (there goes that word again). Any ideas or people that are not easily defined as Brooklyn/Long Island or Jewish is unwanted. When my friend watched Mr. Rogers as a child, Mrs. Provincial would make religious cracks aimed to dissuade him from watching the minister on television. When my friend had his Catholic girlfriend over, she was ignored. His recounts of arguments with his mother over his Korean girlfriend were too ugly for me to remember; I have repressed this for the most part. All of this comes from a woman one generation after the holocaust. Maybe she is afraid, but separating herself from the rest of society will not help. More fences translate into less understanding.

Walking along that fence the other day, I found a spot where the top was bent down and physical risk was least. I jumped over and felt good. Although it held me back for a short while, it did not stop me. I got that great feeling I had when I was a kid, the one I had when I found a break in a fence. Those breaks and holes meant an entirely new realm open to me. Another park, another field, another empty lot. Maybe if there were no needless fences, I could always feel like that.

The struggle for a one-year-old's life

He's as mischievously energetic as any other one-year-old. He plays, walks, runs to his older brothers and can definitely romp around and cause havoc. The only difference between him and other little boys — is that Danny has leukemia.

"He's just the most beautiful little boy," said Paul Colbert, his older brother, as he pointed with pride to a color photo taken on his first birthday. "He's just the happiest little baby."

Danny was diagnosed with leukemia shortly after he entered this world, and immediately his family began the struggle to save his life. Danny desperately needs a bone marrow transplant which of course means a matching donor has to be found; and that's where the real struggle has been.

David Rivera

"Trying to find a matching donor has cost over $200,000," Paul said. "Statistics say that 1 in 20,000 could be a matching donor and time's running out."

Paul's family has been turned upside down, but he says you'd never know it by looking at them. His dad has involved his family business and his brother Joe has been fund-raising back home in East Boston. Paul's been working here on campus to raise money and says he has been overwhelmed by the outpouring of support and generosity. "People have been phenomenal," he said. "It makes you realize that this world isn't so bad after all."

Danny spent the first five months of his life in the hospital which some might think would effect a little baby but Danny is different. He has adjusted to his world and Paul says he loves everyone, especially his nurses.

Receiving daily injections of medication as well as a supplement in his formula, Danny shows great courage; Paul says he's a little trooper.

"He doesn't like the taste of his medicine but he takes it." The Colberts have become experts on the disease that little Danny suffers from, any family in their situation would. When someone so small and innocent becomes threatened not only the family becomes closer but also the community. And Paul says his UMass community has shown great character and spirit.

"People who I thought would never care surprised me. . .it makes you think differently about life and it makes you realize that there is kindness in the world."

Local businesses have become involved by donating prizes for a raffle and some pubs have created a cover charge which will help pay for the testing of possible donors. People have even paid their own expenses to travel to the testing sight and then have given money to help others get tested.

"Some people can't be tested so they give money, and some don't have money so they go and get tested," Paul said.

Though his school life has been affected, Paul says he's matured and changed because of what is happening to his little brother. Just by looking at Paul you can tell that the responsibilities he's taken on have changed the way he sees things in general. "Some things just don't seen as important any more. . . Danny's situation makes you wonder about priorities and what's really important in life."

This little fellow has just come into our world and already he's endured more pain and suffering than any of us will ever know. And for Paul, it's taken a family emergency to show him what's important in his life. Simple things: family and friends.

"We don't know how much time he really has," Paul admitted with a solemn face. "But we're very optimistic that a donor will be found and everything will work out."

Take the Colberts and put yourself in their shoes: what would you do? What wouldn't you do?

In our own little UMass world we forget about the the things that really should matter in our lives. Sometimes exams, classes, the mastering of greed and junk like MTV all lead our attention away from the truly important things we should care more about.

It sometimes takes pain to make us wake up and care — care for all the little Dannys in the world.

Walkers clog up running track

I, like many others, utilize the track in Curry Hicks to run indoors during the cold winter months. More and more, people are using this same track, not to jog or run on, but to walk.

Rarely do "walkers" walk alone but walk in groups of up to 6. I have no problem with these people except they feel they have every right to walk wherever they feel.

When asked to move to one side of the track, these obnoxious slobs ignore you or tell you they have every right to walk anywhere they like. "I was here first!" Sorry, I thought tracks were originally designed for people to run on! How ignorant of me!

Maybe you ought to put yourself in my place. If a track is not for runners, but belongs to who gets there first, does that mean if I get there first and you get in my way, can I run you down?

If you "walkers" are using the track for something it was not designed for, maybe you should walk single file and stay off the lanes where the runners should be.

I and many others have almost been injured because people not only walk where ever they want but in any direction they want.

If you walkers are so inconsiderate of others you can't see the potential dangers you create, rules need to be set up so walkers stay off the lanes on the track.

'Patriarcial values?' It was a joke

In Monday's Collegian, former GEO Co-Speaker Emily Isaacs complained the photo and mock caption that appeared in the April Fool's edition of the Collegian promoted "patriarchial values" and prevented sexual harassment from being taken seriously. I thought I'd like to get my two bits in before Isaacs declares a GEO boycott of the Collegian.

"Some feared that you [Collegian] were trying to promote racial, gender, sexual orientation and class equality," whines Isaacs, "What a silly fear!"

I'm not exactly sure to whom she is referring — most of the people I know think of the Collegian as a newspaper, not an all-encompassing ideology aimed at the betterment of mankind. In any case, if the Collegian were promoting such an agenda and ran the joke anyway, it would not be nearly as hypocritical as, say, claiming to improve the University by "decimating" it.

Isaacs also protests the joke in question reflects "the prevalent view on powerful women. These women are powerful because they are cute." This is just plain silly. The point of quoting O'Brien as saying "she's a babe" and putting her picture above the caption was to make you laugh.

As for sexual harassment, I'm confused. My understanding of the scenario was O'Brien was just thinking about sleeping with Isaacs, and while it is indeed distasteful to think of Chancellor O'Brien contemplating sexual relations with anything, it is not my understanding erotic thoughts alone constitute sexual harassment.

But to the upshot of the whole thing is this: it was a joke. Lighten up a bit, okay? Too much stress is no good for you.

Delta week celebrates 'Body and Soul'

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Staff

This week is Delta Week 1992, and the Ladies of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc. are inviting all of the "thorough" brothers and sisters to attend this week's series of scheduled events sponsored by the Pi Iota Chapter of Western Massachusetts.

Chapter president Pascale Benard explained the significance of this year's Delta Week theme, "Celebrate Body and Soul." "As Black people, and as Black women in particular, we have to be strong both physically and mentally," she said. "Each Delta Week event will focus upon healing either the mind, the body or both."

Delta Week is presently in its fourth day, with one event scheduled per day. So far the events have included "Mother and Child: An Afternoon of Prose & Poetry," held Sunday afternoon at Mount Holyoke College in the Betty Shabazz House. "Mother and Child" was a reading of works focusing on the mother/child relationship by Black female writers such as Toni Morisson, Alice Walker, Gwendolyn Brooks, Nikki Giovanni, Margaret Walker and others.

On Monday evening at American International College in Springfield, a discussion was held titled "What You Don't Know Can Hurt You: Getting the Facts on HIV and STDs," and dealt with the startling effects of these diseases on the community. Last night at Smith College, the third Delta Week event was held. Titled "The Social Pathology of Blacks," it touched upon the negative perceptions of Blacks inside and outside the community.

For those of you who have not made it to any of the Delta week events so far, don't worry: the best is yet to come. Tonight at 7:30 p.m., a Rape Awareness workshop will be held at Mount Holyoke College in Skinner Hall, Room 202. "Males are especially encouraged to attend," says chapter president Benard, who hopes the workshop will combat a growing problem within the community.

Thursday night at UMass in the New Africa House Library, both men and women are invited to attend "To Be Black and Female: Choosing Movements," a discussion of the Black women's choice between the Civil Rights and Feminist Movements. The discussion begins at 7 p.m. and will be facilitated by Professor Diane Brooks. A Harvard Law School graduate and a Black feminist, Ms. Brooks is currently on the faculty of the UMass Legal Studies Department.

Finally, for those of you who specialize in social activities, Delta Week will wrap up its weekend festivities with "Straight Fun: Mocktail Party" on Friday from 8 to 10 p.m. at the Malcolm X Cultural Center in which one can partake in non-alcoholic fun. And on Saturday night, April 11 in the Southside Room in Southwest, you can slip into your finest beach attire for the Delta's 5th Annual Beach Party.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority was founded in 1913 at Howard University. Chapter President Benard stated that Delta Week is one of many community service projects that the sorority engages in. "Delta Sigma Theta was established to serve the community," she said.

The Culture of Hip Hop

By. MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Staff

On Thursday, April 2, the Black Mass Communications Project and ALANA Affairs of WMUA conducted a forum on the discussion of Hip Hop as a Culture. The objective of the forum was to discuss how Hip Hop music has become a way of life among contemporary American youth.

The forum was preceded by a video presentation that included footage from MTV's "Yo! MTV Raps" and its annual Spring Break concert shows at Daytona Beach. Featured groups included: A Tribe Called Qwest, Leaders of the New School, Black Sheep, Nice n' Smooth, Cypress Hill, and Naughty By Nature.

DJ and rap critic Pete "P.ZO" Ribeiro, a member of the Black Mass Communications Project, facilitated the event, commenting on the impact of Hip Hop on American culture. "The fact that 'Yo! MTV Raps' is a number one video show and also sponsored a wide range of rap artists at the MTV Spring Break Concert is evidence that Rap and Hip Hop culture is now at the forefront of American music. It is in great demand among Blacks as well as in mainstream communities."

The discussion itself generated a wealth of dialogue on Hip Hop as a way of life for many young people. The discussion pointed out that rap music is the focal point of Hip Hop culture. "Everything else revolves around it," Ribeiro said of the significance of rap music in Hip Hop culture. "Moreover, it is the most versatile form of music, with the ability to be strictly 'hard core Hip Hop,' or smoothed out for R&B listening. Rap music also has shown its ability to cross over into the Pop mainstream."

Arthur Jemison, who served as a panelist, described Rap music as "a new form of an old African oral tradition." He also said that Black cultural forms are constantly evolving. "Hip Hop is on the cutting edge of Black music. It speaks to Black people where we are right now." Jemison also talked of the present relationship of Rap with Black Nationalism. Sean Redmond, another panelist, discussed the commercial exploitation of rap music.

Ribeiro concluded the discussion, stating, "Hip Hop music is here to stay and will continue to influence our culture."

Black RSOs need more student participation

Imagine this: It is around ten o'clock Saturday night. You turn to 91.1 WMUA, and instead of hearing some urban contemporary music, you hear the sounds of Chucklehead.

Imagine that there is no party at the "X" that weekend.

Frightening to imagine, huh? Well these terrible images will become reality if Black students, especially freshmen and sophmores, continue to be uninvolved in Black organizations.

There seems to be a plague of disinterest among Black students on this campus.

Every Black organization on this campus is suffering from a lack of support from the Black community. Organizations like "Afrik-Am" have become defunct because there is a lack of support from students.

If we continue at this rate there will be no organizations on this campus to represent the views and opinions of students of color on this campus.

Who will present speakers like Chuck D? Who will hold the famous Funk-O-Thon?

Too many students take these functions, lectures and the organizations who present them for granted. They assume someone else will be there to do the job. However, there isn't anyone to do the job. We need YOU to do it, or at least help to do the job.

LaKeisha Criswell

I would like to urge all Black students to become more involved in a Black organization. I am aware of the fact that academics are a priority, but couldn't you spare two hours or less a week with an organization whose priority is to make this a more "colorful" campus for YOU?

If we do not support these organizations, we will lose them because of the lack of funding given to Registered Student Organizations.

Due to the lack of student support, the future of the BMCP's annual Funk-O-Thon is questionable. It has been decided that if there is not an increase in the student participation in BMCP, this year's Funk-O-Thon WILL BE CANCELLED!

Yes, that's right, CANCELLED! So please come to their next general body meeting on Monday, April 20, at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

And please do not wait for another threatening situation before becoming involved! All Black Organizations, like NOMMO and the Black Affairs page, need your support. Find out about these organizations, and CHECK THEM OUT!

Pete 'P. ZO' Ribeiro's interview with Chuck D.

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

As most of you know, on April 1 in the Fine Arts Center the famous rapper Chuck D. graced the University with his presence.

One student, Peter Ribeiro, was lucky enough to ask "Mr. D." a couple of questions in a brief interview. Here are some of the questions Peter asked and Chuck D's reponses.

Pete: "Did you think that the media and the mainstream have attempted to make you and other artists, like KRS-ONE, into the leaders of the black nation? Do you think that they are trying to make you into what Malcolm and Martin were?"

Chuck D: "I feel that the media is going to make you look the way that they want you to look. We don't have control over the media like we should. We are not Malcolm X or Dr. King; they were leaders and politicians. They had concrete ideas and knew where to take things. Myself and KRS-ONE, we are rappers, and our responsiblity is to point to the leaders in our community. We are media people, and you should not look to media people for leadership, only a small part of it. We have to be quick to throw that leadership label off our backs and say that we can be used as a tool for leadership in our community."

Pete: "During the lecture, you mentioned that white people, in comparison to blacks, have more awareness of self. Do you think that whites feel that they are more aware of themselves because of the role white people have played in society? Do you think that they are aware of the fact that they are actually a minority?

Chuck D: "Well, if you think about the educational system in this country, and what they were taught, and what you were taught, no. They were not taught that they were a minority, but you were taught that you were."

Pete: "One last question: how do you feel about the new artists who have copied a great deal from Public Enemy on a musical level? Are they bitin' and are you angry about that?"

Chuck D: "Not at all. We're here to build a strong foundation and platform for other people to do whatever, just as long as they don't tear it down. You try to make it strong enough so no matter what they do, it can't be brought down. Some people do positive things, some people do negative things, but they must acknowledge those who came before them. Just understand the scenario."

BDP schools Pearl St. with its jams

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Boogie Down Productions
Pearl Street
April 6, 1992

Boogie Down Productions can do things no other rap group can. It's as simple as that.

The crowd seemed dead Monday during opening act The Coalition, but lead rapper KRS-ONE and the BDP crew turned them into a jumping, waving, hip-hopping mass in just two minutes.

KRS-ONE came out and opened with "The Bridge is Over" as the fans erupted. The show was a mix of BDP's classic rap with some of the new Sex and Violence songs such as "We in There," "Drug Dealer" and "Duck Down" thrown in.

Kris Parker, otherwise known as KRS-ONE (Knowledge Reigns Supreme Over Nearly Everyone), Willie D and Kenny Parker make up a revised BDP that last month released Sex and Violence, their sixth album.

In fact, BDP rapped to many of their classic hits, never lingering on any song past the first or second verse. When BDP left the stage after a mere 30 minutes, many fans assumed it was a set break. But when they saw the DJ equipment being packed up, they were visibly disappointed. The fans were apparently told BDP was supposed to play for an hour.

Trademark BDP hits like "Criminal Minded" and "My Philosophy" had the crowd moving along and jumping up and down in the air, with the beats booming so hard that if you had brought a surfboard, you could have surfed on the air.

Kris Parker, a runaway at 13, said he became a rap musician because it fit in with a hobby he developed.

"I love poetry and I've been writing it since I was 5, and I was introduced to rap music by my mom, who used to buy records for my brother Kenny and me. Rap seemed like a perfect fit for my poetry."

When BDP started the song, "Duck Down," KRS-ONE sent the song out to George Bush, the "leader of the New World Order bullshit." BDP rocked the crowd during songs and KRS addressed the women in the crowd between cuts.

KRS-ONE urged women to "beat down" any rappers who called them "bitches, hoes or tramps" at a show, telling them they deserve more respect.

Willie D and KRS-ONE developed a rapport with the crowd, who were screaming at the top of their lungs just to please the rappers. The same crowd just minutes before responded with a loud "NO" when Coalition rapper Devil's Advocate asked if they wanted to hear another song from him.

BDP, touring clubs nationwide to promote "Sex and Violence," finished the night off with the song "South Bronx," a classic off of Criminal Minded, the group's breakthrough first album.

KRS-ONE explained Sex and Violence as "an attempt to restore the 'boom-bap' that was on Criminal Minded with an attack against the radio and television industries. It's a longevity album."

Nobel nominee speaks

By DANUTA FORBES
Collegian correspondent

Dr. Helen Caldicott, Nobel Peace Prize nominee and political activist will be speaking tonight at 7 p.m. in the School of Business Administration auditorium.

Dr. Caldicott is a renowned speaker who has travelled all over the world lecturing to diverse audiences. Caldicott spoke on the University campus in 1985.

Caldicott emphasizes using the democratic system to save the world from nuclear destruction and global pollution. She believes that our elected officials are not our leaders, but should be led by us.

Caldicott is a native of Australia and author of two books, Nuclear Madness: What You Can Do and Missile Envy. She has appeared on Phil Donahue, PBS and the Today Show. A review in the Boston Globe called Caldicott a "stunning orator."

When Caldicott joined Physicians for Social Responsibility, she helped raise its members from 10 to 11,000 in two years. She is called the poet of the antinuclear movement; a woman who, on June 12, 1982, addressed a crowd of 1,000,000 nuclear freeze demonstrators in Central Park in New York.

Caldicott is the founder of Women's Action for Nuclear Disarmament in Cambridge, Mass. In 1989, she ran for the Australian Parliament, coming 500 votes (out of 70,000) short of winning. She would like to make Prime Minister, and emphasizes the environmental cause as a vital global issue.

Listen you idiot!!!

CLEARLY, MANY OF THEM IDENTIFIED WITH YOUR ANGER, BUT THAT VERY ANGER HAS MADE YOU SEEM COLD AND REMOTE TO THEM...
EVEN THOUGH THEY LIKE YOUR MESSAGE, VOTERS DON'T SEEM TO REALLY LIKE ... WELL... YOU.
AND I DON'T LIKE THEM! LOOK AT THE GOOFY CLOTHES I HAVE TO WEAR TO MEET THEM!

RAISE THE ANTE HIGH ENOUGH, AND THERE'S NO SUCH THING AS SCRUPLES! PEOPLE WILL DO ANYTHING IF THE PRICE IS RIGHT.
WHAT'S YOUR PRICE?

I DON'T KNOW WHICH IS WORSE, ...THAT EVERYONE HAS HIS PRICE, OR THAT THE PRICE IS ALWAYS SO LOW.
I'D MAKE MINE HIGHER, BUT IT'S HARD TO FIND BUYERS AS IT IS.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accept the comforting words of your mate or another close ally. You did everything you could. Guard your health by getting more rest. You will soon get a second chance at a business opportunity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spending money for home improvements is a good idea, provided you not go overboard. It may be possible to arrange a loan. Trust your instincts in romance. Being married has its advantages.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid announcing an important decision until you have had all the time you need to study the matter thoroughly. Fresh opportunities to add to your income arise.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A modified plan may work better for you. Conserve energy. Overhauling a business could save it. Avoid making credit card purchases until your cash flow improves.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make appointments and show up on time. Your punctuality will leave a good impression. Reach out to a family member who has felt neglected lately. Good news arrives from the folks at home.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Wrap up any projects that are still pending before launching a new venture. Steer clear of negative people who have been holding you back. A child deserves your full attention this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A victory today could spell trouble later unless you are diplomatic. Tap a friend for a vacant position. Teamwork will mean higher profits as well as less emotional wear and tear.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The only way to stay ahead of the competition is to keep hatching new ideas. Love and money are strong motivating factors. You could be the target of unfair criticism.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Because you always go beyond the ordinary, your success is assured. Preferential treatment could spark romance. Pay more attention to the way you look.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A family feud is nothing new. Tackle the situation from a different angle. Clearing up any troubles at home will let you give business your full attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Expanding your horizons will make life and romance more satisfying. Music and art can be a source of delight for the whole family. Pay more attention to your mate's views.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone else's problems could interfere with your personal life. Taking a common sense approach to financial matters will work wonders. Your role as a mediator may be questioned.

RESERVING YOUR CURRENT ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you intend to keep your present hall room assignment, you must sign up with staff on duty during the room choosing process on Tuesday, April 14. THE ONLY DAY TO RESERVE YOUR CURRENT ROOM IS TUESDAY, APRIL 14.

CHANGING YOUR ROOM OR YOUR HALL

If you wish to move to another room in the same residence hall, you must sign up with staff on duty during the room choosing process on Wednesday evening, April 15. All room changes will be determined by your seniority and rank. THE ONLY EVENING TO SIGN UP FOR A NEW ROOM IN YOUR CURRENT HALL IS WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15.

If you wish to move to another residence hall, you must complete a Housing Preference Form. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS FRIDAY, APRIL 24.

IF YOU WANT TO KEEP YOUR CURRENT RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT WHILE ALSO REQUESTING A HALL CHANGE YOU MUST DO THE FOLLOWING:

1. Sign up for the same room Tuesday, April 14 or a new room on Wednesday evening, April 15.
2. Fill out a Preference Form. On the Preference Form in the lower right hand corner is a box you must "check" if you wish to be returned to your current hall if your choices cannot be met. Your old residence hall assignment is guaranteed only if you do both steps.

ROOMMATE REQUESTS

If you wish to move to another residence hall to room with a student already assigned to that residence hall, you must together complete a green ROOMMATE REQUEST FORM. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING ROOMMATE REQUEST FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS THURSDAY, APRIL 16.

If you wish to become roommates with a student in a residence hall to which neither of you is currently assigned, you must each complete a Housing Preference Form. These forms should be identical, (with the exception of the "check" box) and stapled together. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS IS FRIDAY, APRIL 24.

DIDN'T GET THE ROOM YOU WANTED?

If, during the regular Room Choosing period, you were unable to secure a particular room or type of room (single or particular double), please contact the Housing Assignment Office to fill out a blue IN-House Room Request Form. Rooms that become available during the Summer will be assigned, according to seniority, to those residents who filled out this form and returned it to the Housing Assignment Office.

RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT

The 1992-1993 Residence Hall Contract and Contract Card will be mailed to you in your current residence hall on or about April 22 as part of the Room Choosing process. These cards must be returned to the Housing Assignment Office by Thursday, May 21, 1992. Failure to return your residence hall contract card by this deadline may subject your fall 1992 assignment to cancellation.

PAY BILL BY DUE DATE

Your fall 1992 fee bill will be mailed to your home in early July. If complete payment of this bill is not received by the Bursar's Initial Due Date (usually in early August), your assignment will be subject to cancellation.
If you anticipate having a problem paying your bill please contact the housing assignment office. We will make arrangements to hold your housing until you are able to make full payment.

OTHER OBLIGATIONS

If you are going to be a Junior or Senior you will be required to confirm your Room Choosing arrangements by completing the Junior/Senior Room Confirmation Card which will be mailed to your home in late May. This card will be due by June 19, 1992. Failure to return this card by the deadline may subject your assignment to cancellation.

In addition to properly completing room choosing all students are required to remain in good standing with the university at all times. Being withdrawn for any reason after the end of the semester may automatically subject your assignment to cancellation. Check to make sure you do not owe any fees to the Bursar BEFORE you leave for the summer

Questions? If you still have questions about the Room Choosing process, please contact the Housing Assignment Office (545–2100), 235 Whitmore. Thank you.

Richards, Telgheder lead baseball past UConn, 4-1

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Bo may not know diddly, but Keith Richards sure knows how to do more than just play guitar for the Rolling Stones.

Behind some timely hitting by Richards and Bill Knight, and the gutsy pitching of junior righty Jim Telgheder, the University of Massachusetts baseball team scraped out a 4-1 win over the University of Connecticut Tuesday afternoon at Lorden Field.

First baseman Jeff January swings for the fence. The University of Massachusetts baseball team beat Connecticut yesterday 4-1.

Richards' two out triple to right field in the sixth inning plated Steve Corradi with the game-winner, and Knight followed with his first home run of the season, a 400 foot shot to deep center to ice it for the Minutemen.

Telgheder ran into some problems in the early going before settling down and retiring twelve in a row at one point while recording his second victory of the season, going the distance for UMass.

"It was nice to see Gator go the distance," UMass coach Mike Stone said of Telgheder. "At first it didn't look like he had a whole lot, but he just kept getting better and better as the game went on."

UConn (8-11) got on the board first, rallying with two outs in the second to take a quick 1-0 lead on the Minutemen, as Jim Penders brought home teammate James Tonelli with the Huskies' only run, doubling to right center before being thrown out at third to end the inning.

From there, Telgheder took over, retiring twelve of the next fifteen, while waiting for the still listless Minutemen bats to awaken.

UMass scored a run in the third to tie it, doing so without the benefit of a base hit.

Knight was hit by a pitch to lead off the inning, went to second on Kevin Correa's sacrifice bunt, and scored on Husky shortstop Paul Funk's two base fielding error to tie the game at one.

The UMass bats finally came to life in the bottom of the sixth, as the Minutemen touched up UConn starter Chris Marra for three hits and three runs.

Knight's home run meant the end for Marra, as UConn coach Andy Baylock brought in reliever Chris Hayes to finish the sixth.

Hayes squelched the Minutemen rally, while Marra watched from the bench as his teammates tried to chip away at the UMass lead.

The Huskies made it interesting, putting two runners on in both the seventh and ninth innings, before Telgheder slammed the door. He struck out Penders with men on second and third and the momentum slowly tilting UConn's way in the ninth.

The Minutemen have now won four in a row, and seven of their last eight, while climbing over the .500 mark for the first time this season with their 10-9 record.

"We still have a lot to prove, but I feel good," Stone said, in reference to their recent win streak.

Game Notes - UMass lefty Ron Villone was named the Atlantic 10 pitcher of the week for the third straight week, and is being touted by some as a possible first round pick in June's amateur draft.

On the injury front: UMass catcher Andy Pelis' season is apparently over, courtesy of a broken hand suffered last week.

UMass' next game is tomorrow at Lorden Field versus Springfield College at 3:00, with Freshman Ronely Rivera making his collegiate debut on the mound for the Minutemen.

Lacrosse looks to bounce back against Providence on the Hill

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Usually, when Providence College visits the Hill for a lacrosse game with the University of Massachusetts, the focus is on playing time for non-starters and lots of goal scoring.

That won't be the case this time around. The Gorillas (2-2), after a tough loss at Brown Saturday, need this afternoon's match (3 p.m. at Upper Boyden Field) to get back on track for Saturday's crucial match against Yale. Looking past the Friars could prove disasterous for UMass.

The Friars (4-2) owe their record to wins against 98-pound weaklings like New Haven, Bates, Siena and Hartford. Their only game against real competition saw them get waxed by Brown, 18-4. However, UMass is the Friars' biggest game of the year, and former Gorilla Jim McAleavy, an assistant coach for PC, may have his team fired up to play his alma mater.

"You've got to put it on the scoreboard," said UMass coach Ted Garber, repeating a point he has stressed all season. "You have to play the game and not the name."

More importantly, UMass must finally get past the stretches of sloppy play which nearly cost them a win against St. John's and made matters worse against Brown.

The Gorillas showed the potential to be a Top 10 team in their 17-4 win over Hofstra, when they distributed the ball well, kept up continued pressure on the Hofstra defense and stayed out of the penalty box.

By beating Yale and by doing so, improving their chances of making the NCAA Tournament, UMass must replicate that effort consistently. That makes a strong effort against Providence today important.

Garber was blunt about what he wants to see from the Gorillas this afternoon.

"We just have to play better fundamental lacrosse and play team lacrosse," he said.

"Against Brown we'd go one pass and a shot, two passes and a shot, or even no passes and a shot," he explained. "That's fine if it's one shot and a goal, but that hasn't happened much . . . if we play like that a week from now [vs. Yale], it's over."

Providence has tried to slow the game down in past encounters with UMass, and Garber expects more of the same today.

"[Providence] sat on the ball 15 minutes at a time," Garber recalled of their last game, "which does nothing for the sport of lacrosse. It was like they were trying not to lose."

Leading the way for the Friars is goal-scoring machine Ed Loiselle, who has rung up 27 scores. He has no assists, however. Brian Kirkwood (12 goals, 13 assists) and Danny Bianco (13 goals, 10 assists) provide balance to the PC attack.

Defense is another matter. The Friars have allowed 74 scores, nearly 25 more than UMass. Likely starting goaltender Rich Dunphy has an 8.4 goals-against average and only a 62.3 percent save average. If the Gorillas can put their attack back together, they may be able to give their new scoreboard a real workout.

UMass' goaltending isn't a question, as Tom LoPresti will return to the crease after a tough outing Saturday. Ray Suris did well as LoPresti's replacement, a fact Garber emphasized.

"[LoPresti] is our starting goalie," Garber said, but added, "Ray came out and did a great job for us. Hopefully that'll build his confidence and when he gets in another big situation, he'll do even better than he did against Brown."

Game notes: As always, the game can be heard on WMUA 91.1 FM with Mike Fagerson and Brian Jones.

Scott's shots

Today, as a tribute to Duke head coach Mike Krzyzewski, I've decided to change the spelling of my name. The pronounciation remains David Scott.

• The parade for the UMass hoop team will be held this Thursday and the consensus pick for Grand Marshal is Lenny Wertz. Can you say Lee Harvey Oswald?

• It's only the second week of April and the Red Sox are at it again. Why was Tony Pena running in the ninth of yesterday's game? Get rid of Hobson, bring in Zimmer and let's get a pennant. Then again. . .I like Hobson, let's give him a chance.

Baseball. You've got to love it. Especially the boys from Fenway.

• Wherefore art thou, Larry Bird? Let's hope Bird is just writing another chapter in his autobiography. Let's title it, "How I Faked an Injury with Seven Games Left in the Season and then Won the Championship." (Not a literary giant by any means.)

• Perhaps the best advice I've received in horseback riding came from our philosophic instructor Becky.

David Shkzycott

"Trust your seat," the Cape Cod woman said and from that day forward my seat has been my confidant and best friend.

That credo is right up there with my friend Sid's motto, "Plan your work and work your plan." Sid, by the way, is a used car salesman, further illustrating the shady characters I associate with. Garth Brooks says it best: "I've Got Friends in Low Places."

• CBS's Final Four anthem to close out the Tournament, "One Shining Moment" was a bit of a disappointment this year, but at least Jim McCoy's 68-footer made the highlight film.

Billy Packer was more than a bit harsh on Christian Laettner in the first half of Monday's game. He singled out the pretty boy for walking up the court and not rebounding among other things.

"I ordered a hot dog and a Coke before the game and Laettner still hasn't delivered it," Packer said. No he didn't say that, but at least half of journalism is making up quotes.

• The editorial page thinks they're cute with their "Graffiti of the Week," but they wouldn't know good graffiti if it was spray-painted on the foreheads. Here's the winner from one of the finer Uptown establishments: "We may not be the best, but we're better than you."

• Has the No Hockey League resumed their quest for the cup yet? All of this commotion regarding the America's Cup has drawn my attention away from the strike.

Truth be told, hockey's a fine sport with great athletes and fast action, but if I had to eliminate one of the four major sports, it would be the sport that Gretzky built (or rebuilt).

When the NFL went on strike, I was a Patriots season ticket holder. It was like going for a slice after the bars only to find the pizza joint closed. Depressing.

• I'll get a headstart on Coach John Calipari by touting Dana Dingle and Donta Bright for Freshmen of the Year in the Atlantic 10. Cal was right on with his assessment of Lou Roe as the conference's super-frosh, so we might as well get the ballots out early and often.

Looks like Cal is staying put for a little while. I'll readily admit that I'm very surprised. Of course, the coach has to redeem himself in the battle for Cravat King (best tie contest) next year. I'm an early favorite to get back-to-back tie-tles.

• My dog Bo is really digging the spring weather and he's even talking about making a return to the boxing ring for a rematch with neighborhood bully Rock. The Bo-ster's been hanging and banging in the backyard by chasing bunny rabbits, a comparable training technique to Rocky's pursuit of the chicken.

• I was reading that the Baltimore Orioles new Stadium has cable hookup in the bullpens. Can you imagine?

"Hey Reardon, we need two outs, get in there."

"Wait a minute will you, I love this "Cheers" episode."

• Opening Day really signifies something more than just another year of Nolan Ryan, Cecil Fielder and Roger Clemens. It's the start of barbecue season in my backyard and you're all invited. B.Y.O.B. Bring your own burgers.

• Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on the Celts.

Calipari signs contract, puts end to speculation

UMass men's basketball coach John Calipari will stay at the University next year – the coach signed a contract yesterday.

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

After signing a contract extension yesterday which will pay him $120,000 per year plus incentives and perks, University of Massachusetts basketball coach John Calipari went right to work.

He packed his bags and went recruiting for the week.

Gone. See you. No questions. No answers. Just a contract extension and off to work.

The incentives and perks package depend on a variety of factors, such as the signing of a new radio contract, an increased percentage of the revenues produced through the summer sport camps and the possibility of a television contract.

"This represents a package that would be commensurate across the country with the kinds of results he's produced," said Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff. "The University has benefited a great deal from John [Calipari]. We would not have been able to buy this amount of good publicity."

Calipari had heard his name mentioned as the next possible coach at Wichita State, USC, Wisconsin, UNLV and Villanova. The rumors never bothered him. He shrugged his shoulders, scratched his head, and said, "I want to stay at UMass. My family likes it in Amherst."

All along he said he wanted to stay. But no one really knew whether to believe him or not. It became a wait-and-see situation, as the coach would not discuss his

Trustees approve fee increase

Curriculum fee up, housing and activity fees tabled

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff
and Associated Press

DARTMOUTH — Trustees at the University of Massachusetts on Wednesday approved academic fee increases averaging about four percent for the next school year for the five UMass campuses.

The fee increase follows the approval last month of a four percent increase at the campuses, which raised the cost for in-state undergraduates at the Amherst campus by $82 to $2,134.

Kevin Newnan, student trustee for the Amherst campus, said the fee increase, although small, may still force some students to leave the University.

"I think that even though it is only four percent, and though it is a relatively small increase compared to some we've had in the past, for some students it will make the difference," he said. "We're still passing the burden of increases off on the backs of students and their families."

"I'm not surprised at all about the curriculum fee passing," he said. "I think most of the Board [of Trustees] considered it a done deal when the four percent tuition increase was passed."

Calling the curriculum support fee "an immense monstrosity," Newnan explained how the four percent increase figure was reached.

"The total amount of the curriculum support fee is $72," he said. "That's on top of an $82 increase in in-state tuition, and a $317 increase in out-of-state tuition. All three of those numbers are increases of four percent."

Even with the increases, UMass-Amherst officials have projected a deficit of about $4 million in the campus

UMass prof wins poetry Pulitzer

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts English professor won the Pulitzer Prize for poetry Tuesday for his 1991 book of compiled poetry.

James Tate, who has been teaching creative writing and contemporary poetry here at the University since 1971, received the literary honor for his publication Selected Poems.

"I guess it means I've done something that didn't completely turn people off," said Tate. "It's nice. It's a special encouragement."

Selected Poems is a compilation of poems Tate chose from nine of his books of poetry published in the last 25 years.

"The poems were selected with no great plan," he said. "Just intuition, my own taste. I looked through the books and said, 'well, that one seems pretty okay.'"

Tate said his poetic career began at age seventeen when he "just stumbled into poetry" to "help make sense of the world." He said a poem can take five minutes to write, or several years, but ideally involves sitting down to write and getting up several hours later with a finished piece.

"You have to let the poem tell you when it's done," he said. "Sometimes it happens so fast. You didn't realize it was inside you, and there it is on the page."

Tate, a Pelham resident, was born in 1943 in Kansas, and received a bachelor's degree from Kansas State College in 1965. He received his master's degree from the University of Iowa in 1967, and taught at the University of California at Berkeley and Columbia University before coming to the University of Massachusetts.

He describes his poetry as "welcoming the variety of the world."

"I guess it shows not to be afraid to laugh, not to take yourself too seriously, and I also try to probe the depths of the human heart with gravity," he said.

"I think our society needs poetry," Tate said. "It keeps us lean and hungry and willing to say it the way we see it."

Tate received the Yale Series of Younger Poets

PLO leader found alive after desert plane crash

By NEJLA SAMMAKIA
Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya — Yasser Arafat, who has survived gun battles, air raids and assasination attempts as leader of the Palestinian cause, walked away Wednesday after his plane reportedly made a belly-landing during a desert sandstorm.

Palestinians around the Arab world celebrated joyously after hearing the news that Arafat was found at dawn, bruised but alive after being missing for 15 hours.

Arafat has been the Palestinian Liberation Organization's undisputed leader for 23 years. Had he been lost, it would have been a grievous blow to the organization and could have seriously undermined U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace talks.

"God has saved the Palestinians from a political disaster. . . Arafat is irreplaceable," said Zeid Wahbeh, Arafat's representative in southern Lebanon.

Arafat's two most important aides have been assassinated over the past four years and no one else has the stature to step in as successor of the divided PLO.

Wahbeh said he received a cable from PLO headquarters in Tunis, capital of Tunisia, saying Arafat "has only minor bruises. . . he's in good shape."

Saeed Kamal, the PLO representative in Cairo, Egypt, said three of five crewmen aboard Arafat's Soviet-built A-26 aircraft were killed when it went down near a PLO training camp at Sarra on Tuesday. Wahbeh said Arafat was accompanied by 13 bodyguards.

Arafat was flying from Sudan to Tunis, where he was scheduled to preside at a meeting of the PLO's 80-member Central Council on Thursday.

PLO officials said he was on his way to Tripoli, Libya's capital, Wednesday night and would still go to Tunis for Thursday's meeting.

Bassam Abu-Sharif, Arafat's chief advisor in Tunis, told AP Network News that the PLO asked former President Carter to intercede with the White House to get U.S. officials to provide satellite data to help search for Arafat.

He said he would not say directly whether such help was received, but that the American "good will toward Arafat will definitely help the peace process."

Pre-registration begins

Touchtone system simplifies process

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Although University of Massachusetts students are busy studying for exams, writing papers and looking for summer jobs they must remember to do fall 1992 Pre-Registration starting the week of April 13, said the University Registrar.

Graduate and undergraduate students will make their pre-registration requests for the fall 1992 semester by touchtone telephone, just as they did last November.

"I think the pre-registration by telephone has worked very well and students seem to like the system too," said University Registrar Nancy Fitzpatrick.

The system, which cost $200,000 to install, gives instructions to students and also allows them to change pre-registration requests, indicate a Pass/Fail option, designate alternate course requests and list course requests, she said.

"The Registrar's Office hasn't had any problems with the system — in fact it prevents students from making pre-registration mistakes," Fitzpatrick said.

She said the system immediately notifies students if they have entered requests incorrectly or if they are ineligible for courses because of their class year or major restrictions.

Students will receive the "Invitation to Pre-Register" in the mail, telling them when their access period begins.

Since students may get a busy signal when they try to call the system, she said she encourages students to call as early as possible during their access period.

Staff at the Lederle Research Tower reported Tuesday morning that four transrecievers for a computer research network, valued at $400, were stolen from the COINS department.

If students miss calling during their access period, she said, they will be required to register for their courses during the add/drop period, which will also be conducted by telephone for the fall semester.

As soon as students receive their revised fall schedule guide in the mail around the middle of August, they can begin the add/drop process, said Fitzpatrick.

It is very important for students to tell the Registrar's Office their correct summer address so they will receive their revised schedule guide and can begin add/drop on time, said Fitzpatrick.

• The following majors will receive their PIN number printed on their "Invitation to Pre-Register" in the mail: accounting, general business and finance, management, comparative literature, English, journalism, communications, selected economics students, legal studies, political science, social thought and political economy, geography, geology, environmental design, landscape architecture, sociology and leisure studies and resources.

• All other undergraduates will be required to pick up their PIN number in their department offices. Special program students, including those in the majors listed above, will continue to pick up their PIN number from those programs. PIN numbers will not be required for most graduate students.

Candidates seek upper SGA offices

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

In an informal caucus held last night in the Campus Center, three undergraduate student senators announced their candidacies for the positions of senate speaker and treasurer.

While the Senate meeting was cancelled for the second consecutive week due to insufficient quorum, Commuter Senators David Anderson and Kevin Jourdain announced their intentions to seek the position of senate speaker, and Chadbourne senator Tracey O'Connell said she will run for treasurer.

It is unclear when elections will be held, since senate rules require at least two-thirds of the body to be present for elections to be legitimate. Speaker Bob Monaghan said elections are historically slow processes, so the body will not hold them next week because men's basketball coach John Calipari is scheduled to speak.

A list of official candidates for each position will be drawn up when the senate achieves quorum and officially opens nominations. The positions will be vacated by present Speaker Bob Monaghan and Treasurer Sharon Lang at the conclusion of the semester.

Coolidge Senator Keith Nicholson was one of many who praised the cohesiveness achieved by the present senate leaders, and he said this teamwork must carry over to the next administration.

"We need a speaker who is so respected that senate meetings will be casual, with people being able to say whatever they want without being shut off by others," he said.

Brian Crawford, a Commuter Area senator who said he is contemplating a run for the treasurer position, said that contrary to popular belief, the treasurer performs some critical tasks.

"The role of treasurer is not just a bookkeeping job," he said. "The treasurer's position needs to focus on your money, because that's the only power that students have."

Several senators emphasized that coalition-building must be undertaken by the new leadership.

"One of the key functions of the speaker is coalition-building with both students and administrators, to find out who is on our side," said John Adams Senator Michael Poster.

Poster, a junior political science major, stressed the importance of increasing participation in student government through "outreach," especially to those campus constituencies which feel disenfranchised.

"We need to address not only the needs of students

Recycling needs improvement

Campus efforts less than ideal, UMass official says

By AARON-JOHN RICADELA
Collegian Correspondent

The recycling effort at the University of Massachusetts seems to be a far cry from the "It's hip to be environmentally correct" attitude of the 1990s, according to the University's Office of Solid Waste Management.

Solid Waste Manager R. Marc Fournier said he wants to educate people in a positive way about new classroom recycling programs and the slowly improving "Residential Recycling Program."

"Recycling at the University is starting to get better than it was last semester, but there's still a long way to go," said Fournier. "Our main problem is still people throwing regular trash in the bins," Fournier said.

Fournier said sensible recycling habits will save the University money by avoiding costly tipping fees at the Amherst landfill, extending the life of landfills and saving natural resources.

"There is a lot of misuse of the recycling bins in the dorms and classrooms, but I don't want to single out students for all the blame. I was a student here 20 years ago, and I know how it is," said Fournier.

The Amherst landfill charges $65 per ton of solid waste, plus hauling fees. Each ton of waste the University recycles will therefore save $65. In recent years the University has spent an average of $373,000 per year to dispose of its waste, Fournier said.

This cost is partially offset by two recycling facilities used by the University. P. Allen & Son, a private recycling firm in Northampton, pays $20 per ton of recyclable paper.

The Materials Recycling Facility in Springfield allows the University to dispose of glossy paper, newspaper, glass, aluminum, tin and plastic at no charge. These facilities separate, process and bail these materials to send to mills which turn the materials into usable products like insulation.

Activist: Earth dying

Blames government, corporate greed

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

The ever-increasing search for profit in the United States by major corporations is causing widespread environmental damage, according to a renowned Nobel Peace Prize nominee and political activist.

Dr. Helen Caldicott, speaking before over 100 people at the University's School of Business Administration, said she believes the Earth is dying, and dying for profit.

Caldicott, who is a native of Australia, also discussed the depleting ozone layer, deforestation, global warming and the role of the United States Government in damaging the environment.

"If we continue to deplete the ozone layer with CFC's from refrigerators and aerosol cans, by launching space shuttles and damaging our forests, the Earth will be destroyed in eight years," she said.

Trees, which she called the 'lungs of the Earth,' are being chopped down by one football field per second, while eight out of ten Americans live near a toxic waste dump, said Caldicott.

Caldicott said she believes the major corporations in the United States control the government, media and are destroying the Earth with pollution and radioactive waste by producing nuclear weapons.

"Every Congressman in office and most media outlets is totally controlled and bribed by corporations," said Caldicott, "and almost every corporation is involved directly or indirectly with making weapons."

Caldicott said for six weeks she was booked to be on the "Today Show" to discuss one of her books. She said after they read her book, "Today" canceled.

"They canceled because I wrote in my book how General Electric pollutes the Earth with radioactive waste, and General Electric happens to own NBC," she said. "Now with private corporations owning the media, how do you have freedom of

Special interest corridor initiated in Northeast

By GARY DEANE
Collegian Correspondent

Gay, lesbian and bisexual students and allies gathered Monday night to discuss the opening of a special interest corridor in Mary Lyon residence hall to combat what they called homophobia and heterosexism.

"There is lots of support on campus for this to work," said Stephanie Carnahan, the originator of the program and residence director of Pierpont/Moore.

Carnahan, along with Beth Feeney, residential director of Crabtree Cluster, and Linda Keith, area coordinator for Northeast/Sylvan, led the meeting to discuss plans and concerns about the newly-approved program.

"The University is one of the only institutions in the country to have a program like this," said Carnahan. "The idea is exciting to me. The people involved will be part of history."

The plan to organize the fourth floor of Mary Lyon, known as the SIRP, or Special Interest Residential Program, is a follow-up of plans submitted in years past.

The floor is designed to provide support for gay, lesbian and bisexual students and their allies. Students will be able to "come home" to an environment that is immune from the homophobic tensions present on campus, said Carnahan.

Only ten students were present at the meeting, but they were told to encourage others to sign up for the floor during housing selection week.

Currently one of the two hallways on the floor, accommodating 28 students in all, will be made available for the SIRP. The other hallway will be made available for female non-SIRP students.

Feeney said that the Northeast Area was "one of the few places [the SIRP] could succeed."

"There will be more work in spring to [help the student population] better understand what SIRP is all about," she said.

Poune Saberi, a sophomore biochemistry major and residential assistant in McNamara, said, "It is good to see a floor set up to help create a supportive network for the GLB community. It will help with ordinary problems for gays, lesbians and bisexuals."

Keith looked forward to "special RA training as well as special programs to understand the issues the residents will be working through."

Mark Cameron, currently an RA in Brett, was chosen from seven candidates to serve as an RA for the floor. "I'm really excited about it. It's going to be a real positive floor," Cameron said.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We have few friends

"I've got friends in low places" — Garth Brooks

University undergrads might as well take all the friends in low places they can get. They certainly have few in high places.

Our beloved Board of Trustees met yesterday. It was expected they would, on the recommendation of the administration, agree to raise mandatory undergraduate fees by $120 and room and board by $106 — a 3.6 percent increase in fees on top of the 4 percent tuition hike already in place.

I hate to keep attacking the Trustees. They're probably very nice people. But I can't understand why they persist in pricing the University out of its market.

Greg Sukiennik

Agreed, these increases are modest ones. But in light of Provost Glen Gordon's announcement that undergraduates can no longer fill requirements with the majority of continuing education classes, the fee hikes are downright sinister.

Here's the plot: you cannot fulfill University requirements with fall or spring continuing ed classes (winter and summer are still OK). You must pay undergraduate fees instead. The administration and the not-so-Trustees will decide the fees you will pay, and if you can't afford it that's too bad. Do not pass go, do not collect $200.

With this in mind, let me tell you about a phone conversation I had before Spring Break with Robert S. Karam, a vice-chairman of the Board of Trustees. Karam, who is president of Karam Financial Associates, wasn't too happy with something I wrote.

It seems that I made an assumption about him which was untrue: that he probably didn't empathize with the middle class because of his business position. Karam noted that he was, in fact, from a middle class background. Color me embarrassed. We kept talking, and he was pretty pleasant about the matter when he could have threatened to sue me, so I got along with him well.

But here's the big question, one I didn't think of at the time: If Karam and other Trustees emerged from middle class backgrounds, why oh why do they keep hiking tuition and outpricing the middle class? Why not try something new, like demanding the state fund the University the way it should be funded, and not a penny less?

Well, that's all water under the bridge now, because by the time you read this the fee hikes will be added to your bill for fall 1992. No use crying over spilled Dr. Pepper.

So what do we have? 13 more dollars for athletics, 72 for the curriculum fee (making it nearly a thousand bucks), $24.30 for health and $106 for housing. Lou Reed said it best in "Walk on the Wild Side": 'Everybody had to pay and pay.'

Another interesting factor in all of this is the letter Chancellor Richard O'Brien sent to undergraduates. O'Brien spoke of how this year saw the smallest tuition increase in years and the possibility of level-funding from the State House. Unlike the usual letter from Whitmore, it was written in upbeat, soothing tones.

But there go those fees again. Yes, they are small increases — am I supposed to be grateful or something? Should I send a thank-you card? "Dear Whitmore, it was really nice of you to spare me the usual fee increase and substitute a small one instead. Love, Greg, former UMass student and current employee of Guido's Fresh Marketplace, Pittsfield."

Not that Guido's is a bad place or anything — I've worked there three years. I'd just rather get my degree and I can't do that if I can't afford fee increases.

Now I understand why students get apathetic about budget cuts and price hikes. It's no fun to fight them when the system is set up so that you can't win.

Columnist is disgusting, pathetic

Tony Westcott's editorial on April 6 was disgusting, and yet pathetic at the same time. I assume that it was intended to be humorous, in which case Mr. Westcott is sick. RAPE IS NOT A SEXUAL CRIME. A three-line paragraph stating that ". . .rape is not so much a sexual act as a violent one. Rapists want their subjects to put up a fight," is a less than feeble stab at understanding the complexities surrounding this monstrous epidemic.

I suggest that in the future, Tony Westcott do a tiny bit of research when writing on such serious matters. Or better still, skip it all together, as it's tacky and in poor taste to poke fun at rape.

Open letter to George Bush

Dear President Bush,

I am a senior at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. I am about to graduate in a few months and have come to realize there are a handful of similarities between the two of us. Allow me to explain.

You see George, (you don't mind if I call you that, do you George?) we are on the verge of leaving the protective shelters we have grown so accustomed to these past four years. The time is arriving shortly for us to head out into the real world and it is pretty scary.

Felice Cohen

We have been living in a dream world. Protected by our surroundings, we have been comforted with the assurance that by doing what is expected of us, we are able to continue with our everyday activities. But in truth, reality is slowly creeping closer and closer.

Four years ago the two of us arrived at new settings. As freshmen, we looked eagerly ahead, seeking all the challenges and opportunities that came our way. Before we arrived, we made promises to ourselves and to others (though I seem to be the only one who has kept any). I managed to pack a lot into my four years here and it has proven to be a great experience, filled with many achievements and long-lasting memories.

Now that my allotted time is coming to an end, I am able to leave this institution, satisfied that my time and money was well spent. As for you George, it seems you may have to stay another four years to get done half of what you promised.

Face it George, you goofed. If you were here at UMass you would have been put on what we call Academic Probation. Instead you managed to put our entire country on American Recession. Thanks a lot.

But there are other issues here George, like requirements and fulfilling them.

I have completed all my Gen Eds, but you George, still need to take your placement exams, for you continue to remain without a focus. In order to accomplish what you promised yourself and all of us, you may have to stay on another four years. Tough break, but isn't that what you wanted?

Let's take a reality check. In a few months, we are both going to be facing some tough decisions. For the most part we have two options. The first is we can continue to do what we've been doing. I can go on to graduate school and you can remain in office for another term. Our second option is that we go out and find real jobs.

This means venturing into the real world, which is a bad (it's bad) place. Though at this juncture, with the world in such dire straights, the first option seems much more tempting.

One other similarity, (though you seem to have much worse symptoms) is "Senioritis." Okay, so for the first time in my academic career I am not taking five classes, but at least I'm not ignoring all my work. You, George, seem to have entirely forgotten you still have a job (it's your supporters who don't) and this means there is still plenty for you to do.

If I don't complete my work, I won't graduate. If you don't finish, you may have to stay... wait a minute. I bet that's exactly why you've been blowing off all your responsibilities. You are afraid of leaving your safe little surrounding. You're such a chicken, George.

Instead of doing the work you have been assigned, you've been on the road like some rock star, promoting your campaign (as if you actually had fans out there) giving your, "read my shriveled, prune lips" speeches. Yes George, it may be too late to save those flaky smackers, but you still have time to catch up on your work.

The truth is George, your job isn't over till the fat lady sings. And since Roseanne has been banned from the world of music (and is losing weight fast, thanks to a new broccoli diet), I am afraid you must remain in office to get done what you promised.

For starters, why don't you try doing your own food shopping. I heard you didn't know what price scanners were and I think you'll find them really interesting. Forever in your debt, Felice.

New York's pride and joy

LIVE FROM NEW YORK — IT'S SATURDAY NIGHT!

Growing up in America, few fail to recognize this opening line of the Not Ready for Prime-time Players' long-running late night series.

It began years ago, and when it started, no one knew that it would turn out to be the cutting edge of comedy and the birthplace of many box-office stars. How many comic legends have started their road to success on the off-beat, sometimes ad-lib set? Chevy Chase, Dan Akroyd, John Belushi, Steve Martin, Bill Murray, Gilda Radner and Eddie Murphy — to name only a few. SNL has consistently turned comedians into fine actors and actresses.

Bob Silverstein

Think back over all the years, and all of the hilarious characters that have been created... from Roseanne Roseannadanna, whose daddy always told her, "Ya gotta eat a lotta roughage," to Emily Lotella's hard-of-hearing editorials which always ended with "Never mind." From Buckwheat singing, "Unce, tice, fee times a mady..." to Dieter from Sprockets always nagging his guests to "Touch my monkey!"

And the impersonations. . . Chevy Chase's Gerald Ford, Dan Akroyd's Jimmy Carter, Joe Piscopo's Frank Sinatra, Dana Carvey's George Bush, Phil Hartman and Jan Hooks as the Trump family, or Jon Lovitz's Mike Dukakis.

And the musical guests. . . Aerosmith, Simon and Garfunkel, Madonna, Sting, the Blues Brothers, the Kinks, Prince — in fact, few are aware that the Beatles were supposed to have their reunion on the show — only John never showed up.

Perhaps the most amazing thing about "Saturday Night Live" is that it has survived all these years. From producer Lorne Michaels to Dick Ebersol, and now back to Lorne Michaels again, the show has certainly seen its ups and downs — sort of like a pro sports team. And much like professional athletes, these performers are at the mercy of a live audience — and for a comedian, having a sketch bomb is as humiliating as walking a batter with the bases loaded in the World Series. The only difference is that in sports, you can always fake a sore shoulder and be taken out of the game, but on the stage there is no escape except for commercial breaks when you change costumes and pray nobody remembers how bad the last scene was.

One sad part of each season is seeing the best cast members written out of the show as they move on to better things. I recall when Eddie Murphy switched from doing five skits a night to doing a single, token performance per show. Now Dana Carvey, famous for his many characters, such as Garth, Church Lady, George Bush and Lyle the Effeminate Heterosexual, is slowly appearing more and more sparsely. Kevin Nealon no longer does his Mr. Subliminal or Hans and Franz now that he has taken over Dennis Miller's prestigious, "I'm on my way to better things soon," duty of news anchorman. How much longer will it be before we are thrust into another of the inevitable "SNL Dark Ages," the seasons between superstars where nothing seems to go right?

I guess the only way to live, though, is to live for today and enjoy our role models — NOT! — until they all ditch us for multimillion-dollar, five-film contracts.

It seems like a recent SNL hit, entitled "Deep Thoughts — by Jack Handey" has generated a bandwagon of wannabees, each contributing their own deepest thought. Here's mine: If I think too hard, will I get hemorrhoids on my brain?

On that note, as Dennis Miller would say: That's the news and I am outta here. . . or is it: I'm Kevin Nealon and that's news to me. . . or is it: I'm Chevy Chase and you're not?

Perhaps I would be better off ending as Jane Curtin would: That's the news. Goodnight and have a pleasant tomorrow.

We know how Christ died; do we know why he died?

Historically, the life and death of Jesus Christ is undeniable. Everyone knows how Christ died, but does everyone know why he died? First, let's examine who Jesus claimed to be and why he was put to death.

It has been suggested that Jesus Christ was only a good moral teacher and never claimed to be anything more. Not true, not true. Under Jewish Law, God was the only one that had the ability to forgive sins. One of Christ's claims was "I am the way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me. If you really knew me, you would know my Father as well. From now on, you do know him and have seen him." (John 14:6) Jesus also forgave many people of their sins.

After Jesus had forgiven one man, the Pharisees said to one another "This fellow is blaspheming!" (Matt 9:3) Not only did Christ claim to be the Son of God, but he also claimed to be equal with God, (note the quote). Again, the people knew exactly what Jesus was claiming. The Jews charged him with claiming to be the Messiah, the Son of God: "...'Are you the Christ, the Son of the Blessed One?' 'I am,' said Jesus, 'And you will see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of the Mighty One and coming on the clouds of Heaven.'" (Mark 14:61-2)

In Jesus' day, the Jews knew about the coming of the Messiah. Some accepted Jesus as that Messiah, others did not. Also, the strictness of the Law did not allow for the toleration of false prophets — which many people believed Christ to be. Were Jesus simply a good, moral teacher he would not have been put to death. Jesus, however, claimed to be one with God — the basis for his execution.

Diana D'Avanzo

So now that who Christ claimed to be is cleared up, why did he die? We know that the people killed him because they did not believe that he was the Messiah. Jesus knew this and predicted "... the Son of Man must suffer many things and be rejected by the elders, chief priests and teachers of the law, and that he must be killed and after three days rise again." (Mark 8:31)

Christ knew this and accepted it, but why? I mean, he performed all these miracles, so why wouldn't he just save himself. Well, Christ plainly tells us the reason for his death and why he will comply. Christ tells us that man is separated from God because of sin and that he will die in order to be a once and forever atonement for man's sins so that man can be forgiven and have eternal life.

Jesus said, "Just as Moses lifted up the snake in the desert, so the Son of Man must be lifted up, that everyone who believes in him may have eternal life. For God so loved the world that he gave his one and only Son, that whoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life. For God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through him." (John 3:5-17)

Christ made it clear that everything he was enduring, he was enduring for us. So that we may know "...the one true God and Jesus Christ whom you have sent." This being cleared up, did Christ really rise again from the dead? Did he? I mean, if he didn't then Christianity is just like any other religion — man trying to reach God instead of God reaching man. If Christ did not rise from the dead, there is no basis for Christianity — no eternal life and no unconditional acceptance, forgiveness and love.

Well, what do you think? You have the whole week before Easter to mull it over. I'll come back the next week and let you know what I think — the only obvious answer. Until then, think about it. Did or didn't Jesus Christ rise again from the dead?

UMass needs to be more aware of deaf culture

I would like to take this opportunity to applaud the Collegian for running the 31 March article "HANDS present mimic," on the Multicultural Affairs page. There IS a deaf culture of which painfully few people are aware. (I am lucky enough to possess personal experience with the culture, my primary influences being my deaf father and my deaf friends.) Although the Collegian is to be commended for its farsightedness, there is a great deal of erroneous information which needs to be clarified.

1) The American Heritage Dictionary defines the word "culture" as "the totality of socially transmitted behavior patterns, arts, beliefs, institutions and all other products of human work and thought characteristic of a community or population." How Ms. DeJesus came upon the idea that "The cultural definition of deaf culture is when a group of deaf people deal together and share a common language, culture, politics and deafness," I will never know. That sounds more like a bunch of people, they could be French, debating politics over coffee.

2) In her article, Ms. DeJesus wrote that "to be considered deaf culturally is a matter of the person's decision." If a person is culturally deaf, it is typically the result of growing up in an environment that, to paraphrase American Heritage, transmits those behavior patterns, arts, beliefs, institutions and all products of deaf work and thought characteristic of the deaf community. It is hardly the result of a "yes or no" decision. It is a life experience.

3) Also, the article says that "to be considered part of the deaf culture, a person only needs to share only two of the points expressed above." If one were to follow that line of reasoning, that would mean that I, a White Anglo-Saxon Protestant, having minimal contact with the Native American community, could be considered Native American if I supported Leonard Peltier (which I do) and spoke Navajo. I doubt my Native American brothers and sisters would support my assimilation into their community based on those two factors alone. Similarly, even if a person is fluent in American Sign Language and supports the Deaf Rights movement, this does not and never will indicate deaf acculturation.

4) If a person is audiologically deaf and doesn't consider themselves culturally deaf, they are not all of a sudden "hard of hearing," they are still deaf.

Last, but definitely not least, many deaf people object to the term "deafness." I have yet to hear, and hope I never will hear, the term "African-Americanness" or "Hispanicness." The suffix "-ness" describes an object. Deaf people are not objects, they are people. So, when the term "deafness" is used, many deaf people are understandably offended.

The deaf are a community making valuable, albeit overlooked, contributions to society as a whole. If you or any of your staff would like to contact deaf professionals and/or access information regarding deaf culture, I would be happy to assist in that endeavor.

If you want respect learn some manners

In Wednesday's Collegian, Eric Frank expressed his anger at those individuals who use the Curry Hicks track for walking.

His point on the walkers being inconsiderate for taking up several lanes was well received by my Walking and Conditioning gym class.

On behalf of my class, I apologize, and promise to be more is this supposed to say inconsiderate or considerate? inconsiderate in the future.

Mr. Frank, however, should also consider an apology.

Walkers are not "obnoxious slobs" and there are no rules or regulations stating that the track must be exclusively used for running.

Many individuals in my class walk because of past, present or feared future injuries from running.

There are many other walkers who just prefer walking to running and choose to exercise inside, as many runners do, during the cold winter months.

I believe that we deserve the same respect you have called for and the name-calling and put-downs were immature.

Therefore, my advice to Mr. Frank is to try to be more polite, and his requests will be better received.

In the future, we should cooperate our efforts in order to prevent injury and have everyone enjoy the track.

Leave the hippy on the hill alone, Housing — they're flyin' their own flag

We dwellers of Butterfield, the only community on campus proudly and defiantly flying a pirate's flag from our rooftop, urge other residents to also take back their dorms, their rights and their lives from the fascists in UMass Housing.

We urge the rest of the adults living on this campus to follow our example and stand up for our rights to have guests, drink alcohol and form our own community standards without interference from the paternalistic control freaks in Housing.

We 'Residents' are not inmates and we refuse to be treated as such. We resent being forced to live on campus for two years whether we want to or not. We resent having our rents raised every semester while our buildings continue to deteriorate. We resent being forced to pay for T.V. and phones regardless of whether we want them. We resent being forced to live in locked-up fortresses without being asked if we wanted them. We resent being forced to drink alcohol only in our rooms with our doors shut. We resent being told what 'Quiet Hours' are without being asked what we wanted them to be. We resent having certain numbers of our peers recruited as 'finks' who are then programmed to turn against us. We resent being treated like criminals when we choose to follow our own community standards rather than Housing's arbitrary rules. We resent Residential Education's assumption that we're all a bunch of ignorant fools who must be reprogrammed to think in socially acceptable, politically correct ways.

Most of all, we resent being stripped of the dignity and respect we deserve as free-willed, rent-paying adult citizens. We refuse to take it anymore. We call on other adult campus dwellers who no longer wish to be intimidated by 'Big Brother' Housing to also declare their independence and stop being meek little sheep. We all pay for our rooms, they're ours and we will make our own decisions about how we will live in them.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

First things first. Last week, in this very column, Ari Vais christened me with the ill-fitting nickname 'Superman.' Truth and justice are fine with me, but how they are related to the 'American Way' is beyond me.

Speaking of one-hundred-percent Americans, the graffiti of the week comes from Hillel. C'mon, if you boys can't play nice, someone will have to take away your Slapshot and Ice Cube records.

In other local news . . .Cannabis Reform Coalition "President Aaron 'git yer gun' Wilson's performance on the Amherst commons on Saturday was truly the comedic center of last weekend. For those of you with short-term memory problems, he was the chunky, goateed guy drawing all the impatient looks from Minibus fans.

Dressed in wash-faded fatigues (as every good revolutionary should be), he looked down-right Castroesque, in spite of the pony-tail and Anglo-Saxon heritage.

His argument for legalization ran along the lines of "Marijuana has medicinal value as pain killer, it's fun and doesn't make people violent. So unless I can smoke it, I'm gonna shoot someone." Though he quoted Abbie Hoffman, the figure he reminded me of was General Curtis 'bombs away' LaMay, who wanted to nuke North Vietnam in order to save it.

Anyone who is willing to kill someone, face murder charges and presumably serve time in a prison without pot, rather than risk getting tagged for possession has demonstrated not only admirable conviction, but a tenuous grasp of his basic reasoning faculties.

His conviction was evidently not shared by the audience members who, after seeing my camera, expressed concern that publishing their faces in connection with the event could damage their credit ratings or chances of future employment.

Josh Reynolds

I didn't take any names, and made an effort not to get identifiable faces in focus. However, after hearing Leslie Hope of the libertarian party, I've decide to exercise some of my own personal rights.

My property is mine to use as I see fit, so I'm gonna turn a healthy profit selling the negatives to the NSA, DEA, and any other interested parties. I'll even suggest that they cross-reference their findings with the residents of Butterfield, Baker, and members of the Radical Student Union.

Relax, I wouldn't really pick on a flock of sheepish stoners. (Why so paranoid?) If you're really that upset, just take a few cubes of Soma and chill, man.

In a related note, a photo caption in the Hampshire Gazette erroneously stated that the hemp was really sponsored by the University. We've all been warned about passive smoking in the work place. Now on to matters of a different type of substance.

This past week the issue of whether or not the Collegian should be a medium for "positive change" within the community has surfaced once again. No matter who you are, sooner or later, this editorial page will produce a point of view which offends your sensibilities. Luckily, at the university level, people who are intolerant of opposing arguments, when given the chance, usually do a fine job discrediting their point of view.

The argument for "sensitivity to the needs of the community" is that people just aren't smart enough to judge the validity of an argument for themselves. Therefore, it is our responsibility to screen the opinions that they be allowed to read. In short, parental supervision is advised.

If this sort of thing sounds like a good idea to any of you out there, you probably don't remember our ex-editorial editor and Central Scrutinizer, David R. Mark, who did use his judgment to decide which opinions were valuable and appropriate.

Were this newspaper to be censortive to the needs of the community, not only would we have already fired half of our columnists, but three or four editors and a cartoonist as well (we have a hard enough time keeping these positions filled as it is.)

In past semesters, people in all these positions have been fired, or worse, excluded a priori.

To clarify, these are not the official opinions of the Collegian, but depending on my mood, they count for one thirteenth of the Board of Editors.

Josh Reynolds is a Collegian columnist.

being [affected by] tuition retention, but the needs of students being in conflict over sexual orientation, religion and race," he said. "We can't look like the Wonder Bread Club. We need to tie in more people from 'other' communities that we don't necessarily perceive."

Speaker Bob Monaghan ended the caucus by cautioning senators not to prejudge any of the announced candidates.

"The person you elect may not embody all the qualities you want at this time," he said. "When you're voting and you have doubts about someone, give them a chance — they might develop."

Monaghan said regardless of who is elected, officials must not take a passive role in campus life.

"You want a speaker and treasurer who are activists, who want to go out and mobilize students, because that's what we need to do," he said. "We need officers to work for students."

currently an all-women's floor. All of these students will be displaced next semester, and many of the floor's residents said they were unhappy about the move.

Pam Wicks, a freshman animal science and exercise science major who presently lives on the fourth floor of Mary Lyon said, "I feel that Mary Lyon was not a good choice for the GLB floor. The top two floors are designated all-women's floors now and fulfill a need for women seeking protection or added security for various reasons."

Jennifer Toth, a sophomore psychology major who also lives on the fourth floor said she was not upset with the program itself but was disturbed that the floor was "not involved in the decision-making process.

"We were informed about the plan after all the decisions were made," she said.

Groups dedicate week to explore Christianity

By DIANA D'AVANZO
Collegian Staff

Did Jesus really die and rise again from the dead? If so, what implications does this have for our lives?

These are questions that Campus Crusade for Christ, Intervarsity Christian Fellowship and Alliance Christian Fellowship, are asking throughout a "Why Did He Die?" week.

The event will take place Monday, April 13 through Thursday, April 16. The week will focus on the resurrection and gathering opinion concerning the resurrection.

D.J. Monke of Campus Crusade, said the groups are having the "Why Did He Die?" week because, "we felt that with Easter right around the corner, this would be a perfect way to challenge students to consider the claims of Christ. With all the problems that exist in this world, people should know that Jesus is there for them."

Another Campus Crusade member, Martin Dent, said, "When students are faced with the evidence for the person of Jesus Christ and his resurrection from the dead, they will have to make a decision to either accept or reject him."

The Christian groups have planned different activities, including handing out questionnaires concerning the resurrection that will be given at the Dining Commons on Monday, April 13 throughout dinner and a week-long free book distribution of More Than a Carpenter in the Campus Center Monday from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m.

Campus Crusade member Asa Swahn said the book, written by Josh McDowell, "will give readers the oppurtunity to explore Jesus' claims and find out what Christianity is really all about."

As if kicking off the week, the Graduate Christian Fellowship is holding an open panel discussion entitled "With All Your Mind."

future until the end of the basketball season.

Yesterday, Calipari made good on his word, signing a contract which includes a "roll-over" clause, making the contract valid for four years.

"It's good to hear he's staying," said UMass forward Lou Roe. "I kind of knew he was staying because when he recruited me, I asked him if he would be there for four years and he said yes."

Calipari, 33, took over the program four years ago and has amassed a career coaching record of 77-50, including three post-season tournament appearances, two in the NIT, one in the NCAA.

This past season he led UMass to its most successful season ever, posting a 30-5 mark and advancing to the Sweet Sixteen of the NCAA Tournament, before bowing out to Kentucky.

In a press release issued yesterday, Calipari said, "I'm excited that the University felt so highly of me to, first of all give me the opportunity at such a young age to be its coach, and now want to keep me here."

Calipari's former contract paid him upwards of $76,000 and the feeling around campus is he didn't get a big enough raise.

"For a coach of his status, it's a little too low," said UMass sophomore Jon Aronson. "I'm happy. The King's Court remains intact."

Gabe Tucker, a senior math major and President of the Minutemaniacs said, "It's a little too low. He deserves more. I think it's smart for him to stay and good for the school."

Roe may have summed it up best when he said, "He built something here, why let someone else take down the mountain?"

It's no secret the players don't love Calipari, but they have the ultimate respect for his coaching ability.

"He's such a good coach," Roe said. "It's a great opportunity to play for a coach like him."

Junior center Kennard Robinson said, "His coming back is good for the students, good for the team and good for the recruits. Coach Cal pushes you hard to do things you don't want to do, but need to do to win."

Now that he's back for another season, the next question is how long will he stay?

"My family and I look forward to a long and happy relationship with the University," Calipari said.

Pearl Jam a smash hit at SUB concert

By SCOTT KESNER
Collegian Staff

Last night more than one-thousand people crowded into UMass Amherst's largest sauna to perspire to Pearl Jam.

Although it was probably not the intention of fans to leave the concert reeking of sweat and looking prunish, there was no sanctuary from the heat of the S.U.B.

Pearl Jam opened mildly enough with "Wash," a tune unfamiliar to those without knowledge of their three-song Alive EP. "Wash" tested the crowd's patience for enduring slower tunes. The crowd had none. As soon as "Once," began the waiting was over and the quest for oxygen began. The band started jamming, the throng began slamming and all the cramming left no air.

Lead vocalist Eddie Vedder propelled the snow by penetrating our minds with his irresistible apocalyptic croak and hypnotizing us with the pale glare of his translucent eyes. Before "Alive," Vedder peered into the eyes of his moshing audience and insisted that they stop launching people over their heads. He quipped, "I don't want anybody to die, maybe it's just that I give a fuck."

Not too many others did. "Alive," the shivering tale of sexual abuse, spurred the crowd to become violent enough to injure one another. As I was singing the song's chorus, a swift blow to my upper lip arrested my vocal work for the evening. Thank you, kind mosher!

I'm starting to believe that people go to these pulsating shows solely to wreak havoc on the audience. To those of you who put Pearl Jam on your "great bands to mosh to" list, congratulations, they deserve to be on it. They also deserve you as a fan. But seriously, your crowd diving is a serious detraction. Try watching the show, you might actually enjoy it.

Those who were adept or athletically skilled enough to evade kamakaze students witnessed the relentless musical attack of Pearl Jam. The guitar rave-up "Even Flow," had the audience running for cotton as the band turned their amps up to eleven. The heartfelt loudness of "Why Go" compelled the audience to dig the crunchy rhythm guitar playing of Stone Goddard and the controlled chaos of Mike McCready's solo.

"Black" sheltered fans from flying human objects. The gorgeous ballad, perhaps the most moving moment on the album Ten, rendered the crowd stagnant as they became emotionally fulfilled.

"Black," amongst the pounding of tunes like "Jeremy," "Porch," and "Deep," was a watershed moment during the concert.

A great many came to hear "Alive." To those of you who came for the one song and didn't enjoy the rest, I hope you suffered every second that "Alive" wasn't playing. Damn good show!

This week's HSCN flicks

Good: Terminator 2*; Bad:* The Keep*; Ugly:* Firebirds

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello movie lovers, and welcome to yet another edition of the Campus Cable Connection. Every week, HSCN shows twenty-five movies; of these, I review twenty due to the fact that five are set aside as children's films. But this week, there is a "kiddie" film called The Adventures of Milo and Otis that is just simply the most adorable movie I have ever seen. The only flaw is that it is stupidly narrated by Dudley Moore, so my suggestion is to watch it with the volume turned off. Honestly, though, on a scale of 1 to 10 for cuteness, I give it a 12. Even if you're not an animal lover (I personally hate cats with a passion), you'll still love it.

There are also many other movie greats and flops this week (if you are sick of the repeats, they will be alleviated within the next couple of weeks, so sit tight). Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, April 8.

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid — Paul Newman, Robert Redford, Katharine Ross. Boy oh boy, in 1969 were Newman and Redford EVER in their prime (acting and (cough) otherwise). These two guys are outlaws being pursued by the sheriff and his posse. Some fantastic scenes, and the cinematography (which won Conrad Hall an Oscar) is breathtaking. The original score and the screenplay also took away Oscars. A cinematic triumph! ****

Firebirds — Nicolas Cage, Tommy Lee Jones, Sean Young. OH LOOK! Someone tried to be original and went and made a movie about drug cartels and helicopters and stuff! Boy, I don't know about you, but I'd reach into my wallet and shell out money for this one. NOT! The film is blah, the acting is beyond heinous, and though Sean Young is a very pretty woman, the space between her ears is for rent. The woman must get her acting motivation from a head of cabbage. Good Lord. NO STARS.

Hamburger Hill — Anthony Barrile, Michael Patrick Boatman, Don Cheadle. What is this, the week of the overdone movie? Another Vietnam film that didn't do a hell of a lot for me. I suppose I'm biased after seeing Platoon, but the film just wasn't emotionally charged. The scenes are realistic and some are brutal, but other Vietnam films have done much better. **

The Keep — Scott Glenn, Ian McKellen, Alberta Watson. Sigh, sorry Dad, I know you liked it, but quite honestly I thought it was a piece of [expletive]. No offense. This movie is about German soldiers during WWII who are trying to defend a Rumanian mountain pass. Disastrously dumb, but some better than average acting. Not much, but some. *

The Kids are Alright — Fantastic display of some of the Who's best. The documentary is dazzling, the cameos by Steve Martin, Ringo Starr, and Tom Smothers are a delight, and the songs, which include some from Tommy are incomparable with most rock 'n roll today. Puts many modern groups to shame. 1/2

The Man Who Loved Women — Burt Reynolds, Julie Andrews, Kim Basinger, Marilu Henner. Remake of the 1977 Francois Truffaut film, but it doesn't quite measure up. Reynolds, however, is dapper as always as a man who loved (can you guess or shall I spell it out for you?) women. Andrews is fair as his psychiatrist. 1/2

Plenty — Meryl Streep, Charles Dance, Tracey Ullman. Based on David Hare's play about a British woman who never finds satisfaction in her life after her glorious days during WWII. Streep, surprisingly, is very blah and unmotivated. (Perhaps Sean Young saw this movie and mistakenly patterned herself after Streep. Who knows?) The movie, itself, is more or less the same. Mostly less. *1/2

The Right Hand Man — Rupert Everett, Hugo Weaving, Catherine McClements. It's a dry and uninvolving drama about aristocrat Everett who hires stage coach driver Weaving. Kinda like a watered down version of Driving Miss Daisy, but it does have some moments. **

Scrooged — Bill Murray, Karen Allen, John Forsythe. Jam-packed full of stars, this updated version of A Christmas Carol with a VERY strong and worthwhile message of brotherhood is not nearly as good as the original, but then again, this is a different genre. It's more comedy than anything, but switches to drama a tad drastically. Sometimes you are unsure how to react. Still, it's fun, and who the heck doesn't like Bill Murray? 1/2

Stir Crazy — Gene Wilder, Richard Pryor, George Stanford Brown. No real in-depth plot, but the comedic team of Wilder and Pryor is enough to leave anyone in stitches. The two guys manage to bungle themselves into prison. Again, full of stars, and the laughs alone are enough to catch this one at least once. ***

Taxi Driver — Robert DeNiro, Cybill Shepherd, Jodie Foster. For some, this movie is a sick, ugly, and disgusting portrayal of the crazed mind of a NYC cab driver. For others, myself included, it is brilliant and poignant. Director Martin Scorsese literally scorches the screen. The film is hard-hitting. . . don't miss it! ****

Terminator 2: Judgement Day — Arnold Schwarzenegger, Robert Patrick, Linda Hamilton. Schwarzenegger's back, but this time he's the good guy, and he must protect Hamilton's son, John, who is being targeted for termination by the advanced evil cyborg played by Patrick. You won't get much dialogue from Patrick, but the special effects instilled upon his body will completely blow you away. The movie kicked ass and took names this year at the Oscars for special effects. 1/2

The Big Picture — Kevin Bacon, Emily Longstreth, J.T. Walsh. Eh, this one's just okay, and very typical Kevin Bacon caliber. How old is Kevin anyway, and when is his agent going to get him a challenging role? 'Nuff said. . . the movie is about typical yuppie Hollywood wheeling and dealing. Martin Short makes a fantastically humorous cameo appearance as an agent. An average film. **

Cat Ballou — Jane Fonda, Lee Marvin, Michael Callan. This movie is hysterical. . . (my sorority sister Linda thinks so more than most) Fonda is Cat Ballou, a school teacher turned outlaw, and Marvin (who won an Oscar for his role) plays twins who are so funny, you have to see 'em to believe 'em. (Sing for me, Linda! Cat Ballouuuu. . .) ***

Movies that are on HSCN this week but are not reviewed are: One Good Cop, The Bear, Compromising Positions, The Miracle, The Rocketeer, and Drop Dead Fred.

Synaptic Snap to perform farewell show

By SEAN MANSEAU
Collegian Correspondent

Imagine this: It's fall semester of 1987. Some band you have never heard of is playing at the Bluewall.

"They are called Jane's Addiction. I've heard they're kinda cool," your roommate says, "C'mon, it's only three bucks."

"Nah," you say, "I think I'd rather order a pizza."

Four years later you are standing in line in the rain, waiting to pay $35 for your Lollapalooza ticket, which will give you the chance to see the same Jane's Addiction which you passed up not so long ago. You are thinking, "what a dumb [expletive] I am."

Here's your chance to avoid such a fate. This Saturday, April 11, local favorites Synaptic Snap will be performing their farewell show at the the Hadley Pub.

Synaptic Snap, UMass students, focused on funk, folk and blues. They are best known for their sometimes humorous lyrics and wacky stage antics. The Snap, as they are often called, will be remembered for their perfomance with the Spin Doctors at Pearl St. in December, their stunning victory at the Southwest Battle of the bands in October and their Halloween show, where they played dressed as the members of Kiss.

Opening for the Snap will be "Duck Duck," Boston's finest unsigned band.

"Duck Duck" now encompasses nine musicians, including a full horn section. It features a 20th century classical musician, a former Ringling Brothers Circus clown

'Mothers and Others' is examination of maternity

By SHAWN MCDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

There is a rather dishonorable tendency nowadays to degrade any art not produced by, or about, white males.

I was unhappily surprised by the many dismissals of Mothers and Others which I heard, or overheard, in the weeks before the production — putting it down as another "femininst woman's show," with appeal only for manhaters and lesbians. This attitude is absurd (to say nothing of politically incorrect) and could not be farther from the truth.

Mothers and Others is about exactly what the title suggests — the role of mothers, in this and other societies, and the bonds which form between them and their offspring. The production combines drama, poetry, and narrative literature from numerous authors into a surprisingly watchable, and enjoyable, evening.

Adapter Maxine Kern has done an admirable job threading together this production, and the show has a fluidity and logic one might not expect from what is essentially a non-musical revue. The twenty-nine "pieces" which make up this show vary greatly in approach and content, but Kern is able to see the bigger picture in them. The finished result is like an impressionistic canvas, where the separate and dissimilar brush strokes combine to create a bigger, clearer picture.

A great emphasis is placed on the development of that picture, and the words are the stars of this production. Director Virginia Scott has placed her seven-person ensemble in a space which could be nowhere, or anywhere. With the assistance of lighting designer Jane Cox, she is able to turn the stage from a vast recital hall where a nervous child plays piano into a small, cozy kitchen where a mother and daughter talk.

Some of the play's material fails to arouse interest, by being either too sardonic of too melodramatic rather crudely, and a long dramatic sequence by John Clayton is essentially a walking bundle of ineffective cliches. The show's best moments (and there is much more good than bad) include a dramatic scene by Tanyss Martula, in which a lingering conflict between mother and daughter comes to a head in an argument over placemats, and a tongue-in-cheek sequence by Garet Scott in which a daugher inherits her mother's former position as "the most beautiful woman alive."

The cast is typical of the show's diversity and runs the gamut from the merely competent to the outright gifted. Brenda Cahill and Rose Brown perform an unlikely love story by Romulus Linney with great sensitivity and Brandon M. Whitehead makes a hysterical society matron.

But the highlight of the evening comes from a dramatization of Amy Tan's Joy Luck Club, about a child who finds herself in a sort of child prodigy boot camp "watching old Shirley Temple movies like they were training films." Michelle C. T. Hendrick gives a bravura performance as the child — showing us an infantile self confidence which turns into regretful anguish when she finally learns the reason for her mother's stifling love. If Hendrick's character never inspires maternal pride, one can be sure that Hendrick herself does — this performance stands tall and proud.

Chucklehead excites the crowd

By SCOTT KESNER
Collegian Staff

A Chucklehead show is like a big orgy. Thursday night at Pearl Street, the band seductively stroked its audience, leaving them titillated without ever using their hands. Although an aroused audience is not allowed to publicly unrobe and scantily perform, this one greatly wished it could.

Very rarely do you witness a band with the libido that Chucklehead has. "Humdinger" is a staple of their live shows. It erects all their elements: the vocal swagger of singer/trumpet player Scooter, sexual innuendo ("Do you dinger in the morning, do you dinger at night?"), sequenced keyboards, subtle horn textures, scintillating guitar, the lurid drumming of E-rock, and the limpid six-string bass playing of Ringo Jones.

Jones has a lot of testosterone in his playing. From the slinky murmur of "You Don't Have to Give it Up," to the vaulting gel of "A Traffic Jam" and the slapping liquidity of "Mix it Up," Jones proved to be the funkiest mother Pearl St. has witnessed in some time. He displayed a shrewd facility for always playing the most tastefully assembled notes possible. His bass lines consistently evoked a swarm of pelvic moshing and left me excited enough to grab myself.

If you didn't like Chucklehead's music, you would have had to appreciate their visuals. Keyboardist Gecko sported a bee net on his face to protect him from the swarming traffic of African killers that menaced him throughout the set. He also wore a large gold chef's hat in preparation for the band's post-gig bake-off.

Scooter (not the loveable muppet, but Chucklehead's lead rapper) drew the crowd like a magnet with his animated expressions. He wore a cool green hat too.

These days there seems to be a real shortage of bands that can entertain a crowd and not leave them yelling "Boring!" There are also too many goofy pretentious bands (U2 for instance) that try to bowl a crowd over with their gaudy anthems.

A Chucklehead show is wonderful light-weight amusement for those who enjoy killer grooves, rhyming couplets and thrifty musicianship. Everyone who has ever seen Chucklehead loves them, including me. I was so wound up after the show that I went right to bed, if you know what I mean!

'White Men' 'Cutting Edge,' good flicks

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

In "Bull Durham," writer/director Ron Shelton put a clever spin on two of America's favorite pastimes: sex and baseball. In his latest effort, the smart-alecky White Men Can't Jump, Shelton sets forth a furiously funny basketball comedy with engaging performances and breezy wit.

Wesley Snipes (Jungle Fever) and Woody Harrelson (Cheers) play two basketball court hustlers who team up to up the stakes and score bigger wins. Harrelson and Snipes first co-starred in the Goldie Hawn football farce "Wildcats" and here they share fiercely humorous chemistry, offering one-liners with the greatest of ease as they whiz across the court.

Rosie Perez ("Do the Right Thing") plays Harrelson's girlfriend, a strong woman who, while not busy training for her dream Jeopardy! appearance, is chastising Harrelson for always losing their money.

Snipes is married with a son to "Boyz N the Hood's" Tyra Ferrell, who wants Snipes to get enough money so they can move out of their bad neighborhood. Her part is so underwritten compared to Perez's that she hardly makes an impact.

White Men Can't Jump really takes off in its court scenes. Director Shelton wisely chooses not to overdue the slow motion, keeping the swift action quick and lively.

Harrelson and Snipes play their roles with such interlocking style that they give each other enough space for both to strut their stuff. But Harrelson has more screen time, enough to prove he's more than a dim-witted bartender.

Rosie Perez, however, emerges as the most potent member of the talented cast. Made for the big screen, Perez is not the token girlfriend that blindly stands by her man. If the Academy can remember back this far next February (hey, it worked for "Silence of the Lambs") Perez should nab a Supporting Actress nomination.

Much like Perez, White Men Can't Jump looks and feels like predictable fare — everything coming down to the Big Game. But Shelton pulls some witty punches and twists. There's something refreshing about every part of this film.

The only fault here lies in its near two-hour running time. For a film that started so vividly, the movie dragged near the end. It pays off with a

'Slacker' not part of the mainstream

Independent film slow, but provides refreshing change

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

I feel as though I'm jumping on the collective critic's bandwagon praising Slacker, an elusive and vibrant piece of Americana, but I just can't resist it. As it made the rounds of art-house cinemas all over the country, buzz was building over this innovative film written, directed and produced by Richard Linklater.

To the film viewer that insists on having plot and resolution spoon-fed to them, Slacker will seem to be obnoxiously pondering, dull and pointless. The film, however, is a lively and intriguing breath of fresh air in a sea of mindless commercial fluff.

Slacker has no structured plot or main characters. The film smoothly segues from segement to segment, exploring different characters and storylines. The best include a woman trying to sell Madonna's Pap smear, a JFK conspiracy buff and two men discussing the hidden messages in Saturday morning cartoons.

And so the film goes, letting the viewer peek into the lives of these slackers, men and women who just float around life with no jobs but have more than their share of philosophy about it.

Slacker veers so far from the mainstream that even the most patient viewer can get lost. Let's just say there was more than one person asleep as the lights came on in the theater. But Slacker is one of the most stunning films around simply because it leaves itself up to so many interpretations.

The dialogue is so naturally easy and unpretentious (as these kinds of films get) that it's hard to believe it was scripted. The character's lines crackle with life even if they are peppered with an abundance of "likes" and "you knows." This goes on to contribute to the film's warped (if true) reality.

Slacker did drag at sometimes and the most interesting characters seemed to explode on the screen and then disappear, leaving the viewer wanting more. At times it felt as if Linklater was being weird for wierdness sake. However, instead of alienating the viewer with this, it only draws one in more. It's all part of the refreshingly unpredictabie world of Slacker.

I'm not even going to pretend I knew what Slacker's point was. The film can mean so many different things to different peopie it would be unfair of me to pigeonhole Slacker into one meaning. As one viewer put it as she left the theater: "Slacker isn't, like, a movie. . . it's, like, an experience." Grade: A- and a former member of the Boston thrash ban "Formicide," which, of course, was known to do a mean Elvis impersonation.

Their music is the dandiest collage of dancehall reggae, ragtime jazz, Slayer, early Beatles, country western and the Funkadelic. Believe it or not, their eclecticism is not forced, like some musical Frankenstein monster. You will find yourself humming their tunes for weeks after the show.

Their live performances have been compared to late film mogul Cecil B. DeMille spectacles complete with outrageous costumes, a cast of thousands and all.

So go see Duck Duck, unless you want to find yourself standing in the rain a few years from now, thinking, "I am such a dumb . . ."

Duck Duck and Synaptic Snap are at the Hadley Pub, Saturday night April 11th. Doors open at 8:30 p.m.

UMass Night at Pearl Street on Saturday

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

When UMass students think of Pearl Street Nightclub, it's the dance floor and dic jockey upstairs that usually comes to mind.

JABBERWOCKY

This Saturday is "UMass Night" at Pearl Street in Northampton and the focus is not on the room upstairs but on the live music downstairs. Offered up are three immensely popular UMass bands all for one special price. The groups slated to perform are One Eyed Jake, Bark Like a Dog and Graphic Romance.

What makes this triple bill so interesting is that the bands have all played gigs with each other at one time or another and the band members are all very good friends. There is also the UMass connection, as members in all three bands are either students at the University or alumni. Each of the groups got their start playing fraternity gigs and student-orientated venues such as Twisters and the Hadley Pub.

As bassist John Savage of Bark Like A Dog relates, "This show should really be alot of fun. We all get along with each other really well and we all have a dedicated following at UMass. It's going to be a real party atmosphere."

Both Bark Like a Dog and One Eyed Jake are promoting albums released earlier this year. The CD's "City Ride" by One Eyed Jake and "Better Late Than Never" from Bark Like a Dog will be on sale at the show. They are top- notch recordings in their own right and make great listening.

Rock and Roll is the emphasis for this night. One Eyed Jake has a blues rock influence with a lot of punch. Bark Like a Dog prefers a sound with more grunge, whereas Graphic Romance is more pop-oriented. Expect a mix of covers and orginals in the set lists of each group. All three groups feature some really fine musicianship.

The doors open at 8:30 p.m. and Graphic Romance will kick off the evening shortly thereafter. John Savage quipped "we flipped a coin to see who would close the show and who would go on second." Bark Like a Dog will go on next. One Eyed Jake will close the show.

There is a dollar off the cover with a valid UMass student ID and please don't forget your license or other accepted identification as this is a 21 and over show.

There's no excuse for missing this show.

bittersweet and unpredictable conclusion.

White Men Can't Jump is an intelligent comedy that delivers a clever script with impressive lead performances plus a breakout turn by Rosie Perez. Ron Shelton has hit another home run, or should I say three-pointer, with this winner. Grade: B+

The Cutting Edge: If one more person calls this "Dirty Dancing on Ice," I'm going to hit them. The Cutting Edge pairs D.B Sweeney (Elght Men Out) as an ex-hockey star with Moira Kelly as a snotty rich girl who team up rather reluctantly as Olympic figure skaters.

Of course the minute you see them fighting in the beginning, you just know they're going to fall head over heels in love and go for the gold to sappy music. However much I wanted to hate this film, The Cutting Edge contains solid performances. Furthermore, Sweeney and Kelly are so dam appealing together while firing off insults and double entendres they surpass their one dimensional characters.

Yes, you can predict pretty much the whole thing but director Paul M. Glaser (of "Starsky and Hutch" fame) makes it better than you'd expect, exceeding your expectations that this movie would be "Lambada: The Forbidden Dance on Ice." Grade: B-

nated loads, said Fournier.

Contaminated waste, such as general trash disposed of in campus recycling bins, mixes with recyclables from other buildings and threatens to jeopardize the loads shipped out by the University, he said.

"UMass has a reputation for shipping fairly clean loads, but if we get a bad reputation the plants may reject them," said Fournier. "Then we have to pay for transportation and re-sorting." Fournier said that improving simple recycling habits will avoid these problems and cut down on wasted money and resources.

Recycling hits the classrooms

The classroom recycling program has been implemented so far in Herter Hall, Fernald Hall, Flint Laboratory, Whitmore and the Campus Center. Rooms contain two plastic bins: green for white and colored office letterhead, stationary, note pad, xerox and computer paper, and blue for newspapers, magazines and glossy paper.

"The bins are labeled on four sides and there's a poster above them, so it's pretty hard to misunderstand," said Fournier. "People assume it's a trash can. I've got everything you could think of in these bins."

Residential recycling moving slowly

According to Fournier, the residence hall program is "not going well at all. There's a lot of contamination."

The largest problem with the blue bins, which are intended for newspaper, glossy, notebook and photocopy paper and brown bags, is the inclusion of boxboard, which is not recyclable.

If students recycle envelopes with windows or mailing labels, they should rip off the labels and plastic, which contaminate the loads, said Fournier. He added that the red bins for glass, aluminum, tin an plastic are in fairly good shape.

"About forty percent of recyclables coming out of the residence halls have had to be resorted by hand," said Fournier. "I don't need to mention some of the stuff we find in the bins. Once, I even saw somebody growing a plant out of one."

"I understand that this is a new lifestyle for many people, but we want to educate them and get them used to recycling. We don't want to pinpoint students, just raise people's consciousness," said Fournier.

He added that if students and staff have any questions about the program, they can contact him at his office in the Physical Plant.

operating budget for the fiscal year that starts July 1.

The academic fees covered by the increase include athletic fees, health fees, housing fees and accident insurance fees at the various campuses.

Two proposed fees, the student activity fee and the housing fees at the Amherst campus were tabled for later consideration. Overall, the Amherst campus has requested an increase of 4.3 percent or $120 for undergraduates and 4.2 percent or $101 for graduate students.

Newnan said the tabling of these two fees may actually have positive implications for students.

"The tabling of the housing fee and student activities fee is a deviation from normal procedure," he said. "For students on campus, it's a very good thing because the Board of Trustees may vote these fees down, which is a departure from procedure in itself. We'll give the fees thorough scrutiny at the next meeting in the beginning of June."

The board also approved a report that called for the university to request up to $100 million in state funding for fiscal 1993 for renovation projects and infrastructure repair.

Robert Monaghan, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate at UMass-Amherst, said the fee increases may force some students to drop out.

"The answer isn't to put [increases] on the back of the students," Monaghan said. "The answer is to go to the Legislature and get more funding."

speech?"

Caldicott said she believes the U.S. government spends far too much money on defense. "The Defense Department rips off $300 billion dollars a year from you to make nuclear weapons no one needs anymore, because the Cold War is over," she said.

Caldicott said she thought it was ironic she was speaking in the SBA. "The teaching of business is teaching fellow human beings how to exploit each other, and has no right to be in a university. This country is so corrupt, there is no morality, history, or understanding of the environment taught," she said.

"The U.S. is the only country in the free world which doesn't have a free health care system, besides South Africa. The U.S. government is terribly selfish — you've been brainwashed into believing you don't deserve free health care," Caldicott said.

Caldicott, who is a medical doctor in Australia, said she practices medicine to save lives. "There are 200 health care industries in the U.S., and their sole purpose is to make money out of people. This is total and utter greed — you don't do medicine to make money," she said.

Cause of AIDS, HIV still not understood

By WENDY JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Although AIDS has been spreading for eight years, there has been remarkably little progress in finding treatments for the disease, according to a University of Massachusetts microbiology professor.

Professor Albey Reiner, speaking at last Thursday's Brown Bag Lunch Seminar sponsored by the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns, said there is a need for more knowledge of the causes of AIDs.

"We cannot know enough about HIV. . .not until there is a cure for AIDS, because I personally believe that HIV causes it," he said. "However, there are two opposing theories as to the cause of AIDS."

Reiner said one explanation — and perhaps the most controversial — is that HIV, human immundeficiency virus, doesn't cause AIDS.

Another explanation is that HIV "does it all" by disrupting the T-4 cells — the controllers or "brains" of the immune system.

According to Reiner, this theory was born out of the notion that AIDS is an "auto-immune disease" in which there are co-factors involved in triggering off the HIV virus.

The notion of a co-factor, Reiner said, "is a trivial, obvious idea. There are definite co-factors involved in how the immune system breaks down. For example, we were all exposed to the flu virus all winter, but some of us never came down with it. This is due to co-factors in how our immune system works.

"I believe that HIV leads to AIDS, because I cannot ignore the similarities between the SIV virus, which was found in monkeys with an AIDS-like illness, and the HIV virus found in humans with AIDS," he said. "We haven't proven that HIV causes AIDS, but I say, look at the the viruses, they are very similar, there's a connection."

Reiner, who is also director of the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration program, said it is important to realize that AIDS infection is rising.

"AIDS is not a gay or African disease. It is a sexually transmitted disease, and that's that," he said "Better treatments need to be discovered and people need to stop worrying about catching it from their dentists and start having safer sex."

The treatment of AIDS is as argued as the theories of its causes. Currently, AIDS is treated in three ways.

One way is by using something to fight it directly, usually with the drugs AZT or DDT. However, these drugs have terrible side effects, he said. Herbal remedies have also been used.

Another way to treat AIDS is to deal with each disease as it comes up, he said.

The third way to treat AIDS is to take something to strengthen the immune system, he said.

"This method seems very promising, because if your immune system is strong, you can fight off illnesses. . . and there are endless ways to strengthen your immune system."

Although this third option seems practical and obvious, most doctors, according to Reiner, do not follow this approach.

"If you're locked into the insurance system, which most of us are, then you're trapped into the standardized system of treatment," Reiner said.

"Unfortunately, it's difficult to find a doctor who rejects the traditional methods [of prescribing medications], and if you do find a such a doctor," Reiner said, "then he or she is either too expensive or is not on your group insurance plan."

Reiner said the problem with the few available treatments for people with AIDS, "is that they are merely 'tried and true' therapies. They are poor treatments."

Meeting of the Day

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A problem related to your elders could arise. Business may have to take a back seat to family affairs. Give plenty of thought to the future. Patience and caution are advised.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Greater pressures exist in both business and personal life. Talking to a professional gives you a more objective view. Loved one's unexpected actions create some delightful moments.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day for dealing with publishers and other experts who can affect your career. An influential person's interest in your creative talents could mean additional income.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Some forgotten funds will bring smiles. A married couple discovers a new side to their relationship. Give a big hug to a grouchy friend or roommate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your imagination and ingenuity shine brilliantly today. Handle personal matters away from your work environment. An inventive solution will produce lasting results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Routine assignments demand special attention now. Your co-workers could be argumentative. Unexpected good news or a fun social invitation offsets any disappointments you might receive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A hard-sell approach can be very effective now. Push harder to improve profits. Tonight you will finally experience Indian food, and enjoy it. Do your best to minimize legal consequences.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep a low profile if you are in the company of VIPs today. Be especially careful not to defy higher-ups. Reading gives you a new perspective. It is time to fly solo.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Taking strong measures is not recommended now. Protect yourself and your financial interests from big talkers. A hunch merits a follow-up. Remember someone who touched your life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Use some quiet time to sort out a tricky problem. A solution is easier to find than you dreamed possible. Bring sensitive issues out into the open. Let your spouse carry his or her share.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are going through a cycle of growth and rebirth. Be patient with higher-ups; they may have problems of which you are unaware. What you say weighs heavily; easy does it!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You would be wise to remain your usual quiet and mild-mannered self today. A private negotiating session will work to your advantage. Look into making a purchase you have long desired.

Equestrian team successful, but still lacking recognition

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

With so much attention given to the University of Massachusetts basketball team's ride to the Sweet Sixteen, it was easy to overlook the unprecedented success of the equestrian team.

But in a league that is home to perennial equestrian powerhouses such as Mount Holyoke and Smith College, the UMass team of 18 rode their way to third place honors in the team overall for the year, marking one of the team's best seasons ever.

"The killer is we were just one point behind Smith," said team secretary Amanda Tate, a senior from Cambridge.

Total points are cumulated throughout the season which includes four meets in the fall and two in the spring and UMass' first place at the Smith show, held in Amherst recently, was a big boost for the team.

"I think the team really worked well together," said senior Becky Rivet of Bourne, the team's captain. "There was a lot of team support and that helped keep moral up."

In addition to performing well as a whole, the team's individual ability is clearly evident from the nine UMass riders who will compete at this weekend's Regionals to be held at Smith College.

The Regionals are the equivalent of the NCAA's round of sixteen and winners from that competition will be eligible for the Zones (similar to the Final Four) to be held in Greenfield at the Stoneleigh Burnham School, Tate said.

Tate said three of the best finishes this year came from Sue Shallcross and Mike Conway, who were champion (first place) riders during the season. Shalcross got two first places and Conway, the only male on the equestrian team, notched the other.

"This is one of the most successful seasons we've ever had," said Tate, an equine studies major who, like Rivet, has been on the team for three years. "Everyone helped each other out."

Yet, even with the team's recent success, Rivet and Tate are more than a little discouraged by the lack of attention given to the sport.

"For a huge school like UMass it's too bad that the riding program doesn't get more recognition," said Tate. "We're a totally functional team and we support ourselves."

Members of the team pay a show fee for each meet in addition to providing their own riding equipment, which can be extremely costly.

"We haven't really been recognized," Rivet said. "It's an Olympic sport, but no one knows about us. It's not only the basketball team that did well this year."

Regardless, both Tate and Rivet acknowledge that the true satisfaction in horseback riding doesn't come from recognition so much as the relationships established with the horses.

"Horses are my life and if I wasn't around them as much I wouldn't be as happy," Tate said. "I think that's shared throughout the team."

"Ninety percent of the time is spent working with the horses," Rivet said. "It's trying to get them to do something they don't necessarily want to do."

Tryouts for the equestrian team are held once a year, in the fall, and there are about 20 spots on the team. The club is coached by volunteers Sandy Osborne and Vicki Kahn.

But Bainco, who scored 4 goals and assisted another to lead the Friars, got his own rebound and shoved it past LoPresti, enabling PC to go into halftime tied 5-5. The goal was significant because no one cleared Bianco out from in front of the crease, allowing him to get off a clean shot.

The Friars, suddenly given a chance for a major upset, adhered to their game plan of slow, deliberate offense in the second half. They retook the lead a minute into third when Bianco caught the UMass defense napping and found Alex Vetter open.

UMass rattled off two quick scores later in the third to lead 7-6, as Millon and Valente connected 15 seconds apart. But the Gorillas still could not maintain a consistent level of intensity, allowing PC to take a 9-7 lead on three unanswered scores.

Both Millon and Garber noted much of UMass' difficulty came from their lack of shot selection and accuracy.

"We just couldn't hit the cage," offered Millon. "That made it really ugly."

Garber noted the Gorillas outshot PC 61-27, but of those shots only 32 were on net.

"You can't win many lacrosse games shooting like that," Garber said. "If you can't put your shots on cage you're not gonna win."

runs per outing.

Kim Mizesko has a 9-2 record, a 0.89 ERA, and 101 strikeouts in 70 innings.

"These will be the best played softball games to be played this year," Sortino said. "It doesn't get any better than UConn playing UMass."

GAME NOTES - The Minutewomen are coming off Tuesday's doubleheader sweep of Boston College (3-1 and 8-0 in five innings).

In the first game, home runs from Barbara Morean and Sherri Kuchinskas backed up the five-hit pitching of Holly Aprile, as UMass overcame a 1-0 deficit in the sixth inning.

Game two was a blowout. Aprile went 3-4 with a home run and three RBI, and Kuchinskas knocked in two runs. Darlene Claffey pitched her fifth shutout of the season, allowing only two hits while striking out three and walking none.

Marean's home run against the Eagles set the team hitting streak record at 17 straight games. She extended the streak to 18 in the second game.

UMass broke it open in the fourth inning. Matt Barnicle relieved Fillion (0-1) and allowed his first five batters to reach base. Billy Knight led off the inning with a double to center and Olivieri doubled to left, scoring Knight. Sean Berryman's well-executed bunt advanced Olivieri to third and Barnicle's wild pitch allowed him home as Berryman went to second. Jay Dodig walked, and Berryman and Dodig executed the third UMass double steal. Larocca walked to load the bases, but Barnicle struck out Mattivello and Carelli. But Corradi banged out a base-clearing double to right to make it 9-1.

Springfield blew a good chance to get back in the game in the fifth. After inducing groundouts from Kurt Kublbeck and Rob Plasky, Rivera walked O'Connell and Vitiello and then had to leave the game. Greg Dowd came on in relief, but walked Lodi to load the bases. But Dowd got Hallam to bounce out to shortstop Carelli, forcing Lodi at second.

The Chiefs cut it to 9-2 in the sixth, but it was too little, too late. UMass added four more runs in the seventh, and Knight capped the scoring with his second home run in as many games in the eighth, off of Scott Carew.

Gorillas escape from Friars with 11-9 comeback victory

By GREG SUKIENNIK

University of Massachusetts junior attacker Bill Edell (21) attempts to get by a Providence College defender in action yesterday at Upper Boyden Field. The Minutemen won, 11-9.

Unranked lacrosse programs aren't supposed to be able to come into a top 20 team's home field and steal away with a win. But that's almost what happened yesterday at Upper Boyden Field.

The lightly-regarded Friars of Providence College nearly spoiled the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team's season, taking a two goal lead into the fourth quarter before the Gorillas woke up from their nightmare and escaped, 11-9.

UMass (3-2) needed last-minute heroics from attackers Mike Cain and Mark Millon and a crucial poke-check by Chris Nentwich to survive a string challenge from Providence (4-3). A loss may have knocked the Gorillas out of the Top 20 and out of NCAA Tournament contention.

"You can't look by any opponent but you've got to win some of these kinds of games, too," said UMass coach Ted Garber.

The Gorillas benefited from a huge break midway through the fourth quarter. Up 9-7, the Friars apparently scored on a two-on-one fast break at 8:52. But Providence had called time out just before the goal. Whether the goal would have demoralized the Gorillas or not will never be known.

The near-miss awoke the Gorillas and two minutes later, Mike Cain took an assist from Mike Valente and scored, cutting the deficit to one. Less than a minute later, after UMass controlled the ensuing faceoff, Millon evaded two defenders on his way to the cage and tied the game at 9-9.

Millon put UMass up to stay at 2:35, taking a Cain feed from behind the crease and putting it past Providence goalie Bill Duffin (21 saves). Providence threatened in the closing minute, but Nentwich was able to check a Providence player from behind, knock the ball loose and pass upfield to an uncovered Millon upfield. Millon's fifth score of the afternoon — the fifth time in his career he has scored five or more in a game — put PC away.

Millon was critical of both his and his team's performance.

"We just turned it up a notch in the fourth. It was an ugly performance," said Millon, who leads the Gorillas with 17 goals and eight assists. "We can't play that way against Yale."

Garber was hoping yesterday's game would help the Gorillas prepare for their crucial game with Yale on Saturday. The results didn't match his expectations.

"We've had two wake-up calls now" said Garber, referring to yesterday's game and to the St. John's game, in which the Gorillas performed a similar fourth quarter escape act. "If we have a third we could be in big trouble."

UMass looked flat for much of the game while Providence, a huge underdog, played like they had nothing to lose. The loss of defensive midfielder Mario Lopez, who aggravated a pulled hamstring in the first quarter and sat out the rest of the match, made matters worse.

The Friars struck first when Danny Bianco got past Nentwich and sent a shot past UMass goalie Tom LoPresti. The Gorillas responded a minute later, as Millon made a nice over-the-cage pass to a cutting Cain. PC midfielder Steve Iannuccelli put the Friars back ahead, but UMass' Rob Falvey hit a cutting Tim Stevenson with a pass from the left to end the first quarter 2-2.

The tit-for-tat continued through the second, as UMass was able to come back from a goal down but never take more than a one goal lead or, as many expected, put the Friars away with a five or six goal rush.

Garber tried just about everything to get the Gorillas going, including inserting reserves into the lineup. Don Avena, for instance, fed a nice assist to Rob Falvey to put UMass ahead 5-4.

Softball hosts rival UConn; ranked 19th

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Something has got to give.

The University of Massachusetts softball team (14-7, 4-0 in the Atlantic 10), and on a 12-game winning streak, hosts the University of Connecticut, (15-5) winners of their last 10, in a 3 p.m. doubleheader at Totman Field today.

The Minutewomen are now ranked 19th in the national poll and first in the Northeast Region. UConn is ranked third in the region.

"The nice part about our rivalry," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino, "is that it's an intense rivalry on the field, and both teams have a tremendous amount of respect for each other. The kids go out, compete hard and play hard. When all is said and done, it's never an ugly contest. It's a real healthy competition.

"Both teams are beating the teams they should be beating," she said. "I don't think there has been an occasion when UMass played UConn and both teams weren't on an extended winning streak."

UMass continues to get tremendous starting pitching from Darlene Claffey, Holly Aprile and Kelly Daut. The trio is holding opponents to a .182 batting average. The Huskies have a team average of .272.

The Minutewomen continue to swing hot bats. The team batting average is .325, and is led by senior shortstop Barbara Marean's .515 clip.

Minutemen walk away with victory

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team both ran and walked away from the Springfield College Chiefs in a 14-2 debacle at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

The Minutemen scattered just 10 hits, but drew 12 walks and stole nine bases, including three double steals, which created all the offense freshman pitcher Ronely Rivera would need to earn the victory in his NCAA debut.

"[Rivera] looked good," UMass head coach Mike Stone said. "He had good movement on his fastball and he got out of a couple jams."

"Our pitching was horrendous," countered Springfield head coach Charlie Roys.

Walks to Steve Corradi and Jeff January opened the second inning and the two pulled off the first double steal. Billy Knight's groundout to shortstop Bill Hallam scored Corradi, and January came home on Lou Olivieri's hit to Hallam to make it 2-0.

Double steal No. 2 set up January's two-out, two-run single to center to make it 4-0 in the third inning. Fillion got groundouts from Greg Larocca and Joe Mattivello to lead it off, but he walked John Carelli and Corradi, who combined on the steal, and January stepped up.

In the top of the fourth, Rivera retired Bill O'Connell and Tony Vitiello on groundouts to first base and shortstop, respectively. However, trouble for UMass soon followed as Bob Lodi singled to right and Hallam and Matt LaBranche made infield hits to load the bases. John Raifstanger then singled to right scoring Lodi to make it 4-1. Steve Lunardini left the bases loaded, popping up to Larocca at shortstop.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

There are two reasons lacrosse fans should make a point to be on the Hill when the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team faces Yale Saturday at 1 p.m. Both are equally important.

At halftime, Upper Boyden Field, the home of UMass lacrosse, will be dedicated as Richard P. Garber Field. But before and after the dedication, the Gorillas (3-2) and Yale will face each other in a game which could make or break UMass' New England title and NCAA Tournament hopes.

The name "Garber" has always been synonymous with University of Massachusetts lacrosse, making the dedication of UMass' home field both fitting and natural. Dick Garber began building the program in 1955 and over a 36-year span won 309 games and coached 80 All-Americans. He was inducted into the Lacrosse Hall of Fame in 1986 by his son, Ted, who took over when his father retired after the 1990 season.

But according to Ted, wins and honors aren't the only reason to dedicate the Hill to his father.

"My dad's still the winningest coach in college lacrosse," the younger Garber said. "Some think he's the greatest lacrosse coach ever because of the way he coached and taught fundamentals. But his values and ethics — that's why you name a field after him.

"The bottom line is, it's still a game and people forget that," he continued. "When you're out there, when you put on the uniform you do it in a manner that the field is dedicated to. Hustle, smart play, team play — that's what [the field] stands for. Those are the things my dad taught his players."

UMass lacrosse alumni will be there. Garber's family and friends will be there. UMass faculty and staff will be there.

"You should be there, too, to honor Dick Garber and watch what promises to be a great game of lacrosse between UMass and Yale.

The Bulldogs come into Saturday's game having beaten Brown 9-7. That win makes Saturday's match-up even more important.

"[Yale's win over Brown] puts us right back in the hunt for the New England title," Ted Garber said. "But we have to make advantage of the opportunity."

The 12th-ranked Bulldogs (0-2) have four 20-point scorers on their current roster. Senior midfielder Brendan Sheehan has 20 goals and 5 assists. He is joined by Clayton Simmers (10 goals, 14 assists), Simon Duxbury (18 goals, 4 assists) and Josh McHugh (18 goals, 3 assists).

Defense appears to be another strong suit for the Elis. Yale has allowed its opponents into double figures only three times in eight games. Two of the three teams were top-ranked Syracuse and sixth-ranked Princeton. And they did hold Brown, which rolled up 22 goals on UMass and 18 against Providence, to seven scores.

UMass has plenty of reason to win Saturday, but the significance of the field dedication would make the victory even bigger.

"We beat Brown two years ago to get my dad his 300th win," Ted Garber said. "I know this is just as significant."

WMUA 91.1 FM will carry the game beginning at 12:45 p.m. with Mike Fagerson and Joe Donovan.

Noriega convicted on 8 of 10 charges

By RICHARD COLE
Associated Press

MIAMI — Manuel Noriega, the dictator who defied a superpower, was convicted of eight of ten drug and racketeering charges Thursday, two years after the long arm of America plucked him from Panama in a bloody invasion.

The ousted Panamanian leader's conviction included the key counts of racketeering and racketeering conspiracy. The eight counts carry a possible maximum sentence of 120 years. Sentencing was set for July tenth.

"We did one heck of a job. We're proud of what we did," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Micheal Sullivan.

U.S. Attorney James McAdams said as soon as Noriega is sentenced, he will be taken to Tampa for a trial on marijuana smuggling charges. If convicted in that case, he could be sentenced to 35 years in prison.

The defense said it would appeal the verdict.

President Bush called the conviction "a major victory against the drug lords."

"I hope it sends a lesson to drug lords here and around the world they will pay a price if they continue to poison the lives of our kids in this country or anywhere else," Bush said at a Washington meeting with Nicaraquan President Violetta Chamorro.

Defense attorney Frak Rubino was bitter, and said the appeal would be bases on isues including Noriega's prisoner-of-war status and the invasion.

"The United States government in its self-appointed role as world policeman... saw fit to invade a foreign country and seize its leader," he said.

"This, in our opinion, is the modern day version of the Crusades, that the United States will now trample across the entire world, imposing its will upon so-called independent, sovereign nations. Unless the foreign governments are willing to kneel once a day and face Washington and give grace to George Bush, they too may be in the same posture as General Noriega."

Noriega was acquitted of cocaine distribution and conspiracy to import cocaine.

There was no visible reaction from Noriega or the jurors as the verdicts were read. In the row behind the defense, two of Noriega's daughters wept while his wife, Felicidad, stared forward without expression.

The U.S. District Court trial lasted seven months, during which the government painstakingly built its case against a head of state it called "a small man in a general's uniform" who was "just another crooked cop."

The verdict came in the jury's fifth day of deliberations. On Wednesday, they announced they were deadlocked with one holdout; Judge William Hoeveler urged them to try again.

"The decision was difficult," the foreman, Lester Spencer, told reporters after the verdict. "The decision was heavily debated back and forth."

The defense maintained Noriega was a victim of U.S. politics, saying the case "smelled all the way to Washington." The attorneys portrayed the governments's witnesses as unscrupulous thugs looking only for a "get-out-of-jail-free card."

The trial marked the first time the United States invaded a sovereign country and brought back its leader for a criminal trial. The government dubbed the invasion Operation Just Cause.

Noriega, 54, was indicted on Feb. 4, 1988, along with 15 other people, including the head of Columbia's Medellin drug cartel, Palbo Escobar. At the time, Noriega was still in power in Panama, and sneered at U.S. demands that he step down.

On Dec. 20, 1989, the United States invaded Panama. U.S. forces tracked Noriega to a Vatican mission in Panama City, surrounded it and blasted him with rock music until he surrendered.

The fighting killed 23 U.S. servicemen, at least 200 Panamanian civilians and an estimated 300 Panamanian soldiers.

Jury selection began Sept. 5 and opening arguments began 11 days later.

The government called 46 witnesses, plus 14 others on rebuttal after the defense rested. The defense called 19 witnesses.

Profs. to stage demonstration to save library

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The fight to save the University of Massachusetts library has just begun.

A call to campus faculty for action is being sounded which will culminate in a demonstration at the State House on Tuesday, April 14. Faculty plan on addressing the Higher Education Coordinating Council and meeting with local Representatives.

"Our goal is to promote a greater awareness of the need to improve the campus library's budget and inform the political leadership how disastrous these four years of cuts have been," said David Paroissien, a profesor in the English department who is spearheading this effort to increase state funding.

The chair of a committee which recently produced a report saying the library is nearing disaster, Paroissien said one bus will leave Haigis Mall at 8 a.m. next Tuesday for the State House in Boston.

Paroissien said faculty are being asked to excuse students from classes who go to Boston. He said the bus will have room for students.

Dan Martin, a French professor, is presently trying to secure authorization to allow the faculty to make a five-minute presentation at 1 p.m. to the Higher Education Coordinating Council to briefly outline the dire situation of the University of Massachusetts library system.

Du Bois collection offers insight

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

"One thing alone I charge you," W.E.B. Du Bois said to the world before he died in 1963. "As you live, believe in life. Always human beings will live and progress to greater, broader and fuller life. The only possible death is to lose belief in this truth simply because the Great End comes slowly, because time is long."

One of the founders of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People and leader of the Pan African movement, Du Bois' papers document his involvement in many 20th century racial, literary and social reform movements.

"He was the leading intellectual activist," explained William Strickland, professor of political science in the African-American department and director of the Du Bois papers. "He consecrated himself to the truth."

"His life was a lens on the problem of racism in the world," Strickland said.

Located in the Special Collections and Archives Department on the 25th floor of the library at the University of Massachusetts, the Du Bois papers collection includes letters of correspondence of over 100,000 recorded items on 89 reels of microfilm.

The collection includes speeches, articles, scholarly journals, fiction, pamphlets, plays and short stories. Seventy-nine percent of the papers are letters.

"Du Bois' correspondence ranges widely from world leaders to ordinary people, such as Einstein, Ghandi, to presidents of countries," said Linda Seidman, acting head of the special collections and archives at the library.

"He was an important product of Massachusetts and here at the University significant numbers of residents and students have not even heard of him. Or if they have, they don't know him," said Strickland. "The irony is that he's much better known outside the country."

Du Bois' step-son David Du Bois, a visiting professor in journalism and African-American studies, said two fundamental themes in his father's life were overcoming the problem of racism in America and the liberation of African peoples from colonization.

"There's hardly a question regarding the Third World, peace, social justice, racial equality, moral uplift, and cultural development of peoples that Du Bois has not addressed," said Strickland. "He was an advocate of the Third World."

Strickland relates the lack of awareness of Du Bois to the problem of racism.

"If you're not interested in the problem of racism then you wouldn't know about him, said Strickland. It's hardly a question that Americans are confronting."

"Since these problems are still largly unsolved we can examine one of the greatest thinkers of our time and try to solve them," said Strickland.

Seidman said the Federal Bureau of Investigation began to investigate him during World War I when he was researching the treatment of Black soldiers. Included in the collection are some FBI

"Let's face it. You pass a lot of nameless, faceless people every day, and most of them will stay nameless and faceless. There are just too gosh-darned many people here for everyone to know everyone else. But when you work for the Collegian, things change. It's not like you get your picture printed with your article - people don't start to recognize you or anything. But it's still cool because you wrote something and a bunch of those people probably read it. Maybe you're still one of the faceless crowd, but at least people know your name now. "We're also going to lobby legislatures inside," Martin said.

Organizers also plan on holding a bake sale in Boston to raise money for books — the library is hardly buying any new books at this time, library officials have said.

From 1:30 to 2:30, faculty plan on meeting with local legislatures and expect to depart Boston and head back to Amherst at 3 p.m.

Coordinated by student and faculty organizations and the campus Administration, the action hopes to drum up support for a requested $7.8 million budgetary increase which could be spread over the next three years to recoup from years of fiscal slashes.

The library's national ranking among the 107 Research Libraries has dropped from 43rd in 1976 to 93rd in 1991 — no research library has ever fallen as quickly in quality as the UMass library, according to Paroissien.

"The consequences of probationary action by the Association of Research Libraries hardly need spelling out to the campus community. Programs may be decertified and departments closed. The University's capacity to attract grants from government agencies and foundations will decrease," according to an information sheet on the upcoming demonstration.

In addition, the scathing report on the library which was publicized in February said "almost no new books are being purchased, the number of serial titles held is far too few and the staff are stretched to the breaking point."

If you go...

Interested faculty and students should call 545-5317, 545-2560, 545-2206 or 545-3611. For the bake sale, baked goods "suitably wrapped for transport" can be brought to the GEO office in Room 201, Student Union Center no later than 4 p.m., Monday April 13.

Organizers said they are accepting donations in check form payable to BOOKS to raise money for the rented bus. Send via Campus Mail to: Books, c/o Credit Union Office, Draper Hall. Any left over money will be given to the library, organizers said.

papers.

"The FBI kept a close eye on him. The reason some parts are blacked out is to protect informers and because they don't want you to understand their methodology. There's a lot of information on what people reporting on him considered questionable activity," said Seidman.

There is also a video about Du Bois' life titled 'Du Bois in Great Barrington', the town he was born in, which may be viewed on the third floor of the library.

"This is one of the treasures of the library and we're very pleased and proud to have it and want people to know about and use it," Seidman said.

Servicing the campus

Head of Auxiliary Services assures smooth sailing

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Correspondent

He oversees Campus Center Operations. He makes sure that all goes well with the hotel, post office, Faculty Club, retail sales, vending and dining services. He supervises virtually all student services, with the exception of housing.

Ashoke Ganguli, head of Auxiliary Services at the University of Massachusetts, has the remarkable responsiblity to run the Campus Center and says his attitude towards his job is that the students at UMass are the "primary consumers" and that without them there would be no school.

He said he enforces an open-door policy, allowing students to stop by and discuss issues or concerns they may have, and feels that "artificial barriers" between the administration and students create problems and prevent the University from moving ahead.

Ganguli says it is this attitude that helps him to maintain a relationship with student government leaders.

With straight-forward communication, he contends, student administration differences can be worked out.

"The student workforce here at UMass is essential to the success of the operations," he said.

He noted the 1,600 to 1,800 students employed on campus account for $2,000,000 in salary annually.

Ganguli said the significant student participation in campus services greatly contributes to the sense that this is the student's University.

In addition to student employees, he said he feels his 530 full-time employees on campus comprise a large, stable staff, able to deal with such problems as dreaded budget cuts.

"When the going is tough, the tough get tougher. In the midst of the many budget cuts facing the University, this is still a first-rate school," he said.

"I hope that when students graduate from his institution, they do so with a positive experience," he said.

Ganguli was raised in India, where he received an education at an English preparatory school. He explains that receiving a Western education, combined with the fact that his father graduated from Union College in 1928, almost assured his eventual move to the United States.

Ganguli came to the United States in 1972 after receiving his degree in business from the University of Calcutta, to pursue his second Masters degree, which he attained from UMass in 1977.

Ganguli said he has fond memories of being a student here, and of his former job at the Bluewall, where he made $1.80 per hour.

He was hired by the University shortly after graduation and worked in Housing Services until he was hired for his current position, which he has held for 11 years.

Ganguli is the first minority to head Auxiliary Services, and he said he is aware that there are subtle behavior characteristics that he incurs on the job that cause him to question whether or not they are racially-motivated.

He said he believes, however that within the next 15 years we will be moving towards the multicultural society in which people of all races should treat others as they wish to be treated with dignity and repect.

Bungee jumping craze comes to South Hadley

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts graduates have taken the plunge and are using their communications degrees to capitalize on the fastest-growing sport in America, bungee jumping.

"Bungee jumping is a modern-day right of passage," says Diane McNamara, a public relations consultant as well as a stockholder in Bungee New England.

Bungee jumping has been gaining enormous attention and it has a loyal following. Since 1979, there have been 500,000 jumps performed across the United States.

McNamara, a 1987 UMass graduate, and Peggy Rose, who graduated from the University in 1982, have teamed up with Carolyn and Michael Tessada to provide people with the thrill of bungee jumping across the country.

"The idea of bringing bungee jumping to the United States first occurred to me after I took the plunge last March on a trip to New Zealand," said McNamara.

"After arriving home from the trip, I read a story in the local paper about the Tessadas' operation in Las Vegas and offered to represent them. Everything has been clear sailing ever since," she said.

On top of their exploration into the world of bungee jumping, these two UMass graduates have also started the youngest and newest public relations firm in Boston.

R and B is a public relations firm that specializes in the entertainment industry. Their clients include WBCN, a rock and roll radio station which is considered one of the top 10 stations in the country, The Harbor Club, Bungee New England, as well as other numerous endeavors.

This weekend they are bringing the thrill of the plunge to UMass, a place where both women learned the skills that have allowed them to achieve success in the "real world."

"UMass is a great school and we are thrilled to bring bungee jumping to the Amherst area," said Rose.

Bungee jumping originated in the South Pacific as a religious ceremony and right of passage for young men. The boys tied vines around their ankles and jumped off of poles.

Times have changed since those days in the South Pacific and the sport as we know it got its start in 1979 in England.

At that time it was only performed by a group known as the Dangerous Sports Club. Today people from all walks of life enjoy the thrill of the free fall.

Instead of jumping from poles, people now jump from cranes, bridges and hot air balloons. Instead of vines, people are supported by military transport cords, which are normally used to carry tanks by helicopters.

Death is a stigma that has dogged the sport ever since its popularity has taken off. But a prepared statement issued by Bungee New England assures the jumper that all accidents are due to human error.

"Only one injury was reported in the United States last year, and it only occurred after the man had taken careless risks," said the statement.

"The risks included using only one bungee cord, with no safety backups, and he hooked himself up and jumped too close to the ground," said the statement.

Bungee New England will be jumping at Brunelle's Marina in South Hadley on Saturday and Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. There will be special group rates and discounts given at the site, so overcome your fear and take the plunge.

Grieving mother calls for stricter skydiving regs.

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Jane Melbourne's 29-year-old son, James Craig, died eight days after sustaining injuries on his first parachute jump.

After one day of training at the Massachusetts Sports Parachute Club, the 29-year-old dictionary editor made his first jump. His chute didn't open until he was 200 feet from the ground and he began spinning uncontrollably, Melbourne said.

A year later, Melbourne came to the Massachusetts Statehouse to lead a fight for tougher skydiving regulations, including a measure that would invalidate all waivers of liability signed by student jumpers.

Melbourne, a former resident of Cambridge and Springfield, has convinced two lawmakers to file legislation regulating skydiving in Massachusetts.

Since the April 27 accident, Melbourne, now of Lynchburg, Va., has received two reports — one from the Massachusetts Aeronautics Commission and one from the Federal Aviation Administration.

Those reports say there was no chute malfunction and that the jumper didn't follow the instructions a ground instructor was giving him over a radio transmitter.

The Massachusetts Sports Parachute Club, at the Turner's Falls airport near Greenfield, still hasn't filed a report, as far as Melbourne knows.

"Someone with one day of training is not prepared for an emergency," Melbourne said Thursday. "If he froze, so would just about everybody else."

Because her son died in a hospital, not at the jump site, the club was not required to file a report.

Officials of the club did not immediately respond to requests for comment Thursday.

According to Parachutist Magazine, 12 people died in 1989 and eight died in 1991 in skydiving accidents. One third of those fatalities, Melbourne said, were students. The FAA has no regulations governing parachute instruction.

"I don't think there are too many businesses that can be responsible for 10 deaths a year and are not regulated," she told the Legislature's Public Safety Committee.

The bill would require tandem jumping with an instructor on all first parachute jumps and records of radio conversations between students and ground instructors. It also would force the state to investigate all fatal jumps, even if the parachutist dies at the hospital, rather than on the field.

Jazz class provides for real life experiences

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Correspondent

You sit back and get comfortable. The muted sounds of tenor sax and piano waft through the air. You close your eyes and tap your foot softly to the beat.

Laid-back nightclub? Mellow night in the dorm? Surprise! You're in class — Professor Jeff Holmes' History of Jazz class to be specific.

Jeff Holmes — UMass professor, musician, and jazz-man extraordinaire — offers exposure to a wide variety of jazz styles through lecture, listening to jazz recordings and live demonstrations.

"We try to start out with the early forms of jazz, around the 1890s, to form a foundation," Holmes explained. "Then we drift up through different areas to the present."

The class is introduced to such jazz styles as Ragtime, Blues, New Orleans, Swing, Avant Garde and Fusion to name a few. Once a week, a guest musician comes in to perform and share experience in jazz with the class. Past guests have included jazz percussionist Max Roach and pianist, Billy Taylor.

Both are UMass professors who have achieved personal success as performers in the jazz world.

Holmes has had and continues to have his share of the spotlight as well. Holmes said he started playing piano at an early age and started trumpet in fifth grade. Around junior high, he decided that he wanted to play nonclassical music, so he started his own band and played in bands throughout high school.

Holmes later attended Eastman Music School in Rochester, N.Y., where he earned a bachelor's degree in music theory and a master's degree in Jazz. He came to UMass in 1980.

At UMass, Holmes has his own band, Jeff Holmes Big Band which performs at the Hatch every Monday night at 8:30 p.m. He also directs Jazz Ensemble 1, which has won awards from Downbeat. A true lover of jazz performance, Holmes plays constantly.

Holmes said that he likes the self-expression Jazz allows. "Jazz has a means for expression in what I like to do," he said. "I like to be eclectic. There's not just one right way of doing things [in playing Jazz]. There are all different ways. And people start to look at that and appreciate it."

When it comes to listening to Jazz, Holmes said, "I like to be able to listen to what each person does.

Students in his history of jazz class agree. Roberts Apse, who is taking the class this semester, said he likes to be able to identify the different instruments when listening. He also said he enjoys learning about the different musicians' life-styles.

"They'd play all night long at clubs, party, and live it up," said Apse. "A lot of them had very short life spans."

Don't let yourself be silenced

The Town of Amherst Peace & Quiet Commission will hold a public forum on Saturday, April 11, 1992 at 10 a.m. in the Large Activity Room of the Bangs Community Center. The Commission is requesting input from students, business people and residents on such problems as inappropriate noise, rowdiness, trespassing, litter, vandalizing and the like.

Hey UMass, spring is here! Time to go uptown and off campus to party, right? Probably not, according to the non-student residents of Amherst.

The town has set up a commission specifically to deal with issues of student behavior. Some ideas that have been brought up are the earlier closing of downtown bars and businesses, discouraging landlords from renting to students in large, residential areas and contacting UMass about noise and alcohol related behavior.

Basically, the town residents are mad and they are not going to take it anymore. Just recently, the town passes bylaws restricting kegs and last year they eliminated the bus stops on Fearing Street. All of this was done without a word from students, except after the fact.

Now the town is giving you a chance to have your voice heard in an open meeting.

Students should be there in force, especially those students that live in residential areas and complexes. Your neighbors are complaining about you. As a matter of fact, the Select Board and the Peace and Quiet Commission have been hearing numerous complaints about students all year. It is no wonder why they pass laws which then restrict our life-styles and privileges, because they do not even hear the student viewpoint.

So, what are you going to do, UMass, when the town of Amherst screws you once again: Bitch and moan after it happens or GO TO THE MEETING AND GET YOUR VOICE HEARD. I choose the latter.

Abysmal turnout for workshop

I'm pissed off. I'm pissed off because instead of attending a workshop on date rape (sponsored by the Everywoman's Center), I have to spend my evening writing a letter addressing the fact that a low turnout necessitated the workshop being cancelled. Three people turned up for this workshop on date rape. Three, out of a student body of 26,000. Three students care enough about this issue to come to a forum where they can learn more about it, and perhaps discover what part they can take in doing something about it.

I asked myself what this abysmal turnout indicates. Was the event not well publicized? Did people plan on going but backed out at the last minute because of other commitments? Or are we a campus of self-centered zombies, living in denial of the violence that occurs every day, violence that hurts not only women, but men also?

In my professional work I do therapy with adolescents who have abused themselves or others; i.e., suicidal attempts, drug/alcohol dependency, sexual/physical assault. By the time they finally deal with their issues in a therapeutic setting, they are in deep pain, having 15 years of unlearning to do before they can treat themselves and others with respect and love.

How are children supposed to know what is acceptable, responsible behavior when we adults are failing to guide them and teach them how to treat themselves and each other with respect? How can I lead my women's group with dignity and tell a group of angst-ridden teenage girls that adults do care about the reality of how human beings are treating each other, when only three on a campus of 26,000 — and that is only students — care enough about violence against women to take two hours out of their week to become more educated about it?

How can we educate children of we fail to take responsibility for educating ourselves? Children are smart; they can learn by watching adults. If we don't give a crap, they won't give a crap. And they will continue to abuse themselves, drop out of school, and shoot each other in the streets (or in the school cafeteria, playground, home . . .) And they'll believe we don't care.

I don't want this letter to be dismissed by jaded Collegian readers as just-another-feminist-spouting-her-rage. Yes, I am a feminist, but this issue is not about feminism. This is about human beings denying how much we are hurting each other, about people not caring about it, people too afraid to look at it. Folks, we have to look at ourselves. Rape, which is about power and violence, happens in this culture; it is estimated that one out of three women will be sexually assaulted in her lifetime. This monster won't go away by our pretending it's not there. We need to take responsibility for what's going on and stop being so afraid of it. Otherwise, we are only serving to raise another generation of scared, self-centered zombies who have learned how to act out of fear and not out of love.

AIDS is real for all of us

It was just a few months ago, one of those days you can remember where you were — and how you felt, when you heard the news.

I was in my friends dorm room and a news update told me of Magic Johnson's positive HIV test. I felt sick. I had always been a hoop fan and he is one of the most talented athletes in the game. I had hoped never to feel that way again, but somehow I knew I would.

David Rivera

Growing up in the metro Boston area in the 1970s was to say the least tough. Kids had choices to make and so did I. I grew up in a neighborhood where those similar choices had to be made and that's when you hope someone will take the time and guide you down the right and honest paths.

When I turned nine, at my insistent request, my mom gave me a tennis racket and from that moment on I was hooked. This country club sport would change my life. I became a tennis fanatic absorbing everything I could about the sport. Whether it was TV, magazine, or instructional books, it didn't matter I devoured anything and thus tennis became my religion; with every religion comes a God.

Arthur Ashe in the tennis world was my God. Not many tennis folk of the Becker-generation would remember him, but those who do remember one of the most gifted and graceful players of the art that to which not many have compared. Ashe came into professional tennis in the transition stage of the open era, which allowed professionals to play for the national titles of the world. Arthur Ashe entered his first U.S. Open in 1968 as an amateur and won, refusing to accept the prize money, he displayed one of the noblest acts ever made by a professional athlete. He wanted to give something back to the sport that he himself loved so much and he did — he gave it class.

In 1975 Arthur Ashe would reach the pinnacle of the tennis world by defeating the then youngster Jimmy Connors for the Wimbledon title. Years later, as a young kid learning the sport, I saw a video of that match and not soon after that I was fortunate enough to meet and receive instructions from Mr. Ashe at an inner-city tennis camp.

For me he was larger than life. I was a scrawny little kid with no back-court strength. He immediately saw this told me I should serve and volley. From that moment on I became, as he was, a serve and volley player.

For me, tennis was not a country club sport. It was a catalyst for me in learning about the world and the people in it. If it not for my involvement in tennis I'm sure I wouldn't be in college and it was role models like Arthur Ashe that inspired me to do and achieve my best.

I was in the Top of the Campus lounge the other evening and that feeling that I hoped would never return came back tenfold. Arthur Ashe in an emotional press conference announced he was HIV positive.

At that moment I immediately knew how Magic Johnson's fans felt. It was a moment of both sadness and helplessness, how could this happen? Why did it happen?

It was then, even before the news report was over, that I realized it didn't matter how or why but just that it did happen because AIDS, in one way or an other, is effecting everyone.

This plague of the 20th century is creeping closer and closer to your door. Eventually, and I guarantee, one of your idols will join the growing ranks, and then we will have shared in that sick feeling.

But realize; it doesn't stop there, because I'm sure within the next few years someone close to me will also join those ranks and I'm equally sure someone close to you, be it a friend or family member.

Continuing to place AIDS victims in different categories will just feed the problem and add to the suffering. The questions shouldn't be how and why did he or she get it, but how can we help and why don't we help? These are the true questions we need to ask.

AIDS is real, it's near— very near, and if Gods can catch it, so can you.

Washington bus used to party

It has been brought to our attention that certain individuals used the bus down to Washington as their own personal partying space, unbeknownst to UMass POWER. As an organization, we do not condone this behavior and apologize for those whose rudeness and disrespect affected others. We understand that some are happy with the way things turned out and hope those people will separate the actions of individuals from the credibility of an organization. We'd appreciate any feedback on the trip so as to improve for the future. Criticism and compliments are welcome and can be left in an envelope on our bulletin board — 306 Student Union.

UMass POWER

Nuclear power rules, and we need it on this campus

Yes, yes y'all, it's time to get back to some real editorializing, and today's topic is nuclear power. Let me say that I am strongly in favor of nuclear power as the energy source of the future, and that opponents of nuclear power have had their heads up their rears for so long, they aren't smelling daisies.

In fact, I'll go a step further and say that we should build a nuclear power plant on the campus of UMass-Amherst, but more on that later.

Let's think about nuclear power for a few moments. First of all, it is an product of American craftsmanship. We invented and developed it first, yet another example of the high quality of American workers.

Secondly, we all know as a fact that nuclear power is the cleanest, most efficient energy available at present. It is the energy source of the future. The alternatives don't add up.

I don't feel like wasting American money, giving it to another country for crude oil. As historians all know, the OPEC folks are the only people that are crude, holding up the world, gauging prices, and killing people for the "liquid gold."

Which leads us to the another form of energy: coal. Yeah, maybe 200 years ago, but the 1990s are the age of fast food, fast cars, fast women and fast sexually transmitted diseases.

Coal takes too much time and effort to mine and it is filthy. Nuclear power, on the other hand, is a clean source of energy, as its waste is safely shipped off to outer space.

On the other hand, if we do stop producing coal as an energy source the towns of Lowell, Worcester and Lawrence will go bankrupt. Oh, you say they already are?

Natural gas. How could anybody suggest that natural gas is a better energy form than nuclear power? Natural gas is what happens when you eat one too many chicken burritos.

Michael Morrissey

Anyway, my favorite form of energy to ridicule is solar power. Solar energy is not feasible. People who say, "No Nukes! Solar power now!" are the same people who smoke dope and stare at the damn Sun until they go blind. Yeah, dummy, the Sun is powerful.

Let me take a moment to describe those who criticize nuclear power endlessly, yet don't have an alternative. The morons in Northeastern Massachusetts complain that a power plant in another state (Seabrook, N.H.) doesn't have an adequate evacuation plan.

These people are stupid for three reasons: A) There has never ever ever been a core meltdown in the history of the United States, which is the way that people would be exposed to radioactive substances;

B) It isn't their business, and they should've butted out and let Seabrook operate a long time ago;

C) "What do we do in the case of a meltdown?" Duh. Try getting in your cars and driving 90 miles an hour in the opposite direction. Is that an adequate enough evacuation plan?

Then there are the natives of Plymouth, Mass., home of the Pilgrim nuclear power plant. The people of Plymouth have unsuccessfully tried for years now to link a high cancer rate with the power plant. Unfortunately, these squid-eating liberals are probably getting cancer from devouring the fish that swam down from the polluted Boston Harbor!

The locals around here terrorize Yankee Rowe and its employees through their media propaganda. The oldest and safest nuclear power plant in the nation had to shut down a few months back because critics complained of a brittle core.

Because these people shut down Yankee Rowe, I propose we open up a new nuclear power plant on this campus. Think of the infinite possibilities. It could fuel not only the campus, but most of Western Mass also.

We could replace the old Physical plant with a modern, energy-churning architectural masterpiece that all students could rally around. Nuclear is beautiful and we need it as part of a plan to make UMass better. After all, a world-class university should have a world-class energy source running it, right?

Bloom: Pretentious

By ALYSSA MARCHESE
Collegian Correspondent

The dubious title of singer-songwriter can sometimes conjure up images of the smarmy, schlocky, emotionally crippled performer, hell-bent on sharing his/her embarrassingly confessional vision with the world. The initial onslaught of singer-songwriters arrived in the early 70s, amid the fallout of 1960s tumult. Pop and rock music lost much of its nerve and safety became the order of the day, producing such edgeless artists as Jackson Browne, Cat Stevens and James Taylor. But singer-songwriters don't have to be duller than butter knives. Case in point: Luka Bloom.

Bloom, an acoustic folk-rock balladeer and native of County Kildare, Ireland, has teeth which enable him to bite through many of the unctuous elements so often a part of the singer-songwriter genre. You can chalk it up to the stereotype of that ever-present with the Irish are so famous for, or point a finger at genetics: Bloom (born Barry Moore) is the youngest brother of Ireland's reigning king of folk music, Christy Moore.

Bloom came to the United States in 1987 after several failed attempts to break through the often clogged arteries of the Irish rock and roll scene. He created his alias on the plane ride to Washington D.C., and with a little help from Suzanne Vega and James Joyce, his new persona was born. "I wanted to find a name that was pretentious as possible," Bloom said in a recent Rolling Stone interview. "One that had a sense of New York and Dublin."

Word of Bloom's talent spread quickly after a few months of club dates in and around D.C. Steady gigs in New York and Boston ensued, followed by tours with the Pogues and Hothouse Flowers.

His latest release, The Acoustic Motorbike, wobbles on a curious path between Dublin and New York. Some cuts reflect a deeper immersion in the muck and mire of Bloom's motherland, while others are decidedly American; namely a rendition of Elvis Presley's "Can't Help Falling in Love" and a seductively breathy cover of rapper L.L. Cool J's "I Need Love."

Bloom is a brash and passionate live performer, cocky and sure-footed almost to the point of arrogance. Some swear by him, some swear at him, but either way, its hard to deny that the guy is no mumbling, mamby-pamby singer-songwriter.

Luka Bloom will appear at the Iron Horse in Northampton on Monday, April 13, at 7 p.m. Tickets are $12.50, and the show is all ages.

April 6-7

Click your heels three times and you'll go home. . .In your dreams you'll find you're not alone — Cris Williamson, "Surrender Dorothy."

Cris Williamson, Olivia Records' most successful lesbian folk artist, Monday night wooed a packed house with her incredible vocals, demonstrating once again why she has reigned supreme in women's music for over 20 years, producing 11 successful LP's, including her landmark 1975 Changer and the Changed.

She shared the stage with Tret Fure, an extremely dynamic singer-songwriter who has produced three albums and plays electric and acoustic guitar.

Their two-hour double set, filled with lively and humorous song intros, included many anecdotes about Williamson and Fure's midwestern country childhoods that allowed listeners to feel a deeper connection with the music and the artists.

Williamson opened the night with "Shooting Star" off Changer and the Changed. She followed with "Surrender Dorothy" off her 1982 Blue Rider album, a song Williamson said was about "being out in the plains of Kansas, feeling the great space around you, it can evoke a sense of loneliness."

Williamson instantly created a rapport with her audience that deepened throughout the night, as she opened herself up to her listeners, sharing bits of personal history, including a confession of shyness around audiences.

Williamson described her simple country upbringing in Wyoming, "where our running water was a creek, my mom made bread every day, and we had no electricity."

"It really was paradise, I know it was," Williamson said, "because there were no people there. So you see, I'm still not used to human ways. . . I still tend to kick sometimes, so if you sneak up on me and I react, please understand that's the way I was brought up."

Fure, who has produced three albums, sang "Against the Grain," a song about family farmers going bankrupt, as well as a moving song about her father, called "My Father's Hands" that referred to her family's Iowa farming roots. Fure's numbers also included her ever popular "Tight Black Jeans" off Edges of the Heart (1986) and "That side of the Moon" from Terminal Hold (1984).

Williamson and Fure recently returned from a six-week tour in Russia, where Williamson said they performed at a number of Folk and Bluegrass festivals. Fure said "One of the reasons we went over was to see if the music could translate — with Cris' voice, the emotions, even without the language."

Fure said they discovered their music could be appreciated by a Russian audience. "It was an amazing thing to see how they were moved by Cris' voice, as if they had heard an angel."

"We were the first women performers to come to Russia without a man," Fure added, evoking chuckles from the predominantly female audience. "They thought that was pretty amazing — of course, we do that all the time."

Williamson proved she has overcome her shyness with audiences, conveying a relaxed gentleness and warm humor that made Monday night at the Iron Horse one to remember. Gifted with one of the finest voices in women's music, her ability to connect with her audience added extra depth to her performance. At 45, Williamson has fully come into her own.

Gymnasts at NCAA Regionals

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

This Saturday, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics squad (10-7) will travel to Penn State for the NCAA Northeast Regionals for its season finale.

UMass is coming off a strong showing at the Atlantic-10 championships on March 28 when it placed fourth behind three tough teams -- West Virginia, George Washington and Temple. Only two points separated the top five finishers.

"That was very tough competition we faced [at the A-10's]," UMass coach Alfie Mitchell said. "Our goal at that meet was to look good and to have a high qualifying score for regionals this weekend. I think we accomplished both those things."

The Minutewomen will be ranked fifth at the regionals behind powerhouses Penn State and Ohio State as well as New Hampshire and Temple. Kent State and Rhode Island are the sixth and seventh seeds, respectively.

Earlier in the season, UMass beat UNH (then the No. 2 seed in the Northeast) 186.2-185.4, but then lost to it in a quad meet over spring break, 188.55-186.45. In the quad meet, the Minutewomen also lost to top-ranked Penn State as the Nittany Lions scored a whopping 194.75 points.

Against Rhode Island, UMass lost in an early season meet by a mere 5/100 of a point (179.25-179.30). The second meeting, at Rhode Island, resulted in a victory for UMass. Temple has been somewhat of a nemesis for the Massachusetts gymnasts all season long as its dropped two to the Lady Owls, most recently at the A-10 tourney (189.45-189.40).

UMass has not yet faced Ohio or Kent State this season.

A likely key performer for UMass will be junior Tammy Marshall who has broken virtually every school and individual record this past season.

She led the team in the floor routine (9.8, set earlier this year), in the balance beam (9.75 — a notoriously weak team event all season), in the uneven bars (9.6), in the vault (9.8) and in the all- around with an impressive 38.8.

Sophomore Margaret Furtado, sophomore Angela Gent, freshman Gina Demeo and senior Kim Grady, who was hobbled by an early season foot injury, also will be important to UMass' chances.

So far this season, UMass has yet to break the 190-point barrier. Mitchell would like nothing better than to end the season by doing so.

MR. REDFERN? THIS IS TY SIMPKIN. I'M WITH THE BROWN DAILY HERALD. I'M NOT EXACTLY SURE WHAT MY TITLE IS HERE, BUT I'M PRETTY HIGH UP.
UH-HUH. WHAT CAN I DO FOR YOU, TY?
WELL, FIRST, I WANTED TO THANK YOU FOR YOUR PIECE TODAY!
UH... HAVE YOU READ IT? IT'S A PRETTY CRITICAL LOOK AT BROWN.
SURE, BUT THE IMPORTANT THING IS YOU TAKE HIM SERIOUSLY NOW! YOU'VE PLUGGED INTO JERRY'S CONSCIOUSNESS, ALLOWING OTHERS TO ACCESS HIS MESSAGE!
IF YOU SAY SO.
ANYWAY, WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE A STATE CO-ORDINATOR?
FOR WHICH JERRY?

HEY DAD, WOULD YOU GET YOUR HEAD STUCK IN A BOWLING BALL? HA!
NEXT TIME, I'LL SQUIRT THEM BOTH WITH MY WATER BOTTLE.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

Last night Mr. Peterson was standing on my back, kneeding me with her paws.
I was trying to fall asleep, but she was too distracting.
Finally she sat at my feet and fell asleep.
I must have, too, because that's the last thing I remember.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

I went to the bookstore today to find a book to read.
I couldn't find anything that I felt like reading.
while I was walking home I noticed a torn piece of newspaper on the sidewalk.
I stood there for a while and read it.

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

"Holy cow! What's gotten into our La-Z-Boy?"

Quote of the Day

"I hate overheards. Everybody knows it's just the crap we talk about around the office."
– Overheard

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do a favor for someone who has helped you in the past. Your mate will be sympathetic to your needs. Trust your sympathetic intuition implicitly. An old flame could re-enter your social sphere.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your travel plans may be subject to another person's whims. Learn how to relax and let go. A missing link will be found. Control your temper when around people who try your patience.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Share a confidence with friends you can trust and rely on. Your powers of persuasion are at a peak; favors come easily. Words from afar inspire you when you need encouragement most.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You will profit from assisting those who work behind the scenes. VIPs may be more helpful than usual. Tasks you handle personally will be appreciated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finding out what family members expect of you will help you get back on track. This is not the day to break new ground in career matters. Listen attentively when around teen-agers.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although tedious tasks could leave you feeling hemmed in, it pays to keep your nose to the grindstone. A romantic interlude helps brighten your day.

LIBRA (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Now is not the time to get even with someone. Spend some time out of the spotlight, away from recent pressures. Meditation will bring helpful new insights. Follow up on a hunch.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You rank high on the popularity chart today. Influential people go to bat for you. Joining a special group will help you to achieve many of your goals. Romance begins to hum.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Behind closed doors, you and a VIP could hit it off superbly. Charitable acts could make you a star. Keep a juicy secret to yourself. Your discretion will be richly rewarded later on.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could be swept away by a powerful emotion. Know when to stop. Someone very special will enter your life soon. Be certain of your feelings before making a commitment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Expend your energies wisely, veering away from controversial situations or sensitive subjects. Clean up your desk before leaving the office so you can start the next work week fresh.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Let go of old grudges and concentrate on your long-term goals. Your attitude has a lot to do with how family members get along today. Love and marriage are on a happier course.

Softball splits twinbill with UConn

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The battle for regional softball supremacy will live to see another day as the University of Massachusetts and the University of Connecticut split a doubleheader yesterday at Totman Field.

The Huskies took the first game, 2-0, and the Minutewomen bounced back to take second, 1-0.

UMass, 15-8 overall, 4-0 in the Atlantic 10 and ranked 19th in the country, entered yesterday's contests on a 12-game winning streak. UConn, 16-6, arrived on a 10-game streak of its own.

UConn sent Kim Mizesko to the mound in the first game and the senior hurler held the Minutwomen to four hits with a variety of breaking balls mixed with some good heat.

Darlene Claffey and the University of Massachusetts softball team split a double-header yesterday with the University of Connecticut.

In the bottom of the first, UMass' Barbara Marean singled down the left field line to extend her hitting streak to 19 games. Sherri Kuchinskas then reached base on a throwing error by UConn's third baseman Chris Woodman, but both runners were stranded as Peggy Bush struck out to end the threat.

The Huskies' Kim Staehle reached base on a throwing error by Marean in the top of the second, and went to second on a single by Woodman. Staehle was forced out at third and UMass pitcher Kelly Daut fanned Khristen Andrade to end the inning.

Mizesko (10-2) settled down, recording outs on 12 of the next 13 UMass batters. She finished with seven strikeouts and no walks.

"Kim's our top pitcher and really mixes [her pitches] well," said UConn coach Karen Mullins. "She's a real veteran, and any time she takes the mound we know we have a good chance coming away with a win."

Daut (4-5) wasn't tested again until the fourth as UConn loaded the bases on a single up the middle by shortstop Donna Fagan, a botched fielder's choice on a grounder by Staehle and a single by Andrade. Daut then got Michele Santo to hit into a inning-ending pop-up.

UConn scored in the top of the fourth on a single by Shari Blackman, a groundout and a throwing error by Marean.

Marean had a chance to tie the score in the bottom of the sixth. She laced a single to right-center and the ball went to the fence as centerfielder Venice and rightfielder Andrea D'Innocenzo collided. Marean rounded third and was signaled to stop by third base coach Gina LaMandre, but when the relay throw was dropped she broke for home and was thrown out easily.

UConn added another run in the seventh on a triple to left by Janna Venice and a single by Blackman.

In the second game, UMass pitcher Holly Aprile tossed a five-hit shutout, recording eight groundball outs, striking out three and walking none. She did not allow a runner to third base and has now won five in a row, increasing her record to 5-1.

UMass scored the only run it would need in the fifth. Aprile reached first on an infield hit and hustled to second when the throw from Fagan eluded Staehle. UMass third baseman Stacy Lawson then sacrificed Aprile to third. Marean stepped to the plate and ripped single down the third base line, scoring Aprile and stretching her hitting streak to 20 games.

"When you're playing a team with two good pitchers facing each other," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino, "you know it's going to come down to a mistake. A team is not likely to string together three or four hits in a row to get the run in. It's going to come down to defense.

"It's early in the year still," she said. "We've probably got 50 percent of our schedule left. We're going to see these guys a bunch more times. I'm sure we'll have many opportunities to see who is better than who."

GAME NOTES - The Minutewomen travel to St. Bonaventure (0-7, 0-2) today for tomorrow's A-10 doubleheader against the Lady Bonnies.

Lord Jeffs' baseball wins battle of Amherst

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

With five-straight wins under its belt and the Lord Jeffs of Amherst College coming to Earl Lorden Field, the University of Massachusetts baseball team could have all but planned on extending its streak to six.

University of Massachusetts pitcher Daryle Corriveau allowed five runs in four innings in the Minutemen's 6-1 loss yesterday against Amherst College.

The only problem was someone forgot to tell the Lord Jeffs as they spoiled UMass' plan for victory, 6-1, at Lorden Field on Thursday.

Amherst mustered seven hits off Minutemen pitching, but capitalized on the overall sloppy play of the Minutemen, who walked five while committing two errors.

"Things didn't go our way," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We didn't hit and we didn't get people out. I guess they just came to play."

Amherst got on the scoreboard first as John Couture touched up Minuteman starting pitcher Daryle Corriveau (0-2) for a solo shot to right-center, putting the Lord Jeffs up 1-0.

From there, things got ugly for the Minutemen as Amherst would score two second inning runs off just one hit.

Corriveau led off the inning by walking David George before plunking Amherst's Bob Mason to put runners on first and second with no outs.

Amherst coach Bill Thurston opted for the sacrifice bunt as Chris Torino laid down a perfect bunt, advancing George and Mason while being nipped at first on a perfect throw by Minuteman third baseman Kevin Correa.

Facing the Lord Jeffs' Dave Kearn, Corriveau threw a pitch five feet over UMass catcher Michael Kersten's head, scoring George, before Kearn singled home Mason, making the score 3-0 after two innings.

The Minutemen put runners on first and second with one out in the third before Howard's screamer was snared by Torino at short, who started a tailor-made 6-4-3 double play to end the innning.

Torino's play seemed to spark the Lord Jeffs, who reached Corriveau for three singles in the fourth while putting the game out of reach, 5-1.

Once again, George reached on a Corriveau walk, reached second on a Mason single before Thurston again signaled for a Torino sacrifice.

This time, Torino laid down an ineffective bunt, but was called out for stepping out of the batter's box. Corriveau struck out Kearn for the second out and appeared on the way out of the inning before Amherst's Brian Harrigan stepped to the plate.

Harrigan roped a single which got past Howard in left field, plating George and Mason for two more Amherst runs.

UMass finally got on the board in the seventh, courtesy of a Stephan Rapaglia wild pitch for the Minutemen's lone run.

Keith Richards and Bill Knight led off the inning with singles and were advanced on a perfectly placed bunt by Correa.

Richards scored on Rapaglia's wild pitch while Knight was stranded on third as pinch hitters Jeff January and Jay Dodig were set down by Rapaglia, ending the threat.

Amherst iced it in the eighth, scoring its run on George's fourth walk, a Rob Graziano error and a groundout by Torino, for the 6-1 final.

Game Notes - Our apologies to freshman pitcher Ronely Rivera whose picture appeared in our Thursday edition. The caption listed the player as Jody Sammarco, when in fact it was Rivera, who picked up his first collegiate win over Springfield, 14-

Banquet recaps season

Seniors honored, Williams captures MVP award

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Over 500 fans and supporters of the University of Massachusetts basketball team packed the Campus Center Auditorium last night for a season-ending dinner.

The event, sponsored by the Minutemen Court Club, featured a dinner, an awards presentations, a season recap highlight film and some humorous moments, courtesy of Head Coach John Calipari.

Calipari spent the evening recalling some lighter moments from the early days of the program while teasing his players.

"We have obviously come a long way in four years," Calipari said. "I remember back in my first year, I didn't think we'd make it this far. In the Southern Connecticut game, the Cage scoreboard blew up. Back then we had squirrels and birds living in the Cage. I kept a spare ball nearby during practice, so if I saw the squirrel, I'd stop practice and try hit him with it.

"Back then if the ball went into the stands during a game, a player would have to go fetch it. It's good not to forget what it was like because we don't want to go back."

Calipari and the team sat at the head table up on a stage facing the crowd. Noticeably absent was freshman guard Michael Williams. Thirteen different awards were handed out including Most Valuable Player to Harper Williams, the Coaches Award to Francois Firmin and the Most Productive Player Award to Tony Barbee.

The players took the opportunity to present Calipari with an award — a clipboard Calipari apparently splintered earlier in the year at Rhode Island.

Jim McCoy, after giving Calipari the clipboard, now reassembled and on a plaque, remarked, "he's threatened me with it many times. I'm glad I'm gone and I don't have to worry about it anymore."

Harper Williams also took time out of his MVP acceptance speech to mention Calipari's somewhat-volitile side.

"I'd like to thank Coach Cal for yelling at me everyday, even when he didn't have to. I guess it is a tough habit to break," Williams said.

Calipari gave special recognition to each senior on the team, thanking them for taking a chance on UMass. He also pointed out the fact that eight of the last eight UMass players have graduated and all four of this year's seniors should do likewise.

Calipari made numerous references to the resigning of his contract as the UMass head coach.

"My wife loves it in this area and she was adamant about staying," Calipari said. "She said, if I was going to go to a few of those other schools, I was going to be going alone. Actually, the reason I stayed was not money, it was that I felt obligated to stay because I promised Tony Barbee and Harper that I'd be here for their four years. I didn't want to tell the Chancellor that because I wanted

Libya to cut off contact with world

By NEJLA SAMMAKIA
Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya — Libya announced Sunday it will sever all contact with the outside world for the 24 hours before U.N. sanctions take effect in a confrontation over the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103.

Arab leaders, meanwhile, continued efforts to find a way to head off the sanctions, which would include embargoes on arm sales and commercial air traffic with Libya.

The official JANA news agency distributed a statement saying Libya would cut off all international travel and communication links Tuesday as a sign of mourning for a 1986 air strike that killed 41 Libyans.

The U.N. Security Council has given Libya until Wednesday, the sixth anniversary of the air raid, to surrender two alleged intelligence agents. They are charged with the bombing of a New York-bound jet in 1988 over Lockerbie, Scotland, that killed 270.

Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi apparently chose to observe the air raid anniversary a day early avoiding the U.N. sanctions overshadowing his gesture.

The Security Council is demanding Libya surrender the two Lockerbie suspects for trial in the United States or Britain ad produce proof it has renounced all forms of terrorism.

The council also wants Tripoli to cooperate with France in trying four other Libyans accused of killing 171 people in the 1989 bombing of a French airliner over Niger.

Libya has agreed only to turn over the Lockerbie suspects to a neutral country — an offer rejected by the West.

Mullins a 'hot spot' for '93 solar project

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is going to be a 'hot spot' in the center of the solar energy boom in the United States, according to a UMass mechanical engineering professor.

Dr. Edward Sunderland said last week that the largest solar energy project for heating buildings in this country will begin construction on the UMass campus in the spring of 1993.

"We started to study sites around the states in 1988. We chose UMass because they were building the arena and we could, therefore, work with those constructing the structure to build our project to taste," he said .

This project, Central Solar Heating Plant with Seasonal Storage, will be used to heat the Mullins Arena and Boyden Gym through the use of hot water, which will be heated by the sun's energy. If there is a shortage of solar power, both buildings will have a back-up to the old system of steam.

This operation will be able to give out 3,500 megawatt per hour, which is enough to heat more than 150 homes. A buffer tank will hold the heat, gathered from the solar panels, that will go to plastic U-shaped tubes.

One hundred feet under the ground, the U-tubes will circulate the water heated by solar energy. Then, as needed, the hot water will be distributed to the two buildings or circulated through the U-Tubes.

The clay surrounding the U-Tubes will act as a heat storage system, since it is not porous enough for water to flow through. In the winter the clay will deliver heat ; in the summer it will absorb energy in the panels. The clay will lose 20 percent of the heat.

The solar panels and the U-Tubes will be located between Route 116, the water treatment plant, and Massachusetts Avenue. The project will take up six to eight acres of land.

"If later on they want to put something on that land like a building, they can remove the panels and put them on the roof or move them elsewhere. The system will still work," he said.

"We are going through a very careful environmental impact statement. Wet land determination and environmental impact studies are in process," said Sunderland.

They will use a biodegradable non-toxic anti-freeze. The temperature will be higher near the storage tank's edges.

"It won't be as warm as a steam vent," said Sunderland.

Because of this project, jobs will be created and UMass will save money in the future, he said.

"No way would we ask UMass to give money, especially during these difficult financial times. We are being funded by federal, state, and private sources," said Sunderland.

The project is going to cost about $4 million to construct.

He said, "in Sweden they have about eight projects like the one we are going to have here. Other countries such as Canada, the United Kingdom, and Denmark have these systems. The United States is the only country that does not have a big solar system out of the International Energy Agencies."

A place to call home

Jewish community offers unique living

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

For nearly 20 students at the University of Massachusetts, the Jewish Living Community is the place they call home.

Located on the top floor of the recently-refurbished Hillel House on the corner of North Pleasant and Phillips Streets, the JLC provides students with a unique community living experience that is rich in Jewish culture.

"It's a fun place to live," said Rachel Grose, a junior art major and JLC resident of three semesters. "It's a strong community, a family-type environment where you feel comfortable and welcome."

Students living in the JLC come from all over the United States and from all different corners of the world. Their Jewish backgrounds are diverse as well, from religiously observant to secular.

Not all students are Jewish, however. Some Christian students choose to live in the JLC as a way to learn more about another religion and culture.

A place with a strong sense of community, residents get together for Friday night dinners, study breaks, community meetings or just watching a video.

"It's a great place to meet people," said Tom Bales, one of the few graduate students in the JLC. "I like just being able to come home and relax in a Jewish community and rejuvenate. And our community Friday night dinners are a nice way to end the week."

Along with the family-type atmosphere, JLC residents enjoy carpeted, well-furnished rooms, a kitchenette and parking.

"It's a lot nicer than the dorms, a great location," said Josh Krancer, a senior political science major. "It feels like a community house. It makes it really nice to go downstairs and get involved in activities."

Lisa Katz, a sophomore microbiology major describes the JLC as "a mid-point between a dorm room and an apartment. You get the best of both worlds, you're living independently without being suffocated by dorm rules yet you have the best parts of the social life in the dorms."

The Hillel House was born out of an initial interest on the part of Jewish students to have a place to gather, socialize and call their own. Currently in its third year, it is unique in its multi-faceted components. In addition to its residential area, Hillel also houses the Center for Jewish Studies and holds events and programs in Digital Underground at Pearl St.

BY P. RIBEIRO
Collegian Correspondent

Digital Underground has emerged as one of urban contemporary music's premier artists. The group is a music organization, containing imput from lyricists, producers, DJs, Jazz/funk musicians, artists and performers.

Digital Underground is a music organization with members nationwide, but based in Oakland, Calif. They have been a success of popular music due to their stylish blend of hip-hop and R&B styles that attracts Rap, R&B, and Top 40 fans alike ("Chocolate Crossover").

The group utilizes sex charm, humor, jazzy pianos, and funky styles of vocals and chorus. Their sound is club-and-funk-oriented. They seem to have inherited the tradition of 70s groups like Parliment/Funkadelic.

In their latest album, "Son's of the P(arliment)," they collaborated with producer George Clinton, creating a distinct sound shaped from the 70s funk movement. Digital Underground and George Clinton, are self-proclaimed clones of "Dr. Funkenstein."

The supergroup has a range of talent, spin-off groups (Gold Money, Raw Fusion), solo careers (2 PaC,MC Clever and Schoovy Schoov), and many producers. The most visible members are: "Shock G" — veteran musician/leader; "Humpty Hump"—flamboyant/comedic rapper; "Money B" — charming sex rapper, also of Raw Fusion; and "Piano Man" — jazz musician, keyboardists.

Digital Underground made it's first appearance on the music scene with "Doowhatyalike," "The Humpty Dance" established them as a respected hip hop group and their debut album "Sex Packets" went platinum. "This is an EP Release" with "Same Song" followed up and went gold and made them contenders in the music business. Their music is a culmination of rough street beet jams with funk and jazzy dance flavored music.

Their latest album "Sons of the P" captures their versatility with R&B raps like "Kiss You Back" to street jams like "No Nose Job." Their music is easy to follow, creative, humorous, and message-filled. Their live show is action-packed to keep the crowd dancing, described as an "incredible street music extravaganza".

Digital Underground is at Pearl St. tonight at 8 p.m.

The most thrilling jump ever

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

As the crane raised me 150 feet toward the cloudy sky and the rain whipped against my face, I trembled with both fear and excitement. I slowly and carefully edged myself out onto the square foot of platform and looked down at the gray and icy water below. Then I jumped.

The bungee cords stopped my fall and shot my out-of-control body back up to the sky and then I plummeted toward the water again. After several more stomach churning bounces I was lowered back to Mother Earth.

"Bungee jumping is like committing suicide and living through it," said Carolyn Tessada, part-owner of Bungee Braves. Bungee jumpers think it's the greatest thing in the world and some even write the company thank you notes for providing them with the experience of bungee-jumping, she said.

Bungee Braves, which is a professional hot air balloon company that has been involved in bungee-jumping for two years, has had jumpers ages 10 to 61 who's professions range from being teachers, doctors, accountants or construction workers, said Michael Tessada, part-owner of Bungee Braves.

"Anybody and everybody jumps. There is no typical type of person who bungee-jumps," he said.

A paraplegic person jumped and had a great time, she said. "To watch him jump was a very emotional experience that made me feel like crying," she said.

People watch bungee-jumping and are excited to try it, but when they are actually up on the platform they are petrified, said Michael. Only two people out of the thousands of people that have jumped with Bungee Braves, he said, have refused to jump.

"People are happier than hell when they jump because they feel like they have accomplished something," said Mr. Tessada, who also has been involved with hot air ballooning for 10 years.

After jumping people are usually disappointed because they don't know what to do with themselves for the rest of the week, he said. "Everything people do seems so anti-climactic compared to bungee-jumping."

People jump to overcome their fear of heights, said Mrs. Tessada, who describes herself as a hippie-turned-capitalistic-pig. "If a person afraid of heights jumps enough I believe they will get over their fear."

"We sell controlled fear," she said. Once people get a taste of this fear they go on to do skydiving, hang-gliding and parasailing, she said.

Mr. Tessada said no one has ever gotten sick, fainted or died during the jump. He said they have both researched bungee-jumping for six months and are the only bungee-jumping company in New England approved by

Addressing the body undressed

By KATE CHAMBERLIN
Collegian Correspondent

"Every person in this is room is alive," began last Monday night's event at Hampshire College called "The Body Thing." Their point was driven home a little more because the two students, a male and a female, were stark naked.

After their initial embarrassment, the two students gathered enough courage to display their bodies to the packed audience at Franklin Patterson lecture hall and even do a cartwheel.

After somebody in the audience yelled out, "You have a beautiful body!" the two received a standing ovation for their performance, the first of many during the evening.

"The Body Thing" was an event designed by Hampshire College students and health educators to address problems of body image, eating disorders and fat oppression.

"These are all major concerns on this campus so we thought about ways we could talk about them in a safe forum," says co-coordinator Myra Edelstein, a health educator at Hampshire College and University Health Services.

Fiona Hollins touched many more people in the audience with her essay called "A Testimony of My Belly."

"This is my round belly that sticks out farther than my breasts," she read while standing in a bikini. In a black body pen, she had circled her round stomach in order to draw more attention to it.

"The scariest thing was to sit down and write the story," Hollins said. "It was such a rush for me to actually stand up in front of everybody and tell my own story. It was incredible."

Local author Leslea Newman talked about her problems with anorexia nervosa, bulimia, and compulsive eating. She has been recovered for 10 years but shares her experiences in books such as her most recent one, Some Body To Love.

"When there is a $78 billion diet industry in this country but only two to five percent of diets work, there is something very wrong with body image," Newman said. "Eating disorders are symptoms of self-hate but it is our birthright to love our body."

Carrie Hemenway, coordinator of the National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance Feminist Caucus, discussed fat oppression and size discrimination.

"There has been an active movement in this country for the last twenty years discussing these issues but I'm amazed at what I see here tonight," she said. "Discrimination on the basis of health is the last safe form of prejudice."

A Celebration of Men's Bodies allowed the audience to realize this image would not solely focus on women. A Celebration of Men's Bodies gave the men an opportunity to express their feelings of inadequacies while growing up.

Wild Things author remembers childhood

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

In high school, Maurice Sendak had a problem with physics. At the end of World War II, and in return for a passing grade and $100, Sendak illustrated his teacher's book, Atomics For Millions.

Sendak admits "I didn't understand a word," but he graduated, and his career as an illustrator was launched.

Sendak, awarded author and illustrator of children's books, most notably Where the Wild Things Are, told some 400 people in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College Thursday night that therapy was vital for the creation and success of his books.

"Therapy released my childhood memories, and monsters entered my creativity. I advise you all to go to therapy," he said.

Through counseling Sendak was able to focus his memories and find inspiration for his stories and illustrations. Sendak traced the monsters in Where The Wild Things Are directly to his Jewish relatives who came every Sunday to his house.

"They were a gross imposition. They spoke Yiddish, they grabbed you, they lurched at you, they kissed you exactly when you didn't want to be kissed. They said 'You look so good we'll eat you up!'" Sendak said.

Where The Wild Things Are, was published in 1963. It follows the story of a young boy Max, who has a tantrum, and is sent to bed by his mother without supper.

Max uses the resentment he feels for his mother to transport him from his bedroom into the realms of his imagination where monsters roam freely, and where Max is king.

He said critics disliked the book saying, "no mother would speak to her child like that, nor would any child speak to its mother like that."

He recalled his childhood in New York, his family, his neighbors, his experiences and related them directly to the characters or occurrences in his books.

Sendak's second book, 'In the Night Kitchen' published seven years later, was inspired by the author's loss of his parents and with the fact he was going to have to leave New York.

Sendak described the book as being "About New York, and eating New York." He related the book to the days when his sister would take him up-town "to eat non-kosher food, shivering with delight and excitement at what we were doing."

Sendak described illustrating as "very isolating work," accounting for his change of direction some twelve years ago, when he began to design costumes and stage sets for opera and ballet. From his initial success with Mozart's The Magic Flute, Sendak has made this his priority, above children's literature.

the Federal Aviation Administration.

Clay Campbell, a radical bungee-jumper from Hartford who follows Bungee Braves around the Northeast, said, "Bungee-jumping is the ultimate adrenaline rush that puts me on the edge."

Campbell said his trickiest feat is doing four somersaults as he falls 150 feet. "All you think of when your are jumping is this cord better pull me before I hit the ground," he said.

"My ideal jump would be from 300 feet with the bungee cords tied to my ankles so I can splash into the water below and dash out again," said Campbell, who is a 35-year-old accountant.

Bungee-jumping can be done off bridges, hot air balloons and cranes, she said. "Some radical jumpers have even ridden off bridges attached to bicycles and rafts," she said.

a pay raise."

Chancellor Richard O'Brien had spoken to the crowd earlier and promised another successful year. Calipari said, "It's nice to see the Chancellor promise a good season. I guess he's behind you win or tie."

A letter from Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, praising the team was read during the banquet. Kennedy also sent a donation. Another donation of note was one for $10,000 from UMass alumnus and head coach of Kentucky, Rick Pitino.

At the end of Calipari's speech a fan yelled out, "Let's go to New Orleans," referring to the sight of next year's Final Four. Calipari tried to act puzzled, but smiled and quipped back, "What's in New Orleans?"

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

I'll be your mirror

"I'll be your mirror, reflect what you are, in case you don't know." — Lou Reed

That's what I am . . .that's what this page is. A mirror. A reflection, as honest as possible, with as little influence from myself as possible. The disclaimer on the top of the page doesn't say it all, it turns out, and I have been called upon to clarify my philosophy on running the ed/op page.

Apparently, this page has been used, in the past, more 'responsibly', as a vehicle for socially conscious change. Now, I am told, it is a page where anything goes, any opinion is up for digestion (or attack), no matter how vile or bigoted or weird.

I believe in change. The ed/op page certainly is a good indicator for the ever-changing community. But who am I to affect that change? Nobody. I'm just one guy, with opinions of my own that weigh as much (or little) as those of the next guy. Sure, I have politics of my own, who doesn't? But I was told, upon starting this post, to leave them at home when I come in here. Sound advice and the root of what I'm saying. Messing with the natural progress of change would be wrong somehow, not unlike playing God: in other words, it would not be my place.

While there are many special interest pages in this newspaper representing a wide pastiche of communities, their editors have no input to what cannot run on the ed/op page.

If this campus was rapidly growing conservative (or liberal), if there was a raging racist that had a lot to say on my page, if a movement had formed whose platform outraged the masses — who am I to hide these things from you? That would be dishonest and possibly dangerous. Of course anything goes, as long as it is well written and the point well made. If it's really controversial, I'll throw it right in there like a fresh bagel to the pigeons, and smugly watch you fight over it. Anything less is cheating you.

100 percent Black men

"The Black Male is an endangered species?" "Impossible," I say to myself. I am a Black male and I'm doing just fine.

There is, however, a level of exaggerated fact to the notion of Black men as an endangered species. Startling statistics indicate that 25 percent of Black men in the U.S. are either in prison or on probation. The unemployment rate of young Black males is approaching 45 percent. Black fathers are absent in close to 60 percent of Black families. And numerically, there are more Black males in prison than there are in college.

Martin Jones

Nevertheless, another side to this story remains untold. Black men are also successful, educated, family men who continue to make contributions to our society. There are millions of them, and many of them can be found in organizations like the Black Greek Fraternities.

Looking at a membership roster of any of these four nationally-recognized organizations looks like a "Who's Who of Black America." These organizations have been instrumental in training young Black men to take positions of leadership in our society. This semester at UMass a number of Black men were initiated into these fraternities, and I congratulate them all.

Unfortunately, it is the negative images of Black men that continue to be reinforced, presenting a lopsided picture of the actual nature of them. I myself, a Black journalist, also fell into the same trap of reinforcing these stereotypes.

A few weeks ago, while intending to raise the issue of violence on this campus, members of the UMass football team were described as a "gang" of violent Black men, a common stereotype. After attending Chuck D's lecture at the Fine Arts Center, I finally met them face-to-face.

They were highly upset. They said they wished that I had spoken to them first before believing what I had heard around the campus.

Mario Perry, who was one of the three players present, said that he's "watching my back" and should never believe that he would ever hurt me. He even called me his brother and said that he loved me.

I going to take this space to formally apologize to all of the members of the team, including coach Reid. Based upon a personal experience, I know now that the things that people have said about them cannot be entirely true.

This goes to show how I too, a Black male, can be influenced by the negative stereotypes which are also applied to me.

I won't deny the fact there is a severe problem of violence among Black men in the inner cities. I do want to point out that this violence is not in nature of Black men, who like Dr. Martin Luther King, are among the most kind and just people on earth.

We must be reminded of the violence and obstacles that Black men have been confronted with for centuries. Imagine watching your entire family captured in slavery and sold to other men in front of your eyes on an auction block.

Try for one moment to comprehend the reality that your wife is not really your wife, but property of another man who has legal rights to rape, beat, and maim her at will, with yourself powerless to protect her. How you would react to the public lynching of your father, burned at the stake before a crowd of people who took home parts of his body as souvenirs?

Let us not forget that the Black male has been a target for countless crimes of physical and psychological torture. If you want to dispute this claim, make sure you have thoroughly researched the history of this country for the real facts.

The Black male is in a crises, but such a crisis is nothing new. The fact that Black men (and Black people) are still alive and continue to reproduce themselves in such a harsh environment is evidence of our great strength and ability to survive. We've survived 300 years of slavery, lynching and segregation, and we shall survive the present state of affairs. So remember: the Black male is not an endangered species. He's here to stay.

Friend's crisis restores inner peace and trivializes self-pity

You always think your life is the pits — then you meet someone with more problems than you.

A couple weeks ago, everything seemed to be crashing down on me — work, school, relationships and the quest for life after graduation. Maybe others can identify with me on this — especially if the question "So, what are you doing after graduation?" raises the hair on your knuckles.

Then something happened to put everything in perspective.

It was April Fool's Day. A friend called me and told me a woman who used to work with me at the Collegian was in the hospital.

"Sure, what's the joke?" I asked.

Unfortunately, it was no prank. My friend was in Massachusetts General Hospital, and she had a brain tumor.

The last time I heard someone had a brain tumor was my junior year of high school. During soccer tryouts, one of the girls suddenly collapsed — she was dead. Later, the headmaster announced over the intercom that Kelly had a brain tumor. I felt sweaty, nervous and paranoid.

I hadn't seen my friend in the hospital in a few weeks — the last time was at the UMass and West Virginia A-10 championships. We were all anxious and excited — there was nothing wrong.

About a week later, she started having migraines, blackouts and other bad things. She called her mom, who came and picked her up. The cat scan told her doctors there was a tumor. They told her it had to be removed.

Gayle Long

At first, before the operation, she called her friends, others came to visit, and she seemed calm. On the phone the day before the operation, she chatted to me about newspapers, common friends and other stuff — but we did not talk about the operation. But I wanted to ask her — but I was too afraid. God, was I scared.

Thursday night I started to straighten out my own petty problems, and all of a sudden it hit me — my problems are only problems if I let them get to me. I was sick of it — I decided to let go. I told my family how much I loved them, even though they know it.

I decided my new motto about office politics and other bull was "I don't care." This motto is not to say I've given up, but that there are more important things to get upset about. I know now these things are friends, life and happiness. This is what I care about.

The operation was Friday. I went to Mass, and called my friend four times to see if she'd heard anything. Later I learned that after 11 hours of surgery, my friend was recovering in a neurological intensive care unit, but had opened her eyes and spoken to one of the nurses, who got her name wrong. She hates that.

Tuesday, they moved her back into her room, and was up and brushing her teeth. I called her on Thursday, and although there are still some headaches, she is getting better, but she said she's not going anywhere fast. Now that the critical part is over, I'm sure she's going to be all right.

But above all, she can now get on with her life — and so can I. No longer will I take stupid things so seriously — I won't survive if I do.

My trivial neurosis seems so ridiculous now, although when it was happening I thought everything would end. But I knew in my heart that somehow everything would and will work out — including what is going to happen when I graduate.

I know that my friend will be okay — and that I will too. Nothing is as important than being content with yourself and your life. I guess we all have to find ways to do that.

To wipe out the English Only movement, we must start right here

Friday evening, April 10, was very special for the Bilingual community of UMass. Dr. Luis Fuentes was honored for his great contribution to the education of minorities. I was impressed with his achievements as a leader against racism and monolingual education. I admire even more his humility and his plans to continue fighting for the social rights of minorities regarding education. The gratitude of his students and colleagues was evident all night.

I have been witness to realities. On one hand, the reality that is constructed by people who truly believe in social justice and unity, which recognizes both our cultural differences and our commonalities; and on the other hand, a reality constructed by people who try to divide minorities, discriminate, and see enemies in each person or culture that is different. Because I cannot continue to be a passive observer of the destruction of the cultural identity of minorities, I fell compelled to denounce one of the most ironic developments I have ever seen on this campus.

In the face of the brave efforts of the people who are organizing against the English Only movement in Holyoke, the continuous efforts of this University to truly become a multicultural institution, and the struggles of the people who dare to take responsibility for themselves and their communities, comes the irony of an English Only policy in the Multicultural Affairs page of this paper. It is indeed an irony that a person from a minority group promotes this kind of discrimination against minorities.

The Multicultural Affairs Desk has failed to perform responsibly regarding the social, political, economic, and educational problems of minorities, by avoiding these issues. Silence and denial from those who refuse to make a positive and responsible contribution to minority affairs are the dark side of this reality.

I call upon every person in the UMass community (students, professors, etc...) to participate in a dialogue about our social and educational responsibilities regarding this monolingual policy.

Finally, as the students of the distinguished professor Fuentes recalled, his question was always: "what can you do for your community?" Well, What can we do for our communities?.

Lacrosse squeaks by Yale with emotional 8-7 victory

University of Massachusetts attacker Mark Millon (3) led the Gorillas with two goals and two assists in Saturday's 8-7 win over Yale. The match was an upset of sorts, with the 16th-ranked Gorillas toppling the number 12 team, the Eli. The lacrosse squad stands at 4-2 after Saturday's game.

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

If the weather kept any fans away from Richard F. Garber Field Saturday afternoon, they've got themselves to blame because they missed a hell of a lacrosse game.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team parlayed it's best defensive effort of the season, stellar goaltending by Tom LoPresti and a lot of emotion into an 8-7 win over Yale before 600 vocal fans on Garber Field Dedication day. The dedication was made at halftime, as Garber's name now adorns the press box.

The Gorillas (4-2) held 12th-ranked Yale scoreless for a 30 minute stretch covering parts of the first, second and third quarters. During that same span UMass rang up seven consecutive scores, turning a 2-0 deficit into a 7-2 lead.

But Yale was game, and mounted a five-goal second half comeback which came up just short. Brendan Sheehan's hat trick led the way for the Bulldogs while Simon Duxbury added two goals.

But Mike Noonan's second score of the afternoon — a 15-yard crank set up by Mark Millon (2 goals, 2 assists) — proved to be the game-winner as the Gorillas held on to win.

"We got sloppy fundementally," UMass coach Ted Garber said of the second half. "It wasn't anything happening negative as much as [Yale] was fighting for their lives."

Yale had excellent chances to tie the game in the waning moments, but a tremendous save by LoPresti with two minutes remaining and some clutch defense from the likes of Brad Fitts, Kenny Randazzo, Jim Panetta and Corey Cronin kept Yale away from the crease when it counted.

"They were awesome," said UMass coach Ted Garber of his team's defense. "They came up big and played solid lacrosse. That's what it's all about. . .I couldn't have asked for better."

The victory increased UMass' chances of returning to the NCAA Tournament and should push the Gorillas as high as 11th on the next U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll. It also signalled a return to the form the Gorillas exhibited against Hofstra before suffering two disappointing outings against Brown and Providence.

"We got behind 2-0 and didn't give up. That's the greatest thing about the win," said Garber crediting his team's character.

The game also proved that while Dick Garber may have retired two years ago, his influence lives on in more ways than one.

"We brought in my dad Monday to talk to the troops...I think he scared 'em," the younger Garber said. "He just told them he expected more out of them; they were good players and had to have more mental toughness and extra effort."

"And then Tuesday," Garber continued, "Tim Soudan and Tom Carmean asked me 'can we talk to the team?' I stepped aside and they talked about what it meant to cross the white line, to walk on the field as UMass lacrosse players. They talked from the heart as former All-American players. It was unbelievable."

Both teams' emotions carried over to the end of the game, however, and when Yale's Dave Ryan cross-checked a celebrating Millon with time running out, a free-for-all developed in front of the UMass bench. While cooler heads prevailed for the most part, some Yale and UMass players jumped into the crowd and set off about five skirmishes before order was restored.

Two shutouts give baseball team a clean sweep

Villone and Graham allow only three hits combined

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

While Matt Young was busy turning in the gem of the day in the American League, the thirty or so fans who braved the cold at Lorden Field yesterday were treated to a gem of their own.

Ron Villone continued his private assault on opposing hitters, spinning a one-hit, 12 strikeout beauty while leading the University of Massachusetts baseball team to a 5-0 victory over Pace University in game one of Sunday's doubleheader sweep in Amherst.

At first, it appeared it just might not be Villone's day, as the big lefty ran into early inning control problems, before catching fire and cruising to his fifth victory of the season.

"It was rough out their at first," Villone said. "It was cold, and it took me a little while to get going."

Get going he did, setting down twelve in a row in the middle innings and finishing with a flash, striking out the last five batters he faced.

Villone got all the offensive support he needed in the third, when UMass jumped on Pace starter Nicholas Avena for two runs, as Jay Dodig and Greg LaRocca scored on Justin Howard's gapper to make it 2-0.

Pace threw a scare into the Minutemen in the fifth, breaking up Villone's no-hit bid, while loading the bases with one out.

Villone battled back, getting Thomas Raymond to ground out before John Carelli made a fantastic over the shoulder catch on the outfield grass to end the threat.

The Minutemen would ice it in the fifth, tallying three runs while battering Avena around Lorden Field.

Howard doubled with one out, stayed at second when Carelli flied to center, and came home when Steve Corradi belted his third homerun of the season, putting UMass up 4-0. Jeff January made it two in a row for the Minutemen, slamming his first of the year to finish the scoring for UMass.

It would have been nearly impossible to top Villone's performance, but Minuteman righty Rich Graham came awful close, throwing a two-hit, eight strikout second game as UMass rolled to the sweep of Pace, 5-0.

Much like Villone, Graham started slow and finished strong, retiring the last fourteen in a row, while picking up his first win of the season.

"Rich pitched a great game," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We didn't hit the ball great, but we got good defense, and we got good pitching by both guys today."

UMass benefited from three Pace errors, while scoring three unearned runs.

The Minutemen scored two runs in the second, as Lou Oliveri drove in January with a double to right center, and later scored when Greg LaRocca's grounder went through Pace shortstop Ryan Donnelly's legs, making 2-0 UMass.

UMass finished the scoring in the third, scoring three runs, as Pace's defense went south, committing three errors and allowing two unearned runs.

"I thinked we bounced back well [from Thursday's loss], and we game ready to play." Stone said.

Game Notes — Villone has not let up an earned run in 21 straight innings, and 29 of the last thirty. In addition, in his last four starts, Villone has allowed only six hits.

The Minutemen travel to Burlington, Vermont on Tuesday for a doubleheader.

Town blames students for noise, litter

UM alcohol policy cited as problem

By KEN MAIURI
Collegian Correspondent

With warm weather and its corresponding increase in outdoor off-campus parties approaching, some Amherst residents and University of Massachusetts officials want the campus to reexamine its alcohol policy, which some argue is forcing students to flock off-campus to drink.

The University Committee on Alcohol and Drug Use, which created the current alcohol policy in 1988, resumed monthly meetings last December to review the controversial policy.

See related story on page 3

Pamela Gonyer, committee member and director of health education, said while there is extended debate within the committee, the policy will likely stay "as is."

"We haven't forced drinking off [campus]. We're just enforcing a law. The real issue is if people have to drink, they will," Gonyer said.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia, who argues that UMass administrators are shirking their responsibilities, said the strict UMass alcohol policy is to blame for students packing the downtown Amherst bars.

Maia said 90 percent of all town alcohol-related disturbances, which also include off-campus parties, are caused by UMass students.

"Administrators thought they made the right choice when they outlawed alcohol on campus," Maia said, "but they've avoided the responsibility of having social life exist on campus. They've sent the problem into the town."

The UMass alcohol policy was instituted shortly after the 1986 Southwest brawl between White and Black students following the Red Sox's loss to the New York Mets. The policy, which was heavily protested by students, placed restrictions on open containers of alcohol in the residence halls as well as forbade kegs.

One problem area in particular is Twister's Tavern, which has received complaints about late-night noise, violations of capacity limits, and its acceptance of a patron's fake out-of-state driver's licence. The Zoning Board of Appeals will meet at noon Tuesday in the Bangs Community Center to discuss Twister's permit to operate.

Although off-campus parties have caused Amherst residents to complain about noise levels and safety, Maia said attempts have been made to fix the situation.

"There was recently a frat house party where a responsible 'third party vendor' was hired," Maia said. "The liability was taken away from the frat. That's the way to do it."

Maia said the administration has to look at a way to "bring about positive changes to get people back on campus."

"There's nothing that attracts students to socialize on campus," he said. "There are too many rules and too many ways to get in trouble with the dean and the administration."

Decline of the Bluewall, Hatch cited

Maia said re-opening the Bluewall for drinking would help solve the town's problem of overcrowded bars.

The Bluewall, which served alcohol while the legal drinking age was lowered to 18, saw its profits decline after the legal drinking age was raised back to 21.

Residents suggest closing bars early

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents are pointing their fingers at University of Massachusetts and Amherst College students as the main culprits of noise, litter and trespassing, members of the Amherst Peace and Quiet Commission said yesterday.

"It is becoming increasingly difficult to clean up after 22,000 people," said Jim Bernotas, an area businessman whose building borders one of the town's local drinking establishments. "I can't say that anything drastic has happened, but it is a constant annoyance, because I have to pick up glass bottles and paper all the time."

The commission met yesterday to discuss issues revolving around these problems which occur throughout the town. The meeting was prompted to discuss issues that were brought up by town residents at a public forum on Saturday.

Some suggestions presented to the committee included more visible police presence downtown between 12 a.m. to 2 a.m.; enforcement of absentee landlords; closing the bars at 11 p.m.; and having repeated offenders of the quiet hours policy perform public service.

Residents say the University is a contributor to the problem, because it has not been responsive to the town of Amherst's needs.

"When the University became "dry," it threw us into a hump, because it threw the problems into the town," said Seymour Friedman, chairperson for the Amherst Peace and Quiet Commission. "Unfortunately the University never came to the town to help work something out, now we have to go to the University and work this out," he said.

Alcohol is permitted in the residence halls but restrictions limit drinking to non-public rooms like resident's rooms and kegs are prohibited. In addition, three

T.A. proposes to student in history class

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Returning to Amherst after four years for former teaching assistant Allan Brown was more than just a reunion with a town, it meant a new union of the matrimonial sort.

Brown proposed marriage to his former student Valerie Mazzilli in Thompson 106 last Friday, and about 50 startled American Thought and Culture students got to watch.

In the fall of 1985, Brown taught a Math 121 lecture in Thompson 104 to a class of about 130 students. It was here, Brown said, he first laid eyes on the woman to whom he would later propose.

After claiming the podium from Professor Milton Cantor, Brown explained some of the history behind his return to Amherst, and his reason for hijacking their class.

"One girl in that class caught my eye," Brown told the class Friday. "Maybe because she was the only one awake."

That spring Brown and Mazzilli began dating. Since then, both have left the University and found jobs in different cities.

Finally, Brown came to the momentous question he had been leading up to, "Did you cheat on the final?"

Her only answer: "Holy shit! I feel like I'm on Candid Camera."

Then came the real question: "Will you marry me?"

State, Census Bureau appeal to High Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the election year clock ticking, the question of whether Washington state or Massachusetts loses congressional power because of the 1990 census now resides before the Supreme Court.

In written briefs filed with the high court Monday, the Census Bureau challenged a lower court victory that cost Washington a new House seat and enabled Massachusetts to keep its 11 seats. Massachusetts argued that the court ruling should stand.

Under the population-based congressional reapportionment, Washington state was on the border between keeping its eight congressional seats or gaining one. Massachusetts was at the threshold between keeping its 11 House seats or losing one.

The Census Bureau tipped its scales in Washington's favor by counting overseas residents in its House reapportionment. Of the 919,810 overseas residents from all over the country, Massachusetts had 12,626. Washington, despite a smaller population than Massachusetts, reported nearly twice as many living overseas, 21,249. The Census Bureau results meant that Washington would gain a seat and Massachusetts would lose.

The Supreme Court case results from a federal court ruling in Boston in February that reversed the Census Bureau and disallowed the counting of overseas citizens. The three-judge federal appeals court said Massachusetts could keep its 11th seat. Washington would lose the ninth House seat it gained as a result of the 1990 census.

The entire debate is charged with deadline pressure as candidates in the 1992 election wonder whether the House seat they are seeking even exists. Massachusetts Secretary of State Michael Connolly has filed a bill, now moving swiftly through the Legislature, that would extend deadlines for formally declaring candidacy.

Massachusetts Attorney General Scott Harshbarger, in the state's 63-page brief, argued that the lower court ruling must be allowed to stand. A decision by the high court to delay a decision — for example, by asking the Census Bureau to provide better justification for its method — "would cause serious and irremediable harm."

The lower court, Harshbarger wrote, understood that "the uncertainty over whether Massachusetts would retain its existing number of seats in Congress. . . was causing serious disruption in the efforts of candidates, particularly challengers to incumbents, to mount campaigns and comply with the state nominating requirements."

The state also argued that both the Department of Defense and the Census Bureau acknowledged that the data on overseas personnel were flawed and unreliable. Harshbarger wrote that the census bureau had included military personnel in the count because of a 'commitment' to certain members of Congress."

McDonald's serves up mouse

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. (AP) — A Long Island man took a big bite out of a McRib sandwich at McDonald's and was horrified to discover he had eaten a mouse's head, according to court papers filed in Suffolk County.

Erik Schneider, 32, of Lake Ronkonkoma commenced this week a $1 million lawsuit in State Supreme Court here against McDonald's Corp. for negligence in connection with the alleged incident at the McDonald's in Hauppauge on Nov. 13, 1989.

Schneider, a construction worker, claims that he ordered a McRib Sandwich and sat down to eat with his wife, Sharon, and 10-month old son, Erik.

He ate about half the sandwich but didn't realize anything was wrong because of all the barbecue sauce on it, according to his attorney, Ed Fleck.

"The taste was so foul," said Fleck. He opened the roll and looked at it and "saw two hind legs."

Schneider vomited on the table, and the manager came over and tried to take the contents away from him, according to Fleck.

Schneider went immediately with the food to Community Hospital of Western Suffolk in Smith-town where he was examined, said Fleck. Hospital personnel put the uneaten portion of the mouse into formaldehyde to preserve it.

Paul Falcella, New York regional vice-president for McDonald's said in a statement that "McDonald's prides itself on its quality control which is a standard for the industry." He declined to comment further on the matter citing that it was in litigation.

Bombing, strike greets Mickey

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press

MARNE-LA-VALLEE, France — With greetings from a bilingual Mickey Mouse, Euro Disneyland opened Sunday despite a nearby bombing, a rail strike and a taste of chilly weather that could be the new park's biggest handicap.

Trumpeters in medieval costumes blared fanfares, doves were released and a children's chorus sang "It's a Small World After All" in English and French.

"Welcome and bienvenue!" Mickey squeaked from a balcony on Sleeping Beauty's Castle.

The expected overflow crowd did not materialize, probably because French authorities urged people to stay away from opening day to avoid traffic jams. Even with a one-day strike closing the commuter rail line serving the park, traffic moved smoothly on the main freeway to the park.

Disney officials proclaimed the opening a success but refused to give attendance figures. Waits at most rides were short and the parking lots did not fill.

Five years in the making, the $4 billion theme park and resort is by far the most ambitious development of its type in Europe and will continue to expand over the next 25 years.

The park's format is very similar to Disneyland in Anaheim, Calif., Disney World in Orlando, Fla., and Tokyo Disneyland.

French political leaders supported the project firmly, anticipating an economic boon from the park's projected

Road race raises $3,000 for runaways

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

Despite a cold and rainy Saturday morning, over 300 participants showed up near Alumni Stadium to participate in the 13th annual Run for Runaways.

About $3,000 was raised through the road race from sponsor money and registration. Walkers began the 10K course at 9:30 a.m. with runners taking over the track at 10 a.m.

The first group of walkers to finish said they found the course fun, but too cold to walk.

"We walked the first mile and then ran the rest because it was too cold," said Kim Pimental, a freshman human nutrition major.

"We beat all our personal goals out there. It was great," added freshman pre-communications and pre-elementary education major Kristen Moriarty.

Even the runners said they felt the cold.

"I am very tired and very cold. Where's the hot chocolate?" asked Patty Rivera, a graduate student in chemistry and winner of the women's 25-35 group.

The top winner for the race was Graham Warder, a graduate student in history, with the time of 34 minutes and 23 seconds.

"This is the first time I have done this race," said Warder.

Mark Pereira won the men's 18-24 year-old bracket. Bridget Pencuter was the winner for the women's 18-24 age bracket.

Jack Lohan won the men's 25-35 age group. Ray Kellet won the men's 36-44 age bracket and Debra Schilling won the women's bracket.

Mary Murphy won in the age bracket for 45 and higher for women and Don Robinson won the age bracket for men.

"I know planning a race like this takes a lot of work. It is great how the people working at this race get together each year to pull this race off," said Jack Lohan.

The proceeds for this race went to the Covenant House, which helps homeless and abused children.

Woman assaulted by boyfriend

Compiled By MARK PRESTON

Police responded to a domestic dispute early Sunday morning at John Quincy Adams Residence Hall, after a woman said that she was hit by her boyfriend. A restraining order was issued and served on the man.

A woman reported Friday night that she was being harassed by some other women at Pierpont. Police said the matter is still under investigation.

ARRESTS:

• John Cannon Westcott, 21, of Shutesbury, was arrested Saturday morning on Infirmary Way. He was charged with operating a motor vehicle after the right to operate had been suspended and failure to stop for a stop sign.

• Kevin J. Parisi, 21, of North Andover, was arrested Sunday morning on Eastman Lane. He was charged with operating under the influence of alcohol and crossing the double solid lines.

Survey finds majority of UM students drink

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

With controversy flaring over the recently passed keg law and students' drinking habits in downtown Amherst, a recent survey of University of Massachusetts students shows that fewer than one in ten report that they do not drink alcoholic beverages.

More than one-third of students surveyed reported they have 4-6 drinks of alcohol per sitting.

On Nov. 13, 1991 Project PULSE conducted a survey of 562 campus students to investigate their use of alcohol and drugs. Commissioned by University Health Services, the poll randomly selected undergraduates to take part in the telephone survey.

Participating students were asked a battery of questions on their use of alcohol and drugs. Nearly three-quarters of the student drinkers reported that they had become intoxicated on alcoholic beverages in the past month.

More than one-tenth of the students polled also reported experiencing "trouble with police while drinking" during the previous year.

In fact, 20 percent of the male students reported that they had become intoxicated "2-3 times per week" in the past month.

Student drinkers were also questioned on what exactly they usually drink. The greatest proportion of students, 32 percent, said they drink beer once or twice per week while only 9 percent doing so 3-4 times per week.

Women were significantly more likely than men to report that they don't drink beer, survey results also showed.

In addition, students were asked about the specific effects their drinking has had on them. About 70 percent of the students who drink alcohol reported that they had become intoxicated on alcoholic beverages in the past month.

Project PULSE has surveyed students about their alcohol and drug use each year since 1986. Results show that students' drinking habits have remained relatively stable over the past five years.

While in 1986 about 30 percent of students reported getting intoxicated at least once per week in the past month, in 1991, this number has slipped slightly to 28 percent.

According to Project PULSE, most survey questions show fluctuations of no more than a few percentage points from year to year.

"Yes."

Enter the brass band. As the couple embraced, about 10 members of the Minuteman Marching Band walked in from the two doors behind the lecture podium playing "Hey Baby."

Brown said he arranged for the band, and for the lecture hall with Cantor, but did much more scheming before that.

He said he somehow had to get Mazzilli to Amherst without giving away his intentions. He said it was not an easy task, considering he lives and works in Boston and she commutes to New York City from Long Island.

First, he convinced her boss to give her the dav off. Then he said he told Mazzilli he had an appointment in New York City on Friday, and drove down Thursday so the two of them could go to the city together. But instead of driving to the train station, Brown went in the direction of Amherst.

"At first she said I was just being stupid, that I didn't know what I was doing," Brown said. "Then I told her to look in the glove compartment."

Awaiting her there was a letter from her boss saying she had the day off for a "mini-vacation" with Brown. From there, they drove up to Amherst to visit places they frequented while at UMass.

And then, while "dropping in on a professor I used to know," Brown sprung his big surprise.

Ingle said, "When the drinking age was raised, it cost so much for security that the Bluewall lost money. They decided to stop serving alcohol, and they make more money now."

A bartender for the Hatch, one of the three on-campus establishments that serves liquor, agrees not enough is being done to hold students' interests on campus on weekends.

"A big problem is that [the Hatch] doesn't advertise. Lots of people don't even know there's a bar here. It looks more like a cafeteria than a bar," he said.

He said the Hatch is "barren" on Friday and Saturday nights "unless there's a good band playing."

"It's too bad, because [the Hatch] has great potential. People wouldn't have to worry about driving home, because there's a bus stop right outside."

The Hatch bartender said most students go into town to drink on the weekends because of the abundance of bars in a small area.

"People want to bar-hop," he said.

Anthony Bonanno, supervisor of the Top of the Campus Bar, said Wednesday and Thursday are its big nights and the weekends are slow.

Looking for a "change of atmosphere"

Bonanno also said those students who live on campus are more likely to visit the downtown bars on the weekends for a "change of atmosphere."

William Harris, director of auxiliary services at the Campus Center, said, "Ever since universities were first started in France and Italy, students went off-campus to party. What students are doing on weekends in Amherst is normal. Amherst is a sleepy burg, but it's not uncommon that there will be a party.

"College students are gregarious people and they want to be around other students," he said. "They could sit in their own rooms and drink alone, but students have a strong social need. They are not going to want to sit in a dorm."

Harris said half the UMass population lives off-campus, with only 9,000 students living on-campus.

Associate Director of Housing Services Ann Miller does not agree that there is a connection between the UMass drinking policy and the amount of people going off-campus to drink.

The alcohol policy states, "Open bottles. . . are not permitted in public spaces on campus except at duly authorized/licenced events." Students cannot drink in dorm lounges, since they are considered public spaces.

"I don't see the cause-and-effect between [the policy] saying 'No beer in the study lounge' and the student saying 'I'll go to a bar,'" Miller said.

A rigidly-enforced alcohol policy

Miller said the alcohol policy hasn't changed since 1988, but its enforcement has.

"The staff agreed to make a strong statement about underage drinking — we didn't want to contribute to the illusion of 'ZooMass.' I'd like to think of us as 'New Mass.'

"When lots of students live together, they have to be able to sleep and feel safe and undisturbed in their rooms. They shouldn't have to worry about stepping in vomit or broken glass," Miller said.

"I'd rather go out"

A 22-year-old student living on campus said she prefers to go to off-campus bars during the week with friends to drink. "It's a nice change of atmosphere," she said. "Drinking at the Hatch would just be like an extension of school. I'd rather go out."

Gonyer, UMass health education director, was not aware of the Peace and Quiet Commission's existence, but said, "Drinking is not a campus or town problem. It's society-based."

Gonyer said drinking is thought of as a "rite of passage" in American society, and added there are not enough non-drinking alternative activities for students to become involved in.

"There has to be some examination of social life on campus," Gonyer said.

Spotted salamanders get cold feet in Amherst

BY TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD — Bald eagles are on the nest in the wild countryside and peregrine falcons are guarding eggs on urban skyscrapers. But the unseasonable chill may have given the state's other harbinger of spring — the spotted salamander — cold feet.

"We believe we have seven pairs of nesting eagles this year. Last year, we had five," Thomas French, head of the state's endangered species program, said Monday, of its most visible and successful restoration program.

The state's first native peregrine chicks in more than 30 years were hatched on a downtown Boston office tower in 1987 and a year later a second pair of the rare and endangered hunters settled in on 21st-floor ledge of a Springfield building.

The Boston pair has laid three eggs, so far this spring, with perhaps two more expected, French said. The Springfield pair, who have become two of the cities most enduring cable television stars after a local cable outlet began putting a stationary camera on the nest four springs ago, have rewarded eager viewers with two eggs. Both restoration programs have been financed in large part by contributions to the state's endangered species fund through state income tax check offs.

But a lack of rain — at least when salamander aficionados were awake to direct traffic — and chill temperatures apparently have slowed the annual march of spotted salamanders through special tunnels built under an Amherst road to their breeding grounds.

Ordinarily, the navy blue amphibians with bright yellow polka dots ease across the by the hundreds nightly in the first spring rains, said Thomas Tyning, a naturalist with the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

But this year no more than a handful have been escorted by the dozens of volunteers, who for years have halted traffic and encouraged the salamanders into the specially-built tunnels.

"It's hard to say for sure," what it means for the future of the breed, Tyning said. "Most of us have normal day jobs and can't stay up all night."

"There has been an impressive lack of migration between the hours of 8 p.m. and 1 a.m. But on three nights, just as we were tucking ourselves into bed, it began to pour about 2 a.m.," he said. "And the salamanders don't care how late it gets."

French said that state biologists have determined that at least four pairs of eagles are incubating eggs, one more pair than last year. Most of the nests are scattered through the wild Quabbin Reservoir. The first chick was hatched in 1989.

on-campus establishments serve alcohol.

The University is currently reviewing the campus alcohol policy, according to Mary Ellen Sailer, vice chancellor for student affairs at UMass.

"It is important to look at all the options, such as the issue of the bars being closed at 11 p.m.," said Sharon Mehlman, a senior political science major and the UMass student representative to the committee. "If you close the bars at 11 p.m., then after hours parties will begin at 11:30, and some residents don't realize this," she said.

"We have to put our efforts into something that works," said Mehlman.

The next meeting, which is open to the public, is scheduled for Monday at the Bangs Community Center.

11 million annual visitors. But many French intellectuals bemoaned the invasion of American pop culture.

Anti-Disney sentiment appeared to be behind a bombing Saturday night that toppled a pylon on a power line serving the park, 18 miles east of Paris. Officials said the explosion did not seriously disrupt the park's electricity.

Many visitors arrived before dawn. Among them were Maissa and Serge Gallier, and their son, Gorka, 8, from the Paris suburb of Villepinte, who received a lifetime pass as the first family to enter.

Solitary confinement prisoner wins case

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Department of Correction owes a prisoner who spent 2 1/2 years in isolation about $100,000 for violating his rights to due process, the state's highest court said Monday.

Carl Hoffer, the prisoner, argued he was never told how to improve his conduct to qualify for release from isolation.

Hoffer spent 23 1/2 hours a day in isolation and was allowed to leave his cell for three one-hour periods of exercise and two 10-minute periods for showering each week. His visits from family and friends were restricted to less than one visit a month.

Hoffer argued that the Department of Correction violated his rights by failing to set a conditional date for him to leave the isolation unit.

A lower court judge found that Hoffer was entitled to $110,600 in damages. The Supreme Judicial Court agreed, but lowered damages by $9,900, saying he was not eligible for damages during the first 90 days of his confinement.

Hoffer is currently being held in a Florida prison.

Daniel Lewis, Hoffer's attorney, said the case clarifies rules the Department of Correction must follow when prisoners are isolated.

"I think it's an issue that needed to be resolved," Lewis said. Lewis said that in addition to the court award, he plans to press for interest to be added to the damage award.

Hoffer was convicted in 1975 of armed robbery and was sentenced to serve up to 16 years at MCI Cedar Junction. In 1976, he was convicted of attempted third degree murder in Florida where he received a life sentence, and in 1977 he was convicted of first degree murder in Massachusetts and was sentenced to life in prison.

Women's softball shrugged off

On April 7, the UMass Minutewomen softball team swept a double-header at Boston College, bringing their winning streak up to 12. This Division I team, ranked first in the East, 19th in the country, has had one of its members awarded the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week since the season opened. It is a phenomenal team. Yet, at the conclusion of Tuesday's games, when the team's manager, Ellen Sullivan, called the Collegian to report the stats and was told that space was given only to the events that the UMass public wants to read, and that softball is not such a great event, regardless of how the team is ranked.

We, the undersigned, while fully aware that we do not speak for the UMass public, are nonetheless somewhat appalled by this pronouncement. Also, speaking for ourselves, we strongly disagree. If it is judged that this remarkable team is not popular enough to warrant the degree of coverage that is afforded to the less successful baseball team, so be it. However, we would at least appreciate a box containing the raw stats when those are available.

This is a team of highly motivated, gifted athletes. They hate losing and have worked hard and played hard enough that they have lost only one game in the last 14. Some of us marvel at this. Please do not continue this policy of indifference to their efforts. They deserve more.

What does the 'real Latino' mean?

Lisa Quintanilla: It is so sad, your way of thinking on the organizations which work for your own benefit. Definitely you had a bad experience and you stereotyped Puerto Ricans with that "elitist" and "discriminatory" attitude you were complaining about on your article "Useless Organizations" [Collegian April 7].

What do you mean when you talk about the "real Latino"? According to what I understood of your article, you are excluding Puerto Ricans for their supposed "exclusive" and "discriminatory" attitude of being real latinos.

You are totally wrong. We, Puerto Ricans, are very proud of our roots and our culture. We are proud of our music and our native food. We want the multicultural society in UMass to know about us a little bit more than about those dictators whom ruled in different Latin American countries decades ago. I am talking to Latino culture in general.

Yes, those supposed Latino organizations are run by Puerto Ricans because there's no one willing to do it. It's clear that the Puerto Rican culture is seen more because there are very few other Hispanics willing to bring their ideas. They are too busy writing letters to the Collegian criticizing what those Puerto Rican leaders are doing for the rest of the Latino community.

We, Puerto Ricans are Latinos and the shame is demonstrated on what you wrote in your article. This is internal oppression, which you are enforcing against your own race, Hispanics, and in this case, Puerto Ricans.

Want to know which is the real hope? We, Latinos have to get together and write letters so that our center can be reopened. You can organize a group of people and reopen the cultural center, you can be part of AHORA and express your ideas for the community's benefit and not to set us apart obnoxiously.

Lamentably, the group of Puerto Ricans willing to help can not do everything, we need everyone's help.

I understand it is your opinion but, you have really offended the Puerto Ricans in this University.

It is also sad that you are lying to the UMass community because you know that what you said in English is not the same as what you meant in Spanish. Your wordplay in the adjective sequence and the use of some "key" words shows that you have something against some specific Puerto Ricans.

Rape and sexual harassment on this campus lack coverage

I, along with many other people, have certain questions to ask you regarding articles in the Collegian or, in this case, ones that never appear in the paper.

First, I'd like to ask you why there never appears to be any articles regarding rape or sexual harassment on campus?

Does it have something to do with liability or don't the people on your staff care about the welfare of women on this campus?

Everybody knows rape does occur on every campus and if we don't publicize such incidents, we as women won't be as aware.

As a result, we will be careless and more incidents will happen.

Is it possible for the Collegian to publish the names of the accused rapists so that we will benefit and know who to keep away from?

If not, what can we do to protect ourselves?

Not enough is being done to deter potential rapists from committing these heinous felonies.

Fire victim's sister thanks community

Hi, my name is Michelle Pirog. I am the sister of Jay Pirog, one of the students who died in the fire on North Pleasant Street on February 17, 1991. I am writing to tell you how this tragedy has effected my family and I.

Jay's death has been very difficult on my family and I. His death has been very hard to accept. We still celebrate his birthday as well as the anniversary of his death. Due to the fact that he died at a young age was devastating enough, but dying because there was no attention to fire safety is something else. I feel that not only residential housing should be forced to have smoke detectors, but also student housing.

Even though Jay's death is very difficult to accept and handle, my family and I are pulling through slowly but surely.

I have not had much contact with the Peterson family. They are the relatives of Matthew Peterson, the other boy who died in the fire. I am sure they too are recovering from this shock slowly but surely.

I can only say how much my family and I have appreciated the support from all of UMass students and faculty. My family and I have come through very hard times before, but this was the most difficult. Without the support of the people of UMass Amherst, we would not have made it this far.

My family and especially myself say thank you for your concern and support, and that we are doing fine.

In closing, I would like to suggest that all students and faculty living in dorms, residential housing and student housing check for fire extinguishers and make sure your fire alarms work. If you do not have any of the above, please take it upon yourself to get them.

Jay, Matthew and their families learned the hard way. I don't want you to. No one is going to do it for you.

Thanks again for your support.

If you would like to respond to this letter or find out how my family is doing, please contact the Collegian for my address.

'Unwanted child' is pro-choice

The unborn child is innocent. Do not kill the unborn child.

Why should a fetus be valued more highly than the life of an adult woman?

It is a debate that seems to have no resolution. The woman can speak for herself. The (aborted) unborn child cannot.

Martha Olney

But now we have on TV the voice of the "unborn child." A 14-year-old girl tells us that her mother tried to have an abortion, and had her mother been successful, this girl would never have been born. She also says how very, very thankful she is that her mother was unsuccessful in her attempts to abort her pregnancy.

Let me add my voice. I am also an "unborn child." And I, unlike the 14-year-old on TV, I am adamantly pro-choice.

My mother was 41 years old when I was conceived. She thought she was done with babies and diapers and sleepless nights. Many years later, she explained my conception thus: In the middle of the night, you don't always remember to reach for the diaphragm.

It was before the Pill. So when I was growing up, I knew many other children like myself. Born when their mothers were in their 40s; born when their siblings were nearly in junior high school; born when their parents thought they were about to gain control of their own lives again.

Some of those children were called, "the caboose." Others were, "the bonus," or "the surprise." I was "the mistake." To this day, when someone comments on the 11 year gap between my next oldest brother and me, someone will say, "She was the mistake."

Try to imagine that. Try to imagine growing up knowing that you were "the mistake." That you weren't supposed to be born. That your parents had not wanted you. When I was in college, my mother sent me a letter saying she had cried for weeks when she found out she was pregnant, and then she had resigned herself to the pregnancy and told herself that she would enjoy this baby, whether she wanted it or not.

She didn't want to.

And to this day, though I love my life and I love being a teacher, I often wish I had never been born.

In that same letter to me in college, my mother said she "didn't know what she would have done if abortion had been legal." If my mother had had a choice, if she had confronted the option of having an abortion and then had chosen to continue her pregnancy, I wouldn't have been unwanted. Unplanned, but not unwanted. But my mother never had the choice. She was forced to carry to term a baby she did not want. Unwanted. A mistake.

I believe that my soul, the essence of who I am, would have been born into another person if my mother had had an abortion. Perhaps not a baby girl. Perhaps not Caucasian. Perhaps not in America. Perhaps not in 1956. But I believe that my soul would have been born into life on this Earth.

I believe this soul would never have felt so strongly that it would have been better if my mother could have had that abortion. Better, I believe, to not be born, than to be born a mistake.

And thus, I believe that every woman should have the choice. Do I wish my mother had aborted me? Not exactly. I wish that my mother had had the choice, so that she and I would know that she chose to have the baby, that she chose to have me.

I am pro-choice, because I am a voice of the "unborn child."

Men's basketball coverage was top notch

I would like to commend you for your outstanding, comprehensive coverage of this year's men's basketball season. The biggest thing to hit UMass in a very long time, the Collegian grabbed hold of this hot topic and did a great job in presenting the stories and statistics. I particularly enjoyed the pictures of the team in action. I knew that I could find complete coverage of each game in the Collegian; I cannot say that about The Boston Globe. As a matter of fact, there were times when I noticed that the Globe not only gave incorrect scores but also provided incorrect game descriptions.

At a time when this University has been hurting from lack of funding and lack of attention, the Collegian helped unite this campus in backing the greatest UMass basketball team ever.

10-year-old accused of drug sale

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

HOLYOKE — A court on Monday charged a 10-year-old boy who was arrested with a loaded automatic pistol, $1,000 in cash and four bags of marijuana, authorities said.

He was released to the custody of his mother later in the day after posting $1,000 in cash bail, according to Elizabeth Dowd, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Youth Services.

Another court date was set in his case for April 23. At his age, he cannot be prosecuted as an adult, Dowd said.

The boy's 20-year-old stepfather, Samuel Velez of Holyoke, was also taken into custody on drug charges during the arrest Sunday evening, police said. "Apparently they were working together," said Detective Wilfredo Guzman. "The young kid was handling the drugs, and Velez was selling."

Though authorities say they are used to seeing teenagers arrested on such charges, they said they could not recall such a young suspect in this city. "If he was a fish, you'd throw him back. He's too small," said Holoyke Police Sgt. Mike Higgins.

An undercover police officer watching an area known for drug trafficking first saw the boy riding a bicycle near a school. The officer later watched as the boy took part in a drug deal with three men in a car, said Higgins.

Officers stopped the car and arrested the men. They also arrested the boy and his stepfather.

Higgins said Velez told police he had given his .22-caliber handgun to the boy to hold.

The boy was also carrying marijuana with a street value of $40, police said. They said Monday the drug had not yet been weighed but estimated it was less than a half ounce.

The boy was arraigned in a juvenile session of Holyoke District Court on Monday, according to Dowd, the Youth Services spokeswoman. He was charged with drug and gun possession, she said.

Detective Guzman said older drug dealers often persuade younger teen-agers and children to carry for them. "There's nothing that's going to happen to them because they're juveniles — that's the impression," he said.

However, Assistant District Attorney Terri Flanagan said, "Their cases are treated very seriously in juvenile court.

The three men and Velez were arraigned Monday morning on drug charges before Judge William Tihan in Holyoke District Court.

Velez pleaded innocent and later posted $1,000 cash bail. An attorney's conference was set for his case on June 12.

The new Atari Lynx: portable and powerful

By DAVE WEIZEL
Special to the Collegian

Atari Lynx Game Unit
Xybots for Atari Lynx
Atari

First of all, a word about the new Atari Lynx. OK, several words: SLEEK, SNUG, COMPACT, ELEGANT . . . and most importantly, AMAZINGLY AFFORDABLE!

The state of the art, portable color Whizbang called the Atari Lynx, fits right in the palm of your hand, and delivers gaming action like you've never seen before. The feats the Lynx is capable of will send you reeling in a hurricane wind.

Game Review

With super-fast scrolling and intense perspective scaling abilities, stereo sound, crystal-clear reproduction of digitized speech, as well as an amazingly detailed, backlit 2.6" screen, it's like grasping an entire arcade in miniature.

Just like other portable video-gaming systems, the Lynx takes a variety of different game cartridges, which plug neatly into the back of the unit. Most of the games currently available for the Lynx are produced by Atari itself, and encompass a wide spectrum of gaming tastes, from arcade to sports. But 1992 will be the most exciting year in the evolution of the Lynx yet, with the planned release of scores of hot new titles for this killer machine.

Ready to unleash its gaming muscle on the video market, the Lynx already showcases such original offerings as "Warbirds," a wind-in-your-face World War 1 biplane dogfight simulation that seats you right in the cockpit, and future Lynx features will include translations of such rock-solid arcade hits as "Pit Fighter," and "Rolling Thunder."

One really unique feature of the Lynx, the FLIP button, is sure to please left-handed people the whole world over. One touch of this button, and the entire screen turns 180 degrees, or "upside down." If you now flip the Lynx around, so the picture is "right-side up", the joypad controller will then be on the right hand side, with the buttons to your left — a boon for all Lefties!

But that's not all. Say you gotta get up and stretch your, uh, appetite. If the standard reflex-grab at the chips just won't do it, there's even a button to bland out the screen while the game's on PAUSE. This conserves countless microns of precious battery juice, yet still keeps you safely dangling above the Planter's Amoeba Mesozoic Frog-face on level 16.

The Lynx runs on six AA batteries, or on an optional (meaning sold separately) AC adapter. The game cartridges are small, sturdy, and a breeze to tote around. The unit itself is curvaceous, well-molded, high-impact stuff. I hesitate to call the body mere plastic, because its shapely contours look more than hi-tech. The underside of the base even has two streamlined rubber handgrips for no-slide action and great maneuverability.

All-in-all, the Atari Lynx is a best bet for the peak of gaming excitement. You've got to have one. Soon. Today. Right now. So stalk down the Lynx — once it takes you on safari, you'll never regret the chase.

Now that you know how the Game is played, what about all those great games for the Game? Right-O! "Xybots" makes its debut on the Lynx as an arcade translation in rare form.

First off, with a great blend of snappy percussion, strummin' bass, and high pitched melody lines, "Xybots" is a real rock-and-roll treat. You play Major Rock Hardy, Acme Intergalactic Pest Control, Cyborg Division. (Earth humor—Ar, Ar.) You've seen it all before, so ridding a minor league space station at galaxy's edge of evil robot intruders shouldn't be so tough, right? In theory, perhaps, but roll up your sleeves for this one.

You've got your trusty blaster, and your energized, armored jump-suit to protect you. And it's a good thing, too. With Xybots around every corner, you're up against more than the usual mold of battery-powered meanies.

Barring your way are clunky headed warriors packing rather nasty cannons, pestiferous floating saucers and forbidding forces of heavy-alloyed robotic guards. With the touch of a button, you can consult your on-screen map, which marks the type and immediate position of all Xybots, as well as the location of any keys, coins, warp transporters, and that most urgent of all necessities, the exit.

The action is in first-person perspective, with a view slightly above and behind your character and his hefty crosshairs. With judicious use of the map (you are here... hellooo) waltzing through some of the earlier levels is not so tough. But keep collecting those coins, and try not to spend them all in one place.

You mean . . .? Yep, that's right, in between each level you face that dreaded curse of industrialization, the vending machine. Well, they're everywhere, like, what did you expect? No, you can't get Coke or Pepsi here, as a matter of fact, they don't even have Tang. But you can purchase wall or monster mapping modules, shields, a higher energy level, increased speed, more shot power, and other neat stuff. Generally, the more exotic-sounding the item, the more it'll set ya back.

There's a catch, though, (isn't there always?) each nifty little perk only lasts one level before it runs out of steam. It is possible to stock up on cheaper household effects like mapmakers, at one cosmic gazing a piece, but as for your more advanced stuff, keep dreaming.

On your way through each level, you'll notice that your energy percentage keeps

Only for the Headstrong: The Ultimate Rave Compilation
FFRR Records

Computer generated dance beats gone haywire. Sweat-pounding bodies uncontrollably housing it on the dance floor.

At the clubs, the new wave could be rave. Techno-rave.

This compilation of 15 dance mixes is a solid representation of the spreading influence of "techno-rave" music — the perfect accompaniment for the person weaned off MTV and video games. It's dance music gone ballistic, designed by musical artists armed with computers.

Music Review

Eleven of the 15 tracks on Only for the Headstrong: The Ultimate Rave Collection have been released in Europe while seven have hit the top 20 in the U.K. Check your head before you spin this one. It will make you — and possibly some of your friends — move.

These repetitive, hyper-kinetic, electronic dance floor favorites from England are to rap artist Hammer what cartoon Ren and Stimpy are to Tom and Jerry. Over the edge — hip-hop taken beyond what was normally called "danceable."

What these songs lack in lyrics are made up in rhythmic, computer bass beats that will give you and your speakers a serious workout.

The first track, "Dominator," by Human Resource, was remixed by New York techno-king Joey Beltram. Try this at home: spin this powerful dance groove and watch your party goers kick it. The sliding keyboard riff is irresistible. Yes, it is the best track on the compilation.

D.J. Seduction's "Hardcore Heaven" is like Rob Bass on acid. Five minutes plus of jamming beats, scratches and shouts. Only faster. And better.

Another tantalizing track was the atomic remix of Program 2's "More Energy" which encompasses sliding riffs, computer-generated megabytes of bass babble, human cries and a little bit of inspirational opera chords mixed in for goof measure.

And check out the funky keyboard tune on Covert's "Nightbird" along with the haunting Ofra Haza-like chants. This 12-inch remix will get the party started right and quickly. Like many of these selections, the first 30 seconds of this song are simply repeated over and over.

Sonic textures with a penetrating wall of sound grace this impressive computerized compilation. Megabytes of music turned into megabass for your listening pleasure.

In fact, the only song which has any lyrics at all is "Take Me Up" from Sound Source, and, consequently, it is one of the weakest of the bunch.

Remember, this is strong stuff. It's not for the faint of heart — or foot.

New Cat return to old

By SHAWN MCDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Though it would later win a Pulitzer Prize for drama, Tennessee William's Cat on a Hot Tin Roof did not fare particularly well in its original Broadway outing.

It lost the 1956 Tony award for best play to a quickly forgotten staging of Anne Frank, and did not receive the critical attention of Williams' previous hits, The Glass Menagerie and A Streetcar Named Desire.

One of the reasons for this may lie in the fact that Cat's original director, the great Elia Kazan, encouraged rewriting the play, with results that Williams found displeasing. Both the subsequent movie version (starring Paul Neuman and Elizabeth Taylor), and the later Broadway revival, reverted back to Williams' original script, and both were enormous hits.

It is perhaps a risk for director Michael Puopolo to have returned to the "Kazan script" for his revival of Cat, but he feels that this reconsideration is superior in many ways to the "canonized" version.

The playwright's voice in Cat comes from the character of Brick — a bitter, childless alcoholic. In Williams' original script, it was Brick's wife Maggie (the "cat" of the title) who stood at the center of the show. But Puopolo has taken a departure from the classic interpretation, and agreed with Kazan that it is Brick's story which should be put in sharper focus.

Together with actor Robert Corddry (Tales of the Lost Formicans), Puopolo has worked to examine the character of Brick, and address the question of his sexuality, raised by a subtext of homosexual innuendos. However Puopolo notes that he is striving for subtlety, and attempting to shed light on hidden questions without forcing answers on the audience.

"People will not notice an overt difference," Puopolo says, "but the difference is there."

Cat is a tale about a family reunion, which turns into a battle for an inheritance when the family's patriarch reveals he is dying. The shiftless Brick is faced with the prospect of changing his ways, or losing a $10 million estate to his brother Gooper.

Gooper is a dislikable character with a nerve-grating wife and five "no-neck monsters" for children, while Brick is a belligerent alcoholic who is obsessed with a dead friend and never makes love to his wife.

"One of the brilliant things about the play," explains Puopolo, "is that it was one of the first plays to bring up the topic of dysfunctional families. Almost all of us have inherently dysfunctional families, but this was never discussed in the 1950's."

This new production co-stars Linda Newton (Bill and Karen) as Maggie the cat, and Corrdry as Brick and is being presented by the UMass Theater Guild.

Cat on a Hot Tin Roof will be performed April 13-16 in the S.U.B. Tickets are available through Tix Unlimited or at the door and are $4 for students and $6 for the general public.

S.V.P. requests plays

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Their modest publicity is not always able to reach people as easily as the Guild or the Theater Department, and they rarely have proven hits or big names with which to draw in the crowds.

Yet, Student Valley Productions quietly produces some of the best student plays on campus. Their specialty, and the thing which makes them unique among campus theater groups, is their exclusive interest in student written or non-traditional shows.

This means that if you are a writer with a play you want produced, or a director with an unusual or offbeat idea for a production, SVP may be able to help you bring your ideas to the stage. The group is currently accepting proposals for their upcoming fall season — and while their main focus in the past has been "straight" plays, they are also interested in musical or music-related works, monologues, or performance art pieces.

Selected proposals may end up either as mainstage shows or as Working Title productions — smaller, no-frills stagings intended to help the development of a work through performance art pieces.

SVP president Anna Zamarripa encourages persons with any production idea — however experimental or eclectic — to submit to the SVP. She is also quick to emphasize that the group is not limited only to theater majors.

"I am registered as a chemical engineer," says Zamarripa. "And Bill and Karen (one of SVP's Spring '91 productions) was written by two communications majors."

The 9th Annual Asian Night

Traditions and roots of Asian countries celebrated

By JULIA CHU
Collegian Correspondent

For many people, April 10 was just another Friday, a beginning of an awesome weekend.

But for the majority of the Asian students on campus, it was a time to celebrate our culture, our lives and our struggles and presence in America — the 9th Annual Asian Night.

Held in the Campus Center Auditorium by the Asian American Student Association (AASA), the Asian Night started with brief opening remarks by Kenneth Chu, the Chairperson of AASA, Peter Manickas and Amy Chee, the Cultural and Educational Coordinator of AASA.

Asian Life

The performances that followed brought the audience to the Far East and showed the diversity of Asian lives. The Odori dance reflected the traditional Japanese culture in a contemporary way, while the Vietnamese 16-string guitar recital sang a song of a beautiful girl's fortune.

The stories of the night before Chinese New Year were full of legends and myths.

The peak of the night was brought by the traditional Korean drummers who, dressed in white with colorful ribbons, performed an exciting drumming show. The whole Auditorium was shaken by the strong rhythm and the its passion.

The motion and the spirit of the traditional Chinese Lion Dance is the dance performed in big festivals. The vivid lions which jumped up and down the stage caught the audience's full attention. This brought the performances to a close.

After a 10 minute intermission, there was a fashion show modeled by students. The traditional clothings were the highlight of the show: Cambodian, Chinese, Mongolian, Indian, Napole, Laotian, Tibeten, Vietnamese and Japanese.

It would have been better if the Japanese costume was worn by Japanese models.

The most successful part of the night was the reception after the fashion show. Different varieties of food from different countries is always a big attraction.

Living in an American society, the traditional Asian food may be replaced by hamburgers and pizzas in the Asian American families, but we must not forget our Asian roots, our heritage, traditions and cultures.

This is a generation that continues the struggles of the Asian ancestors to live, to stay, and to contribute to the American society.

The Asian Night is an opportunity that unifies the children of Asia on the University of Massachusetts campus.

As your energy meter runs lower and lower, the button flashing on the back of your suit changes color, finally reaching an alarming red, with an accompanying nerve-wracking buzzer. Multicultural Affairs

Students exposing UMass' cultural center facade

The closing of the cultural centers last year is a symbolic protest of the University's facade of "multiculturalism." The cultural centers, situated in small basement rooms, were a result of the 1986 race riot cover-up. They became sophisticated forms of tokenism which produced an illusion of diversity and racial tolerance on campus and are sensationalized when advertising for minority recruitment.

These centers keep the most "active" minority students busy singing, dancing, playing music for and feeding ethnic foods to the campus. Minority students are contributing beautifully to the facade by performing such cultural freak shows as "Asian Night" for campus entertainment. These are the good, complacent minorities who cooperate and cause no problems. They are, along with select staff, faculty and administrators, the eager human rubber stamps used to manufacture this hypocrisy of multiculturalism.

Meanwhile, the minority situation at UMass is degenerating. The enrollment of Black students is decreasing drastically, coupled with the fact that 54 percent of CCEBMS students are not graduating (as documented in their annual report from last year). The Staff and Organizational Development Program in the School of Education, which enrolled 69 percent of the University's Black graduate students, was ordered to "phase out" last year.

Forty percent of the faculty was cut from the Cultural Diversity and Curriculum Reform program which enrolled over 50 percent of the Latino/a students in the School of Education. Asian American students had to rely on the resource of one counselor/advisor without a functioning office and staff, resulting in 72 students falling into academic jeopardy. New WORLD Theater's budget for next year has been cut by 38 percent. These are but a few examples of the abysmal minority situation.

The percentage of minority students, staff, faculty and administration remains intolerably low with the Native American statistics practically invisible. The budget crisis is simply not a plausible excuse given the minority percentage is comparable to that of the early 80s when there was available funding. The problems lie in the oppressive characteristics of an administration unwilling to allow real changes to take the minority numbers beyond the token margin, above 25 percent, which would change the curricular environment and the landscape of the University.

Alex Nguyen

Those of us who can see through the facade rejected the University's policies on minority issues and took corrective action to initiate concrete, positive changes. We sacrificed our cultural centers for now in order to solidify our academic base and raise it above substandard conditions. The focus of our demands was not cultural centers, but rather on academics which include academic support programs, recruitment at all levels, curriculum reform, and such basic things as a photocopier and bathroom repairs. Although we presented these as "demands," they are merely the minimum response we expect of the commitments made in the University's rhetoric.

There has been a barrage of debate, outside criticism and mere hot air (obviously a lame attempt to excuse apathy, complacency and mediocrity), over what actions we took and how we went about them. The reality is that we, a minute group of people, have succeeded. We evaded the University's traditional methods of damage control, tolerated the minority community's colonial mentality, stood firmly on our positions, put these minority issues on the University's priority-action list, and gained concrete results which will affect positive change.

We refused to justify to the administration as to why the crisis situation of minorities must be corrected. Therefore we certainly have no intention of justifying our efforts to those community members whose minds have been so captured that they are the epitome of Oreos, coconuts, apples and bananas. The only thing we need to say is that the proof is in the eating. And here are the concrete results thus far. . . so eat this!

1. One permanent full-time Native American outreach admissions position.
2. One permanent full-time Asian-American counselor position and a second counselor position when funds are available.
3. One permanent full-time Native American counselor position.
4. One full-time Latino/a Outreach position to be funded by administration if grant funding not awarded.
5. One permanent full-time coordinator for the Dr. Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center.
6. Continued level funding for Bilingual Collegiate Program's Latino/a seventh and eighth Mentoring Program when current funds deplete.
7. Extension of the United Asia Learning Resource Center's secretarial position to the next academic year.
8. One desktop photocopier in the UALRC.
9. Two to four computers in the UALRC.
10. Repairs to Wilder Hall's bathrooms and replacement of office furniture, where BCP is located.

New WORLD Theatre was completely shafted. No original productions next year!

There are many more unanswered issues in our demands which now require the regular workings of the University to follow through such as curriculum reform, introduction of ethnic studies majors and space allocation. Unfortunately, these issues have historically relied on student activism, been avoided by the faculty, and controlled by the administration. It is ultimately the chancellor's responsibility to endorse and supervise the implementation of genuine multicultural policies such as our demands. Minorities: the chancellor thanks you for your support!

Alexander Nguyen is a Collegian staff member. The views and opinions expressed in this article are those of the author and do not necessarily represent those of the Collegian.

Real obstacles to 'multiculturalism'

On December 11, 1991, the American Indian Students' Commitee, the Asian Students' Committee, the Latina/o Students'Committee, and New World Thater issued a set of demands to the University fo Massachusetts administration These demands address the problems that led the cultural centers serving Native American, Latina/o and Asian students to close earlier in the semester.

Hyry/Theriault

The administration had some advances to report at these meetings, but their progress on the demands and issues is, ultimately, insignificant in comparison with the problems facing minority communities at UMass. The administration blames its limited progress and inability to do more on the University's current fiscal crisis.

Budget cuts are not the real problem. That is not to say that the financial situation does not make implementing the programs and services necessary to improve the situation of minority students on campus quite difficult. Obviously, the University must give funding priority to those programs that it and the campus community deem "essential." But this is just where the real problem comes in: the administration rarely if ever identifies an existing or proposed program essential to students of color as, in fact, essential to students of color as, in fact, essential to the University.

The recent budget cuts make minority programs and groups more vulnerable than ever; as a result, a serious commitment to multiculturalism means that prioritizing them becomes even more important. The deep rethinking of university operations needed to make this possible simply is not happening.

It has become vogue to think of meeting the needs of minority groups as "rewarding" these groups. Many Whites feel that, if the claims minority groups have made for services and resources on this campus and in this country are addressed in a meaningful way, Whites will have to sacrifice what is fairly and fightfully ours to free up resources of the minority groups.

The reality is that White people (in general) and this country and on this campus have for a long time with great privileges, and we are so used to our privileges that we tend to see them as basic, essential rights. Keep in mind that these privileges are not by any means merely economic—an important privilege is having countless courses available to us that focus on our cultures, our traditions, etc.

This makes White students, faculty and administrators, (Whites are like this, but do not let yourself off the hook too easily), unable and/or unwilling to acknowledge that the demands of minority students are underlined not a matter of certain groups asking for special privileges and resources in excess, but what the general student population has the right to receive and involve, rather, a large number of student asking for the basic support they require in order to have even a fighting chance of obtaining the education that White students take for granted.

We conclude by reiterating that students of color at this University — and people of color, generally — are not asking for special privileges by issuing their demands. They are, on the contrary, asking for services and resources necessary for them to get educations — period. Action based in recognition of this fact, popular or not, is the only possible course for an administration committed to address the problems with integrity and in good faith.

The struggle when he 'came' to America

It's hard to write an article about the crimes a government inflicted upon your people. It's even harder to write an updated version of what has happened to your people when it continues to happen everyday, without ever stopping. The government is always there, pressing their views on people who are not willing to listen. They send their public officials, lawyers and experts, and finally, they send their police to subdue the people.

Kahon:wes/Lance

First the officials come to tell us that we can't do anything. They tell us we are not who we are, then they go away. They usually try that a few times before they send the lawyers in to try and convince us that we are one of them. We spend endless amounts of money on lawyers. Finally, they get tired and leave. (Never once do they try to listen to us.) After all the bureaucrats fail, they send the experts to us. The expert usually ends up embarrassed in front of the people, wishing he wasn't there. The expert usually sits at a table in front of our elders as they tell him a few things he forgot. Then like the rest the expert leaves.

Finally the government makes a good offer to our people. We usually see through the look good offers. Our people usually see the loop holes they leave, trying to sell our people. After all the look good people go, blind offers come from brute force.

The shiny black boots, carry tear gas that enforces democracy. The billy clubs of freedom, and guns of law enforcement. They come to tell us what to do on our territory. Telling us that we are a part of them. So we fight back, as societies struggling for our very existence.

We have been struggling for 500 years in this country. When I say we, I mean the indigenous people of America. We have resisted colonial invasion in almost every form possible. Indigenous people have in some cases hidden from society, even assimilated to save themselves to save their people. Large numbers of native people have chosen to stand and fight. When I say fight I mean in every way that we could think of, not meaning armed resistance. I t is going be 500 years since Columbus' escapade on our continent. In those first years, he alone managed to kill, oppress, and steal millions of things from the people, including their dignity.

No, I'm not mad at the reader for his deeds. I'm just mad at the fact that nobody educated people what he really did. So gross is the ignorance on this matter that we have a holiday for Hitler of the 15th century. They even spent money to put the original ships on display around the world. All these celebrations are for a insatiable greed that led to genocide that exist to this day.

What do the crimes of a government and Columbus have in common? The crimes committed when Columbus was around and those of today's governments were and still are being hidden. The governments try so hard to avoid their own ignorance. We try even harder to make them see their ignorance. I know it will be a long hard fight to stop native injustices and ignorance but it is well worth the ride.

Larry Johnson stands above them all

Larry Johnson was the runner-up in the NBA Slam Dunk Contest. He has a big-time shoe contract.

He has a physique that would impress Arnold Schwartzenagger.

He has a gold tooth. Johnson has a host of nicknames. His teammates refer to him as "grand-ma-ma," from his Converse commercial in which he dresses up as an old woman.

ESPN's Dan Patrick calls him "Larry Legend, Jr." Johnson refers to himself as the "NBA's sexiest man."

Did I mention this guy is a rookie?

That's right. Larry Johnson is a rookie. Maybe somebody should tell him, because I'm not so sure he knows it.

The former UNLV All-American is averaging 19.3 points and 11.2 rebounds per game. He is shooting just under 50 percent from the field and over 80 percent from the line. More importantly, Johnson has turned it around in Charlotte.

In February and March, the Hornets posted back-to-back winning months for the first time in club history and were battling for a playoff spot before being eliminated just about a week ago.

In Johnson — along with Kendal Gill, J.R. Reid and Mugsy Bogues — the Hornets have a strong nucleus for years to come. Many people feel Charlotte is only an average center away from becoming a strong playoff team.

Dave Quattrucci

Johnson's play has turned this year's Rookie of the Year award into a one-horse (and I use this term literally) race. Upon completion of his physical for Charlotte, the team physician *eeded only one word to describe the 6-4 forward — "STUD!"

This season, NBA rookies, as a whole, have performed at an unbelievable level. Johnson has been able to stand out in a class of stand-outs.

Denver's Dikembe Mutombo, the self-proclaimed Rookie of the Year, hurt his chances with a poor second half and an early exit from the season with a thumb injury. Billy Owens proved Golden State's trading Mitch Richmond was no mistake. Steve Smith made Sherman Douglas expendable in Miami.

Stacey Augmon has shown Atlanta he can do more than defend and dunk (ask Reggie Lewis). Stanley Roberts has played impressively for Orlando since shedding the baby fat which plagued him early in the season. Celtic Rick Fox has had his moments as well.

But Johnson has stood head and unbelievably broad shoulders above the rest. Johnson has taken Charlotte out of lottery land. He is a confident, charismatic individual. He has been the man for the Hornets this season. Johnson is the future of the NBA.

Sexy? I'm not sure.

Rookie of the Year? Absolutely!

"More than anything else we need to be setting our own tone," Sortino said. "We've got a very big next couple of weeks. There aren't any breaks. The pressure is on. And it's crunch time.

"The team is capable and it's clicking," she said. "Now they need to step it up into the next gear. What we did before was fine, but we need to be better yet. It's got to keep getting better. We have to tighten the defense and play errorless ball. We have to make the routine plays and, here and there, come up with the big one. If the pitching stays where it is and we keep hitting the ball, it shouldn't be a problem."

No team has played more consistently.

Washington: Cristina, the office's resident Capitals fan, says the team's playoff chances are "slim." Cristina may be selling her team short, though, because the Caps were 22-11 against division foes, or four wins better than the Rangers. If they get past the second round and Randy Burridge can return, Washington may surprise a lot of people.

Pittsburgh: Where's the defense? The Penguins let up 295 goals as of yesterday. Yes, they can light up the scoreboard like no other team [337!] but you have to stop the other guy in the playoffs. The Pens can't. Anything this team does past the first round will be a surprise.

New Jersey: And on the 12th day, God looked down upon the Meadowlands and said "Lo, this arena is in the middle of nowhere. I shall grant it a hockey team so it won't be lonely." The Rangers should prove too strong for this crew. It's just that simple.

Detroit: In the Norris Division, where they occasionally play hockey between fights, the Red Wings have dominated all season long. Steve Yzerman is the real deal, and with Bob Probert along to beat the crap out of everyone, this team becomes a strong playoff contender. Lack of discipline will hurt, however.

Chicago: Memories of last season's playoff collapse against Minnesota could motivate the Black Hawks like no obscenity-ridden speech from coach Mike Keenan can. They're different team away from Chicago Stadium, though, and like the Red Wings get sidetracked by the rough stuff. This team can go as far as goaltender Eddie Belfour can take it if he gets hot.

St. Louis: Last year's much-touted series between the Blues and Chicago never happened. This year the teams open against each other. This season has been a disappointment, as the Blues could not keep up to last season's 100-point pace. Brett Hull and Craig Janney make this team dangerous but not dangerous enough.

Minnesota: Can the North Stars do it again? Like last year's Stanley Cup Finalists, the Stars are fourth in the Norris and will draw among the best teams in the NHL in the Red Wings. But "Miracles on Ice" only happen so often. A first-round win over Detroit is possible, but further conquests are unlikely.

Vancouver: Are the Canucks for real? It's hard to tell. In the playoffs, experience is important and the Canucks have little of that. To their credit, however, they have played consistently all season long, which is a lot more than any other Smythe Division team can say. They could win the whole thing or collapse. Neither would be surprising.

Edmonton: Like last year, the Oilers started slowly then came on at season's end. Playoff experience makes them dangerous. A possible conference finalist if everyone else falls apart.

Los Angeles: Any team with Wayne Gretzky and Tony Granato is hard to bet against, but that's not going to deter opposing offenses, who have rung up 279 goals on the Kings. Jay Miller makes LA a fan favorite among Bruins supporters.

San Jose: Ha! Caught you looking! Actually, Winnipeg rounds out the Smythe playoff scene. Can you name one player on the Jets' roster? Give up? Try defenseman Phil Housley, a league scoring leader. If Vancouver isn't for real, Winnipeg's home ice advantage will provide the proof.

So here's the scoop: Montreal, the Rangers, Chicago and Vancouver will advance to the conference finals, with the Rangers and Black Hawks advancing. In a fitting tribute to the NHL's 75th anniversary, two "original six" teams will face off for the Stanley Cup, with the Rangers winning in six games. Mark Messier wins the playoff MVP and Ranger fans stage a midtown riot.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be money-wise today. Unpaid debts can cast a dark shadow. Romance looks more rewarding than in the recent past. Voicing an objective opinion to higher-ups could trigger a pleasant surprise at work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Affairs linked to shared funds pose a danger — be skeptical. Team players will get the glory at work now, so do not try to run the show. An emotional storm quickly blows over.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Property and financial matters show promise, chiefly through your family connections. A romantic linkup takes you to new places. Get to the root of an old fear and it will go away.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A close friend seeks your advice. Be honest if you do not have an answer. Curb a tendency to be extravagant. A diplomatic approach enhances your personal relationships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take care of paperwork concerning your home. Paying bills on time preserves your credit ratings. Don't let your older, wiser brother get your goat. Carefully plan out your political thoughts and then send for absentee ballot.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Check your messages carefully. A domestic adjustment is featured, perhaps a change of residence or marital status. You may decide to visit relatives while on a business trip.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Expert advice on investments is worth the cost. Keep in touch with overseas contact. A heart-to-heart exchange produces immediate results. Be open-minded.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Tying up loose ends now makes you feel more secure. Special home repairs are in the spotlight. A financial transaction is completed in record time. Focus on creative endeavors later in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Concentrate on romance and making a fresh start. A new personal relationship could blossom into something big. A family situation will improve if you play your cards right.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Defining your terms lets others know where you stand. Be open to suggestions for new creative projects. Change and variety are what you like best! Altering the status quo works to your advantage.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Follow your instincts and you will not go wrong. Family concerns lessen as the financial picture brightens. Higher-ups are impressed by your insights.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Review lessons learned in the past before making some far-reaching decisions today. Reading between the lines of a message will help you become more independent. Forget old doubts and fears.

Freshman Erica Baum, who stepped in for an injured Emily Lueck, also did a commendable job for UMass in the all-around.

In the vault, UMass' Marshall scored a 9.65, good enough for ninth. She was followed by sophomore teammates Angela Jent and Margaret Furtado, who placed 23rd and 25th, respectively.

Lori Brady of UNH captured the blue ribbon in the vault.

Freshman Erica Baum, who stepped in for an injured Emily Luek, displayed a solid performance in the all-around.

In the uneven bars, which was "perfect," according to Mitchell, senior Kim Grady turned in a great performance in her final collegiate event with a 9.53.

"The whole team was pulling for Kim at this meet," Mitchell said. "It was really sad to know that this was the last time we'll see her perform, but we're all happy that she did well."

Gymnastics finishes third

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

All season long, University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics coach Alfie Mitchell has struggled to get his team the national respect it deserves.

This past Saturday at the NCAA Northeast Regional Women's Gymnastics Championships at Penn State, Mitchell finally achieved this when his team placed third by scoring 187.43 points, behind perennial favorites Penn State (194.525) and Ohio State (189.875).

Temple (186.77), New Hampshire (184.25), Rhode Island (185.15) and Kent State (184.975) finished fourth through seventh, respectively.

The third place finish for UMass was especially sweet because most people had picked the Minutewomen to finish no higher than fifth at the meet.

"We're all more than excited about our performance," Mitchell said. "I don't think we even hit all our routines and we still end up being the number three seed in the Northeast at the end [of the meet].

"Everyone in the gym was pulling for an A-10 school like us to do well against two Big-10 powerhouses like Penn State and Ohio [State]," he said. "We were really focused the entire meet and, I think, gained some respect for not only us but the A-10 as well."

Leading the way for UMass was that junior from Hicksville, N.Y., Tammy Marshall, who was third in the all-around (38.9), first in the floor (9.9) and fourth in the balance beam with a 9.75.

Taking the first two spots all-around were Penn State teammates April Polito and Allison Barber, who had whopping scores of 39.025 and 38.950. Barber also took first in the beam with a 9.85.

Overall, Penn State took the first four beam spots and the second and third spots in the all-around.

Also turning in a strong performances for UMass was freshman Gina Demeo, who was the next UMass competitor to place in the all-around (12th) with a 37.40.

"Gina did absolutely great in every event," Mitchell said. "I think she hit every one of her routines and still that wasn't enough to catch the Ohio [State] and Penn State gymnasts."

two-assist effort Saturday. Millon has 19 goals and 10 assists for a total of 29 points, already placing him past last season's halfway point. Last season, Millon finished with 51 points (38 goals, 13 assists).

Also leading the Gorillas in scoring are long-distance operator Mike Cain (9 goals, 4 assists) and Bill Edell (6-5-11).

UMass coach Ted Garber finally figured out on Saturday why his team fared so poorly shooting the ball against Providence.

"The referees came up to me and said, 'Do you know you've been playing with goals two inches too small?'" Garber said. "Now I don't feel so bad about taking 62 shots and putting only 30 on cage."

Softball hosts URI in fight for A-10 lead

Holly Aprile and the University of Massachusetts softball team swept a double-header from St. Bonaventure Saturday.

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

While blowouts are all well and good for a team's morale, coaches, fearing a letdown in the next game, don't always see the same picture.

This is the case for the University of Massachusetts softball team, which after Saturday's doubleheader sweep at St. Bonaventure leaves the 19th-ranked Minutewomen with a 17-8 record overall, and 6-0 in the Atlantic 10.

UMass hosts the University of Rhode Island today in a 3 p.m. double-header at Totman Field.

In the first game against the Lady Bonnies, UMass' Darlene Claffey took a no-hitter into the seventh inning before settling for a 7-0, one-hit win. She struck out nine and walked none in raising her record to 7-2 (six shutouts), and lowering her ERA to 1.02. Peggy Bush went 3-for-3 with 2 RBI and Barbara Marean went 2-4 with the game-winning RBI.

Game two was a 11-0, five-inning win, as freshman Kelly Daut pitched a one-hitter. She evened her record at 5-5 and lowered her ERA to 1.58. Rachel Lawson and Marean were both 2-3 with two runs scored and two RBIs. Marean's first hit extended her school record hitting streak to 22 games.

"I don't think there was anything to be gained by that double-header except two wins," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "People say a win is a win, but I thought it was weak competition. It was a long trip and not very productive at all.

"We got ahead early and mentally sized up the competition — and there wasn't any," said Sortino.

The Minutwomen host URI today in what is a battle for first place in the A-10.

The Lady Rams are 8-11 overall and 6-0 in the A-10 after sweeping St. Bonaventure 12-0 and 3-1 Sunday afternoon.

Snow causes switch in sights

Baseball team will host today's doubleheader

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

As sometimes happens in April, today's double-header is a wash out. But not a wash out of the normal sort.

Because melting snow in Vermont flooded Burlington's Centennial Field, today's University of Massachusetts baseball team's double-header against the University of Vermont will be played at Lorden Field (1 p.m.), giving the Minutemen a potent home field advantage.

UMass (13-10) is 8-2 at home this season, and against a tough Catamount squad, the team will need every advantage it can get.

Vermont (13-5) is off to a roaring start this season although the team lost top outfielders Jim Wawruck and Mark Buckler to the minor leagues. Pitching and the infield are UVM's strengths.

Any talk of Vermont's strengths starts with Dana Perrotte, the ace pitcher of the Catamount squad. Perrotte is 4-2 with a 2.23 earned run average, and he has 33 strikeouts with 23 walks in 40 and two-thirds innings pitched.

"He's (Perrotte) a really good pitcher, with a good fastball and a good slider," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "He's gonna be tough."

Brady Frost, the Catamount's number two starter, will start the other game for Vermont. Frost leads Vermont with a 4-0 record and a 1.86 ERA. In addition, Frost has 25 strikeouts and 13 walks.

Stone said he will probably start left-hander Scott Meaney in the first game and Jeff Toothaker in the finale.

Vermont has five starters hitting over .300, including Sean Benoit, who leads the team with a .422 average and 36 total bases. Benoit is a surprise only because he was slated for middle relief as a pitcher during the spring.

The Catamounts aren't a home run hitting team, as they have only 2 dingers as a team. But they're hitting .310 as a team, a full .1 over their opponents (.210).

While Vermont is on a three game winning streak, UMass is on an early season roll of its own. The team has won two in a row thanks to last weekend's sweep of Pace, and 10 of its last 12.

UMass has changed shortstops, at least for the moment, with Greg LaRocca and Steve Corradi switching positions. LaRocca moved to the infield while Corradi saw action in center last weekend. Both players have produced at the plate.

Corradi leads the Minutemen with 3 homers and 9 stolen bases, and is third on the team with a .314 average. LaRocca, the leadoff hitter, is hitting .280 and has walked 15 times in 23 games, while striking out only 5 times.

The key for UMass today will be to jump out ahead early. Meaney must get into his rhythm early and the top of the lineup, including Justin Howard (.351 with 39 total bases), must score runs in the early going against Frost and Perrotte.

Gorillas move up to 15th in poll

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team is ranked 15th in this week's United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll, released yesterday.

The Gorillas (4-2) moved up from No. 16 after defeating Yale on Saturday. A disappointing showing against Providence earlier in the week may have cost the team additional votes. The poll is voted on by Division I college lacrosse coaches.

Mario Lopez had to come out of Saturday's game midway through the third quarter when a hamstring injury suffered earlier in the week flared up.

"I aggravated it in the second quarter and by the third I could barely move my leg" said Lopez, who came out of Wednesday's Providence game for the same reason. Lopez, a senior, has alternated between close defense and defensive midfield all season.

Mark Millon, meanwhile, added to his scoring lead and continued a 20-game scoring streak with a two-goal,

Rangers contend for Cup race

So, they decided to have the Stanley Cup playoffs after all. Bob Dylan's dictum "Money doesn't talk, it swears" was proven to be true once more, as both players and owners realized how much cash they were throwing away by mothballing the playoffs.

Hockey players don't seem to be the organized labor type, anyhow. I just can't picture a 6-foot-3, 230-pound dude with only 25 of his natural teeth singing "Return to Sender" on the Student Union steps. Maybe you can. I don't know.

Without further ado, let's go team by team and see who might skate away with the cherished Stanley Cup. The equally cherished but little-known Stanley Keg, however, poses too much difficulty for players who can't drink and skate at the same time.

Greg Sukiennik

Montreal: Les Habitants sont tres formidable. Or, if you prefer English, this team is loaded. Speed, a stingy defense, goaltending and tradition make the Canadiens a strong favorite to win the whole thing. Their road woes [14-20-6] will hurt in the long run, however.

Boston: The B's have had a week to think about life without hockey. Hopefully the layoff afforded them some focus, because without it, the first round is a bad place to end a season. Maybe next year, when all those injuries have healed.

Buffalo: The Sabres haven't gone past the first round of the playoffs in eons. The sight of Brad Park's slapshot from the slot in overtime of Game 7 ten years ago still haunts Buffalo fans. Pat LaFontaine is a big plus in the playoffs if the Sabres can protect him. They could beat Boston, but only if Boston lets them.

Hartford: Bruins fans who can't get Garden tickets won't be enough to stop Montreal from harpooning the Whalers. Even Greenpeace can't protect these Whales.

N.Y. Rangers: Fifty years is a long time to wait. The waiting may be over. If you thought Mark Messier was a shot in the arm in the regular season, wait until you see what he can do in playoff

Protesters urge increased library funds

Faculty, students travel to Statehouse

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — About 20 faculty members, library committee members and undergraduate and graduate students traveled to the Statehouse yesterday in an attempt to deter further budget cuts to the University of Massachusetts' Tower Library.

"The library is the spirit and soul of the University and if its funds are cut, it will be similar to cutting the flow of blood to the brain," said the group's leader, Professor Daniel Martin of the French department.

The Higher Education Coordinating Council met at 1 p.m. to discuss the state and community college systems' future as covered in their March 1992 report.

HECC suggested that the state campuses develop a specific focus for each college. The programs which do not complement a campus' unique mission should then be phased out and program resources reallocated within the campus according to the report.

Martin and several faculty members from the other campuses addressed HECC at the end of the meeting.

"Our national ranking among the 107 Research Libraries has dropped from 43rd in 1976 to 93rd in 1991," Martin said.

He encouraged Governor Weld to do all he can to support the library and he asked legislators to substantially increase the state's support of the library. Martin said adequate funding is needed to protect the research library and "to preserve this most important investment in the future of the Commonwealth for the well-being of its citizens."

The meeting attracted a large number of faculty and students from the different state schools including one UMass student, who entered the meeting wearing a cardboard coffin on his head, featuring the University's insignia on the front.

Professor David Paroissien of the English department said the important thing is encouraging the government to support the library.

Prior to the HECC meeting, Ilardi and Paroissien spoke to John Cronin, assistant to the president of the Massachusetts Senate, William S. Bulger, who said, "We are sympathetic but we can't raise taxes because the people oppose raising taxes."

While Ilardi and Paroissien met with Cronin, a bake sale was held in front of the Statehouse with profits going towards the library. Bags of home-made dog biscuits, some in the shape of Massachusetts and others in the shape of people, nicknamed "Weld Woofies," were sold in bags with the slogan "Massachusetts is going to the dogs" printed on the side along with a caricature

Council looks at diversity class criteria

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

Students from the Latin, Asian and Native American communities met with the Social and Cultural Diversity Subcommittee of the General Education Council Monday to discuss the way classes with diversity designations teach minority issues.

Elliot Monteverde Torres, a Latino student, said diversity courses were woefully inadequate in dealing with minority issues and he cited a poor representation of minorities among the faculty as a primary source of the problem.

"One problem of this is the lack of faculty that comes from a different background," said Torres. "People refuse to teach from a background different from theirs, another person would do it naturally."

Kyle Hoffman, a staff member in the provost's office and member of the subcommittee, responded that they had received suggestions from people of different backgrounds.

Alexander Nguyen, a representative from the Asian community, recommended to the subcommittee to clarify the focus of courses in their descriptions, using for example the course Philosophy 100 which he said should have a clause saying "a critical look to European history," or stating explicitly that the course is taught from the "Western" perspective.

"In our experience, they are not critical enough," he said.

Luann Robinette, a Native American student, expressed her concern over the current requirement of only two diversity courses, because for many students these were going to be the only two opportunities in their lives to get to know from cultures different from theirs.

"You are obliged to take math," said Sharon Smith, also a Native American student.

Smith also suggested they initiate faculty workshops on diversity courses.

"It is the University commitment to have faculty redo their curriculum," Smith said.

Pesach rituals recall the past

Holiday commemorates Jewish exodus from Egypt

By DAVID MOHEBAN
Collegian Correspondent

Redemption has become a recurring theme in Jewish life. When the Israelites broke their chains of bondage from ancient Egypt, it was the turning point for the Jewish people to be rejoined with God and the beginning of a new set of laws. These laws are better known as the Ten Commandments and took their roots in the exodus from Egypt, which the Jewish community celebrates every year in the Passover holiday.

It is a holiday based on remembering the past.

"The key part of the message is the emphasis that we were once slaves and because of that we should treasure our freedom and help the oppressed," said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel. It involves the family, singing and the celebration of Jewish history, he said.

The Passover home atmosphere is created each year by the traditional practice of thoroughly cleansing the home and by the removal of all leavened foods. The holiday requires the eating of Matzah, or unleavened bread, as a reminder of the unleavened bread the Israelites had to take with them as they fled from Egypt.

It is customary to sell the leaven, chametz, to a non-Jew and buy it back after the end of the holiday. Usually the community rabbi negotiates the sale of all chametz to a third party and serves as the community representative. Using a candle for illumination, it is customary for the family to search for chametz and assorted crumbs using a feather as a whisk.

During the Passover Seder, or ceremony, Jews everywhere are required to read from the Hagaddah, a book that recalls the story of the exodus through prayer and song. The essence of the holiday is in the Seder plate and its possessions: the egg, bitter herbs, the shank bone and green vegetables symbolizing fertility and life, bitter suffering, blood and the spring renewal.

At a certain part during the Seder it is also customary for Middle Eastern Jews to take a couple of scallions and whip their neighbors or whomever they feel like annoying as a way of reliving the persecution under the taskmaster's whip.

It is also considered a good deed to donate money and provide assistance to needy families to help them fully observe Passover.

Another custom requires opening the front door during the Seder and placing an extra cup of wine at the table. This is for the Prophet Elijah, the symbol of redemption in Jewish life and believed to be the forerunner of the Messiah.

In ancient Egypt, according to the Passover story, the Pharoah had no intention of giving the Israelites their freedom and made their lives more difficult, especially after Moses asked the Pharoah to let his people go. As a result of the Pharoah's actions God displayed his strength in the Ten Plagues and decreed that if the Pharoah acted cruelly one more time against the Israelites, it would be the Pharoah himself who would suffer from his own command. Thus the last plague, the slaying of every male Egyptian first born, was the result of the Pharoah's own decree against the Israelites that every first born male Hebrew would die.

The term 'Passover,' or 'Pesach' in Hebrew, comes from the Ten Plagues. During the Seder it is customary to leave a drop of wine on one's plate for each one of the plagues while reciting them in order. These include the blood, the frogs, the lice, the wild beasts, the disease, the boils, the hail, the locust, the darkness and the slaying of the first born, all brought upon the land of Egypt because of God's wrath.

According to the Passover story, while the Egyptians were suffering, the Israelites were spared from the last plague for the lambs' blood placed on their doorposts let God 'pass over' them instead.

UMass will be providing Kosher food for Passover meals beginning with dinner Friday, April 17, through and including dinner on Saturday, April 25, in the Kosher Dining Commons in Hampden, Southwest.

There will be Seders on April 17 and 18 at 5:15 p.m. Interested students may sign up for Seders and purchase tickets at Franklin D.C. by noon today. For ticket prices and more information call the Hillel Office as listed in the telephone directory.

O'Brien chats with Southwest students

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Richard O'Brien casually walked into Mackimmie's main lounge in Southwest, greeted the anxiously waiting students and sat down so their Tuesday evening House Council meeting could begin.

"I want to know what is worrying the students and what their concerns are," said O'Brien.

O'Brien said he attended the meeting to open lines of communication between the students and the upper hierarchy of the University of Massachusetts.

"Communication is a big thing for me," said O'Brien. He said is important for him to relay information about UMass to the students, provide the students with a sense of belonging and access to the University and at the same time increase his understanding of the students' views on different issues.

"I am resolved that enrollment will not decline and have developed, along with my colleagues, a four-step plan that will hopefully increase enrollment," said O'Brien.

The University must improve its public relations, he said.

"It really helps the school when the University has a nationally recognized basketball team and a Pulitzer Prize winner."

O'Brien said the University must bring down the number of students transferring out of the University, otherwise know as attrition. Just last year, he said, UMass lost 20 percent of the freshman class due to attrition.

"UMass needs to promote a small group feeling and make the atmosphere more attractive and enjoyable to students," he said.

The University, he said, needs better advertising and more marketing to improve the recruitment of new students. "I've worked harder this year than any other year on increasing student recruitment," he said.

Transfers from community colleges, he said, also must increase. A new plan was developed, he said, in which community college students with a 2.5 grade point average or above can come to UMass after completing their associates degree.

O'Brien said he signed five community colleges on to this plan this year and plans to sign on the other 10 community colleges within the next two years.

"It is important to do all of the above without lowering the standards of the University," said O'Brien.

This is the first year the state government has not promised UMass a big state funding cut, he said.

"Gov. Weld has said more good things about education than Dukakis could have ever squeezed out of his mouth," O'Brien said.

The University, he said, is tied to the economy which affects state funding. "As the economy gets better, the University will get into business."

"Tuition and fees are too high," O'Brien said.

He said he wants to get the price of the University low enough and the quality of the University high enough to convince people to come here.

O'Brien also said he considers UMass basketball coach John Calipari an important investment for the University. Calipari, he said, will help increase enrollment because people like to be in a place with a nationally recognized basketball team.

"I would be dead if Coach Calipari left UMass," said O'Brien.

The meeting was organized by Jody Weinberg and Carolyn Rago, co-presidents of the Patterson-Mackimmie Cluster Council.

New course tutors athletes, helps to train future teachers

By FELICE COHEN and KIM ADESSA
Collegian Staff

A new class is being offered through the education department, in conjunction with the University of Massachusetts Office of Academic Advising for Athletes, said the creator of the course.

Director of Academic Coordination Ed Suglia said the purpose of the course is to give students hands-on experience in an educational setting, and also to provide a resource to student athletes.

"The purpose of the program is not for student athletes to come in the night before an exam and expect to be taught everything," he said. "Instead, we try to foster independent learning skills, so we are not carrying a student athlete from semester to semester."

Suglia said the students spend three to four hours a week outside the classroom tutoring student athletes.

Suglia said the present class of 25 students meets once a week in a seminar, discussing ways to teach learning and time management skills, as well as future career goals.

"Our goal is for student athletes to come on a daily or weekly basis and to learn long-term study skills," he said.

The seminars follow a semester outline and cover topics such as the development of tutoring and time management skills, as well as different philosophical and ethical issues involved with the advising, teaching and counseling of student athletes.

Another important part of the seminar will focus on looking at an awareness of the negative stereotypes that surround student athletes. Changing attitudes will be an important part of the class, for both the student athlete and the students who are tutoring them.

Suglia said there are two parts to the program. The first is "academic advising. Helping student athletes chose a major that is right for them, and then guiding them through the nuts and bolts of the requirements. We're able to help the student athletes figure out their schedules."

The second part is counseling. "We find out what the student athlete wants to do and we help them make decisions, whether it be for classes, graduate schools or career choices," he said.

Next semester, the program, currently run by Suglia and graduate student Pam Higgins, will be bringing in four year-long interns from the Academic Advising for Athletes graduate program at Springfield College, to work with student athletes.

There are also some student athletes who tutor. For example, Tommy Pace, from men's basketball, and Tammy Marshall, from the women's gymnastic team, are student tutors.

Suglia started the program this past semester and has

Society of Antiquaries in London inducts Grose

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is losing some of its esteemed faculty due to the state's financial crisis, but UMass is still able to provide its students with quality, award-winning personnel.

David F. Grose, a professor of archeology and classics at UMass, was recently inducted as a Fellow into the Society of Antiquaries of London.

"It was both unexpected and pleasing to be inducted as a member of the society," said Grose.

Grose is not a citizen of Great Britain, which makes this accomplishment even more meaningful. There are only 1,500 fellows worldwide and only 250 are not British.

"Becoming a member of the society has been a great honor in itself," he said.

Grose is a specialist in Hellenistic Greek and Roman archeology and has worked on numerous excavations in Europe and the Mediterranean.

He has been teaching at UMass for 14 years and has been a full professor for five years.

Grose, who is also a Fellow of the American Academy in Rome, received the 1991 National Endowment for the Humanities Fellowship for College Teachers.

Also, he is currently a research associate at the University of Pennsylvania's University Museum.

Other past awards he has won include a Fulbright, American Council of Learned Societies and the Prix de Rome, which is given by the American Academy in Rome.

Grose is the author of 25 articles, book chapters and excavation reports, and his most recent is "Early Ancient Glass from the Bronze Age to the Roman Empire." This is considered by many as a standard reference on the subject.

The Society of Antiquaries of London was founded during Elizabethan times, and is one of the oldest societies for the study and promotion of archeology and ancient civilizations.

The founding patron of the Society is considered to be King George II, who gave the first charter to the society.

All the baked goods were sold out by the end of the day raising $128.87 which "will buy a couple of new subscriptions or journals to the library," according to Professor Vincent Ilardi of the history department and chairman of the Library Committee.

Ilardi said the legislature has no personal commitment to the library. Excluding the 35 alumni, only 20 of the 200 legislators have seen the UMass campus, he said.

"We've been doing all kinds of things for years and are always trying to call the public's attention to higher education in Massachusetts," said Professor David Lenson of the comparative literature department and president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

professor in the Spanish and Portuguese department, said the subcommittee was able to see that there were courses which failed to meet the diversity requirements.

According to a memorandum sent in the spring of 1988 to the deans, directors, department heads/chairs and faculty members, the Social and Cultural Diversity Subcommittee is "responsible for recommending to the General Education Council that certain courses proposed for the Social and Cultural Diversity receive the diversity designation."

In addition, the subcommittee is in charge of reviewing different courses "to see whether, with or without some revisions or modifications, such courses might be designated as meeting the Social and Cultural Diversity requirements."

The subcommittee also verifies the syllabus of a course which already has the diversity designation to see if it "is working" according to its proposal.

Important lesson on The Simpsons

Do you remember way back when, when some of you were on a luxurious spring break two-fisted with pina coladas in some warm and tropical location? I don't. I was home watching television one night, and actually learned something from the good ole tube. Funny, I never thought I'd say something like that, especially when it concerned an episode of The Simpsons. I guess it counteracts all of those adults who were convinced that television turns your brain into oatmeal. This column will be dedicated to such individuals.

This particular episode dealt with the estranged relationship Krusty the Clown had with his rabbi father. They had not been in contact with one another for 25 years because Krusty's dad did not approve of Krusty's vocational choices. Lisa and Bart worked diligently to reunite the two. Living in a society that demands happy endings when there are so few in real life, Lisa and Bart manage to get the two together once again.

Lorrie Cozzens

After I clicked off the television, I couldn't help but think that this was a really valid story. When you think about it, isn't at least one person you currently know not speaking to someone because of some ancient grudge? It made me think about my relationship with my own father an awful lot. This is not exactly a reaction you'd expect to find out of watching a prime time cartoon. Oh, but think about him I did.

My parents were divorced when I was three, and I was living 300 miles away from my father by the time I was six. I saw him on the rare occasions I happened to be in New Jersey visiting other relatives with my Mom. As I got older, I found my trips to New Jersey were less and less frequent. I had precious little contact with my father, and I pretended I didn't care about him. I knew I was bothered, although I had a hard time admitting that even to myself. People always say, "You could have written or called each other," but somehow you know things like that never pan out the way they're promised to. So I decided in my infinite teenage wisdom I'd stop maintaining contact with him to see if he'd be in contact with me. I used to be angry about our lack of communication, but I can see now that I am older we are both to blame, equal or not.

Last semester, after reading something called "The Book Of Questions" by Gregory Stock, I decided I'd call my father. Why? Because one of the questions asked, "If you knew you were going to die in a week, what things would you want to tell certain people? Why haven't you told them yet?" That question knocked me over like a brick falling from the Tower Library. I felt terrible about my actions, and even worse to realize that some things I've done in the past were done solely to spite him.

Of course it didn't help any to be coming to these conclusions while I was trying to write a paper and study for finals simultaneously, but I figured you ought to take it when it comes to you. So I did. I knew the number by heart (I always knew my weird ability to remember number sequences would come in handy one day) and before I could tell myself "No," the number had already been dialed and I was doing the AT&T thing. I was on the phone with my father, the same person who I still have not seen since Christmas 1987, and hadn't spoken to in almost as long as that time. I can't recall a time when I was more nervous, because I knew I had something important to say.

It was probably the hardest thing I've ever done considering it took me such a long time to speak up and say what I really needed to. But I did it, and it was emotional, and as Stuart Smalley would so eloquently phrase it: "And that's... okay." (I had to throw a joke in there somewhere, it's hard for me to be so completely serious.) Not to sound like a cliche, but I felt as if a weight about the size of the Rock of Gibraltar had been lifted off my shoulders.

My relationship with my father is hardly perfect, but it's improved. What relationship is perfect? If everything was happy, we'd have nothing to strive for. Besides, every relationship regardless if it's with a relative, friend or lover needs to be maintained with open communication lines. You shouldn't be afraid to be honest. And frankly, the three most important things in a relationship to me are honesty, loyalty and respect. If someone can't give you at least that, they are not worth your time. So maybe there really was something to that Simpsons episode. Maybe there really is something worthy in television. For example, everyone remembers those educational cartoon commercials aired on Saturdays about "How a Bill Becomes A Law" and "Conjunction Junction." A little oatmeal can be good for the soul. After all, I am thinking about a trip to New Jersey this summer to visit my Dad. You just never know what can happen.

That's multicultural?

As a UMass Latina, I am shocked and horrified that Evelyn De Jesus, the Multicultural Affairs Editor, has released a policy statement banning any expression of bilingualism from our page.

This is an outrageous declaration! What is multiculturalism without bilingualism? A fraud, a sham and the worst kind of tokenism!

The arguments she makes regarding the viability of printing letters in other non-English languages are senseless. In the United States, Spanish is the other major language that exists as an expression of cultural identity for a huge population group. This leaves us without a voice, except that filtered through English, the language of the oppressors!

The only solution is clear. DeJesus does not believe in multiculturalism, therefore she must, in all good conscience, resign.

Collegian comic unfit for print

How do you justify allowing last Monday's "Cast of Thousands" to be printed? I believe that the Collegian has, in the past, pulled comics from the comics page for playing on racial stereotypes and "making fun" of racial groups.

"Cast of Thousands" usually is quite entertaining, and often exposes readers to different ways of looking at things. It is very well drawn and probes relevent issues. Why is it then, that when confronted with Christianity, Barry Deutsch threw his brain out the window? Why is it that rather than have his characters hold a meaningful discussion (as they have on other subjects), he instead characterizes the Christians as being insensitive, and as treating homosexuals in an extremely patronizing manner?

The conduct of the Christians who often staff tables on the Concourse cannot be characterized as such. I'm not saying that Christendom has treated homosexuals well — it has not, to our shame. Using this as an excuse to shrug off the issues that Jesus raises, rather than dealing with them is no response, however.

How are we to achieve civility on campus if, as Mr. Deutsch portrayed, the proper response to Christians is to laugh or be violent?

I am not asking that "Cast of Thousands" be pulled from the Collegian —only that this letter might be printed and that there might be a meaningful discussion of the issues Christianity addresses, rather than just poking fun at those "queer" Christians.

Oh, those pesky Butterpudlians!

The Butterpudlians, in rash attempts to maintain their image, have waged war. They fly a flag — a new political party has emerged on campus! You thought the Minuteman spread an evil net, which they do, but just wait to the liberal left, the freedom kiddies, in short, Butterpudlians begin their REVOLUTIONARY campaign.

There arises in the world a new spirit, a group of deities firmly positioned at the highest peak, 58 peaceniks, preaching to the rabble, rise up they say, come to our abode, be a RADICAL!

We have grown long hair, our clothes purchased with the highest thought for style, because to belong, we must dress, like any republican on Wall Street! We have travelled, with daddy's cash in our pocket, over the world! Come with me to Spain! I, Butterpudlian, know your troubles — let me preach my didactics, my superior intellect brimming! Oh yes, we suffer, driving our hippy BMW which, oh, my daddy bought for me!

Once again, the bourgeoise have made an arrogant plea to us poor proletariat students, the socially reprogrammed, steady on Big Brother's path of conformity! The Nationalist Butterpudlians, true political genuises, rebels in the highest sense, Masters over us slaves, they own, you guessed it, a cheap piece of cloth, a pirate flag, not nearly as expensive as their fave garb!

Sing the song of the Butterpudlian Party: I, pseudo-intellectual, do hearby swear to rise over the population like a god, to preach my superiority to all who require training. I open a new path, a higher road, heaven, Utopia! I am Judge, the key to a new world order.

Tasteless and degrading jokes aren't that funny at all

Well, here we go again. Our weekly women's issues column that I know you all eagerly await. This week's topic (a drum roll begins as the crowd lowers to a hush): bad jokes.

I don't mean jokes that are not only lacking humor, but are just plain old unnecessary. This past weekend I was up bright and early in the afternoon when I heard such a degrading and unnecessary joke. It annoyed me and sent me off the walls until I realized it really was not much different from most other jokes I hear on a regular basis.

Picture this: the sun is shining, the birds are chirping and a few feet from my dorm window I hear, "Hey, how do you want your coffee?" "Black and sweet. Just how I like my women." Out my window I saw two well-fed White males in their UMass gear laughing hysterically.

Oh, okay! Hello Mister UMass employee! Guess what buddy, I pay your salary along with plenty of other women at this University; both White and Black women. What a talent he has, huh? He can discriminate against a gender and an ethnic group in one sha-bang! That well-humored man perfectly manipulated his words to include a sexist and a racist tone just to get a double laugh. Kind of strange, I didn't even crack a smile.

Why did those men find such a degrading remark so hilarious? Could it be just plain ignorance, lack of respect or fear? I don't think it can be ignorance.

We all do realize that women and all other minorities are people too. Don't we? And we all understand that to receive respect we must give respect. Right?

Stacy Malone

So, now it all boils down to fear. Are some white males just now realizing that minorities will no longer settle for being subordinate? Equality is desired by all human beings, but is attempted to be controlled by the dominant group in our society by allowing white males most of the privileges. Did these men feel some sort of control by oppressing through discriminatory jokes? Are they that afraid to look next to them and have to treat a woman as a co-worker rather than a slave or a sex object?

I suppose after being the dominant group for all of these generations, I should sympathize with these men who have to grasp at their beliefs to participate in such unnecessary discriminating jokes. Their manners of expressing discrimination are gradually being edged away through a rise in desire of equality amongst minorities. I guess discriminatory jokes are just a way to hold on to some power, but I do not sympathize with them at all. What I feel much more resembles pity that those white men found it so funny to cut people down to satisfy their own humor.

If a woman walked around making discriminatory jokes and comments about men would people laugh at them?

Well, I know many men who would not. As a matter of fact, she would probably be labelled such affectionate names like "men-basher," "feminist" or "lesbian." In a male dominant society such titles are not too accepted. I don't ever recall meeting a men-basher, feminist or lesbian who was ever more severe with discriminatory jokes than a good-witted bunch of men, but that does not matter.

It is so much easier to make the jokes when you know none of them are on you. I know that is slightly harsh to say or rather point out, but think about it. Are there more jokes aimed at women or men? You got it. Women. Minorities are almost always the butt of jokes. You will tend to find a lot less people laugh at discriminatory jokes when the joke is directed at them.

To all of you out there with your never-ending collections of discriminatory jokes: are you afraid that soon the jokes will be on you?

Third World Affairs

Pentagon Papers II: the imperialist manifesto

Thanks to a series of documents leaked in the past few months, it is becoming possible to begin to piece together a coherent image of what U.S. strategic geopolitical doctrine will look like in the post-Cold War era, "beyond containment."

These documents provide an overview of the thinking in the Pentagon unequaled since the "Pentagon Papers." The threat this planing poses to the general peace and Third World security cannot be overstated. They constitute a manifesto for total global hegemony, enforced by constant war, specifically targeted at Third World nations, backed up by the vast arsenal of U.S. doomsday weapons.

What characterizes the new thinking most is the starkness of its principles and new level of ruthlessness which it reveals. The kind of thinking that, in the GulfWar, gave us total war on Iraqi civilians, the mass roasting and burying alive of soldiers, and 100,000 dead children, was just a foretaste of what awaits future victims. The key post-Cold War development is that now no rivals are to be tolerated, and any state trying to improve its position is a target. We are facing absolute rule.

It was the industrial wing of The Complex that, in 1991, first began the quasi-public airing of "scenarios" advertising future wars. General Dynamics Corporation, in an effort to win contracts for new cruise missiles with "pinpoint accuracy" at up to 1,500 miles, listed five contingencies and how many missiles would be required to "face the challenges." They anticipated smashing both Iran and Iraq with 173 missiles, assaulting India with 190 missiles, bashing Libya with 70, using 28 missiles against a fictitious Indonesian coup attempt, and launching no less than 465 missiles at Russia. These "threats," constructed primarily in naval terms, were criticized for ignoring "ground threats."

Since then, there has been a proliferation of policy documents calling for global nuclear blackmail. In January, a Pentagon report said the United States must retarget its nuclear forces (5,000 warheads) onto non-nuclear Third World countries, including "every reasonable adversary." Greeted by administration officials as a "good piece of work," it pointed out that the United States "must keep nuclear weapons to protect its fundamental interests... [including] a healthy economy," and if it "moves from being a superpower to being an equal, others may decide to become equals as well." It suggested the creation of a "Nuclear Expeditionary Force" to launch nukes from air and sea at defenseless Third World countries, and called for "deliberate ambiguity" in diplomacy.

Hussein Ibish

In February there followed the infamous "seven scenarios" plan, in which the Pentagon was supposedly predicting the most likely contingencies for U.S. warmaking in the near future. It's ironic that it is this document which received by far the most attention and concern from the press and public. The scenarios are almost all absurd and deeply unconvincing. What was unmistakable, however, is the tone of megalomania and unrestrained lust for power in the document. It sees Russia attacking Lithuania and Poland, North Korea attacking South Korea, right wing coups in Panama and the Philippines (somehow threatening to the United States) in league with a drug cartel (!), and (this one seems beyond belief) a new Iraqi attack on Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

These "scenarios" would seem to be the products of hysterical and paranoid minds. But, it's more likely this list of contingencies is deliberately absurd, designed to make a point without revealing any of the real planning that goes on. Beyond how ridiculous most of these ideas are, note the absence of any of the real (and obvious) potential areas of conflict and concern — South African civil strife, U.S./Indian rivalry in the Indian Ocean, Kashmir, Russian rivalry with Ukraine and/or Central Asia, and the possibility of an Israeli attack on one or more of its neighbors.

More serious, however, were both the implied subtexts and the overall attitude of the scenarios. Clearly, the threat to Panama is far more suggestive of Cuba, and there are those who see a challenge to China in the passage regarding Korea. But, of course, the real message is that no one any time, anywhere, will be allowed effective independence from the mighty U.S. Leviathan.

This truth is demonstrated by the final scenario, a global "threat" by a "new expansionist superpower." It is not made clear who is in mind, so this passage clearly applies to anyone foolish enough to consider trying to "become equals as well."

According to the New York Times, this document was received in Congress as "quite believable, even too conservative."

The "no rivals" policy was given a full unveiling in March, when the Defense Department had its new policy statement leaked to the press. This bloodcurdling, chilling document, drafted in conjunction with the National Security Council and the President's personal advisors, lays out in full the U.S. plan to rule the world, without exception or restraint, through war and blackmail.

It left little doubt about the role of "friends" and "allies," gloating that the "cold war victory" had been as much about "the integration of Germany and Japan into a U.S.-led system of collective security" as it had been about the Soviet Union. The idea that these rising states could become powers in their own right is shot down at once. The policy says the United States will "maintain the mechanisms for deterring potential competitors from even aspiring [!] to a larger regional or global role."

The absolutism of U.S. rule is incredible. Don't even think about taking a bigger role, even in your region. Any moves by anyone to increase participation and/or influence are now seen as full justification for retaliation, and that goes for "friends."

The U.S. government will seek to get its way at the U.N. but "should be postured to act independently when collective action cannot be orchestrated." Obviously, there is no real role for collectivism, or anything but the crudest form of machtpolitik.

As far as the Third World goes, having been thoroughly retargeted by the full might of the U.S. terror weapons, they are not to dream of acquiring a deterrent capacity to resist this kind of openly declared international tyranny. "The U.S. may be faced with the question of whether to take military steps to prevent the development" of Third World deterrence. Given the experience of Iraq during and after the Gulf War, we know what the answer is likely to be. Brutal attack. None may seek independence.

Cuba, North Korea, and China are specifically targeted for attention. They are said to be in crisis, which leaves open the possibility for "actions that would otherwise seem irrational," suggesting that they are seen as potential targets for attack.

In short, there seems little doubt about the way in which the United States plans to use its relative monopoly of power. Absolute Rule! The leaked internal Pentagon documents make no bones at all about that. Anyone who steps out of line (and apparently that doesn't take much) is to be smashed with the awesome power of the U.S. military machine.

All great empires of the past are made to seem puny and feeble in comparison to this, the first total global empire.

Total global empire!

South Africa: a nation still in the throes of war

March 1992: The results of the "whites only" referendum are announced. An overwhelming majority (68.7 percent) of the white South Africans voted to pursue peaceful change.

An amazing step forward for the forces of peace and justice! A great triumph over the neo-Nazi white supermacists! Certainly this means that South Africa will change.

Surely this is the last nail in the coffin for apartheid and any doubts about the sincerity of the white minority in power-sharing with Blacks for the "good of the country."

However, a closer examination reveals a different situation.

January 1989: Apartheid. A minority of 5.5 million whites owns 87% of the land and rule over almost 30 million Blacks (a generic term used to refer to all "African," "Indian" and "colored" people), none of whom can vote in the land of their birth.

The state owns the entire postal service, transport system, iron, steel and chemical industry, and huge shares in the gold and diamond mines which operate under the name of Anglo-American.

Education is state-controlled. Depending on their registered ethnicity, students are "educated" at "ethnic" primary schools right through to "ethnic" universities.

The police and army continue to occupy Black schools and residential areas with unlimited power to detain anyone for unlimited periods without reason or charge. Even the "courts of law" offer limited protection.

Violence in the Black areas continues to increase with progressive activists being systematically assassinated, detained or reported missing. Evidence of state involvement in violence mounts.

The Group Areas Act, which dictates different areas of residence and business according to race, is still being enforced. The Separate Amenities Act, aimed at controlling the use of public facilities for different races, is still the law. The Influx Control Act still controls the movement and access to employment of Blacks. Job reservations (for whites only) is the norm, with whites earning from two to four times more than equal-ranking Blacks.

The government spends eight times more money on the education of white children. Hospitals are segregated with whites having vastly superior quality health care. Ninety-nine percent of the arable land is owned by whites, who receive high subsidies.

The African National Congress, South African Communist Party and Pan African Congress are still "banned and illegal." Thousands of political prisoners languish in jails. The Immorality Act being scrapped, South Africans are legally allowed to have sexual relations across "racial barriers."

February 1990: Having received a mandate from the 1989 whites-only election to pursue negotiations, the government declares all political organizations "legal." Comrade Nelson Mandela, together with a few other political prisoners, is set free. The government announces the white minority regime is prepared to "negotiate a new settlement that would enable Blacks to participate in the political process of the country," and have engaged on the road of "irreversible change towards a New South Africa." At last apartheid was finally going to be buried.

That's what we all thought. And how wrong we were.

Anil Kanjee

April 1992: Two years later, no significant change has occurred. Even though negotiations have been taking place, the president has been reassuring white South Africa that "they will not lose any of their privileges."

Yes, the Groups Area Act, the Influx Control Act, the Separate Amenities Act and the Bantu Education Act have been officially "repealed." However, all local authorities are still allowed to practice and enforce these racist laws "as they see fit."

Schools and residential areas are as segregated as ever. State expenditure on Blacks has not improved. Use of public facilities cost fees Blacks cannot afford.

AP photo

Members of the Neo-Nazi Iron Guard march in a show of force near Ventersdorp, South Africa sometime before the recent Whites only referendum .

The police and military still have unlimited power. Several political prisoners remain unreleased, many remain in exile, and thousands have been killed, with conclusive proof of state involvement. In March alone, 374 Blacks were killed.

The Neo-Nazi Afrikaaner white supremacist group continues to massacre Blacks and blow up property. The State Security Branch continues to operate even after its sponsorship of vigilante groups is exposed. In the words of a Black youth organization member, "More of us [Blacks] are dying now in these times of 'peace' than when we were at 'war.'"

The government continues to transfer economic power into the control of the white minority, for fear of a Black government coming to power. Unemployment among Blacks remains constant between 40 and 50 percent. After two years, while conditions for white people improved, for Black people no significant change has occurred.

For Blacks, the "yes" vote doesn't mean much. True, many were delighted at the positive vote. After all, a "no" vote would almost certainly lead to a bloody civil war.

Black people are well aware that the government is intent on preserving capitalism and white minority rule. On March 19, De Klerk stated he would ensure that "private property rights and privileges" of whites will be protected.

While de Klerk may appear to be a reformer, the reality is that he is a staunch defender of the system of racial capitalism and the status quo. The positive results of the referendum mean rewards for the government. The international community is being hoodwinked into accepting the racist South African government.

Holland and Nigeria have enjoyed in-state visits with South Africa. France and Denmark have lifted all sanctions and many countries are now opening consulates in South Africa.

Another goal is please the U.S. bosses. Undoubtedly, loans will be used to promote the economic control by the whites, as evidenced by the strong moves by the state to "privatize" most of its assets, i.e. sell to whites.

If the current state of affairs seems gloomy and frightening, it's because it is so. Blacks are under no illusions.

Nowhere in history has any oppressor simply given up power. Black South Africans are aware that things are going to get muchworse before it gets any better. The resolve of many of our people is as strong as ever, and the fight will be carried on to the bitter end.

'Nuns on the Run' and 'Gallipoli' on HSCN

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to yet another installment of the Campus Cable Connection.

Now, my faithful flick followers, I have an announcement that you can pass on to your friends who don't read my column (either because they have no taste or are illiterate). Anyway, the manager of the Housing Services Cable Network contacted me early Monday morning informing me that no movies were shown at all on Sunday. She does not work on weekends, but checks her messages every couple of hours. If there are no complaints, then she has no idea anything is wrong. The moral of my story is, if there is a problem, CALL AND YOU SHALL RECEIVE. Nuff said? GOOD!

Campus Cable

Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, April 15 (HINT: I didn't like Point Break, just in case you couldn't tell).

Escape From New York — Kurt Russell, Lee Van Cleef, Ernest Borgnine. The year is 1997, and Snake Plissken (Russell) tries to escape from Manhattan, which has been turned into a maximum security prison. Believe me, it sounds much better than it actually is. Apparently, this director has a thing about the future being very bleak and austere. (Hey, have any of you ever seen a futuristic sci-fi flick with a positive outlook? Yeah, me neither. Kinda depressing, huh? Sorry, I digress. . .) It left me with a very bad taste in my mouth. (Trust me, it was the movie and NOT the jalapeno dip.) **

Gallipoli — Mark Lee, Mel Gibson, Bill Kerr. Ooh! Ooh! Mel in all his prime, the same year The Road Warrior came out. Gibson and Lee enlist in the military during WWI in a very powerful drama, with fantastic directing, acting and convincing period detail. The plot is very intriguing, and the acting is a definite plus. . . don't miss! ***

Heart Like A Wheel — Bonnie Bedelia, Beau Bridges, Leo Rossi. Bedelia is a race car driver who has to deal with sexism to be a seriously considered candidate on the race track. No, no, don't freak. . . it's not like that heinous movie Days of Thunder, but it ain't a winner, either. **

Home Alone — Macaulay Culkin, Catherine O'Hara, Joe Pesci. Alright people, I know this movie has been played about 10 million times this semester, but what the heck, it's a fun flick to watch. I mean, you can always watch the scene when Dan Stern gets the tarantula on his face. . . that scream is such a classic. No matter how many times I've watched it, I still laugh. Pesci, of course, is hysterical, and Macaulay isn't that bad either. ***

Jekyll and Hyde... Together Again — Mark Blankfield, Bess Armstrong, Krista Erickson. Whoa. . . All-Star cast here, huh? Depends on your type of humor. . . if you like mad scientists snorting white powder, sexual innuendos, and lots of vulgarity all wrapped up in a poorly edited film by a first-time director, then you'll like this flick. If not, you won't. A couple of good laughs, though. **

North Dallas Forty — Nick Nolte, Mac Davis, Charles Durning. Based on the bestseller by Peter Gent, this film is a wonderfully scripted, outstandingly acted portrayal of labor abuse in the National Football League. Now, I don't like football too much, but this movie was so gripping, my eyes were riveted to the screen. Nolte is sheer enjoyment. A must-see! 1/2

Nuns on the Run — Eric Idle, Robbie Coltrane, Camille Coduri. Okay, okay, the premise is overused. . . two guys running from a boss and hiding out. Whoopee. However, what they do with the premise is strikingly fresh and funny. They dress up as nuns and hide out in a convent. Some of the dialogue is so humorous, you'd think I wrote it! (HA! Just kidding. Really.) Give it a chance. . . I think it's worth watching. 1/2

Point Break — Keanu Reeves, Patrick Swayze, Gary Busey. Hmm, my theory is a group of people got together and decided to sell movie tickets by putting oh-so-studly Keanu and Patrick in wet suits to show off their tight buttocks and impressive bulges. Lord knows, the movie offers little else. A couple of good fight scenes, one good sex scene, and a semi-promising plot that completely fizzles at the end. Needless to say, I was disappointed but not surprised. 1/2* for the movie and * for Keanu's butt. (Mm, mm, good.)

Running Brave — Robby Benson, Pat Hingle, Jeff McCracken. Based on the real-life story of Billy Mills, a Sioux Native American, who leaves his reservation to become an Olympic gold medalist. Kinda corny, kinda sappy and only moderately entertaining. It's a wonderful story, don't get me wrong, but the movie itself really could have offered so much more. 1/2

Short Time — Dabney Coleman, Matt Frewer, Teri Garr. Ooh, looky, here's an original idea. A man is given the wrong diagnosis (the files are messed up and stuff) and is told he has a terminal disease with only a short time to live, so he goes and tries to get himself killed (so he can die in the line of duty for insurance purposes — oh yeah, he's a cop. . . you know, lots of bang-bang scenes and robbers and ferent. Some very silly moments, but some are very genuinely funny. You can't miss the scene when Candy dresses up as a jockey and uses the jockey telephones. Oy, what a riot. 1/2 Who's Harry Crumb? — John Candy, Jeffrey Jones, Annie Potts. Candy is a wonderfully cast as a bumbling detective who changes his identity quite often to get information. Kinda like Fletch, but diffstuff), but of course he can't get killed because everybody knows that when you try to die, you can't, right? (Whew!) A couple of funny scenes, but not enough to keep the movie interesting. *

Outrageous Fortune — Bette Midler, Shelley Long, Peter Coyote. You know, I never would have thought that Midler and Long would have had on-screen comedic chemistry, but I guess I was wrong. These two funny women are even funnier together as they discover they have been having an affair with the same man who stages his own death. A laugh a minute. ***

House — William Katt, George Wendt, Richard Moll. Screwy movie of a horror writer (Katt) who is all screwed up from his recent divorce, the disappearance of his son, and his memories from Vietnam. He's plagued by these bizarre demonic fantasies when he goes to live in his aunt's house (she ironically committed suicide there). It's pure schlock, but watching George Wendt (Norm on "Cheers") and Richard Moll (Bull from "Night Court") is worth a glance. *

Stripes — Bill Murray, Harold Ramis, Warren Oates, and a special appearance by my favorite actress with unspeakable talent (NOT!) Sean Young. Despite the presence of Sean, this movie is a definite classic. Murray joins the army with buddy Ramis, and though the movie is a tad predictable, it's SOOO funny! Also appearing in the flick are John Candy, John Larroquette and Judge Reinhold, all very talented comedians. ("There she was, just a walkin' down the street, singin' doo wah ditty ditty . . .") ***

Movies that are on HSCN but are not reviewed this week are: Tough Guys, Where the Heart Is, Blaze, Bliss, The Bride, and Conrack.

Regional lacrosse foes visit the Hill

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts lacrosse coach Ted Garber has been saying it all season: "You've got to play the game, not the name."

Today at Richard F. Garber Field at 3 p.m., the Gorillas (4-2) will be trying not to look past New Hampshire (3-3). UMass is the Wildcats' biggest game of the season, and anything approaching last Wednesday's letdown against Providence could endanger the Gorillas' NCAA hopes.

UNH looks like a pretty bad lacrosse team, which makes it even harder for the Gorillas to avoid a letdown. How bad? They lost 8-5 to Boston College, a team UMass has beaten by 20-goal point spreads the past two seasons. UNH has also lost to common opponent St. John's, 9-4, and came out on the wrong end of an 11-2 score against Delaware, whom the Gorillas face this weekend.

But this is a regional game, and UNH players have reason to psych themselves up — they'll be facing their former head coach in Garber, who posted an 80-81 record at the Wildcats' helm before taking the UMass job in 1991.

"Anytime [UMass] is playing New Hampshire throw the record book out," Garber said. "They'll want to play well against a top team, and I know their players will have a little extra emotion going tomorrow because I coached them."

Doubters should recall last season's result in Durham, N.H., a 15-12 UMass win that shouldn't have been close. Assistant coach Tom Carmean called that effort "sloppy" after the game, and sloppy isn't where the Gorillas want to be right now.

The question for UMass is whether or not they can turn in a dominating effort against a sub-par team. After being scared by lesser-regarded St. John's and Providence, the Gorillas would do well to end this game early. UMass will also hope to improve their extra-man offense, which Garber said got plenty of work in practice this week.

However, after last week's emotionally charged win over Yale, Garber isn't expecting a similar letdown the rest of the season.

Leading the way for the Wildcats is John Daley, a player Garber holds in high regard. Daley, is tied for the team goal scoring lead, as he and Jim Palmer both have 8 scores. Daley has added 4 assists to lead UNH with 12 points. Garber cited Bill Golden and goaltender Brian Vona as other leaders for UNH.

"He's a gamer." Roger Clemens pitches injured, then flies to Cleveland (land of no fans) to salvage the double dipper. Don Zimmer gets a rousing ovation.

Tanquility base. The Red Sox. Springtime. It is great to be alive.

• UMass Sports Information Director Howie Davis summed it up when he asked if a) the NHL is playing hockey again and, b) does everyone still make the playoffs?

The Boston Garden will just be one thick layer of fog by the time the Bruins get started in the second round.

• If you happen to see Brett "Come soar with us" Morris (he's the funny looking guy that walks around in a daze) be sure to give him a good shot in the arm just for being a Yankees fan. Poor soul thinks the Bronx Bombers are for real. Idiot.

• If the Lakers ever get Shaquille O'Neal I'll take the first purple and gold Laker fan I see and throw him off the Tobin Bridge. Let's hope it's Dyan Cannon.

• With the Kentucky Derby just around the corner it looks as though I'll be riding Black Devil to the finish line in Lexington. I was riding Joker for a long time, but we had a parting of ways when he refused to canter for me. Stubborn mule.

• Tomorrow's parade for the hoop team should be something to behold. I'm kind of hoping anti-fun advocate Margot Parrot gets trampled in the midst of the celebration. Didn't Captain Kangaroo have a friend name Marot the Parrot? Maybe it was on Sesame Street.

• I guess there's a new Olympic sport called the pizza toss and some aspiring female athlete took her training to the pizza joint last week. My cat-like reflexes allowed the slice to float majestically onto my buddy Del's shoulder. Obviously the girl's training methods lack something.

• There seems to be a problem with people continually asking me to include them in this space. There are two ways to go about this. Either be a complete and blithering idiot or. . .

"Holy [expletive]! This is the year!" On the other hand, what kind of Red Sox fan would I be if I didn't express that sentiment with total sincerity before the start of every season?

So this season is already full of holes, boys and girls. Burks is really making me mad — him and Greenwell, a couple of sissies. Lots of people say to trade either one or both of those guys for a great reliever or a solid outfielder or what have you, and I'm one of them. Sure, Burks is soft-spoken and seems like a terrific guy but lads, "I knew Rice and Evans, I worked with Rice and Evans. . . you boys are no Rice and Evans!"

As I wrote that, Burks grounded into a double play to secure our loss to the Orioles. We're 2-4 now, and Butch didn't look happy in that dugout.

I must say that I like Hobson. I don't know how much of a strategist he is, but he certainly won't take a lot of nonsense from the players — he will command respect.

Old Hobson, with his ageless face and snow-white hair, he's my only real hope. What else can I believe in? With Matt Young pitching a no-hitter and Clemens going on to pitch a potent two-hitter with a bum finger on his pitching hand; with Danny 'Crater Face' Darwin reemerging from his injury as a fine reliever and last season's 3, 4 and 5 starters vanishing into thin air, etc.

Yes, the blindly aroused idealisms have been quelched, I am still thrilled for the season but I can see clearly now and feel confident that I'll bring to you a rational, level-headed column.

O GOD!! C'MON, I WAITED, I ROOTED, I'VE MISSED YOU I LOVE YOU I HATE YOU!! PLEASE, BASTARDS, DON'T BLOW IT!!

starter Dana Perrotte's wild pitch and scored on Kevin Correa's sacrifice fly to give the Minutemen the 2-1 lead they wouldn't relinquish.

Rob Graziano came in to pitch the sixth and seventh, and he successfully shut down Vermont to pick up his first save of the year. But there was nothing that could save the first game, a 7-1 blowout which had the whole squad shaking their heads.

The Minutemen committed six errors in the field, gave up five unearned runs and only mustered two hits of their own. Stone said he wasn't pleased with either the first or the second games.

"The first game, we didn't pitch, we didn't hit and we didn't field," Stone said. "In the second game, we didn't hit or field very well, but fortunately we had good pitching."

Vermont starter Brady Frost (5-0) handcuffed the Minutmen with his array of off-speed pitches. Frost used his change up and curveball to set up his fastball.

"He was tough," Howard said. "He had a lot of good pitches working for him."

two errors by Aprile.

The Minutewomen tied the score when Aprile doubled to lead off and went to third when Lawson reached on an error by Payne. After Lawson stole second, Marean hit a sacrifice fly which plated Aprile and advanced Lawson to third. Devlin then singled home Lawson.

Aprile (6-1) settled down after the first, setting down 10 in a row at one point and allowing only one hit in each of the fifth and sixth innings. The win was her 65th career victory.

UMass scored the go-ahead run in the third as Lawson reached on an error and was sacrificed to second by Marean. One out later, Devlin singled Lawson home and UMass was up to stay, 3-2.

Insurance runs were scored in the fifth and sixth.

Marean singled with one out in the fifth, putting her hitting streak at 24 games, tying the NCAA record. Marean was named A-10 Player of the Week for the fourth week in a row.

Catcher Sherri Kuchinskas and Devlin both singled to load the bases, and Marean scored on a sacrifice fly by Bush.

In the sixth, DuEst, Aprile and Lawson all singled to load the bases. DuEst was forced home when Marean walked.

Toothaker wins third, baseball splits twinbill

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

You could almost say UMass won going away.

The baseball team, playing as the away team at its own Earl Lorden Field, bounced back from a 7-1 loss in the opener of Tuesday's double-header to squeak out a 2-1 win in the night-cap against the University of Vermont, thanks to the pitching of Jeff Toothaker and the bunt.

The game was supposed to have been played in Burlington, but melting snow at Centennial Field moved the game to Amherst.

According to some, UMass (14-11) had some luck in gaining the split.

"We played sloppy," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We couldn't get anything going, we basically stunk up the joint and we're lucky to come out with a split."

Toothaker (3-0) was tough in the second game for five innings and kept the Catamount hitters off guard with his submarine delivery. Unfortunately, the right-hander fell behind 1-0 right from the start.

Leadoff hitter Steve Johnson reached on an error, David Tessicini singled him to second, Marc Chroniere advanced him to third and first baseman Kevin Cashman drove him in with a sacrifice fly, giving Vermont (14-6) its only lead of the game.

UMass bats awoke, sort of, in the fourth when left fielder Justin Howard led off with a single, moved to second on John Carelli's bunt and scored on Bill Knight's clutch two-out, two-strike single that crazily bounced over Cashman's glove.

The run tied up the game at 1, and when Toothaker retired the side in the fourth after hitting Mike Mora to lead off the inning, UMass had momentum slowly turning its way.

Joe Mattivello, the star of yesterday's action, bunted for a base hit to lead off the fifth. Yet another bunt, this time by catcher Michael Kersten, brought him to second.

"Joe had a nice day," Stone said. "Nobody else was swinging the bat very well, so I kept Joe in the lineup. I figured maybe he's hot today, and he helped us win the ball game."

Mattivello moved to third on Vermont

Softball sweeps URI; alone on top of A-10

By KEVIN HERLIHY

The UMass softball team, ranked 19th nationally, took sole possession of first place in the Atlantic 10 yesterday, sweeping a doubleheader, 7-2 and 5-2, from the University of Rhode Island at Totman Field.

UMass is now 19-8 overall and 8-0 in the A-10. URI dropped to 8-13 and 6-2.

In the first game, the Minutewomen went up 1-0 in the second inning. Peggy Bush reached first on a bunt single with two strikes, and was sacrificed to second by Stacey Nicholls. Bush went to third when a grounder by Tracy DuEst was booted by URI second baseman Lisa Payne. Lisa Melz then knocked Bush in with a hard single to right.

URI evened the score in the top of the fourth after Payne was walked by UMass pitcher Darlene Claffey. Catcher Sue Hubin, hit a grounder back to Claffey, who had to wait a second too long for the force at second base to materialize, and everyone was safe. Payne went to third on a sacrifice by Julie Moreau and scored when a slapper by Theresa Squarcia rolled between Claffey and shortstop Barabara Marean.

UMass needed some defense to hold URI in the top of the sixth. DuEst booted a grounder by Payne and was forced out at second on a fielder's choice grounder by Hubin. Moreau then hit a long triple to the base of the fence in right, scoring Hubin. UMass third baseman Laurie Dondarski then made a diving grab of a liner by Squarcia to end the inning, saving a run to keep the score 2-1.

In the bottom of the sixth as Marean tripled, extending her hitting streak to 23 games, and scored on a single by Jen Devlin. Devlin stole second and came home on a double by Bush. Nicholls sacrificed Bush to third, and after Dondarski reached on an error Bush scored on the front end of a double steal and UMass never looked back.

In game two, UMass pitcher Holly Aprile had a rocky start, allowing two first inning runs on only one hit. URI was aided by a walk, a passed ball and

Scott's shots

Entering the last week of my preparation for the Boston Marathon I have this suspicion that I'm peaking too early.

I made it from one Uptown bar to another in just under 11.8 seconds over the weekend. Talk about Heartbreak Hill. It's not easy to drink 26 miles worth of beer in under three hours. We shall overcome.

• The ink was barely dry on Coach Cal's new contract and team manager Brian Gorman was spotted doing some early campaigning for next year's "Cravat King" (best tie) award.

As this year's consensus All-Tie winner, I have to say Cal will need to put some of his new found wealth toward his neckwear. Gorman's not messing around. Of course he's still got a long way to go to match my silks.

• As this space's first professional venture, we have decided to sponsor the odds-on favorite to win the Haigis Hoopla II tournament, "Scott's Hot Shots." You think Michigan's got some talent? Check out these diaper dandies.

At the guard spots for my Hot Shots are Tamir "I'll pass the ball through my underwear" Lipton and Greg Alexander The Great. Posting up down low will be one of the best-kept secrets on campus, a 7-foot-2 gazelle, Kevin It's Miller Time.

Of course there is room for a fourth player on the roster and that spot is currently filled by the "Masked Hoopster." His, or her, identity will be revealed in due time.

Men's track snubbed by URI

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Last Saturday at Llewelyn Derby track, the University of Massachusetts men's track team suffered its first loss of the season to Rhode Island, 81.5-73, but still managed to defeat Williams, which was third with a 45.5 mark.

Westfield State was not able to compete at the meet.

Senior Kevin Walters, who placed in four events, led the way for UMass as he won the 100 meter event with an 11.0 and placed second in the 200m in a time of 22.6. Teammate Lionel Benjamin wrapped up second place in the 100m [11.1] and fifth in the 200m [23.5].

Freshman Brian Gormley suprised everyone (including coach Ken O'Brien) by winning the 5000m in a time of 15:24.6.

"Brian has had a great two weeks of practice," O'Brien said. "All his hard work is finally helping him adjust from high school to college long distance."

Also turning in a strong performance for UMass was junior letterman Joe Kourafas, who won the long jump with an impressive jump of 20',7.5". UMass' John Johnson was fourth at 20",0.75".

In the 800m event, Minuteman teammates Matt Simon and Tom Hooper finished one-two respectively. Simon had a time of 1:56.2 as he nosed out Hooper, who had a time of 1:56.9, at the end.

Senior letterman Steve Brown turned in a stellar performance in the 400m, winning in a time of 49.5.

As a team, UMass won the 4x100m race in a time of 43.7, and the 4x400m with a 3:23.2. Williams was second in the 4x100 [66.5] and URI captured second in the 4x400 [3:25.4].

Still UMass couldn't overcome a tough, well balanced URI team despite leading going into the last event.

"Overall, I'm happy with our performance because they [URI] are a solid team," O'Brien said. "They placed third in the New England indoor track championships, so we did well to place second."

"We had a great chance to win," junior middle distance runner Art Piccolo said, "but they just pulled away in the end by sweeping the high hurdles."

In the 110 highs, UMass' Jeff White and Paul Doyle ran great times of 15.2 and and 15.8 respectively but still that was only good enough for second and fourth place. URI's Jeff Woods claimed first with a 15.0.

UMass junior middle distance runner Jim Avery agreed with O'Brien that URI was just too tough to beat.

"That's the closest we've come to Rhode Island in a while," Avery said. "Last year we lost by about 20 so overall we had a decent meet."

Track Notes: UMass will face the University of Connecticut (fourth in NE indoor championships) and Massachusetts Institute of Technology this coming Saturday at MIT.

New season, same old Sox

It seems that for the past month warm weather and the baseball season were running toward each other, but were nowhere in sight. Last week, they collided in a dazzling array of smells and colors — hey, it's the same old thing from the Fenway Fools, but how am I not to rejoice anyway? I adore the baseball season and can shoot the Red Sox breeze with anybody, any time.

I was one of the few, the proud, that lamented Joe Morgan's dismissal: "Well, see ya, Joe. It's back to clearing snow off the Pike for you, old sport," I thought. "You were too nice a guy for these prima donnas."

My mourning was short lived. I soon found out about the nostalgia trip the people 'upstairs' were on. Everybody knocks sentimentality, but this '70s reunion special will sell tickets like Cadbury Eggs! Gale as pitching coach, and Rico 'The Rat' Petrocelli as PawSox skipper. I'll watch it just to check out all those old guys back in Boston uniforms!!

So that's how I felt, and then they played the first game. And I landed into a fresh field of familiar reality. Who was I kidding when I blurted out

Senate enters new era, election brings new faces

By GAYLE LONG

Senior Bob Monaghan banged the gavel for the last time as Speaker of the Student Senate, and senior Sharon Lang gave her final Treasurer's Report to the Student Government Association as the officers were replaced at last night's elections.

The duo stepped down after a year in office, and the new faces of junior Tracy O'Connell and sophomore David Anderson will fill the voids of treasurer and speaker, respectively.

The two received unanimous approval.

Matthew Pavesi, chair of the governmental affairs committee, nominated Anderson for speaker, citing Anderson's commitment to student empowerment.

"He's worked hard this semester and really proven himself," Pavesi said. "He's done a wonderful job for students."

Although Senators Ken Kaplan and Jeff Turco were both nominated for the position, both declined.

Kaplan, a resident assistant, declined because of the conflict of interest.

Anderson, a transfer student studying environmental science, said because he was active at his former school, he felt a need to get involved.

"I brought those lessons [his experiences from his other school] here. I was the finance coordinator for the Board of Governors when they were in a period of struggle and they needed to plan events for students and I was heavily involved," he said.

Anderson said he is a student registrar and is certified by the Town of Amherst to register voters.

He is also on the search committee for a new Vice Chancellor of University Relations and Development.

O'Connell ran unopposed, and the junior said she was anxious to get started, citing her predecessor Lang as a hard act to follow.

"I remember coming into this room as a freshman and people screaming at each other," she said. "It took a lot of courage to come back. It's going to be hard to follow Sharon's work."

O'Connell said Lang has begun sorting through the files, trying to determine the exact state of the SGA and she plans on spending her summer doing this as well.

"I'm going to dissect the files and determine what we have and what we don't," she said.

In other senate news:

• The senate allocated $20,000 to the Union Production Council for the Spring Concert, which will be on May 10.

• Also given money for spring events were the Orchard Hill Area Government, which will receive $2,500 for Bowl Day; Central Area Government $2,500 for Spring Fling and Southwest and Greek Area Government were given $5,000 for their spring concert.

• The LBGA was allocated $1,000 for Awareness Week funding, and the Cape Verdean Club given $1,050 for speakers and space rental this semester.

• SGA President Jennifer Wood announced that the Senate House Ways and Means Committee will be hearing testimony on the state of higher education.

The committee will be making recommendations for the state higher education budget for fiscal year 1993. The testimony will be on April 25, at 10 a.m. at the Statehouse in Boston.

UM profs awarded Guggenheims

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

Two University professors found out last week that they have received Guggenheim Fellowships totaling $26,350 for work they are currently involved in at the University.

John J. McCarthy, a professor in the linguistics department, and Robert B. Hallock, a professor and head of the department of physics and astronomy, were among 149 recipients of the Fellowship in the United States and Canada this year.

"I was delighted to hear the news. It is a unexpected honor," said McCarthy.

"The first thing I felt was surprise," said Hallock. "I thought, 'What a nice honor.' Then I thought, 'Boy, am I lucky!'"

McCarthy graduated summa cum laude in linguistics and Near Eastern languages from Harvard in 1975, and received his doctorate from M.I.T. in 1979. He has been at the University since 1985, and is currently director of the linguistics department graduate program.

He will be using his grant money to complete research in theoretical linguistics and finish a book. The book, co-authored with Allan Prince, a linguistics professor at Rutgers University, concerns the processes of word formation in relation to sound structure.

"My goal is to discover properties that apply to all languages, to add to a universal theory of people's innate endowments for language," he said.

He will be on sabbatical next fall, but he said he will be staying at the University to complete his project.

"I think [UMass] has the finest linguistics program in the world," he said. "I am choosing to stay here to work with some very fine colleagues and research students."

Hallock graduated from UMass in 1965 with a degree in physics, and went on to receive his master's and doctorate from Stanford University in 1967 and 1969.

He is now involved in research in experimental low temperature physics here at the University with six graduate and one undergraduate student. Their research involves properties of liquid helium at extremely low temperatures.

"We study what goes on at -458 degrees Fahrenheit," he said.

He said the grant money will be used to continue the research, down to a much lower temperature region.

"We're going to try to cool things down to .001 degrees from absolute zero," he said. "Without the fellowship, we might not have been able to do this or it would have taken much longer."

Hallock said he is excited about a "special prediction" as to the behavior of liquid helium so near the threshold of absolute zero.

"Mother Nature plays hide and seek. We're going to poke around another corner and see what she's hiding," he said.

The Guggenheim Fellowship has been awarded annually by the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation for 68 years to artists, scholars and scientists.

Coach Cal talks about his success

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate gathered at their weekly meeting last night with an unlikely guest — University of Massachusetts men's basketball head coach John Calipari.

Calipari shared some of the secrets of his success with student senators by telling them one of the most important ways to motivate people at UMass was to feel good and have self-esteem.

"If you're out getting drunk five nights a week, you aren't doing the right thing," he said. "Think about the way you feel the next morning. You aren't doing the right thing."

He uses the same message with his players: "If you not going to classes or are just rotten to people, you're probably not feeling good about yourself."

He said this was part of the success of the team.

"When I first got here, if the ball went into the stands, we had to get it ourselves," he said. "Now, we can't get teams to play us in the [Curry Hicks] Cage because of our fans."

Calipari said the team's success has led to financial gains for the University.

"We help the rest of the campus generate funds," he said.

Calipari said the Mullins Arena will be a giant money-maker if the building is run correctly.

"We can make $700,000 alone on the season tickets," he said, and added there will be over $100,000 in television rights with ABC and ESPN next year.

Management of the Arena is crucial for the University, he said. He mentioned that one option is to contract the operations out to a com-

EWC offers job relief

Program aims to ease recession blues

By MICHELLE BAYLISS

Helping women cope with job loss and discrimination, the Everywomen's Center is offering a comprehensive career and job assistance program.

Designed by the coordinator of the Counseling Program, the project is made possible by a grant from the Amherst Club.

"I designed the workshops because of the recession, a high unemployment rate and lack of available resources for women," said Madeleine Dupre, the coordinator of the Counseling Program for he Center.

Dupre said the program is concerned with the recession and the effects on women, particularly with securing work.

"I believe it's easy to get immobilized when confronted with the harsh reality of these economic times."

"From Despair to Empowerment," provides women with the technical assistance and emotional support required to create solutions and cope effectively with the problem of unemployment.

The first scheduled workshop for graduating seniors, "Graduating Into the Recession," deals with the availability of jobs, options for employment and developing strategies following graduation.

"This is a very difficult year for graduating seniors. They may not get the job they hoped to get. This workshop deals with what you can do," said Dupre.

This three-hour workshop will be held tonight from 2 to 5 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Dupre added that you don't have to be a senior to attend and all women are invited.

The second component of the project, "Losing Your Job," is a six-week group for women who have been laid off, fired or who are afraid they will be. It begins April 30.

"It combines traditional career counseling approaches with peer support strategies for developing ideas and getting support on how to do it," said Dupre.

Congress to ease cable woes

BOSTON (AP) — A bill pending in Congress could change the way you watch cable television. You may also pay less for the service.

Sponsored by Rep. Edward Markey (D-Mass.) the bill would, in effect, re-regulate the cable TV industry which was unleashed during the de-regulation of the Reagan administration.

If the bill passes — and it has a way to go — you might find yourself paying less for basic cable service.

You may also get fewer channels on basic service. But you might be able to order premium channels, such as HBO, without having to first order a more expensive level of service.

You may also pay less for the "zappers," the remote control devices that come with cable installation.

These are just a few aspects of the complicated "Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992," which will be considered by the House's Telecommunications and Finance Committee, probably in May.

The Senate has already passed a slightly different version.

While Markey intends the legislation to protect consumers from "unreasonable" cable rates, the networks and cable industry have lined up snarling over certain aspects of the bill.

The fiercest point of contention is over allowing networks to negotiate for a "retransmission" charge. Very simply, this means the networks, which are now carried without cost on cable systems, would charge for such inclusion.

Cable spokespersons say this represents a cost of an extra $1 billion and ultimately such costs would be passed on to consumers. The bill, they say, is counterproductive to consumers and would prevent cable systems from reinvesting in new programming.

What is in danger of being lost in the retransmission debate between the two industry giants is how other aspects of the legislation might affect the average cable TV viewer.

For example, the average monthly cost for basic cable service ran $18.84 a month as of April 1991, according to the National Cable Association. Michael Connolly, a Markey spokesman, said if the bill passes, the basic cable service could be as little as $10 a month because cable companies would be limited to a "reasonable profit."

Basic cable would include the local network affiliates, public broadcasting stations, local UHF stations, plus so-called super stations such as TBS in Atlanta, he said.

A streamlined cheaper system would benefit consumers buying cable simply for the improved transmission, he said. Connolly also said the legislation would allow viewers to purchase premium channels, without first buying a more expensive tier of service.

"It's choice built into the system," he said.

Consumers could also petition the Federal Communication Commission about "unreasonable" rates, he said.

Christian Science cable closes

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Christian Science Church halted production Wednesday of its national cable television channel after less than a year on the air — the results of controversy over the Church's ambitious and expensive foray into television.

The Monitor Channel, a mixture of news, public affairs and entertainment shows, was scheduled to end original programming at midnight Wednesday.

Reruns of Monitor programs will continue to be carried to nearly 5 million cable households around the nation until June 15. Most of the station's 400 employees received pink slips last week and a small staff remains to finish shutdown operations.

Gail Harris, Monitor News anchor, said the staff has spent the last few days comparing resumes and exchanging farewells.

Negotiations to sell the channel, a move mandated by church officials last month, still continue, but spokesperson Harry King declined to disclose details.

The cost of shutting down the channel will be $45 million and funds will come from the church's pension reserve, which is part of the church's unrestricted funds, according to a statement released Wednesday by Virginia Harris, chairman of the board of directors of the church.

Church spokesperson Victor Westberg said other assets would be moved into the fund to keep it sound.

The shutdown halts the Boston-based church's attempt to do for television what it has done in print with its respected Christian Science Monitor newspaper.

In September 1988, the church launched "World Monitor," an international news show, which aired on the Discovery Channel. Last May, the Monitor channel debuted on the church-owned station WQTV, Channel 68 in Boston, and was offered to cable systems around the country.

Its 24-hour programming included the nightly news show, "Monitor News," social satire with commentator Mort Sahl and financial shows as "Business Report" and "Money and You," plus specially produced documentaries. After Discovery opted to drop "World Monitor" earlier this year, it moved to the Monitor Channel.

Meet the magic of the Mullins Arena

By IRA KAPLAN
Collegian Correspondent

"What if?"

That's the question Michael Melnick, project manager for the construction of the Mullins Arena, constantly asks.

What if the roof drains clog and water collects? The architects are confident the roof will hold but Melvin wanted scuppers — passageways to allow runoff. "It doesn't cost anything," he said.

What if the massive roof trusses, weighing 70 tons each, really can't support the weight of the roof with four feet of snow above and 35 tons of lighting and scenery hanging below?

Melnick spent an extra $12,000 to have an independent engineering firm from Cambridge check the structural integrity of the design. It was worthwhile, he said, "When you think about the 10,000 people below."

After working on the project for close to two years, Melnick, an energetic man in his 50s with thick glasses and a just-the-facts-ma'am demeanor, gets somewhat maternal when defending the arena.

Coming at a period of tuition increases and cost-cutting measures on campus, the $50 million price tag has always been an issue of contention. After noting amenities such as year-round skating, a 3,500-seat performance stage and seven racquetball courts, Melnick tells students this will only cost them $50 a semester. That is the estimated fee to pay off a UMass building authority bond students will complete paying by the year 2012.

As the University's head overseer, it is his responsibility to make sure that 400 pages of architectural drawings are transformed into a $50 million state-of-the-art sports and convention center that works.

Hired in the spring of 1990, Melnick, a civil engineer with 30 years experience, heads a team of 12 from the University's Physical Plant, which checks the architects plans and monitors the contractors' work.

Despite all the preliminary planning, problems do occur, he said. The idea, he said, is to find the simplest solution when they do. After Suffolk Construction Corporation, the general contractor, realized that a steel framework blocked the intended path of an elevator, Melnick quickly reworked the detail, adding $1,400 to the job.

If work halts because the planners are scratching their heads over details, workers' salaries must still be paid. There are about 150 workers on the site daily, he said, earning a monthly payroll of around $2 million, or $100,000 per day. He said there has not been one day where the workers are not working.

There have been 12 change orders — revisions to the original contract which add to the cost of the job. Melnick said he was unwilling to provide exact numbers for these cost overruns, but said they did not exceed 1 percent of the $50 million.

One evening a couple of weeks ago, Melnick volunteered to speak before a group of freshmen engineering students on the realities of a complex project like the Mullins Arena.

He demonstrated that he is more than

Harassment policy reaches mixed forum

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

An African-American student is walking across campus one day when a group of White male students confronts her, taunting her with racist slurs and sexual innuendoes. The incident is so upsetting that she finds it difficult to study and eventually withdraws from the University.

A proposed policy to deal with harassment such as this was discussed by students, faculty and staff at a human relations forum yesterday.

A discussion of various scenarios of harassment as well as of the proposed policy itself, which defines harassment, outlines grievance procedures and allows for appeals processes was discussed.

The policy would be University-wide and would apply not only to students but also to employees and guests of the University.

Grant Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations, said that the policy would be revised over the next several months and then submitted to the chancellor in late September.

Several participants expressed concern that specific problems of harassment could not be solved with this policy.

Participants also noted that current policies are vague and inadequate in dealing with the problems that the campus faces.

"The whole idea is to protect everyone's freedom of expression," said Professor Stephen Arons of the legal studies department.

He pointed out that one of the principles of the proposal is that protection from harassment and protection of First Amendment rights do not have to be in opposition.

Arons said the proposal was based on work done at the University of Texas and that a goal was to create a policy that would hold up in a court of law.

"We need to strike a balance between free speech and equal opportunity," said Ricardo Townes, an associate dean from Academic Support Services.

Townes cited the problem of harassment that goes unreported because students feel they have no recourse.

"UMass is prepared to talk about issues other campuses won't," Townes said. "I think that is a strength of the University.

Professor receives cancer grant

Cancer Society awards funds to chemist Martin

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The American Cancer Society has awarded a $75,000 research grant to Professor Craig T. Martin, assistant professor of chemistry at the University of Massachusetts.

Martin competed with researchers from universities across the country for the national grant. Two years ago Martin received the funded grant with a non-competitive third year of funding. Now in the third year, Martin will use two-thirds of the remaining $60,000 as stipends for graduate students, and to support an undergraduate student working on related research this summer.

Martin's study is directed toward understanding the chemical basis of genetic regulation.

"It is important that cells be able to regulate, which is a part of normal growth," Martin said. He said cancer occurs when this regulation is interrupted.

"I'm trying to understand how life's processes work," Martin said. He hopes to build a foundation layer which future researchers can use to cure cancer.

Professor Louis D. Quin, dean of the chemistry department, said he was very pleased because "it will greatly help in his [Martin's] research." Quin added that the grant will also help support the graduate research program.

The researched material will be published in scientific journals that UMass and other universities subscribe to. At the end of the year, Martin must submit a brief report to the American Cancer Society in Georgia.

In the medical field, there are two different approaches to curing cancer. These include using many different approaches to see what works and trying to understand particular treatments, Martin said.

He stressed the fact that "90 percent of certain cancers are curable if detected in time." He said early detection is significant in stopping cancer before it spreads.

Although there is better treatment for certain types of cancer, he feels the process towards an ultimate cure will be a slow progression.

Although Martin teaches the related graduate course, Nucleic Acid Chemistry, he does not intend to involve these students in his research.

Martin began his cancer-related studies in 1984, while working on his post-doctorate fellowship from Yale University. He has been involved in this field of study ever since his arrival at UMass in 1988.

Group discusses gay slang evolution

By WENDY JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

The evolution of gay slang, in both denotation and connotation, was the topic of interest at last Thursday's Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Brown Bag Lunch, sponsored by the Program for GLB Concerns.

Samuel Delany, a professor and head of the Comparative Literature department, spoke to the group about some of his recent studies on changes in how slang is "adopted and adapted by the media," and how oppression may play a role within this process.

"People use words metaphorically, and because the [meanings] change, some slang vanishes, some slang stays around," said Delany.

Delany noted in the 1960s, the slang term of "rapping" was "used as a way to describe someone who was high on amphetamines. To 'rap' was a term used by the urban drug culture to describe a drug user's reaction to amphetamine-based drugs.

"The word 'rapping' probably originated from the expression of 'rapid fire,' due to the fact that, amphetamine users spoke so rapidly that their speech became impossible to understand," said Delany.

Recession, Mr. Bush

When will someone finally call this "recession" what it actually is? Mr. Bush was petrified about even hinting that we were in a recession, and by the time he did it was already too late because we're now in a full-blown DEPRESSION.

Like them, I had come to the mall to get away from the cold gray Saturday afternoon weather. She was much younger than she actually looked, and of her little boy proved she has had to take on far too many responsibilities long before anyone her age should.

David Rivera

Her boy looked about 10 years old and he displayed 10-year-old energy, running from store to store looking at all the things that were unattainable in his family budget.

"Bobby, get over here. We're gonna miss the bus."

"But mom, they got those sneakers that everyone has!!"

"Aw Bobby, you know I don't have the money for sneakers right now."

With her final remark both showed a pain in their faces; the little boy's pain from not being able to have and the mothers pain from not being able to give.

It's a pain many families are having to endure in these hard times. Times of want, need and despair. Sometimes here in our own little microcosm we call UMass, we become too sheltered and forget what's going on out in the real world.

There's no getting around it, people are far worse off now since Mr. Reagan and Mr. Bush have had their hand in the pickle jar. It's taken this much time for folks to realize it, because most of the jingoistic flag-toters that put those two quacks in office are now jobless, and finally even they have turned their guns toward Washington.

Then there was the family of five, mommy, daddy and three little girls, that had made their way to the mall for dinner. At first, most would think this a picturesque scene, but actually they had come to take advantage of the inexpensive dinners that one of the mall restaurants offers.

"Mommy, we didn't get enough drinks."

"I know Suzie, daddy's gone to get one soda we can all drink from, we can get free refills so all we need is one."

So one by one the little girls all went up to counter to claim a free soda so they could quench their thirst. Pretty thrifty — also pretty sad.

Where have our leaders gone? Desperate times call for true leaders to take control and take chances with ideas. The Democratic party seems to have abandoned its liberal heritage that inspired presidents like Roosevelt and Kennedy. These days all we have are candidates with shady and greed-filled pasts. It seems as though most Democrats are afraid to express their liberal values, bending backwards to get in office. Cowards, simply cowards.

It's extremely sad when, as an American, you can't confidently support someone for public office. Maybe we should start a draft process to recruit honest and hard working people to fill these offices because right now we, as an electorate, are destroying the foundations of our country. I know it sounds corny, but think about it.

Mr. Bush wants to weaken labor unions so he and others with Swiss bank accounts can exploit the American workers. But there's absolutely nothing wrong with that because slim will be slim; what's wrong is WE let him do it.

Don't misunderstand my banter, I'm very comfortable as an American, but my dad has worked all his life so I could go to college so I know how this depression is affecting blue-collar families.

I don't think Mr. Bush has a slightest glimmer of what's really happening out there. Maybe he should spend a day at the Hampshire Mall.

How do you like your coffee?

I read an article on Wednesday titled "Tasteless and Degrading Jokes Aren't That Funny at All," and I found it pathetic. The question I have for author Stacy Malone is: Are you so insecure with yourself as a woman that you must take such a meaningless joke and totally blow it out of proportion? Why is it that you feel this one "joke," as you call it, is so offending?

First of all, I am a White, "well-fed," middle-class American, your typical American "majority" and I found nothing wrong with the humor present in the "joke" which you say went like this: "Hey, how do you like your coffee?" "Black and sweet. Just how I like my women." From your article, I take it you find something wrong with a White male liking Black women. As far as I know, this would be discrimination. Also, why is it so degrading to want a "sweet" woman. Last time I checked, being sweet was a compliment. Now on to the point.

People like yourself, Ms. Malone, are the kind of people that call a fight between two people of different ethnic groups a "racial incident" (even if they just plain did not like each other regardless of background). You consider women a minority, even though there are an increasingly larger number of women in the world than men. The point is that I feel you tried to make more of this than necessary. The joke was, first of all, not meant for you to hear and, second of all, it was meant to be humorous. Maybe if you would be just a little less anally retentive, you could be a happier person and not feel the need to find small inconsistencies in other people. Ask yourself, have you ever told a joke (probably not)? Because if you have, I'm sure it made fun of someone and I am sure that person was part of one group or another, and therefore you must have been discriminating against them, right?

Most men that I know would easily laugh at a joke directed toward them, so I do not think that we are afraid that soon the joke will be directed at us. It must just be that we are more secure with ourselves, or people like yourself just are not creative enough to find anything funny to say. So, my final words are "GET A GRIP!!"

Black and distrusted in New York

A true story: A young Black boy walks out of his mother's office building on 43rd and 8th in Manhattan. He had stayed there late one night working on a drug education project with some friends from school and a couple of adult supervisors. They were planning out a video to show during their teachings at middle and elementary schools.

E.C. Thomas

After leaving the building, he turns right and heads towards the subway station only a block away. No sooner than he is 10 feet away from the building, two police officers approach him. They ask what he's doing. He's heading home, he tells them. Does he know there was a robbery in that neighborhood earlier that evening? No, he says. Where was he tonight, they ask. He explains he was in "that" building, working on a project. They don't believe him and tell him they need to take him to headquarters for questioning. But I was in that building, he argues, becoming anxious and scared, there are adults up there who will verify that I was there. The officers don't accept that and drag him down to the police station in handcuffs.

At the police station, he calls his mother. He's only allowed to talk for a few seconds and the officer takes away the phone and gives the mother a number to call that night to find out where he's being held.

The boy sits in a jail cell for two hours until he's pulled out for a line-up. The suspect in the robbery is described as a black teenager. The boy stands among seven young males, he's the only one of color. Five people pick him out. He spends the night in jail. His mother can't get through to the precinct, the line is busy. She doesn't know where he is. He's 15.

The next day the mother and some coworkers find out where he is. They immediately go to see the boy. He's not allowed to speak with them. They can't communicate with phone calls or letters — nothing. His mother brings the people with him the previous night to corroborate his story. It doesn't matter, he spends the next night in jail as well.

On the third day his mother, with the help of her co-workers, hire a lawyer and go to the boy's hearing. His mother works for a high-ranking New York City union; the boy was with her co-workers that night. After verifying the boy's story, he's released. That's the end of the story — or is it?

More of these stories have happened and many more will happen, only these stories have a different ending. One must ask, what would've happened to the boy if his mother didn't work with high officials in the city? What if she was unemployed? A prospect very likely with the current state of the U.S. economy. How would she have been able to hire a lawyer for her son? What if this boy had just come up from the subway, just one block from where he was arrested? He'd have no alibi, just his word that he didn't commit the crime. A "word" coming from an Afro-American. Chances are that "word" would never have been heard. Truth is hundreds of those "words" have never been acknowledged.

Dangerous opinions

Many resident assistants have thanked me for last month's column about their inadequate pay and the impossible role they are assigned as both cops and counselors. Unfortunately, last week I also got wind of "expressions of concern" about my own future as an RA because of what I wrote. This unfortunate reaction by some Residential Education higher-ups simply proves my original point: Currently, RAs are heavily exploited. Those who don't go along with it are considered threats. Hurrah for Big Brother Housing...

Trystan Skeigh

Every journalist has an ethical responsibility to their readers. Every columnist has an obligation to offer honest views and insights on various aspects of society. For a columnist to hold back for fear of economic retribution means that writer's First Amendment rights have been seriously abridged. It also means the paper's watchdog role has been seriously compromised.

The second point here is that freedom of expression applies to everyone, not just newswriters and columnists. Many RAs who thanked me for writing also expressed their reluctance to talk or write about their own concerns because they feared for their jobs.

There is something seriously wrong with an organization that is afraid of constructive criticism. Few veteran RAs feel good about their jobs and most of their concerns are legitimate. But somehow, in Housing's hierarchical murk of clusters, resident directors, assistant resident directors, area coordinators and assistant directors, their voices are lost and even deliberately discounted. New RAs are told by trainers not to take the gripes of veteran RAs too seriously, that problems are a natural part of the process.

I do not believe Housing is composed of actively malicious people out to get students and RAs. But I think it's clearly an organization with deeply systemic problems. Because of its sprawling size and structure, its upper echelons are completely detached from the everyday working realities of RAs.

Would Assistant Director Anne Miller still believe Residential Education is "a good chance to reach people" if she worked alongside RAs and experienced nearly zero attendance at alcohol workshops, gay, lesbian and bisexual speaker bureaus and drug talks? Would the RA class have been such an unmitigated disaster last semester if RAs had been given a chance to make suggestions and preview the materials for relevancy, homophobia and racism?

Part of the root problem is the tone of Housing's attitude toward "residents." UMass students are not viewed as adults. An example of this is last semester's night riot in Southwest, when a dorm lost its electricity and people ran amok, breaking windows and furniture. An RD said she tried to "be an adult presence" in the situation. The fact is, those who live in Southwest are adults too. If they felt compelled to become violent when the lights went out, this is a strong signal something is wrong with living conditions in their community. "Brown-out" rioting occurs in cities across the country, often in ghettoes where folks suffer from overcrowding and related oppressive conditions.

Also, forcing students to drink in their rooms with their doors shut is impractical and unhealthy. People who are encouraged to drink alone in private become alcoholics. Better to let them drink in lounges where folks can keep an eye on each other.

Actually, perhaps it's not that surprising to find this paternalism in an organization headed by a director opposed to the distribution of condoms in high schools. Obviously Joe Zannini is not the type willing to concede to practical realities.

People respond better to a carrot than a stick. If campus residents felt respected and empowered, they would undoubtedly form more healthy, happy communities.

University 'playground' no escape from the real world

When I get out in the real world . . .

How many times do we hear or think of phrases like this while on a college campus? For some reason, students at a university like to picture themselves as being in some sort of isolated little bubble. As if we are immune to all that is going on outside the boundaries of this large but finite campus. The fact is, the world as most of us see it, is as real as it will ever be.

If you don't believe me, take a look at a few real-world problems and see how they affect us.

Politics. The state of our economy and the emphasis of government on education will determine not only the quality of our four years here, but whether we will find work when we leave this "playground." Yet, few of us vote, either because we aren't registered in the area, or because we simply don't feel that the benefits of selecting a candidate for an office outweigh the difficulty of taking the bus to the polls.

Money. Generally speaking, students either pay their own tuition or are supported by family. Those who pay their own tuition are often forced to take many loans, which may all seem like fiction as we spend the bank's money for four years, but then we spend the next 10 years coughing up our paychecks (if we indeed find a job) to pay off these debts. That is the real world.

Or the students who are supported by their parents: speaking from personal experience, it is easy to grow up spending and spending with no real concept of money (like the Republicans) when all your bills are paid for you. But although this may seem like dream world, it really is a valuable lesson lost. These years, regardless of who is paying our bills, are years where we must learn how to manage our finances and our lives — this is the real world.

Bob Silverstein

Death. We are not invincible. AIDS doesn't selectively skip over us because we are in school, but many students still fail to practice safe sex. Our student bodies will still break when our cars crash when we drive drunk. Your best friend that you ate lunch with at the Dining Commons today may not be standing with you at graduation. These are morbid thoughts, and I admit the pessimism; but if my pessimism can turn your apathy into emotion, then my message is received.

Perhaps the underlying cause for the ongoing notions about the "real world" versus college life arise from the sad fact that some high school graduates attend college only to avoid the responsibilities associated with the real world. This is a consequence of a warped society where you now can't even make a decent, secure living without a degree or a lot of luck or money. During my undergraduate study, I heard many friends, even honor students, whose attitude was "I'm only here to get the piece of paper." So how can an education system even begin to be effective, if the ultimate goal is not learning — about academics and life?

Perhaps it is unfair to place the blame on the students for this general detachment. Considering the fact that the dormitory code of conduct is oppressive and nearly unconstitutional, it is not unreasonable to expect disillusionment in students. Granted, the reputation of "ZooMass" was probably a good title to shed. But during the past six years, the policies have become more and more restrictive, to the point where many students may have enjoyed greater privileges while at home with their parents. In this sense, the petty politics and conservatism of the administration is largely responsible for creating this fantasy world where young minds are shaped into mush.

In the wake of this negative perspective on modern college life, I feel that there is hope. But it comes down to each individual, first year or senior year, realizing the importance of their stay at the University of Massachusetts. Look at each day of your life as a real day, with real friends, real responsibilities and real lessons to be learned. Because waiting until you graduate to acknowledge the reality of this world may leave you hopelessly far behind in your quest toward better things.

Latinos must unite; stop bickering

As representative of AHORA, I invite all Latin American students to participate in the reorganization of AHORA. Several weeks ago, a new group of Latin American students have been meeting because we want to organize the best Latin American Week ever given in the history of our (and your) organization.

Luisa, you are also welcome to participate in our meetings every week. I have read your article (April 7) and the erroneous impression you have about all Puerto Ricans really saddens me. Remember that if the majority of the members of AHORA are Puerto Ricans, it is because we have more than 500 students, making us the majority of the Hispanic students on campus. Nevertheless, we in AHORA have the participation of students of other Latin American countries, such as Costa Rica, Columbia, Panama and Mexico, among others. Be careful in criticizing ethnic groups in general. Try to see people as individuals. Remember that when you point at someone with your index finger, the other three fingers point at you.

I would like you to get in touch with the AHORA organization. Attend our meetings, so we can mediate our differences and you can express your feelings with the community which is really trying to represent the Latin Americans on campus. Luisa, you are invited to participate in and join AHORA so that you, the rest of the Latin Americans on campus and us, who are presently working in the organization, could demonstrate to the public a good representation of our beautiful and diverse Latin American culture.

Civility Agreement victory for all

The release of the Civility Agreement between the Lesbian Bisexual and Gay Alliance, the Young Americans for Freedom and The Minuteman should be regarded as a victory for all parties, and in particular a victory for civility in public discourse.

It is our hope that this agreement will aid in the de-escalation of tensions which have historically existed between the LBGA and the "Conservative Alliance." Surely, our campus has seen enough of violent and hateful rhetoric. The time has arrived for all of us to strive toward creating an atmosphere where the free exchange of thought is not impeded by the fear of personal attack or other potentially dangerous repercussions.

There remains, between our two groups, many fundamental differences in ideology. At some points, we are committed to wholly different goals and concepts. But through this agreement, it is our hope that we can begin to recognize and confront those problems which unite us, instead of consistently belaboring those problems which divide us.

The LBGA has always been committed to working for a campus and a world which recognizes and respects diversity and individuality. Therefore, this agreement is wholly consistent with the mission of the LBGA and is an important and crucial step toward providing a more safe and productive atmosphere for gay, lesbian and bisexual students at UMass.

Comic attacks Christians unfairly

Last week's "Cast of Thousands" brought up too many issues to address in one letter. (If you are expecting a letter to blast Barry Deutsch and cast him to hell, get real.)

Monday: Sin is sin. It's turning away from God in any way. There are no "okay sins." If homosexual activity is equivalent to murder, hate of homosexuals is too. So is lying. But counting sins is stupid, because everyone has sinned.

Also on Monday: People can be unloving and hypocritical and still pretend to be Christians. I can't picture Jesus being as crass as "Stephen" was. (Habits: 1, Love: 0.)

Tuesday: Christian faith is non-scientific: you can't put it in a test tube. It is developing a personal relationship, as real as romance, with the one who made the universe. People who base their beliefs on anti-evolution pamphlets are missing the point. So are the people who reject Christ's message because of them.

Wednesday: Organized Christianity has the same problems as any other organization: power, greed, apathy and imperfect members. The fact that Jesus' message has survived the church is evidence to me of its truth. But the church also shelters, feeds, counsels and loves a lot of otherwise helpless people. People remember Jimmy Swaggart and forget Corrie Ten Boom.

Thursday: Christianity is usually too "up in the sky," too stuck in dry tradition. Most of us have memories of stiff pews and dull sermons, and everyone thinks they know what Jesus said. Few people are willing to break their tiny images of Jesus. "Traditionalists" are threatened to read that Jesus relied on women to spread his message, that he ate his meals with anti-establishment rebels, that he had Black disciples.

Friday: There's too much guilt in today's church. Guilt sells! Churches can grow fastest if they say, "Stay with US or you're going to hell!" A distortion. If you ever feel manipulated guilt-trips, fast-talk — get out fast and find a church based on real love. But if a quiet voice inside you calls you to a new life... that is your decision.

I wish I could say becoming a Christian makes you perfect, but it doesn't. If you're looking for God, don't be surprised when people, including me, disappoint you. We're just learning.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

I'm stuck for topics this week, and my professors are starting to get suspicious, so I've either got to catch up with my academic backlog or forge a note from Health Services real quick. I know it's usually a bad sign to see a columnist admit this in the first paragraph, but bear with me, at least it's not another basketball rally or video game review.

This week, due to lack of student body participation, I'm going to indefinitely suspend the "Graffiti of the Week" feature of Notes, but before I do, I'm going to run some of my personal favorites that have been around for a while.

"Flush twice, it's a long way to Hampshire D.C." is perhaps UMass' most widely known graffiti. It graces a stall on the second floor of Herter Hall. A friend who is knowledgable of local folklore tells me that this appears in several published compilations of graffiti.

Though I haven't seen it myself, also appearing in Herter, above a toilet paper dispenser is written, "UMass diplomas. Please take one."

My personal favorite is a visual piece in the Tower Library's east stairwell. In a stylized recreation of Washington's crossing of the Delaware, the General himself is smoking a joint. How times have changed. It is widely supposed that Washington actually did smoke pot. Unlike today's politicians, he was free to inhale as he wished and didn't have to feign guilt during campaign year.

Josh Reynolds

So, if you've got a submission, send it down (addressed to: Amoral Media Lemmings, 113 Campus Center Basement). I can't visit every stall on campus. Until then, I'm gonna give it a rest.

One (more) thing that's been bothering me lately is the Collegian's one-day weather forecast. Unless you're getting this home-delivered, it's probably not all that helpful.

This week, the Campus Crusade for Christ has been spreading posters asking "If Jesus really were God, could you afford to ignore Him?" My suggestion is not to get too involved with a group that encourages people to think of religion as an insurance policy for the afterlife.

I know that they have only the best intentions, and that they're still a little sore from the beating that Barry Deutsch gave them last week, but I've got an axe to grind: I was raised (razed?) Catholic and sent through 12 years of denominational schooling.

I've got to question the wisdom of naming a group with philanthropic intentions after a multi-century wave of pogroms that would make Khmer Rouge jealous.

When people ask me what I gave up for Lent, I tell them institutionalized superstition and medieval self-denial rituals.

So, if I've struck a dissonant chord in anyone out there, drop me a line or meet me for a bare knuckles match on the roof of the parking garage. It's your call.

Class prepares students for future in booze

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

The scene is set in a bar room. A group of young people are gathered around the counter. Rows of liquor bottles line the wall in front of them. A Red Sox games blares in the background, as a man, smiling and friendly, mixes drinks and talks with the crowd. . . Class is in session.

The man behind the counter is Tim Quirk, a UMass instructor. And the people are his students of mixology, eagerly awaiting a lesson in bartending.

"Never stick a glass in ice," advises Quirk, "The glass is thin and cracks easily. Always use a scoop."

Quirk proceeds to make a few drinks and shares more bartending tips with the students. He pulls bottles off the shelf and identifies them. Then he shows the class the soda gun.

It's all in a day's work for Quirk, who is a bartender himself and started teaching mixology, which is offered through Continuing Education, this semester. The course gives students all the information they need to be a bartender. It also certifies those who successfully complete the program.

Quirk said he starts the class with the basics — what a shaker set is, how to cut fruit and familiarizes them with bartending lingo ("What does James Bond really mean when he requests his drink "shaken, not stirred?")

Next, students are taught how to make some standard drinks, like martinis. They also learn how to make drinks in various categories — popular, frozen, coffee. At this point, Quirk has the students make "pseudo-drinks," using colored water and paper fruit in place of the real stuff.

As the course goes along, the students build up an impressive repertoire, knowing how to mix exotic drinks like White Russians, Scarlet O'Haras, and Tootsie Rolls (kahlua and orange juice). Students get to show off their bartending know-how on written tests and oral quizzes.

Quirk, who graduated from UMass in 1989, started bartending at defunct Gulf Stream during his junior year, then at Twisters his senior year. An economics major, he was unable to find work in his field after graduation. He spent some time bartending on Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard, before returning to this area.

Sticking with bartending for the time being, he can now be founding serving up drinks at Pizzeria Uno in the Holyoke Mall.

"It's not just serving drinks; it's being able to deal with people too — having a relationship with them and handling people when they're not being cooperative," he said.

What's his favorite drink? "Blue Banana," his own creation, he said.

What's in it? "All kinds of stuff," said Quirk, his eyes twinkling mischievously.

Students of mixology have all praise for the class.

"It's great," said Chris Jodlowski, who said he's taking the course because he hadn't picked out a major yet and "wanted something to fall back on."

Wayne Buterbaugh, like many other students in the class, said that he wants to "try to score a summer job" through taking advantage of the bartending certification the course offers.

One student, David Meausky, recently had a chance to try out his new skills.

"I used all that the class taught me at a party at my parents' house. [The guests] were ecstatic!" said Meausky.

Patriot's Day

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Patriot's Day is

a) a day off to celebrate Patriot missiles
b) a commemoration of the New England Patriots
c) a holiday to make Easter weekend longer
d) you got me

After a recent poll of people who all admitted they were planning on not going to classes on Monday (yes, I know, classes are cancelled), I asked a variety of students and staffers what the true meaning of Patriot's Day was.

Unfortunately, I came up short.

I know, I could have moved my keister from the abyss of the Campus Center Basement and gone to the library to look it up — but I wanted to make sure I wasn't going to miss out on any Patriot's Day parades that the rest of the student population would be at come Monday.

No one seemed pumped up for Patriot's Day; rather the most common answer to the question "why do we celebrate Patriot's Day?" was — "it's a day off from school."

I don't expect you out-of-staters to have a clue about our state holidays, but when people from the high-and-mighty Metro-Boston area tell me, "should I care why we have Monday off?" you have to wonder what's going on.

So, here's what I figured out about that wonderful day called Patriot's Day:

It's celebrated only in Maine and Massachusetts, which probably means that it has something to do with the American Revolution — kind of like the Southern states that celebrate Robert E. Lee's Birthday.

It's the third Monday in April (April is a derivative of a Latin word meaning 'to open' — referring to leaves and flower buds).

Other than that, the mystery remains: What is Patriot's Day and why should I care?

Patriot's Day is Monday, April 20 and lasts all day.

Sleepwalkers will put you into a coma

By JON LUPO

Cheese anyone? There's one moment in Stephen King's Sleepwalkers where the evil psycho mother/vampire kills a police man by impaling him with an ear of corn. This pretty much sums up the cheesy nature of this horror/comedy that would be horrendously bad if it weren't so hilarious.

Brian Krause (Return to the Blue Lagoon) and Alice Krige (Chariots of Fire) play a son and mother who are sleepwalkers, some short of shape-shifters who, I'm assuming, must suck the power out of female virgins in order to survive. And for some inexplicable reason they're deathly afraid of cats. When the duo isn't searching for nubile young women, they, eh hem, share a more than platonic relationship.

When Krause discovers their latest victim in model-turned-actress Mädchen Amick (Twin Peaks), he starts falling for her. But his devotion to his mother is more powerful. This tepid premise abruptly turns into a gore fest, complete with recycled Terminator 2 transforming effects and enough severed limbs to satisfy Silence of the Lambs' Hannibal Lecter for a few months.

Sleepwalkers has a definite '50s B-movie feel to it, right down to the familiar shots of high school, suspicious teachers and clueless parents. Only this time the effect is a little more expensive and the gore more graphic. Stephen King's oddball sense of humor is amplified here, but it's hard to tell when King is trying to be funny or scary. Are we supposed to laugh at the incest love scene or when Amick gouges out Krause's eye with a conveniently handy corkscrew?

Anyone who has seen at least one Friday the 13th movie knows the heroine shouldn't walk over to the villain's limp body even if she thinks she's killed him, so why doesn't Amick know? "Sleepwalkers" is filled with little horror movie staples (a nice word for cliche) like that which prevent it from actually scaring us. There is little to jump at in Sleepwalkers but its unintentional hilarity makes it a great, bad movie.

The abundance of cats in Sleepwalkers provides a bulk of the laughs. It's particularly amusing as the obviously fake cats attack the villains by pouncing on their bodies. They stiffly cling on like a deranged Toonces from Saturday Night Live while the soundtrack fills the theater with lots of hissing noises. Alas, the felines do suffer painfully. I'm half expecting animal rights activists to start picketing the theaters revealing the ending.

Brian Krause reveals that he's really just a pretty face with his wooden acting and Aryan good looks. But don't fear, Mädchen Amick more than makes up for Krause, giving new meaning to the word spunk. She overacts every gesture as if someone can deliver a line like "somebody help me!!" a different way.

Alice Krige has a nice time vamping it up but she seems to enjoy her love scenes with Krause a little too much. Also on hand is Stephen King in a cameo as a graveyard keeper (like you care at this point).

Sleepwalkers is truly brainless entertainment. Short on thrills and long on graphic violence (not to mention many senseless cat deaths), it's horribly bad but oh-so-enjoyable. Most films this poor aren't nearly as much fun.

Comic books aren't just for kids anymore

By KIP MANLEY
Collegian Correspondent

I want to talk to you about comic books.

You know, comics — maybe your mother ripped yours up at a young and easily traumatized age, or maybe your cousin let you read one or two during a rainy day at gramma's.

Maybe you remember Spiderman, or you were caught up in the soap-opera of the X-Men for a while; maybe you were a bit more mainstream and you flew with Superman or Wonder Woman, or skulked across the rooftops with Batman.

Maybe you thought your cousin was really dumb and you hated her comics and you never wanted to see another one again. Maybe you still read them — maybe you've never given them a second thought.

All that doesn't matter. At one point or another, you spent some time dreaming in four colors about men and women who shook their fists at the sky and took oaths against Evil (which seemed for some reason to involve wearing their shorts on the outside of their tights).

These aren't the comics I want to talk to you about.

Sure, there's been a lot of hype lately about how superheroes have grown up, about how they've become much more adult for the 90s. If you take this sort of thing seriously, then it seems that growing up consists of getting to swear more and staying out later and shooting the ethnically-suspect underclass or carving them into blood-spurting chunks instead of just beating them to a pulp.

Let's face it — these are still the power fantasies of lonely adolescents projected onto obsessive steroid addicts with an unhealthy penchant for tight clothing and grimaces. If you like that sort of thing, fine. But comics are capable of so much more.

Take, for instance, Doom Patrol, written by Grant Morrison and (usually) drawn by Richard Case and Stan Woch. What's it about? Well, um, it's about these folks with special powers, and they dress in bright colors, and they've banded together to save the world every now and then — but other than that, they're different. Really!

Take a closer look. These heroes are people like Rebis, the enigmatic hermaphrodite who has spent most of the series clothed in radiation-proof bandages like some stylish mummy. Crazy Jane, who has 64 different personalities. And Cliff Steele, a human brain in a robotic, prosthetic body, who is as normal as the good guys get.

As for the bad guys, well, we have the Pale Police, assassins who draw the thumbprints of their victims on their masks and who speak in anagrams. The Shadowy Mr. Evans, who may or may not be the devil. The Dry Bachelors, who are made of dead skin cells and love letters that have been thrown away. And Mr. Nobody, whose latest world-shaking threat was to run for President...

It all sound silly, doesn't it? But then, that's the point, isn't it?

Morrison is saying if you can suspend your disbelief so far that you will believe a man can fly, why not go all the way? Chuck your disbelief over the edge, sit back, and enjoy the ride.

Doom Patrol is all about nonsense, nihlism, and Dada — tell that to your parents the next time they ask you why you're still reading funny books.

"See Ma? Grant Morrison combines wit, intelligence, and a genuine fondness for the weird superheroes of the 60s with automatic writing just like real live poets used to come up with and truly bizarre characters and nightmarish images and even the actual narration sometimes, all to startling and satisfying effect!"

Which is not to say that all is wonderful. The art, despite Richard Case's best efforts, often falls short of what Morrison wants you to see. And Morrison has proven himself more than capable of losing his footing — Mr. Nobody's candidacy for president, for instance, ends in a distressingly pedestrian allegory of Christ's last days, complete with his very own Last Supper and betrayal-via-osculation.

Doom Patrol is, ultimately, unsatisfying. For all his screwing around with superheroic ideals, Morrison can't quite bring himself to tinker with the most sacrosanct — that superheroes ultimately fight to preserve the status quo.

Strange as they are themselves, the Patrol nonetheless races to stand foursquare for normality, or at least the normal course of things, whenever oddities raise their weird little heads. Our heroes react and restore rather than actively change anything.

Sure, Morrison tries to get around this by having the Patrol encounter such "normal" threats as Mr. Jones and the men from N.O.W.H.E.R.E., or the Ant Farm, but with their acronymic speech patterns and dyed-green pubic hair, they come off as too damn bizarre to be credible as the grey-flannel agents of normality.

The only character who says what we want to hear is Mr. Nobody, leader of the Brotherhood of Dada (Evil). "Workers of the world unite!" he cries. "You have nothing to lose but your minds!" But he is still another threat to be fought, an uprising to be quelled.

Still, there is hope. In one of the latest issues, Crazy Jane made up her own mind not to combat Mr. Nobody because she agreed with what he has to say, with nary a hint of nefarious brain washing. This is class betrayal, pure and simple, and could prove to be a significant first step, unthinkable in any other superhero comic.

For all its flaws, Doom Patrol is one of the most original and personal visions in mainstream comics, rivaled only by Neil Gaiman's Sandman. Perhaps it is nothing more than a different sort of power fantasy for a different sort of lonely adolescent, but at least these are adolescents I would want to meet. And it is a mere hint of what is possible in comics if you begin to look past muscles and Lycra towards the only real limits — words and pictures.

Grab Doom Patrol while you can, though. Grant Morrison will be leaving the book within a year or so, and is sure to go out with a bang.

Think Tree entertains

Think Tree
Pearl Street
April 12, 1992

Sunday night, Think Tree stopped in at Pearl Street on the first part of a tour to promote the band's new album, Like the Idea.

The five-member band has been blowing the roof off of clubs in Boston for the last five years and had only made it to the Valley once before Sunday night. Tree played a fifteen-song set that gave the sizeable crowd a fair representation of what the band is capable of doing.

Their first song, "Memory Protect," from Eight Thirteen, hit the club with a sonic wave that bubbled the paint off of the pillars. Then Tree ripped into "Holy Cow" (from the new album), during which the lead singer, Peter Moore, became a a baseball-capped redneck and began giving his sarcastic opinion of those cow-worshipping Hindus.

At the outset of the show, the audience was hesitant to put much effort into having a good time. But slowly and surely, Tree melted the crowd's fashionable detachment, causing them to sway ever so slightly, making them resemble a field of leather-clad blades of grass.

From that point on, the crowd was doomed to have a great time.

At one point, during "Eye for an Eye," two men in the back of the club were so overcome with emotion they howled, dog-like, in key with the band. By flashing a spotlight over the crowd's heads, the band broke down the wall between performer and observer, turning the club into a large, intimate gathering of equals.

In addition to self-promotion, they commented that, as of late, any band that doesn't sound like Nirvana is not going to get air play on the more commercial radio stations across the country.

You will be hard pressed to find a band that puts more time into their music and their stage show.

The band does very well in Europe, but is seriously lacking support on the homefront. It is a familiar story, but unfortunately our "greatest common denominator" culture has a bad habit of ignoring anything that doesn't look or sound like what it is used to.

Snap crackles, then pops

Synaptic Snap/Duck Duck
Hadley Pub
April 11, 1992

Synaptic Snap is dead!

Long live Duck Duck!

To those of you who were not at the Hadley Pub last Saturday night, you'll regret it for the same reasons your parents regret not having seen The Doors or The Clash because they were studying or working or whatever.

One of the Pub's employees said he had never seen the place so permeated by the pure personification of rock and roll in all the years he had been working there.

A man at the bar was overheard saying he hadn't been in a bar in 10 years, but when he heard the ruckus inside as he walked by, he just couldn't walk by without finding out what was making such a righteous din.

The area premier of the Lowell-based band Duck Duck and the swan song of the local heroes in Synaptic Snap will not be forgotten soon by anyone who was in the general area of the Hadley Pub.

It all began when the nine members of Duck Duck mounted the stage, led by lead singer/guitar playing, searing soloist Kevin Stevenson (who was dressed as Harpo dressed as Chico dressed as Groucho from the famous "mirror scene" in the Marx Brother's Duck Soup.)

As the band tore into their first song, "Garbage Man" — a powerful metal-jazz-core ballad of one man's lust for what other folks throw away — the crowd of about 100 patrons was caught completely off guard. You could see by the look in their eyes that they were thinking "Who are these freaks and why are they making my hips sway and my toes tap?"

As the night wore on, Duck Duck continued to catch the crowd off guard with theatrics, acrobatics, brilliant playing and a rendition of "Misty" that made every version of the song I've ever heard seem trite.

After the shock of Duck Duck came the high point of the evening: the final performance of Synaptic Snap, one of the Valley's finest.

All the old crowd pleasers were present: "We Ride," "ABC" and "Bowling with Elvis," as well as some never before heard (and never again) songs. One in particular, "New World Odor," though danceable, was slightly disturbing given the current electoral mudslinging.

Toward the end of the show, Stevenson returned to the stage to jam with the Snap with an astounding cover of an old Elvis Costello song, trading verses with Snap lead David Aaronoff.

Snap gave a crowd pleasing performance from the first note to the last. Despite the size of the Pub's dance floor, it was packed during the entire performance with fans determined to get the most of their last groove with Synaptic Snap.

It seems that one of the hallmarks of a great band is its ability to bring people together who never thought they had anything in common. The mix of folks undulating on the dance floor was surprising. It was an indeterminate mix of people from all walks of life. Locals, dance clubbers and even some hard core moshers all mingled together to the sounds of Synaptic Snap.

ISynaptic Snap will certainly be missed by their fans in the Valley and beyond. We can only hope that perhaps the future will find the boys either working separately in other projects, or (dare I think it) working together again in one form or another.

It was fun while it lasted anyway.

Duck Duck, however, hopes to come back to this area in the near future, and when they do, you'll have been well advised to attend the show.

'Steele' yourself for some great bluesy 'Art'

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

It certainly makes sense to release an album of live music when you're as busy gigging on the club circuit as Art Steele and his band have been for the past year.

The new release by the Art Steele Blues Band, titled Ten Times as Live, is now available on compact disc at most area record stores. It is only available right now on CD format but will released on cassette in a few weeks.

The album is a compilation of songs recorded live at venues in Western New England. Featured are cuts recorded at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton, the Mole's Eye in Brattleboro, Vt., Theodores in Springfield, and RynBom's in Antrim , N.H. There is even a song taken from a gig at the Hatch here at UMass.

The project was recorded on two-track digital over a period of three months last summer. There was no mix engineer and the sound on the album is about as live as you can get. On the other hand there is no lack of quality in the recordings, as the instruments and vocals are all highly discernable and the mix is excellent. What you get is an honest recording with no overdubs, remixes, or studio tricks.

JABBERWOCKY

The album features a selection of classic blues covers such as "Little Red Rooster" by Willie Dixon and "I Want You to Be my Baby" by Louis Jordan. Along with these are more obscure cuts by blues legends Sonny Boy Williamson and Otis Rush. There are 10 selections in all, and it is a wonderful compilation for listening.

The Art Steele Blues Band features Art Steele on guitar and vocals, Shelton Laster on keyboards, Greg Lent on sax, Bob Wrenski on bass, and Neil Zagorin on drums. The present lineup has been together for about a year and a half.

This album is a definite must for those who are local blues fans. I even recommend it for those interested in sampling the blues.

According to Art Steele "the CD is opening a lot of avenues and opportunities for us." Steele attributes "quirky friends" for spreading the CD to radio stations in California, Philadelphia, and elsewhere around the country.

The Art Steele Blues Band will be appearing at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton tonight and the Charlemont Inn on Route 2 in Charlemont on Friday night.

Luka Bloom rouses crowd at Iron Horse

BY ALYSSA R. MARCHESE
Collegian Staff

Luka Bloom
April 13, 1992
Iron Horse

"Good evening. I'm Luka Bloom. Would you give us a warm welcome, please..."

A warm welcome is what the man asked for, and that's what he got, deservedly so, at a sold-out show Monday night at the Iron Horse.

Weighing in heavily on the charm and wit scale, Bloom held the audience captive for nearly two hours — not always an easy feat for one man, on voice and a couple of guitars, but this solitary wonder from County Kildare, Ireland pulled it off with nary a hitch.

The show began with a gently nudge, "so as to not disrupt yer delicate digestive systems," Bloom explained. Mild and moody numbers like "The Man Is Alive" and a cover of Elvis Presley's "Can't Help Falling In Love," from his new album The Acoustic Motorbike, were pleasant enough songs to masticate to, but the real treat proved to be Bloom's between-song banter. During the course of the evening, barbs were hurled at everyone from No Style Is Good Style rockers Nirvana, to ethereal fairy-queen Enya, and those heavily sedated Canadians, Cowboy Junkies. Not to be spared from his razor-sharp jibes were certain boisterous members of the audience, and "uptight" Northamptonites. "I can't wait to have a nice relaxing day in New York City tomorrow," he quipped.

The show's set list was peppered with cuts from his 1990 debut, Riverside, and his more recent album. He quickened the pace with "I Believe In You," showing off his pristine voice, which rang as high and clear as a crystal bell. Looking at times like a goofy, tousle-haired 12-year-old too big for his britches, Bloom joyously built momentum, wildly strumming his amplified acoustic guitar, occasionally breaking into a delighted grin.

The audience was visibly roused by Bloom's fast-paced numbers, enjoying his wiry, rubber necked noodle dancing, but those heavenly peaks would die untimely deaths, as he'd follow them up with slower selections, disrupting the flow and never quite climaxing.

Far surpassing the often merely proficient guitar playing employed by many folk-singer/songwriters, Bloom plays with passion and skill, although his strumming falls prey to repetition at times. On a technical level, as a fellow music-writer pointed out, the sound of his guitar was mixed too brightly, sometimes nearly drowning out his booming voice.

All dimples and Dublin sorcery, he introduced a cover of "I Need Love" as a song he learned from his great-grandfather, "Mr. L.L. O'Cool J." His treatment of the song can only be described as downright sexy, and he had almost every female in the house swooning, as he transfromed the rap into an entirely different animal.

A spark plug with boundless energy, Bloom returned to the stage twice, for a total of three encore numbers. His performance set the rafters shaking from the thunderous applause and stomping of feet, but he still couldn't seem to satisfy the ravenous audience that quite simply didn't want to let him go.

Clearly a man in love with both his guitar and his own voice, Luka Bloom shrugs coyly, claiming to be modest, but he's damn good, and he knows it.

Northamnpton poet Richard Pleasants opened the show with an impromptu reading. At Bloom's insistence, Pleasants embarked on a 10 minute diatribe of terse, angry, anti-Bush and anti-America poems, earning him cheers of solidarity from the crowd.

UN sanctions anger Libya

By NEJLA SAMMAKIA
Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya — Countries barred Libyan jets their airspace and ordered diplomats to go home on Wednesday, tightening a noose around the Arab country to pressure it to turn over suspects in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103.

The punitive measures were sanctions approved by the United Nations, but a defiant Libya tried to flout them by sending its jets into the sky. They were turned away.

Libya hinted it might retaliate by expelling diplomats and announced no Libyan airline tickets would be sold to citizens of countries supporting the sanctions.

Although there is Arab sentiment against sanctions, nations in the region abided by a U.N. resolution passed March 31 banning arms sales to Libya and calling on countries to cut back Libyan diplomatic staffs. Despite the grounding of the flights, land and sea links remained, including ferry service to the nearby island of Malta.

At this point, the sanctions could prove more troublesome than crippling. They do not include a boycott of Libya's oil sales, which account for 90 percent of the country's earnings.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd told British Broadcasting Corp. radio that oil sanctions may be next. This would be a significant step, since the current sanctions receive only lukewarm support from many Security Council members and are not nearly as tough as those imposed on Iraq when it invaded Kuwait.

The Security Council met and set up a committee to monitor enforcement of the sanctions.

Life appeared to go on as normal in Tripoli despite Libya's growing isolation. Traffic was normal. A few cars still displayed black ribbons on radio antennas, left over from a nationwide protest Tuesday over U.S. air raids on Libya six years ago.

There are 1 million foreigners in Libya, but many said they felt no fear over the international confrontation and did not plan to flee the country.

An American employee of Panamenian D and G Oil Field Services Co. near Ajdabia, 700 miles east of Tripoli, said he and about 50 other American co-workers were on the job as usual. The man, who is from Louisiana, spoke on condition of his name not be used for fear of reprisals.

Asked how conditions were, he said: "The same as always."

"Everyone's pretty much staying put," he said. "Everybody's just a little bit down, the Americans are a little bit down, the way their government's acting, saying they can't come here and work, whatever."

Travelers booked in advance went to Tripoli's airport, hoping they could depart as planned. About 250 Africans milled about at one point.

Union workers spurned at plant

By BILL VOGRIN
Associated Press

EAST PEORIA, Ill, — Thousands of United Auto Workers reported to work yesterday after ending their five-month strike against Caterpillar Inc. — only to be told to go back home to find out if they still had any jobs.

The world's largest maker of earth-moving equipment says it may reduce its size and not give jobs back to all who want them.

For many workers, the strain began to show two weeks ago, when the company told them to return or risk replacement. They decided to cross picket lines and betray their union.

Last weekend, they awaited the start of federal mediation and hoped for a compromise that would lead to settlement. At the same time, the company said it received tens of thousands of calls from people wanting their jobs.

"We return to our jobs and are treated like this," said Larry Heath, a worker for 15 years at the company's Aurora plant who was turned away at the door.

Heath worried that the lack of seniority might make him one of as many as 15 percent of the employees who do not get called back.

"I think we should pick up our pickets and go right back to the front gate," he said.

Other workers were turned away in East Peoria, Mossville, Mapleton, Decatur and Pontiac. The 12,600 workers who refused to cross picket lines for weeks were told they would be notified by phone or letter when to return.

"In the next few days, we'll be assessing our needs and deciding who will be returning and what jobs they will be returned to," said Jim Despain, Caterpillar vice president and general manager of the large tractor assembly division in East Peoria.

Workers contend Caterpillar is trying to avoid giving Good Friday holiday pay by not calling them back until Monday.

■ gay slang

The meaning of the word later shifted when psychologists used the term to describe "schizophrenic talk."

"The connotation of 'rapping' again changed in the in 70s, when people were getting together for 'rap-sessions.'"

In the 80s, the connotation and denotation of "rapping" took an interesting turn, when, according to Delany, "rap became a musical form, an up-tempo version of Black-talking blues."

Delany said the meaning of "rapping" changed largely due to various forms of media "adopting and adapting" it.

He then focused in on the gay community. "In the mid 60s, the media began borrowing slang from gay culture."

As examples of such "borrowing," Delany cited three commonly used gay slang expressions: "camp," "coming out" and "the closet."

"Originally within gay culture," he said, "anything which was described as 'campy' [referred to] a gay male dressing in drag, acting effeminately, and basically flaunting the customs of the straight world. It also referred to a clash of tastes in terms of dress or decorating.

Delany said a good example of what is "camp" would be Miss Piggy.

"Today the word 'camp,' when used by the straight media, has negative connotations and usually implies 'ditzy,' " he said.

"Coming out" and "the closet" are two more gay terms which have been "taken over" by the straight media, according to Delany.

"When someone 'came out' in the 1950s, they 'came out' into the gay community. It meant that he had his first homosexual experience. It wasn't until 1965 that 'coming out' had to do with the straight community."

The concept of "the closet" was also taken over and changed by the straight community. Delany said that "in the 50s, a 'Closet Queen' was someone who got turned on because his wife and family didn't know about his homosexuality. It was a fetish to pretend to be straight. The social split excited him, and he had no intentions of telling straight people about his activities."

Once the media picked up on this term, however, "the straight community changed its meaning. All of a sudden, people were coming out of all kinds of closets. 'Closet' smokers 'came out.' Alcoholics 'came out,' and gays 'came out.' However, gays were no longer coming out into their own community, but they were coming out to the straight world who didn't understand them and, in some cases, didn't know they existed."

In closing, Delany said that "gay slang was taken by the straight community, restructured and presented back to [the gays] for [them] to use. This is [a form of] oppression and it's important to keep track of this."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Gather your crew together — friends or co-workers. Discuss your make-or-break project. It will work out fine. New sources of financial assistance come into view. Play your cards close to your chest.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Devote a lot of work and mind getting involved in secretive dealings. Your star shines brightest during evening hours. Why not wait until tonight to seek the limelight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Conducting business in secret could backfire. Solving a business, career problem will be easy if you seek your mate's cooperation. Don't drink too much water today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have a real gift for putting other people at ease. But if work, personal relationships or more rewarding now than in recent past. Look ahead.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Consult a bank official or accountant about a financial problem. A family member gives you a hand with household chores. Do not kiss off a kiss from a loved one — it might be your best shot for nicky.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Unfit an urge to gamble. Risking money you cannot afford to lose would be a mistake. Someone whose judgement you respect may have the answers you need. Swallow your pride and ask for advice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A business matter deserves further thought. Like your investment moves making new financial commitment. An older relative or friend may be able to pull strings on your behalf.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not let your ambition or devotion to work cause you to neglect your old spring. They need your love more than you realize. Implement common sense when making business concessions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The hectic pace of the last few days should slow down. Map out your next move in business. Revelations all you have learned recently. The bowling could lose tonight!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A financial or career decision requires careful thought. What seems to be the best offer could prove disappointing in the long run. Romance will have to wait while you tend to business.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romantic plans and household projects flourish. New business undertakings prompt the drawing board. Amicable chats add to your feeling of good humor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Foreign places and contacts affect your attention. Take a greater interest in community service. Family harmony improves when you show more understanding.

Softball team awaits word on weather at Hofstra's field

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

At 3 p.m. this afternoon, the University of Massachusetts softball team may be in Hempstead, N.Y., playing a double-header against the Hofstra Flying Dutchwomen.

The more likely situation is that the 19th-ranked Minutewomen will take their 19-8 overall record (8-0 in the Atlantic 10) to Totman Field for practice.

UMass was supposed to leave for Long Island yesterday, but the weather outlook on Long Island is bleak, so rather than take the long ride for non-conference games, the team may cancel the trip and get the proper rest needed for Saturday's home twinbill against A-10 member Rutgers.

Regardless of who the Minutewomen play, they are gearing up for the toughest stretch of softball they will face since returning from spring break in California.

The Minutewomen are ranked No. 1 in the region, and Hofstra is No. 2. The University of Connecticut, which gave UMass its only eastern loss of the season when the two teams split a doubleheader last Thursday, is the region's No. 3 ranked team. The UMass — UConn rematch is next Thursday.

In common opponents, both UMass and Hofstra have swept double-headers from Boston College and Army.

Hofstra is led by the pitching tandem of Jennifer Engmann and Stacy Jackson. Jackson, only a freshman, is 13-3 with a 2.13 ERA in 102 innings pitched. She is holding opponents to a .202 average.

Engmann is a senior who carries a record of 4-0 with a 0.91 ERA in 46 innings pitched.

The big bat for the Dutchwomen is Crystal Boyd.

Not enough pitching to go around

If you're talking baseball, here are words to live by: pitching wins pennants. You might have heard of the "Hitless Wonders," the 1906 Chicago White Sox team that won the World Series with a batting average of .230 but an earned run average of 2.13, but there's never been a team of "Pitchingless Wonders" that won a flag.

Pitching talent is spread so thinly in baseball today that teams scamper about frantically and break the bank to sign such run-of-the-mill types as Matt Young (Red Sox) and Bud Black (Giants) for absurd salaries. In the mid-1960s era of Koufax, Marichal and Gibson, Young and Black wouldn't be worth a bag of broken bats and a pop-up toaster.

Last week, the 26 teams in major league baseball began their quests for the World Series trophy. But not many of them have much hope. The Chicago Cubs have the league's best second baseman and highest-paid player in Ryne Sandberg, but as long as he grazes the infield with the likes of Shawn Boskie and Bob Scanlan on the mound, the Cubs will continue to rival the Red Sox in post-season futility.

Ted Kottler

Fact is, 26 teams is just too many. With such a severe dearth of good starters, few teams boast a staff that seems capable of pitching to a pennant. But if there were fewer teams, the one good starter from, say, a 75-87 team, could join the one good starter on an 83-79 team, and lo and behold, you have another pennant contender. But as is, there is an excess of clubs each of which must realize that their season is probably over from day 1.

I have three suggestions for improving the overall pitching quality of Major League Baseball.

1) Encourage multi-positional players to stick to pitching. Many prospects out of high school both pitch and play one or more other positions, and it seems that too many are ditching the mound to ply their trade in the field and the batter's box. Well, with the shortage of golden arms in the big leagues, more need to realize that where they're needed most isn't next to the plate, but 60 feet, six inches away from it.

2) Turn some relievers into starters. This obviously isn't my own brilliant idea since it's been done before, but not extensively or effectively. It seems that too many pitchers with the truly great arms wind up in the bullpen. They've obviously got arms as strong as any, and more of them need to be made into starters. Imagine Rob Dibble in the Reds' rotation!

3) Expand the strike zone, not the league. During the hey-day of pitching in the late 1960s, the strike zone was bigger, and it almost made the pitching too good. But since they need all the help they can get today, let's start calling more strikes.

Women win three meets last weekend

By RENEE AMBROSE
Collegian Correspondent

Without a dugout in which to hide or gymnasium to stay warm, the University of Massachusetts women's track and field team once again braved the rain and cold to emerge with their fourth win of the season. UMass' record now stands at 4-1 after defeating Rhode Island, Williams and University of New Hampshire on Saturday.

As usual, senior Lee Ann Ambrose shrugged off her opponents, taking first in the 400-meter with a time of 57.1 seconds and in the 200 (25.7 seconds). Acting as anchor for the 4x100 relay, she also illustrated her skill by making up a considerable distance to allow UMass a first place finish in the event.

Freshman Janie Meeks, who barely had a moment's rest all afternoon, also ranked among the top scorers for UMass. She placed first in both the long and triple jump, second in the 200 and contributed to UMass' first place victories in both the 4x1 and 4x4 relays. While most athletes compete in fewer events, Meeks proved her abilities by competing successfully in five events.

The 1500 and 3000 events were won with ease by Kelly Liljeblad, who took first in both, while junior Becky Johnson held on to first place in the 800, finishing with a time of 2:16.4.

Also turning in a strong performance for UMass was senior Diane Ozzolek. Capturing second place in the hammer, she tied her own record at 151 feet and 6 inches.

The women's track team travels to Worcester this weekend to compete in the Holy Cross Invitational.

Mario Guaglianone in which Millon dodged two defenders before passing to a cutting Guaglianone.

Millon wasn't done yet. His "Air Gait," which came a minute into the third, took the heart out of UNH and made a strong case for any "goal of the year" awards the Gorillas might have.

The "Air Gait," or "Air Stewart" as Millon's teammates called his version, is a maneuver popularized by former Syracuse midfielder Gary Gait in which the player attempting the shot leaps from the back of the net across the front of the crease and jams the ball in the net. Because offensive players can't step in the crease, a circle surrounding the goal, the player attempting the shot must jump from outside the circle.

"I work on it in practice a lot," Millon said afterwards. "It adds a fun aspect to the game, and the crowd likes it."

"I asked Mark at the beginning of the year to be the team's quarterback," Garber said. "I told him if you spread it around more things are going to open up for him and he's done a good job of that."

Soon afterwards, UMass' starters were mostly on the bench and Garber was giving his reserves a chance to shine. Avena and Cuda both scored twice in the fourth. The team's freshman contingent turned in solid performances as well, most notably defenders Dennis Kelly and Dan Collins, attacker Joe Loiacono and faceoff specialist Jason Jagentenfl.

"There's some guys who haven't played a lot for us yet this year," Garber said. "This was their chance to go out and play some good lacrosse. Jagentenfl did a good job facing off for us."

Regardless of the score, however, UNH did not quit. While the Wildcats' style of play emphasized checking and hitting instead of shooting, passing and defending, UNH strung together a series of scores at the end of the third and start of the fourth. Geier, Eric Presbey and John Daley scored two goals each for UNH.

Millon scores seven as Gorillas roll

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Mark Millon broke his own single-game scoring record, netting seven goals and assisting two others while Mike Cain and Rob Falvey added hat tricks as the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team drubbed New Hampshire 22-9 yesterday at Richard F. Garber Field.

Millon, a junior attacker from Huntington, N.Y., broke his previous records of five goals and eight points despite playing only half the game. He scored five in the first half before adding two more early in the third, including an acrobatic "Air Gait" score. By the time coach Ted Garber replaced Millon in the line-up, UMass had a 15-3 lead and even cynics could say "game over."

But while Millon led the way, eight other Gorillas broke into the scoring column as Garber substituted freely. Although UNH did show offensive potential, they could not stop the Gorilla onslaught, nor could they solve the UMass defense.

"That's great when you get teamwork like that because that gets everybody into the act and that gets them going for the next game," Garber said.

All three of Cain's goals were blistering line drives UNH goalie Brian Vona never even saw. Pete Cuda and Don Avena racked up two scores each. All three of Falvey's scores were unassisted. Greg Kline and Mike Valente assisted two scores apiece. Ray Suris, replacing Tom LoPresti in the third, made eight outstanding saves.

Do you get the idea the Wildcats were outmatched?

"[UMass] got a big jump on us," UNH coach Jim Urquhart explained. "They've always been a run and gun type team that can score in flurries and that's what they did."

UMass rattled off six unanswered scores before UNH could get on the board. The first foreshadowed the game's outcome as Millon stole an errant clearing pass and walked in on Wildcat starting goalie Brian Vona (six saves). Depp followed a minute later, as Millon found him so wide-open he had time to drop the ball, pick it up and score.

After Jim Palmer and Chris Geier scored for UNH late in the first, Millon answered back with his third goal of the afternoon with 0:25 left in the first, closing the quarter at 7-2, UMass.

The Gorillas removed all doubt surrounding the outcome in the second, outscoring UNH 6-1. Five different Gorillas cashed in, the highlight being a goal by What's all the Hoopla about?

Three-on-three basketball festival returns Apr. 24-26

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

Sure college basketball's March Madness is invigorating, but for pure hoop excitement it will be hard to beat the April Adventure of Haigis Hoopla II.

From April 24 to 26, the second annual 3-on-3 basketball festival for both men and women will fill the University of Massachusetts' Haigis Mall with bouncing basketballs and the tickling of twine in addition to jugglers, face-painters, a band and other carnival-like performers.

While the weekend event offers would-be Michael Jordans the chance to show their wares, it also gives UMass sports management students a chance to gain valuable work experience from organizing the 100-plus team competition.

"It's amazing to me how much it mirrors the work environment," said graduate student Mary Boyd, who is one of more than 20 students in Professor Peter Thomsen's Event Management course which is coordinating the festival.

"We were looking for a way to give students a real life experience," Thomsen said.

"As an undergraduate, it's a great opportunity to meet and work with graduate students," said junior Gloria Nevarez, another Hoopla organizer. "They've been out there. They know what it's like."

Proceeds from the event are being set aside for a scholarship fund for needy Pioneer Valley high school seniors who would like to go to college.

"It's worked out much better than I expected," said Thomsen. "Last year, we had no track record to offer sponsors, but this year we have a videotape and facts, and it helps to show that it's a real live event."

Sponsors are from both the national and local level and will contribute everything from candy bars to sneakers for the tournament. Sponsors will have booths set up in addition to live music and other entertainment. There is also a shooting contest and slam-dunk competition on Apr. 24 in the Curry Hicks Cage.

The work behind preparing three days of blacktop basketball is obviously strenuous.

"I try to let the students go (on their own) as much as they can," said Thomsen. "There are so many details so a lot of what I try to do is to get the groups to talk to each other."

Entrants (entries are due today) pay $10 per person and teams may have up to four players (one substitute). There are five different levels of competition for everyone, from the "couch potatoes" to the "top guns." It is a double elimination tournament and games are played to 14 points in a 30-minute period. Referees will be on site if play gets out of hand.

"Lenny Wirtz won't be invited," laughed Boyd in reference to the official who called the controversial technical foul on UMass coach John Calipari during the Minutemen's Sweet Sixteen game versus Kentucky.

Nevarez was a volunteer for last year's tournament and was amazed how well everything went.

"It was so much bigger than I thought it would be and it all ran very smoothly," Nevarez said.

"The students use up a lot of personal effort and it gives them the biggest sense of accomplishment," said Thomsen. "It's kind of a risk — you invite all your friends and hope they're going to enjoy it."

Last year's event, which raised over $500, attracted 109 teams and the overall winner was composed of former Minutemen hoopsters John Tate, Rafer Giles, Matt Anderson and Chris Bailey. This year's contest, which will include a wheelchair division, was to have Sweet Sixteeners Anton Brown and Will Herndon, but a scheduling conflict will probably eliminate their participation.

Only senior varsity athletes are eligible for the tournament and UMass' all-time leading scorer Jim McCoy is said to be a likely participant.

SPORTS NOTICE

Attention Minutemaniacs: If you want to be in the parade with the University of Massachusetts basketball team, show up at the Haigis Mall today with your Minutemaniacs shirts between 3:45 to 4 p.m.

Today is the last day to sign up for Haigis Hoopla II. One can register today between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse. The 3-on-3 basketball festival will be held April 24 - 26 at Haigis Mall. Any questions, please call 545-4422.

Calipari says Bright will soon sign

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Donta Bright of Baltimore's Dunbar High School, one of the most highly regarded high school basketball players in the nation, has yet to sign a National Letter of Intent to attend the University of Massachusetts next year, on the first day of the signing period.

However, the UMass coaching staff contends Bright has been sent the papers and is expected to sign them within the next few days.

Bright is in Atlanta for the McDonald's All-American game and both he and a legal guardian must sign the letter before the University can officially announce his signing.

UMass coach John Calipari said they used to be able to fly the papers to the individual, but now the process is delayed by the mail.

"It should be over," Calipari said at last night's Student Senate meeting of the recruiting of Bright.

Bright must still meet the NCAA's scholastic requirements. He did not reach the required 700 on the SAT in his last attempt.

A McDonald's All-American, Bright is a 6-foot-6, 190-pound forward who was also named first team All-American by Parade Magazine and USA Today. He averaged 20.5 points and 10.8 rebounds for Dunbar's Poets. Coach Pete Pompey's team ended the season with a 29-0 record and the nation's No. 1 ranking.

In his four years at Dunbar, Bright, the Most Valuable Player at the Nike All-American Camp, scored 1,994 points and grabbed 1,209 rebounds.

Bright is the first sophomore ever to receive the Baltimore Sun Player of the Year award, an award he received twice.

The Street and Smith Top 5 player was also recruited by Ohio State, Clemson, Seton Hall and St. John's.

• UMass forward Will Herndon, who averaged 10. 3 points, 5.9 rebounds and 1.5 blocks for this past season's 30-5 Minutemen was chosen the eighth pick in the first round of the World Basketball League.

UN envoy calls for cease-fire in Kabul

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — With Muslim guerrillas claiming they now control all major cities but Kabul, a U.N. special envoy pleaded Mo¯day for a cease-fire by government forces and rival rebel groups.

Benon Sevan, who was trying to mediate a settlement of the nearly 14-year-old civil war before the fall of President Najibullah last week, said he was trying to negotiate safe passage out of the country for the ousted leader.

Sevan said agreement was close for an interim government to replace the Soviet-installed government, but a radical fundamentalist group rejected that idea. The group, Hezb-e-Islami, threatened Monday to attack Kabul if the city was not surrendered to its fighters in one week.

A more moderate group, Jamiat-e-Islami, which is considered the best organized of Afghanistan's many rebel organizations, said its troops had formed a protective ring outside the capital. Troops of the crumbling Communist government held the city itself.

Many people fear the civil war will degenerate into fighting among the various factions and turn this city of 1.5 million people into a battleground. An estimated 2 million Afghans already have died in the war and 5 million more have fled their homes.

Sevan urged the rebels to put aside their "personal and political ambitions" and work out a peaceful transition to a new government.

"We are almost there. Don't risk destroying the chance for peace," said Sevan, who appeared in public for the first time since Najibullah gave up power and tried to flee the country Thursday with the U.N. envoy's help.

Nervousness has steadily increased in Kabul as the guerrillas, known as mujahedeen or Islamic holy warriors, have tightened their noose around the capital and seized several provincial towns in the four days since Najibullah's ouster.

Some shops are staying closed or are opening for only a few hours. Tanks rumbled through rain-filled streets before dawn Monday and sporadic gunfire crackled in outlying areas all through the day.

A powerful guerrilla alliance led by Ahmed Shah Masood, a Jamiat-e-Islami commander, wants to name a mujahedeen government to bridge the next six to 12 months until elections could be held. The authorities of Najibullah's Watan Party have been holding out for an interim council of neutral officials.

Herzb-e-Islami, led by Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, opposes Masood's participation and is demanding that a strict Islamic government be set up.

Sevan said he hoped to meet Masood and other rebel leaders on Tuesday outside Kabul. Despite years of patient negotiations, it would be Sevan's first meeting with Masood.

Sevan and other officials partially lifted the secrecy about the whereabouts and condition of Najibullah, the former secret police chief put into power by the Soviets in 1986.

Diplomats confirmed that Najibullah was at the U.N. compound in Kabul and that Sevan had not been able to negotiate his safe passage from Afghanistan.

Defending champ wins marathon for 3rd time

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Defending champion Ibrahim Hussein of Kenya became the sixth three-time winner of the 96th Boston Marathon today, running the second fastest time in the race's history.

In the women's race, Olga Markova of Russia also posted the second fastest time at Boston, winning comfortably in 2 hours, 23 minutes, 43 seconds. Joan Benoit Samuelson set the race record of 2:22:43 in 1983.

Hussein's time of 2:08:15 was more than two minutes ahead of runnerup Joaquim Pinheiro of Portugal. Andreas Espinosa of Mexico was third.

It also was better than the winning time of Gelindo Bordin of Italy of 2:08:19 in 1990 but fell short of the race record of 2:07:51 set in 1986 by Rob de Castella of Australia.

Hussein won by 16 seconds last year in 2:11:06 and one second in 1988 in 2:08:43. He was unchallenged over the last five miles today.

In the women's race, Markova overtook defending champion Wanda Panfil of Poland just past the 18-mile mark of the 26.2-mile event and won easily. Yoshiko Yamamoto of Japan was second and Uta Pippig of Germany third.

The men's and women winners each receive $60,000 from the total record prize pool of $418,000.

A record field of 9,625 started the race under overcast skies, a temperature of 58 degrees and humidity of 80 percent. The field broke the previous Boston record of 9,412 set in 1990.

Simon Karori of Kenya led from the start until the midpoint of the race when he was caught by a group of five runners, including four Kenyans and three-time runnerup Juma Ikangaa of Tanzania.

At one point, a repeat of the closest finish in race history in 1988 seemed possible. But at about 19 miles, Ikangaa, the 1988 runnerup, was about 15 yards behind Hussein and Boniface Merende of Kenya.

Ikangaa dropped far back at 20 miles, and Hussein opened up a 30-yard lead over a fading Merende at 21 miles. Hussein, who became the first African winner of the race in 1988, ran alone the rest of the way.

The other five runners with at least three Boston Marathon victories are Clarence DeMar, a seven-time winner; Bill Rodgers, a four-time winner, and Leslie Pawson, Gerard Cote and Eino Oksanen, with three wins each.

The last back-to-back men's victories were posted by Geoff Smith of Great Britain in 1984 and 1985.

Hussein held about a two-stride lead at the 20-mile mark in a time of one minute, 37.35 seconds. His 20-mile time when he won last year was 1:36:53.

Redistricting case argued today

Supreme Court to hear congressional seat dispute

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The battle over the shape of Massachusetts' congressional seats could get messy again if the state loses its Supreme Court battle to keep the number at 11.

Even the administration of the election, as well as some of the politics, could get complicated if the court, which hears the case Tuesday, is slow in producing a ruling.

The Supreme Court hears arguments Tuesday in a case that will, when decided, determine whether Massachusetts gets to elect 10 or 11 congressional representatives this fall.

Massachusetts had been slated to lose one of the seats — dropping the delegation to 10 — as a result of the 1990 census.

But a three-judge federal court ruled in February that Massachusetts didn't have to give up the seat, accepting the state's arguments that overseas military personnel were improperly counted.

Since then, the Legislature has passed and the governor has signed an 11-seat plan.

The Justice Department, representing the Census, appealed to the Supreme Court.

The high court issued an order last month halting any further action until it decides the case.

The Supreme Court order averted the need for Washington state, which would lose its new ninth seat if Massachusetts is successful to revert to an eight-district plan.

While technically it put Massachusetts back at 10 seats, state officials have not moved officially to adopt a 10-seat plan, fearing it could weaken their case before the high court.

The only concession to date is a bill likely to reach Gov. William F. Weld shortly that would allow congressional candidates to collect nominating signatures statewide. That's because, at least until the high court rules, district boundaries won't be set.

The filing deadline for nomination papers is May 2.

That deadline, even with a looser signature requirement, has put pressure on some potential candidates who could not decide whether or not to run without knowing the district boundaries and potential opponents.

For example, state Senate Ways and Means Chairman Patricia McGovern (D-Lawrence) virtually ruled out a congressional race this year, because she said she did not know what the district would include. McGovern has announced she won't seek re-election to the Senate and will take a "sabbatical" from elective office.

The real mess may come, however, if the state is forced to revert to a 10-district plan.

Democratic legislative leaders and Republican Gov. Weld were very close to agreement on a 10-seat plan just before the three-judge panel ruled.

Democrats would like to stick to that plan, while Weld and Republican officials want to reopen negotiations.

Since the February ruling, the political landscape has changed.

Several members of the all-Democratic Massachusetts congressional delegation have been wounded by the House bank check-kiting scandal.

Another lawmaker, U.S. Rep. Nicholas Mavroules of Peabody, is allegedly under investigation by federal prosecutors.

And veteran Rep. Brian Donnelly of Dorchester has decided not to seek re-election.

Earthweek starts today

Environmental education focus of week

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

There are the people who recycle and care for the environment everyday and then there are the people who use their Residential Recycling Program issued blue recycling bins for such things as coffee tables.

But no one has to feel guilty about neglecting their responsibility to the Earth because Earthweek, which begins today and lasts until Friday, will give everyone a chance to redeem themselves as being environmentally conscientious — or at least the two co-sponsor groups of Earthweek hope.

The purpose of Earthweek, which is co-sponsored by the Residential Recycling Program and the UMass Chapter of MassPIRG, is to celebrate the earth and to educate people about environmental issues, said Michele Palazzo, who is the assistant program coordinator of Earthweek.

"I want everyone, from kids to adults, to realize that if they are concerned they can do a lot for the Earth," she said.

Robin Purnell, who is the project coordinator for the MassPIRG Recycling and Toxics Group, said the co-sponsors of Earthweek have worked all semester to prepare for the big event.

"It has been a lot of hard work but it is very worth it," said Purnell. "Many people are invested in [Earthweek] because they care about the environment and want to help others become more aware [of the environment]."

Earthweek has four different theme days, said Palazzo, who is a senior environmental science major. All the proceeds earned from the bake sales and raffles held during Earthweek will be used to buy rain forest acreage in this country as well as Costa Rica and Brazil, she said.

"Earthweek will be an event for which the whole community can get involved in," she said.

Earthweek began in 1970 when citizens started becoming more concerned about the environment.

Today — named Toxics Tuesday — there will be six informational tables about toxics set up outside the Student Union.

These tables will inform people about pesticides, household waste products, where toxics come from and where they go and the Polluter Pay Initiative, which wants businesses who cause waste to pay for the cleaning of their waste.

She said there will also be a petition to stop the outfall pipe which will run from Boston to the Cape Cod Harbor.

"If this pipe isn't stopped it will destroy the Cape's estuaries and fisheries," she said.

Ben & Jerry's travelling theater troupe will be performing two 45 minute shows in front of the Student Union today and selling ice cream and T-shirts.

On Wednesday, which is Earth Day, there will be about 40 tables set up on the lawn between the Tower Library and the Campus Pond.

"The Body Shop, Bread & Circus and Clean Water Action are just a few of the organizations that will be involved," said Sherill Baldwin, the Residential Recycling Program program coordinator.

She said there will also be a stage with an open microphone for reading poetry, playing acoustic music, announcing and performing.

Palazzo said volley ball, juggling and mime performances will be offered. "It will be a fun and educational too."

By the Campus Pond on Thursday, Recycling Day, there will be tables informing people about conscious shopping, making recycled paper and the Recycling Initiative, which will be on the 1992 ballot in November, said Palazzo, who is also a representative for the MassPIRG student Board of Directors.

There will also be a trash sorting event and a theater group from Hampshire College will perform on stilts with papier-mache heads about environmental concerns, she said.

Friday's Earthweek Wrap-up will focus

Community Service launches fundraiser

By DANIEL J. LYONS
Collegian Staff

The new Community Service Program will be spearheading a March Of Dimes Walk-A-Thon in Northampton this Sunday.

"It's a walk for healthier babies," said Kara Martinsons, a junior human services major who organized the project.

The Walk-A-Thon will be held at the John F. Kennedy Middle School in Northampton on Sunday at 10 a.m. Registration begins at 9 a.m.

Martinsons has been working to gather UMass students to participate.

"We expect about 200 walkers from the Greek area and we have a group coming from the Patterson/Mackimmie cluster," Martinsons said. There will also be a number of individual walkers.

According to Vice President of Philantropy for the Inter-Fraternity Council Pat Lucas, the Inter-Fraternity Council will be running a table this week on the Campus Center Concourse which will feature a golf putt fundraiser with profits going toward sponsoring walkers.

This table will also provide information about upcoming community service program events, including the Walk-A-Thon and the Special Olympics scheduled for May 2.

All of the campus' fraternities and sororities will be participating in the Walk-A-Thon. "This event will kick off this semester's Greek Week," Lucas said.

The fraternites and sororities will be sponsoring a barbecue for all those who participate in the walk.

"Our purpose is to get everybody together for a non-alcoholic event and to National Earth Day 1992, an annual event which began in 1970, will culminate with a concert this Saturday at Foxboro Stadium, featuring world reknown musicians.

The theme for this year's Earth Day is being dubbed "Sound Action." The goal of organizers is to educate people about environmental concerns.

"We want to try and change behavior through awareness and education, so that people begin to take action," said Tom Sellars, chairperson for Concerts For Environment.

Concerts For Environment, who is coordinating the event, is billing the concert as "a musical event of global proportions."

"We want to encourage people not only to reduce, reuse and recycle, but also to rethink of our relationship to the environment," said Sellars.

"We can do this by demonstrating what's good for the environment is good for the economy, focusing our attention on local action, the United Nations Earth Summit being held in June and recognizing and honoring indigenous people's connection to the earth," he said.

Another objective of the organizers is to have people become educated about the candidates running for the president and their views on the environment.

"One way to affect change is through the political process, and this is one of the significant things that we are trying to get across," said Sellars.

"This election year, it is time to sound action," said Steve Miller, lead singer of the Steve Miller Band in a prepared statement. "We can no longer wait for others to help clean up our environment, we must work together now to help make the world a better place for future generations."

Concerts For Environment will be providing "Sound Action Guides" at the concert. The guide contains 16 pages of tips on how individuals can not only save the environment, but also save money.

Musicians from around the world have donated their time for this event which has been billed as the 1992 "Sound Action" concert.

Australia, Great Britain, Canada, Africa and the United States are just some of the countries and continents that will be represented at Saturday's concert.

Scheduled to participate in Saturday's concert include: Midnight Oil, The Kinks, Bruce Cockburn, Youssou N' Dour, The Violent Femmes, John Trudell and Grafitti Man as well as Steve Miller.

Also, there will be a special teaming up of Joan Baez, Indigo Girls, Rosanne Cash, and Mary Chapin-Carpenter.

Foxboro Stadium, which was donated for this years festivities, was picked for the second time in three years as the host for the concert.

"There was a number of reasons why we picked Foxboro Stadium again this year," said Sellars. "The venue is very willing and interested in making environmental changes, and their commitment to the issues and persistence in trying to get us back for another year made us change our original plan of moving the concert to a different location every year."

Foxboro Stadium has made several changes in the past year that are beneficial to the environment, he said.

"Since last year's Earth Day Concert, Foxboro Stadium has made several permanent environmentally and economically

PHI KAPPA PHI

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

The Provost of the University of Massachusetts, Dr. Glen Gordon, and the Phi Kappa Phi Chapter of this university are proud to announce the following list of new members invited from the Junior and Senior classes as well as Graduate School and Faculty, and approved by the Chapter in accordance with bylaws of the National Society.

Phi Kappa Phi was originally founded in 1897 at the University of Maine and was subsequently named the Morrill Society, in honor of the sponsor of the Congressional Act which provided for landgrant colleges and universities. In 1900 it was transformed into a national society by the Presidents of the University of Maine, the Universityof Tennessee, and Pennsylvania State University. The next chapter was the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, which remains the fourth-oldest chapter in the United States. The Society was renamed Phi Kappa Phi in 1900, from the initial letters of the Greek words forming its adopted motto: Philosophia Krateito Photon, "Let the love of learning rule mankind."

To be eligible for membership, Juniors must have a GPA of 3.85 and Seniors a GPA of 3.7. Only two graduate students per program are nominated by their Graduate Directors. In addition, two faculty are chosen for membership each year based on recommendations from their respective Deans.

The Phi Kappa Phi Initiation Ceremony willbe held in the University Rhododron Garden, below the Chancellor's Residence, at 2:oo PM on Sunday, May 10, 1992. Initiates are invited to bring family members and friends.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

It's time to end the divisiveness

For all of us who want to end excessive government intrusion into people's lives, it is time to end the divisiveness in our community.

Recently, a chairwoman of the Amherst Select Board proposed and had passed a keg licensing law — a move widely viewed as an anti-student measure. This woman happens to be a prominent lesbian activist who, when faced with a measure that was anti-gay, based on the justification that homosexuality is technically "against the law," would say: ". . . repeal the law."

When underage people (i.e. 20 year old adults) might be drinking beer, the response isn't ". . . repeal the law," instead it seems to be ". . . pass more laws." It's a double standard that is difficult to understand. Certainly no one advocates disorderly conduct by beer drinkers, but a blatant policy of harassment directed at everyone is hardly the answer.

At the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition, an attitude prevails among some that "we are serious people working on a serious civil rights issue and beer advocates are not." When we're not actively trying to restrict each others activities, we're dismissing them as not being valid.

Some beer drinkers oppose women's rights, some abortion activists think marijuana is silly and some roller skaters (the next thing the Town Government plans to ban) may not like the gay lifestyle. We're just playing into the hands of the Puritans when we continue to go at each other. Everyone should think deeply about this. Two weeks ago, those of us who were at the "pro-choice" abortion rally in Washington, and those of us who were at the "pro-choice" marijuana legalization rally in Amherst were all saying: "What I do with my body is no one else's business." We're on the same side.

I, myself, am not a beer drinker, I don't smoke pot, I'm not gay, I'll never have an abortion and I'm no longer "underage," but I do believe it is seriously important to defend individual rights.

In American society today, outside of our little valley, there is a rising tide of Puritans, Prohibitionists, religious extremists and other advocates of excessive government interference. It will wash over us if we continue to dismiss, ridicule and trample each others rights, concerns and beliefs. It will wash over us unless we stand together.

Building a new coalition

This Friday, at the Malcolm X Cultural Center, the Black students at the University of Massachusetts will have a historic opportunity to shape the future dynamics of this institution. There these students will convene the first ever Constitutional Convention for the establishment of a Black Student Union.

Martin F. Jones

The Black Student Union has long been a goal of the Black student community at UMass. This community, which is extremely diverse, is comprised of a number of different organizations such as the Black Mass Communications Project, Nommo News and Afrik-Am. There are eight Black Greek organizations. Different ethnic groups within the Black community are also represented by their respective organizations which include the African Students Association, the Cape Verdean Student Alliance and the Haitian Students Association. There is also a campus chapter of the National Society of Black Engineers which hosted the Northeast regional conference last fall.

This broad range of Black student-run institutions presents a great wealth of potential for the interests of Black Students at UMass. These organizations together can satisfy the needs of almost every facet of the community. Before my arrival at UMass, I attended Westfield State College for two years. It was a much smaller institution than the University and there was only one organization for minority students.

This organization was called the Third World Organization and was set aside for all of the combined minority groups at the school. There was only one room allocated to this organization, which had to constantly fight to keep it. Despite its small size and limited resources, this organization did provide much needed leadership and representation to students of color at Westfield State College.

Here at the UMass, the sheer size and complexity of of this institution creates a new set of problems for students of color. First of all, we are a tiny minority that is dispersed throughout the huge residential area of campus. Many of us still do not know one another and I have yet to see a large majority of the Black community assembled within the same room.

Another problem facing those of us who are politically active is that we often find ourselves asked to speak for or represent the entire community. As minorities we all too often are put into the role of "race representative" for our people. In order to alleviate problems on campus, there is definitely a genuine need for a democratically elected spokesperson to fulfill this role.

Once established, the Black Student Union would become the vehicle for establishing a strong body of leadershipand would be a focus for the combined academic, social and political activities of various organizations.

At the present time, the future of these organizations remains cloudy. The apathy that plagues this campus has by no means passed over the Black community. This concern was raised in the last edition of the Black Affairs Page where a stark scenario of the future of Black student activities on campus was presented. Some organizations could become defunct due to lack of participation.

There are, of course, legitimate reasons for this trend. The entire campus has been affected profoundly by years of consecutive cuts. An unstable economy has left many students concerned more with their future careers and less with campus activism.

For the Black students we will have to include additional factors which include a hostile racial climate that was exposed during the 1986 Southwest riot and a rising trend for Black students to attend predominately Black colleges. These combined factors all have dramatically reduced the enrollment, and subsequently, the activity of Black students at UMass.

These are just a few of the numerous challenges facing the Black student community here at UMass. To meet these challenges, we must regroup and organize ourselves to compensate for those losses that we have suffered. Now is the time to begin building a coalition that will provide a secure foundation for the future. So remember: United we stand. Divided we fall. Together we can all stand tall. See you at the convention.

There are just too many problems in this world to handle all at once

I refer to an article printed in the April 10 issue of the Collegian, by Emilie Woodward. I found her article to be extremely offensive as well as judgemental. If Ms. Woodward wanted through her article to get more people interested in the problem of rape, she has most likely failed. All she did was alienate the student body through her rude comments and assumptions.

I quote Ms. Woodward's article: "Three people out of a student body of 26,000. . . care enough about [date rape] to come to a forum where they can learn more about it. . ."

I resent this attitude. Having founded the organization SAFER (Students Are For Ending Rape) at Mansfield High School in 1991, I feel that I am indeed aware of the importance of this issue. Yes, date rape should indeed be talked about, and we should keep talking about it until people acknowledge how serious a crime it is, so it can be stopped. However, implying that the entire student body is "a campus of self-centered zombies" is not going to make them listen to what you're saying. This woman graduated as an education major?

Sure, UMass has more than its share of zombies. But come on, bitching about that isn't going to stop rape.

And furthermore, I would like Ms. Woodward to know that on the night of the seminar, I was busy talking to a friend who's parents just split up.

There are a lot of problems in this world and we can't take care of them all at once.

Remember, canine owners: spring time is leash time

Now, just as the weather starts improving (or will it?), leisure activity around the Campus Pond should explode and the surrounding area will turn into a park of sorts. It isn't a park, of course; the mud, pavement and the fearsome brick monolith reflected in the yucky water ought to clue you in. Still, the pond is the closest thing we have to a park here and also works well as a barrier for the Spring Concert. (The scheduled acts this year, by the way, include Santana, the Chipmunks, Ari & The Arses, Charo, the Beatles, and Elton John Wayne Newton-John Lee Hooker.)

And I tell you, I've got nothing against people gittin' out in the sun and livin' it up — as long as you're people. What I don't want to see are any unleashed dogs! They are vicious, ugly, drooling creatures with killer instincts and the razor-sharp teeth with which to perform their brutal attacks. OK, maybe they're more like Bic disposable razor-sharp teeth but they can still do a lot of damage nonetheless.

The last thing I need is a ferocious canine beast inhospitably attacking me by wrapping its salivating mouth around the entire region of my genitalia, clamping its two rows of white death daggers down and viciously thrashing away, yanking my whole body to the left, then to the right, as if I were a dog on a leash. And me, trying to steer into the skid, so that no section of that vital and oh-so-tender organ of mine gets forcibly torn out in an excruciating, swooning tug of nauseous pain and blood-pumping spray. At this point, I'd probably lose all control of myself as well as specific, significant parts of myself, namely flesh, skin and reproductive organ sections that would issue forth most abundantly upon my new friend. Wanna save yourself the trouble of scrubbing my lunch in all of its gastric juices off "Fluffy's" fur? Then tie that mutt up!

Tony Westcott

There is a leash law here. Personally, I recommend those nifty barbed-wire leashes. But if you insist on playing frisbee with your canine, you are tempting me into resorting to target practice with my AK-47 from the 11th floor of the Tower library.

It's a dog eat dog world, they say. Oh yeah, I wish. It's a sad truth these days that concerned citizens have to go out of their way to chase these overpopulated dogs onto railroad tracks. But, hey, someone's got to get the message to these freeloaders that we're fed up!

Besides, what have dogs contributed to our society? Seeing-eye dogs? That's a misnomer. Dogs are color blind, for one thing. How are they going to know if the traffic light is red, yellow or green and know when to cross? Their guess is as good as their master's! Might as well have a seeing-eye slug!

Dogs don't contribute much to the art world either. While notable anthropomorphologists such as UMass' own renowned Professor Bartholomule "Grimy" Innuendocrinecro, his fiancee, Marsha "Dimes" Philiaisonata and their lovely toddler, Chara, have been recording the exquisite Gregorian chants of Borneo's marsupials and everyone in the free world knows at least one celebratory amphibian folk song, dogs can barely bark on key. What's worse, they've got no rhythm.

It's high tide we gave up the notion of dogs as "man's best friend." These gross, potentially vicious freeloading beasts known as dogs have had their day. They have not proved themselves useful in the least in our society. And if I ever see another unleashed dog on the rampage while its owner stands smugly nearby lying to me, saying, "Oh, don't worry, she doesn't bite," I can't be held responsible for any acts of self-defense I feel the desire to inflict upon the doggie.

A computer journey into the Minstrel's Garden

By RACHEL D. MEDANIC
Collegian Correspondent

"From the dark and whetted soil
Petals are unfolding,
From the stony village kirk,
Easter bells of olde ring.
So begins another spring. . ."

From the album A Gift From a Flower to a Garden by Donovan

Walk with them this spring through The Minstrel's Garden. Perhaps in your wanderings, you too will never fully return.

To some of them it actually is a world of olde, a place where the modern world fades out in favor of a more acceptable reality, one in which relaxation is more easily found in the playing of games. But for others the Garden provides an extraordinary exchange of ideas.

Loki, one of the users, writes, "The Garden is a bar where intellectuals (or pseudo-intellectuals like myself) go to chat, maybe trade books 'n' stuff." These are descriptions of a computer network called The Minstrel's Garden.

The Minstrels' Garden is one of several computer bulletin boards that have been appearing on campus recently. Native to Amesbury, Mass. for the past three years, the 24 hour bulletin board has spent most of its fourth year on campus.

The Minstrel is the board's system operator who monitors and keeps it running smoothly. As system operator, The Minstrel insures the mechanical aspects of the Garden are problem-free. He assists users in learning the system, answers questions about the Garden, and makes sure the rules are followed. For example, he does not allow profanity to be used in the Front Garden, one of the message bases on the system.

Anyone can call in, type in the handle of their choice, and become a user on the system. But due to the way housing has set up the phone lines, accessibility to the Garden is limited to people living on campus.

To access a variety of on-line games and private (between users) and public message privileges, all that is needed is a computer and a terminal adapter unit. Programs which can be traded include: games, telecommunications, etc.

The following is based on the answers users typed in response to my questionnaire concerning the Minstrel's Garden as a bulletin board system. Users on the system use handles instead of their own names.

It is possible that what initially lures users to The Minstrel's Garden is its image which calls to the longing within all humans to be closer to Nature. Elizabethan imagery described the New World as a "garden" because it simultaneously connotated a sense of beauty and serenity as well as a sense of untamed wilderness (Leo Marx: The Machine in the Garden.)

But what has the Garden inspired or changed in those who venture there? Answering in full character of his handle, Milkman replied, "Since I have hooked up with the Garden, I have chased my dreams; I have written six plays based on the assorted lives of four Ethiopian and Dutch refugees and gone to Morocco in three days on a tricycle from Leningrad. I have explored the Mariana Trench, and I have become the father to three lovely, most wonderful daughters"

Einstein replied that The Garden itself hadn't been an inspiration but that, "The people who use the Garden have constantly renewed my belief that there exists some island of order in an ocean of chaos."

"I am still learning where the keys are," says Dante.

Certain areas in the Garden require that a few rules of etiquette be observed; however, the variety of message bases compensates to allow for a full range of expression. The Adult Alcove for example, is a base that does not hinder any topic of discussion, nor does it hinder the ways in which a topic can be discussed. Users can become involved in any number of on-line games such as: TradeWars 2002, The Pit, Pimp Wars, Barons, Global War, etc.

When asked what The Garden meant to each of them, some users spoke of it as a place to which they go for pleasure and/or escape from, "the tedious humdrum of everyday life," says Marrilion.

Others expressed that it helped them by offering fresh perspective on contemporary issues. "The Garden is a place where I drop in and see what's on the mind of other students," says Perridwyn.

"[It's a place] where all different types of plants grow together. No one plant is better than any other and the fruit or flower of one is no better than any other. It is to grow and enjoy," says Starfire.

"[The Garden is an] intangible soap box, where many people can shout and complain through one way glass," says Safari Jim.

"I think it's like my childhood favorite cartoon, Scooby Doo. There's Scooby, the Minstrel, and then there's the other BBSers who fit randomly among the other characters, Velma and the File Searcher looking for clues, Shaggy the paranoid game player, Fred the serious type, who goes all around the board," says Alekhine.

The questions the users answered dealt with a variety of issues concerning the Garden. Judging from their responses, the use of handles seemed to lend aid in getting people to say things they normally would not.

Einstein replied that the Garden gives, "Freedom to exchange ideas and information with impunity." Users expressed a consensus that anonymity keeps them safe from others' judgements. But judgement in the Garden, rather than by condemnation, usually comes in the form of constructive argument. Different from society, the pronouncement of judgement in the Garden never leads to ostracization. For the Garden beckons the eccentric and welcomes the voice of the avant garde.

Users expressed that the differences between the goals in 11-straight regular season contests dating back to last season.

He now has 83 career goals, placing him 12th on the UMass career goal scoring list and 114 points, tying him for 14th on the career point total list with Gregory Fisk, a 1986 graduate.

LoPresti recorded 13 saves and allowed 11 goals. LoPresti was replaced by Ray Suris for 1:45 in the third period after being called for a high-sticking penalty.

Delaware goalie Tim Johnson played the entire contest and was credited with stopping 11 shots.

Around the crease: After beating Delaware, which beat currently-ranked 13th Army 13-12 earlier in the season, UMass moved up one position to 14th in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll which came out yesterday. Army is five points ahead of UMass (94-89).

Yale University, the only higher-ranked opponent which UMass has beaten, climbed up two positions in the rankings to 10th after recording two wins this past week.

of the inning as Correa singled, went to second on Dodig's sacrifice bunt, advanced to third on Mike Mangano's wild pitch and came home when LaRocca lofted a sacrifice fly to right.

St. Joseph's put a runner on with one out in the seventh, before Oliveri picked off pinch runner Jeff Miller, and Graham struck out Obermeier to end it. "

"It should have been easier," Stone said, referring to the fact UMass stranded 10 baserunners. "He [Mangano] was a good pitcher, but we got great pitching too."

Sunday's games were almost a carbon copy of Saturday's, as Minutemen pitchers Jeff Toothaker (4-0) and Scott Meaney (1-2) held St. Joseph's to just seven hits and two runs as UMass swept, 8-1 and 1-0.

UMass explode for five first inning runs in Sunday's night cap as January, Keith Richards, Knight and Joe Mattivello drove in all the runs the Minutemen would need as UMass cruised to the 8-1 victory, while clinching a spot in the A-10 Championships to be held May 8-10 in Boyertown, Pa.

Garden and other forms of media had to do with the method of presentation. For example, news is not simply flashed by as on television, anyone can go back and reread what others have said as many times as they wish.

One user said, "You have more time to ponder news here, but also less reason to take it for real." When asked about the Garden's potential to be an alternative media form Starfire answered, "We make our own media and define it ourselves. The Minstrel is a guide, not an overlord," says Starfire. A user who wished not to be identified said he could envision the emergence of "specialized " BBS's such as Knitters BBS or a Hell's Angels BBS. Both Perridwyn and Alekhine, expressed the appeal of small BBS's such as the Garden, to younger age groups, "Boards have become a common part of younger society. Youth seems to see it as an addiciton. It calls you to it," says Alekhine.

But perhaps more than anything, what the people in the Garden are experiencing is gently teaching them more about their own humanity, their own strengths and weaknesses. They are becoming the listeners and the thinkers of a new generation. There is a Garden rising from this spring's "whetted" Umass Spring mud.

"Got to get back to the land
Set my soul free
We are stardust,
Wea are godlen,
We are bilion year old carbon
And we've got to get back to the Garden."

"Woodstock" by Crosby, Stills and Nash

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

I was trying to write something down today, but my pen was out of ink.
I looked around for another pen, but couldn't find one.
I couldn't find a pencil or anything else either.
So I just wrote with the bad pen, hoping it would indent the paper enough to be readable.

SHAKESPEARE VS. That Frugal Gourmet Guy: SIGNIFICANT DIFFERENCES
THE BARD:
• WORKS RARELY USE THE WORD "BASTE"
• HAD NOTHING TO DO WITH HOWARD ASSBURNHAM
• MARRY PAHVITCH: "NEVER HEARD OF HIM"
• NEVER HEADLINED IN VEGAS (significant difference with Robert Goulet)
• MADE BETTER STIR FRYS
• HAS NEVER CALLED LARRY KING SHOW UNDER A FALSE NAME
• AFTER THREE DRINKS: JUST GETTING STARTED
THE GOURMET:
• RECIPES RARELY IN IAMBIC PENTAMETER
• ON OPRAH MORE OFTEN (6 vs. 0)
• MARRY PAHVITCH READS HIS WORK REGULARLY
• BRITISH ROYAL FAMILY DOES NOT REFER TO HIM AS "THE FUNKY ONE"
• BILL MOYERS NOT WILLING TO SELL FAMILY INTO SLAVERY JUST TO DO INTERVIEW WITH HIM
• AFTER THREE DRINKS: • BEGINS BLUSHING AND TALKS ABOUT THAT TIME HE "BOXED A CHICKEN"

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A letter or phone call brings welcome news. Look for fresh outlets for your managerial talents. Your observant eyes catch errors that other people miss.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Financial complications could make you feel somewhat ambivalent or anxious today. This is not a good time to make long-range decisions. Use discretion when counseling a relative.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good companions lift your spirits today and help you make a wise decision. A troublesome business matter deserves further analysis. Your relationship with a VIP may be questioned. Answer honestly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Recent stress could make you overreact to gossip on the job scene or the disclosure of a health matter. Keep your friends' reliability in mind. Offer encouragement to beleaguered loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you keep everything aboveboard today, the things you say and do will have a favorable impact on your close relationships. If you are not straightforward, your plans will probably backfire.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Secret resentment could lead you or a co-worker to display excessive independence. Private financial worries may be at the root of the problem. Leave old grievances alone.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A sudden change in work schedules or assignments could be jarring. Once the financial advantages become apparent, the spirit of cooperation will flourish!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A heart-to-heart talk about an employment or health matter is the key to brighter financial prospects. Be candid. A better-paying work assignment may be part of the picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A profitable tip could come your way when you least expect it. Go on the warpath against laziness and greed. Squabbling about domestic duties is a waste of time. Set up a schedule.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A conflict of interest could arise today. You feel torn between a loved one's needs and work pressures. A friend or relative offers to step in and help. Show your heartfelt appreciation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be prepared to accept advice from a younger person. Once you go all-out to achieve your business objectives, profits will rise. A new outside interest adds sparkle to your social life. Someone you love just said "Quack."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may have to settle for modest gains if you continue working behind the scenes. Do not underestimate the influence of your friends on your personal goals. Put some zip into your daily routine.

Marean breaks record; softball sweeps

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Records are made to be broken, and two records, one national and one team, fell yesterday as the 19th-ranked University of Massachusetts softball team swept Rutgers University (15-16, 5-2), 2-0 and 2-1 at Totman Field.

Barbara Marean, who is leading the country in hitting, hit in her 25th (and 26th) straight games, eclipsing the NCAA record set by two players last year.

The softball team swept Rutgers in yesterday's double-header, to remain in first place in the Atlantic 10.

The senior shortstop walked her first two times up in the record-breaking game, but in what turned out to be her last shot at the record in the sixth, she lined a double down the left field line. Marean was sacrificed to second on a bunt single by Sherri Kuchinskas, and scored when Rutgers shortstop Carla Camino booted a grounder by Peggy Bush.

The run gave the Minutewomen (21-8 overall and 10-0 in the Atlantic 10) a 2-0 lead and provided all the insurance UMass' Holly Aprile would need. After the game's first batter reached on a throwing error by Aprile in the first, the senior set down the next 21 Rutgers batters in a row and recorded her fifth career solo no-hitter.

The win increased Aprile's record to 7-1, and gives her the UMass team record in career wins with 65. She struck out four and walked none.

"I think it's absolutely outstanding," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said of Marean's record. "It's a remarkable feat. I think the saddest thing for me is that there was so many people who wanted to see it, but couldn't," because of the games being postponed to yesterday's Patriot's Day holiday.

UMass scored the first run in the first inning when Marean walked and was doubled home by Kuchinskas.

In the second game UMass' Darlene Claffey entered the seventh inning with a one-hit shutout, but settled for a four-hit, 2-1 victory. She has won eight games in a row and now has a record of 9-2.

UMass went up 1-0 in the first as Rachel Lawson walked with one out and was sacrificed to second by Marean. Camino then dropped a pop-up by Kuchinskas, putting runners at first and second. Peggy Bush then singled in Lawson.

In the sixth inning Lawson doubled and pinch-runner Angyla Brumm went to third on a single by Marean. The hit, which came on a 3-1 count and again in her last at-bat of the game extended Marean's record to 26 games.

Rutgers hit a double and two singles in the seventh to make the score 2-1 but could manage no more.

The Minutewomen have now won seven in a row and have won 19 of their last 20 games. They had not played since last Tuesday's doubleheader sweep of the University of Rhode Island because of last Thursday's cancellation of a trip to Hofstra. The game against Rutgers was supposed to played Saturday but was postponed to yesterday.

Barbara Marean rounds first after breaking the NCAA consecutive game hit streak yesterday against Rutgers.

"Defensively we were brilliant," Sortino said of her teams two undamaging errors in the two games. "The layoff showed up at the plate. We were hitting the ball, but right at people. We're at the point where we need to be playing every couple of days."

Baseball sweeps Hawks, headed to A-10s

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

It was a grey and overcast Easter weekend at Lorden Field and for the University of Massachusetts baseball team the main course was hawk.

The St. Joseph's Hawks that is, as the Minutemen (18-11, 9-3 in the Atlantic 10) swept a four game set from St. Joe's, (13-21, 2-10 in the A-10) clinching a spot in the A-10 Championship's in Boyertown, PA.

"We had a couple of good ballgames this weekend," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We got some great pitching, and we just have to swing the bat a little better."

UMass lefty Ron Villone (6-1) set the tone for the weekend, holding the Hawks in check for most of the game, striking out nine as UMass romped 7-1.

St. Joseph's drew first blood in the third inning, as Brian Obermeier poked a single through the hole at second, stole second and came home when teammate Tom Verratti blooped a Texas Leaguer to right.

Villone took over from there, retiring 13 of the last 14 batters he faced, while waiting for the sputtering Minuteman offense to get going.

He didn't have to wait long, as UMass put seven runs on the board in the home half of the fourth, putting the game out of reach.

A Greg LaRocca single got things started for the Minutemen, and when Justin Howard laid down a perfect bunt, things started to get ugly for St. Joseph's.

Howard beat out the intended sacrifice, and as Hawk player's and coaches argued the call with first base umpire Kevin McGirk, heads-up base running by LaRocca put runners on first and third with none out.

Senior captain John Carelli followed with an RBI single, scoring LaRocca as St. Joseph's starter Chuck Malloy continued to struggle.

Howard was thrown out at third on what appeared to be a botched hit-and-run, and Steve Corradi followed with a walk that would have loaded the bases.

Malloy's next pitch was in the dirt, moving Carelli and Corradi to second and third, before losing Jeff January on a full count to load the bases.

Bill Knight followed, hitting a tailor made double play ball at Hawk shortstop Marty Carey, who proceeded to watch the ball go through the wickets for a 3-0 Minutemen lead.

Oliveri struck out with Knight and January on board, before Kevin Correa punched a single of Obermeier's glove at second, plating January with the fourth UMass run.

Jay Dodig closed out the scoring for the Minutemen, lining a three run shot over the fence in left, bringing home Knight and Correa.

St. Joseph's could get nothing going against Villone after that, as he lowered his ERA to 1.49 while going the distance for the Minutemen.

The St. Joseph's offense didn't fare much better in the night cap, as UMass starter Rich Graham continued his winning ways, striking out nine while giving up only four hits to the punchless Hawk offense.

UMass got on the board first, scoring on another booted double play ball by St. Joseph's.

Back to back one out singles by Kevin Correa and Jay Dodig got thing's started for the Minutemen, and when Obermeier's relay throw on the back end of the double play pulled Jason Hamilton off the bag at first, Correa scored putting UMass up 1-0.

St. Joseph's finally got to Graham in the sixth, as a two out walk to Bill Weingartner proved costly for Graham.

Bill Weingartner followed with a looping double to center that UMass centerfielder Shaun Berrymen almost made a sensational shoestring catch on, tying the game at one apiece.

UMass countered with the game-winner in the bottom

Lacrosse defeats Delaware for first road win

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Business as usual for the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team.

Mark Millon scored five goals — the third time this season. Tom LoPresti was solid in goal — in his seventh start. And the Gorillas defeated the University of Delaware, 18-11 — its fourth-straight win.

But, the unusual was the story, as the Gorillas (6-2) won their first game away from home after their only two losses were at Loyola College and Brown University.

"Our first win on the road was an accomplishment," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "Anytime you can get a win on someone else's home field — it's a big win."

The Gorillas never trailed after Mike Cain (three goals, two assists) scored unassisted at 4:58 in the first quarter to put the Gorillas ahead, 2-1.

Rob Falvey's third goal of the game, assisted by Wes Depp (two assists), at 6:06 in the fourth, extended the Gorillas 11-5 halftime lead to 14-6, the biggest margin of the contest.

Delaware's John Wunder, assisted by Tom Stanziale (team-high three goals and four assists), scored at 6:35 in the fourth which started a streak of four unanswered Blue Hen goals in just under four minutes and closed the score to 14-10.

However, the Gorillas went on to score four of the next five goals in the game's last four minutes, including Andy Fish's first of the season.

"That's the kind of game it is," Garber said of the Blue Hens' comeback run. "That's what makes it interesting."

UMass led 13-6 at the end of the third quarter.

"We can get better team defense for 60 minutes," Garber said after recording his 15th victory as a UMass coach. "They play well in segments. They have a tendency to let down and allow opportunities they shouldn't."

After Delaware's Peter Deane scored at 9:27 of the first period to bring the Blue Hens (5-6) within one, 4-3, UMass' Kevin O'Connor scored the first of five unanswered goals at 11:57 in the first.

Millon's five goals marked the fourth time this season he has scored five or more (he scored a career-high seven against New Hampshire) and was the sixth time in his career he has scored five goals in one game.

Millon leads the Gorillas with 31 goals, 13 assists and 44 points and has scored a goal in 21-straight games. The junior from Huntington, N.Y. has had two or more

Weld faces criticism for tax error

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Democrats say he's out of touch and his improper — albeit unintentional — tax deduction proves it.

Republicans say he's a straightforward guy with the guts to take responsibility for an honest mistake.

But it was Gov. William Floyd Weld, Oxford Class of '67, Harvard '66, and Harvard Law '70, who summed up the political fallout of his tax gaffe best.

"It remains to be seen how much it will stick to my ribs," the wealthy Republican said in a news conference Tuesday. "But this is not a good opener" to seeking higher office.

Returning from a week-long vacation in Virginia, Weld fielded questions on how and why he deducted too much mortgage interest.

The tax returns the governor and his wife Susan Roosevelt Weld released last week showed they paid no federal taxes on $166,277 in income last year. The couple was expecting a $21,000 refund, the total amount withdrawn from their paychecks or sent to the IRS in estimated tax payments throughout the year.

After reports of a possible error, Weld reviewed the numbers with his accountant. Tuesday he promised to file an amended return and "cut a check" to the federal government for at least $10,000 for 1991 and somewhat

Engine fire halts USAir take-off at LaGuardia

By PAT MILTON
Associated Press

NEW YORK — An engine fire on a USAir jetliner at La Guardia Airport forced the pilot to abort takeoff Tuesday and evacuate the plane, airport officials said.

None of the 44 passengers or seven crew members aboard Flight 2902, a Boston-bound Boeing 727, was injured in the 6:45 a.m. incident, said Paul Laude, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration.

They were evacuated by chutes for the jet, then taken by bus back to the terminal, said Paula Porcello, an FAA spokeswoman.

The airport was closed for about an hour and a half.

FAA spokesman Bob Fulton said the plane was rolling down the runway just before takeoff, but couldn't have been traveling very fast since the pilot was able to brake safely. He said he didn't know how fast it was going.

The pilot aborted takeoff after feeling vibrations and experiencing a loss of power, Fulton said.

Porcello said an investigator from the National Transportation Safety Board was at the scene.

La Guardia was the site of a deadly crash March 22, when a Fokker F-28 — also USAir — crashed on takeoff in a snowstorm, killing 27 people.

USAir took over the northeast shuttle two weeks ago, and airline spokesman Stuart Benzal said the jet was one of the former Trump Shuttle fleet.

Sgt. Michael Maiorano, one of three Port Authority policemen who were the first to respond to the scene, said the plane was stopped on runway No. 4 when they arrived.

Maiorano said the pilot had activated an on-board fire suppression system to douse the engine fire, but moments after the officers got there the fire reignited.

"I saw flames and smoke coming out of the engine," said Lt. Kevin Ward, one of the officers who accompanied Maiorano.

He said they immediately began spraying foam on the engine and radioed the tower.

The tower then radioed the pilot, who ordered the plane evacuated, Maiorano said.

A passenger on the flight, Belgium native Tom Swartele, 49, of Mahwah, N.J., said that the plane started to roll down the runway to take off and about 15 to 20 seconds later the pilot put on the brakes and the plane came to a halt.

Swartele said just prior to the pilot applying the brakes, he heard a "popping sound in the left engine."

Another passenger, Massachusetts businessman Sam Sherwood, told a reporter in Boston that he thought the popping sound was a tire blowing.

Swartele said the evacuation slides immediately opened and the passengers deplaned and "everyone was remarkably quiet and calm."

Maiorano said there was turbine bearing failure in the engine, which caused it to stop. That's what caused the popping noise, Maiorano said.

He said the engine stopping created friction and that's what started the fire.

Craig Dean speaks on the Student Union steps at an LBG Awareness week rally.

GLB launches awareness week

Speaker pursues legal recognition of his marriage

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Correspondent

Although the media has begun to focus on the more positive aspects of the homosexual community, the fight for equality is long and hard, according to Craig Dean, keynote speaker at a rally to kick off GLB Awareness Week.

Approximately 50 people attended the rally held on the Student Union steps yesterday at noon to initiate a week long series of events to raise awareness of gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

Ali Woolwich, treasurer for the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance opened at the podium and introduced the speaker. Dean is currently involved in an attempt to get legal recognition of his marriage to Patrick Gill in Washington, D.C.

Dean said that when this week is over he hopes that gay, lesbian and bisexual people will realize they are not alone.

"Together we can make equal rights a reality for all people," Dean said, reminding the audience that the main theme of this week is awareness.

Dean travels to colleges and universities spreading the message that gays and lesbians need to stand up for their rights as citizens in this country.

Dean said he finds irony in having to rally for this issue in a country committed to equality.

The objective is to "celebrate diversity" and put an end to the fact that "gays and lesbians that are treated as second class citizens in this country," said Dean.

Dean also stated the fact that one third of all teen-age suicides is related to the oppression felt when a teenager cannot be honest about his or her sexual orientation.

Dean believes if this awareness helps to prevent even

Collision causes $1000 in damages

Compiled By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

A vehicle travelling north on Curry Hicks Way collided with another vehicle exiting a parking lot Friday morning. The operator was cited for failure to use care in starting and operating without a license. The estimated amount of damage to both vehicles is $1000.

An unidentified 33-year-old man was observed by police officers staggering on North Pleasant St. Saturday night. Subsequently he was placed into protective custody.

ARRESTS

• Kevin A. Ranney, 30, of Northampton, was arrested Friday night on Presidents Drive and charged with breaking and entering into a motor vehicle, larceny from a motor vehicle, and malicious or wanton injuries to a real person, property and vandalism.

LARCENY

• A man reported Friday afternoon that checks were stolen from his room in Kennedy Residence hall. One of the checks was cashed at a supermarket, and police said the matter is under investigation.

• A man reported Friday morning that his wallet, containing $60, was stolen from his jacket which was left in a doorway at Boyden Gymnasium.

• A women reported Friday afternoon that her wallet, containing $20, was stolen out of her backpack in Goessman Laboratory.

Prank robbery busted by police

BEDFORD (AP) — Two teen-agers who said they planned to stage a mock robbery as a prank on their co-workers at a fast food restaurant face disorderly conduct charges, police said.

Bedford police surrounded a car in a parking lot at a McDonald's restaurant Sunday night after receiving reports that two men sitting in the car were wearing ski masks.

After five police officers approached the car with guns drawn, the two Bedford High School students inside told them they worked at the restaurant and were planning a fake robbery there.

The students, aged 17 and 18, were not arrested, said Bedford Police Sgt. Robert D'Auria. The teenagers' names were not released.

Police were planning to file charges against the two Wednesday, Bedford Police Sgt. David Porter said Tuesday.

"They're lucky they weren't injured or that no one else was injured. It could have been a real nightmare," D'Auria told the Sun of Lowell.

The students did not have masks on as police approached, but the pair had the masks, plastic guns, bandannas and sunglasses on their laps, he said.

"It could have been bad news had they gotten out of the car with the guns," said D'Auria. "One looked like a machine pistol. The other one, fortunately, was pink and looked like a water gun."

For Stephan Ross, the six digit tatoo branded on his arm is a constant reminder that the Holocaust happened.

Tonight, beginning a series of Holocaust Memorial Events, Ross will share his story of struggle and survival of how he was incarcerated at the age of nine and survived 10 Nazi concentration camps.

"I have been speaking for a number of years to young people to get the message across. . . the message of the Holocaust, man's inhumanity to man, and to recall the years of captivity which led to degradation, despair, pain, anguish, torture, starvation and death," Ross said.

On April 29, 1945, at the age of 14, Ross was liberated from Dachau. At the age of 17, orphaned, functionally illiterate and in poor health, he arrived in the United States. With help from the United States Government's Committee for Homeless Children, he was oriented to his new country.

Through hard work and perseverance, Ross continued his formal education and earned three degrees.

A licensed psychologist, Ross has worked for the city of Boston for the last 33 years, providing guidance and counseling to inner-city youths.

Ross speaks about the Holocaust often, hoping to increase awareness of the Holocaust through education. "We must at all costs go out and impress it upon our young people so that they will be informed of the horrors of the heinous crimes committed by a civilized people," he said.

"The Holocaust was an unprecedented tragedy which eliminated an entire culture, ethnicity, history and religion from Europe. This tragedy has to be talked about since there was no other tragedy such as this one.

"I can only share a fraction of my experiences with young people but it is something for them to remember how men could be cruel to each other," Ross said.

"The entire world and governments stood by and didn't lift a finger to prevent the gassing and burning of innocent people. Our objective is to speak about it and let the world know we will never tolerate another Holocaust. My people left me to carry on the message that never again can we tolerate such a murderous event."

Ross will be speaking tonight, April 22, in Campus Center 101 at 7:30 p.m.

Ride-A-Thon to aid disabled

Program offers horseback riding as physical therapy

By KRISTEN LAMBERT
Collegian Correspondent

The Pioneer Valley Therapeutic Riding Association knows that horseback riding is more than just fun — it's a form of therapy for many disabled individuals.

The PVTRA will be holding its 8th Annual Ride-A-Thon this Sunday at Wendell State Forest in Wendell, MA. The participants are sponsored by individuals or businesses to ride a three or fifteen mile trail, and all proceeds will go directly to PVTRA.

"We'd love to have anyone participate, and all the proceeds go to this program. It's a very important program and if anyone could help, it's a wonderful cause," said PVTRA director Patricia Barry.

The Ride-A-Thon will benefit adults and children with disabilites who use PVTRA as therapy. The PVTRA is a non-profit organization which provides therapeutic horseback riding for the disabled. PVTRA is certified by the North American Riding for the Handicap Association (NARA), a nationwide organization for therapeutic riding.

Therapeutic riding is a method of physical therapy which uses the horses' motions to relax and use muscles the person doesn't normally use. It stimulates nerves as well as muscles for further movement, and forces the disabled person to use proper posture to position him or herself correctly on the horse.

"The people can actually feel the difference, and this creates improvement while having fun," said Barry.

She encourages people with cerebral palsy to take advantage of this opportunity. The therapy is done in conjunction with a physical therapist to help patients with their movement.

Barry has been involved with PVTRA for almost four years and says she gets more out of it than she puts in.

"I really get a lot out of this through the gains I see in the people, whether mentally or physically, and I really believe in this program because it's so beneficial," she said.

Pat, like some of the people in the program, has a minor disablity and says the program has helped her severe scoliosis feel better after riding.

Because PVTRA is a non-profit organization, it depends on the annual event to raise money. This is open to the public with a minimum $25 pledge contribution. For anyone who raises more than $50, there will be a special prize.

Riders will have an option to have their horses judged by Dr. George Howe, a professor in the department of veterinary and animal sciences. There will be prizes awarded in this competition in junior and senior divisions.

Gay couple sues to marry

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY

Craig Dean, a 29-year-old lawyer, met Patrick Gill in 1986. The two are now in the process of suing the government of Washington D.C. in order to obtain eligibility for a marriage license.

Dean told an audience some 50 strong last night in the Campus Center that he and Patrick Gill will go ahead with the marriage before a minister of the church, even if their lawsuit with the government fails.

While no place in the world legalizes same-sex marriage, Dean said, "Washington D.C. is flagrantly violating their own law" by barring legal marriage from same-sex couples.

The ban goes against state constitutional and human rights laws of the city, Dean said, citing the 1977 State Human Rights Act which bars sexual discrimination. The Washington D.C. Marriage Rights state that only polygamous and incestuous marriages are prohibited, he said.

"Why bother?" asked Dean, replying that he has documented over 100 different marriage rights unavailable to homosexual couples. He gave examples of several of these, from life insurance to health insurance, from disability plans to taxation preference, exemption and refunding.

"Perhaps [they think] we are not as valid or sincere, and don't deserve what heterosexual relationships deserve," Dean said.

Craig Dean and Patrick Gill have appeared twice on Donahue and once on Oprah Winfrey's show, have participated in numerous radio and television interviews, and have had many speaking engagements at schools around the country, Dean said.

"One of the most gratifying things to have come out of all this publicity is the letters," Dean said, adding that he has answered over 3,000 letters.

"The number one cause of death among American teenagers," said Dean, "is suicide, a third of which are due to sexual orientation." Dean said his frequent radio and television appearances have given many of those teenagers hope, and he spends most time answering letters from them.

Following a court hearing in July 1991, Dean and Gill's marriage license was denied. As a result, Dean maintains that he lost his job. The couple are continuing to press for a license.

"We will take it all the way," Dean said.

"D.C. was paying my unemployment benefit," Dean said, adding "They were supplementing me to sue them."

Dean describes himself as self-employed, raising funds for the Equal Marriage Rights Fund. He says that he "goes on with the knowledge that what I'm doing is right."

Cabo Verde culture celebrated

'Awareness Week' examines history, culture, issues

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

With the purpose of showing the UMass' community about Cape Verdean history, culture and different issues concerning Cape Verdeans in general, the Cape Verdean Students Alliance is sponsoring Cape Verdean Awareness Week this week through Saturday, April 25.

The Cape Verdean Student Alliance is one of the ALANA organizations on campus and in the Five College Area promoting Cape Verdean culture.

"The Cape Verdean Student Alliance has been important on campus, because it has provided an opportunity for Cape Verdeans and other students to examine the history of Cabo Verde and the problems Cape Verdeans face in and outside of Cabo Verde," said Emmanuel Fernandes, senior and political science major.

Every week night up to Saturday there will be different activities on Cape Verdean culture.

Wednesday, April 22 A panel discussion titled "Different cultures within the Cape Verdean culture," will be held in Campus Center Room 174-76 at 7 p.m.

Thursday, April 23 A Cape Verdean Musical Video featuring interviews with Cape Verdean musicians will be shown in Campus Center Room 174-76 at 7 p.m.

Friday, April 24 Cape Verdean Dance Troupe: Tchabeta from Madison Park High School in Boston, MA. They will perform in Campus Center Room 174-76 at 7 p.m.

On Saturday, April 25, "Cape Verdean Awareness Day" will be celebrated. This year, the day will be dedicated to Cape Verdean professionals.

"The day will include Carlos Silva, the ambassador from Cabo Verde in Washington, a panel of Cape Verdean professionals, a fashion show, a slide presentation, Cape Verdean folk music and more," said Malk Gomes, president of the Cape Verdean Student Alliance and junior in communications and theater.

Acoording to Gomes, there will be a dinner buffet of Cape Verdean cuisine and a dance premiering Os Pecos, a live Cape Verdean band.

"Our group is opened to Cape Verdeans born in Cabo Verde, the United States, and the many other countries which our people have emigrated to over the last two centuries. Maybe you [students] have been afraid to attend the meetings becuase you do not know about your culture, speak the language, have lost touch with the culture or are confused about what it means to be a Cape Verdean," Gomes said. "Whatever the case may be, we are not here to judge anyone, because that is not what we are about."

Gomes said that he would like to have this opportunity to invite other Cape Verdeans on campus to become members of the Alliance and keep the organization alive.

"Believe it or not, there are more Cape Verdeans on this campus as you might think," he said.

Others criticized Weld for taking advantage of huge deductions by giving to charities such as Harvard University and Middlesex School.

"He deserves praise for his candor," said James Braude, head of the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts and a frequent Weld critic. "But if he could trade places with the guy from California who bounced 900 checks at the House bank, I think he would."

Braude and others said Weld faces lingering criticism he cannot relate to the concerns of the average working-class people.

"This is the kind of thing people remember way beyond any policy problem," said Democratic analyst Dan Payne.

Payne, who helped create a highly successful commercial criticizing gubernatorial candidate Steven Pierce for failing to file tax returns, said he and other consultants will tuck this episode away for future fodder.

one youth from committing suicide then it is a success.

"We must all stand up and look America straight in the eye," said Dean, referring to his fight for equality in trying to legalize his marriage.

"I shall not die at the hands of homophobes," said Dean in response to the negative reaction he has faced.

Demands for immediate equality in all aspects of life were also stressed as Dean talked of a march planned for Washington, D.C. in 1993.

"Our cause is one of justice, and we must reclaim the spiritual justice that we were born with," Dean said.

Woolwich said that for the past two years the LBGA has been responsible for organizing the events that take place during Awareness Week.

"The purpose is to encourage a safe campus environment for LBG students and decrease ignorance and fear related to these issues," Woolwich said.

Issue-specific speakers, workshops and cultural and social events have been scheduled to "combat heterosexism and homophobia which is so prevalent in our society," said Woolwich.

'No' and 'stop' mean what they say

I am writing this in response to Sheri L. Stroffe's letter [Collegian, April 14] about the issues of rape and sexual harassment on campus. I agree with her that the names of accused rapists should be made public. It would benefit a lot of people — but what about protection from men who haven't committed the crime yet, but will?

Here's a name for you — [accused rapist's name withheld at editor's discretion]. I was raped by him in December of 1991 — the first semester of my freshman year. I did not ask for it. I said no and I said stop repeatedly. I cried uncontrollably as he raped me three times — digitally, vaginally and orally. The police were called and I filed charges. The state prosecuted him because what he did to me was wrong. I'm happy to say that the UMass police and Health Services did an excellent job. They knew exactly what they were doing and they were extremely supportive and sympathetic.

Women — if you say no, he has to stop. You have every right to say no — no matter what. If he doesn't stop, this is rape and please don't be afraid to tell! I understand the feelings of guilt, shame and confusion. I experienced them myself. But you have to realize that you did nothing wrong! You were violated!

The more people report this crime, the more society will come to understand and realize what a terrible crime and what an awful problem date rape actually is. I had a lot of support, but there are a lot of women out there who don't know where to turn. Go to the police, call a hotline or seek counseling, but don't go through this trying time alone! The only way we can begin to conquer this problem that happens so often is to stand up for ourselves and report this crime.

There are sympathetic men out there who know sex is an act of love, and who would never think of forcing a girl to have sex. There might also be men reading this who don't realize that they've committed rape. Sex is a mutual display of caring and love. It must be consentual. Rape is an act of domination and violence — it is not a sexual act. Guys — if a woman says no, you must stop. "No" does not mean "maybe" or "okay." "Stop" does not mean "keep going." A woman has the right to say no at any time, regardless of what was going on previously.

Also, you must realize that rape is not just vaginal intercourse. Under law, if you perform digital intercourse, oral sex or unnatural sex (any penetration with a foreign object) on a woman against her will, you have just raped her. If a woman says no, you have to stop! If you don't stop, not only will it affect the woman in many different ways for the rest of her life, but you are committing a crime — breaking the law — and you can get into a lot of trouble!

Although the physical act of rape may not last very long, everything about the woman's life gets turned upside-down and she has to start over and rebuild every aspect of her life. So women — be careful, and if this happens, report it. Guys — have some sense and no matter what her intentions might have seemed before, once a woman says no that means you have to stop, for our sake and yours.

Not just another headache

For everyone, life can become hectic. And everyone gets headaches. I thought, like you, that headaches are far from unusual, until now!

My roommate, Hectic Hector, (I penned this nickname for him because he is always under a lot of stress, always up at six at the computer working on achievements, giving me guilt-ridden sleep) came home the other day looking wrong. He looked at me blankly and said, with a wave of the hand, "The chickens. . . outside. . . they're all gone."

While this was unlike him, I thought little of it and remained where I was. Hector slumped in front of his computer as usual and began to brush the screen impatiently with his hand. "The computer, Ari. . . " he mumbled distractedly.

Ari Vais

"What of it?" I asked.

"I want it. . . on. I'd like it on." I turned his computer on for Hector and asked him what was the matter. Hector was always the organized, the together one and frankly, I was at a loss.

Hector rubbed his pate, but I didn't realize he had a headache because he didn't look pained when he rubbed it. Just confused. Even if I did realize that he had a headache, I would not have thought much of it. Would you?

"I just can't seem to find it!" he told me honestly, slapping out a crescendo of random letters onto his screen. I knew then there was something awry.

"Hector, tell me, what's happened? This isn't like you." He looked at me and shook his large head, tears swelling in his eyes.

"The chickens," he tried to explain, "the [expletive] chickens — gone. But it's outside. What I need is outside." With that, he stood, went to the refrigerator and placed his notebooks inside leaving the door open before heading outside again into the pouring rain. I followed him.

He was looking to the sky and muttering something about Julia Child. "Nothing on the TV but Child and ads. Child and ads. Ads and Child."

I had grown more than a little alarmed. "Hector, for God's sake, what are you babbling about? What's wrong?!"

He grabbed my shoulders and kissed my forehead. "Feeling all funny," he said, "right here," and kissed my forehead again. I suggested that we call his mother, who he always phones when it all becomes too much.

"No," he said in deep yet distracted angst, "it's useless. I'm no saint. I'm not the Pope, Ari, ya know?"

I told him that I knew and begged him to come inside and perhaps take a nap. He said one more thing about the missing chickens, pointed at the sky and collapsed into the wet mud. The rain kept falling.

He was my friend and I called an ambulance. Hector is okay now. It was a migraine headache. A migraine headache so severe it caused him no pain, only a loss of his personality as we all knew it. People often get them when they start to see themselves and life as terribly serious.

These migraines and self-importance are like feuding brothers. If you never stop and smell the roses, they'll find you and they'll force you to reveal your true nature to those who may not want to see it, including yourself.

Yes, you're important, life is serious. But it is also demented, ironic, hilarious. And you are goofy and a bit amusing yourself. Forget this, even for a short while, and you may be next. Migraine headaches — fear them!

Fire safety is everyone's concern

The Ed/Op page of the Collegian on April 14 contained a very moving letter from Michelle Pirog, who lost her brother Jay tragically in a fire just over a year ago in downtown Amherst.

In the closing of her letter, Ms. Pirog urges everyone who lives in dorms, residential housing and student housing to check and be sure that the fire safety equipment is present and operating.

The University residence hall system began a systematic fire safety improvement program in 1978. At the time every residence hall room and all apartments were equipped with hard-wired smoke detectors.

Many other fire safety improvements have been made, including the installation of additional sprinkler systems, new fire alarms and hallway system smoke detectors. Residents also need to do their part in fire safety. By not creating hazards within the residence halls. By not tampering with or damaging fire safety equipment, and discouraging others from doing so.

By not pulling false fire alarms and discouraging others from this dangerous and illegal activity, and most importantly by learning how to prevent fires and what to do in case of fire. Environmental Health and Safety is available to address the campus community's fire safety concerns.

Ms. Pirog's letter speaks a very sincere message about fire safety and responsibility. We should all heed these words, so that we can do our part in preventing the tragic consequences of fire.

Turn off that television and discover the great outdoors

It has come to my attention that some of you have never heard of places like Mt. Sugarloaf, Mt. Toby, Cranberry Pond, or Wendell State Forest. These places, along with many others, are all located within a short drive from campus, but are as beautiful and wild as some of those posters hanging on your wall.

One doesn't have to travel for hours to enjoy the outdoors, nor does one have to be equipped to scale Mt. Everest to visit them.

For a low-budget weekend, what could be better than a walk by a woodland lake, without another person in sight, no traffic noise, and the sun sparkling on the water? What better way to restore your sanity after a week of classes?

The places I mentioned are all free to visit, providing you don't mind leaving your car outside the gate at Mt. Sugarloaf and Wendell State Forest, as there is a fee charged for using the main entrance.

There is always a "back way in", so to speak, if you first obtain a trail map from someone at the park. Simply don't use the main entrances and facilities. There are usually more people at the main entrances anyway, and you are after peace and quiet, after all.

A little farther north, on Route 202 (the very same Route 202 which runs through Amherst) in the town of Jaffey, N.H., lies Mt. Monadnock. The New Hampshire Park and Recreation Dept. claims that Mt. Monadnock is the second-most climbed mountain in the world, with Japan's Mt. Fuji holding the number one spot.

It is a relatively easy, well-marked climb, with once again, many other trail options other than the main trail, with its parking fee. A very polite ranger at the main trail head will gladly give you a small trail map, then you are free to choose from any of them.

Just be prepared for quick, drastic weather changes above the tree line. Mt. Monadnock is 3,165 ft. above sea level, and provides the climber with incredible views. On a clear day, one can see almost as far south as Amherst, and as far north as the southernmost tip of the White Mountains.

Francis Zera

Allow four or five hours for a round trip, including your time spent communing with nature at the top. There are many others on the mountain at any given time, but it is a large area and you really don't mind the company.

Closer to home, Mt. Sugarloaf, although a little less dramatic than Mt. Monadnock, provides sweeping views of the happy valley, with lovely UMass off in the distance. Mt. Sugarloaf is even on the bus route and is free as long as you walk. No excuses to miss this one.

The biggest complaint I hear, after homework, is that there is nothing to do around here if one doesn't have any money. It is my self-appointed task to enlighten you all about the multitude of low-cost outdoor activities in the valley and surrounding areas.

There is simply no end to places to visit. There are beautiful and secluded waterfalls, seldom visited because no one bothers to walk out and find them. You don't have to be an orienteering expert. Trails abound.

Quabbin Reservoir is criss-crossed with everything from abandoned roads to deer trails, just waiting to explored by either foot or bicycle. Quabbin is just a few minutes to the east of campus. The Wendell State Forest is prime mountain bike territory, with miles of dirt roads and trails.

When you visit these places, I hope they remind you of environmental issues, both positive and negative, of local concern. Once you get out there and find that special place you keep going back to, you might like to know if anything is going to affect it.

Trust me, once you start getting out there, you'll develop a sense of ownership, and begin to feel more concerned about environmental issues than if you simply read them somewhere. Just ask anyone who spends a lot of time out in the woods, and they'll tell you the same.

So get out there and enjoy yourselves! Shut off the tube, put on your walking shoes, and enjoy all the area has to offer. Leave the Walkman at home and listen to the trees.

Now that spring is finally here, what are you waiting for?

Black Student Union soon to become a reality

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Staff

This Friday at 7 p.m., the Malcolm X Cultural Center will become the site of the first ever Black Student Union Constitutional Convention. At this convention, a delegation of Black students at UMass will ratify a constitution and formally establish the Black Student Union as a recognized student organization on campus.

Freshman student Fabiola Narcisse, who has helped coordinate the convention, says that the Black Student Union shall "play a crucial role towards the future of Black students at UMass." Narcisse, who is also hosting the convention, will be one of the featured guests on Art Jemison's weekly radio talk show "Reports in Color." The show focuses on issues concerning the minority community and will air tonight on WMUA at 6:30 p.m.

The idea of a Black Student Union has been discussed frequently among Black students on campus during the school year. At the beginning of this semester, a group of students met at the Malcolm X to discuss issues concerning the community. One issue that was placed on the agenda was the establishment of a Black Student Union.

Another meeting was sponsored by Narcisse and two colleagues, Obed Alce and Dwight Henry, to discuss the community response to a letter containing racial propaganda which had been circulating in the local area. Once again, it was decided then that the establishment of a Black Student Union would "provide unity and strength to the Black Community."

The Black Student Union will serve to represent the entire Black student population on campus, according to the coordinators of the convention. Presently the number of Black undergraduate students at UMass numbers approximately 400, or around 2.5 percent of the campus population. The primary goal of the Black Student Union is to bring this minority on-campus closer together while also working to help increase the enrollment of Black students at UMass.

This organization will also serve as an umbrella for almost 20 other Black organizations on campus. While these organizations will remain autonomous, they will, nevertheless play a significant role through their representation within the Black Student Union.

Support for the Black Student Union has been strong from others in addition to the Black students. Ric Townes, of the Department of Academic Support Services, has been a staunch supporter of the drive to create the new orginization. Kevin Duffy, registrar of new RSOs, called the Black Student Union "a great idea." Newly elected SGA president Jennifer Wood also expressed her enthusiasm and pledged her support for the organization. Following the convention, the constitution of the Black Student Union will be reviewed for approval by the Student Government Association and the Student Activities Office.

The Black Student Union Constitutional Convention is a formal event and all delegates are expected to wear proper attire. The convention will also be video-taped by Union Video Center.

Like Them That Dream

By SONDRA SUTTON

The University of Massachusetts department of theater tops off its spring season with Edgar White's "Like Them That Dream."

"Like Them That Dream" is a compelling yet poetic drama about a black South African painter who flees Johannesburg and finds himself on the streets of New York City.

He is caught in a powerful struggle between his conscience and the desire for justice when he discovers the dying man he is hired to care for is a retired member of the South African secret police.

Nefertiti Burton is a second year graduate student in the department of theater. She will also direct "Like Them That Dream."

Burton says she chose the play "because of the richness of its characters, the timeliness of its theme, and my own personal interest in events in South Africa."

Burton met playwright Edgar White in 1989. "I'm attracted to the poetic style of his language," she says. "I like plays that deal with the real world — inclusive of everyone."

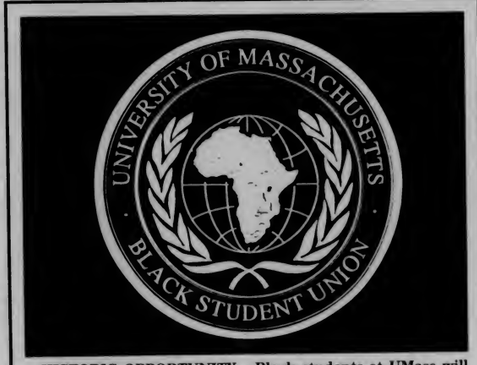
Burton says she is drawn to playwrights of color, but says, "Race doesn't have to be an issue — I'm interested in the human experience. This play just happens to cross racial lines."

In pursuing her MFA in directing, Burton brings with her a wide range of professional experience.

She is co-founder of Middle Passage Educational and Cultural Resource Company in Boston. Under this company she began the Black Folks Theater Company — a theater established for black actors and black issues in the Boston area.

Burton has been involved in the New World Theater including a feature role in "Miss Ida B. Wells." Burton says she wants to continue acting, directing and teaching. "I want to widen my experiences by working with people in different cultures," she explains.

"Like Them That Dream" will be performed in the Curtain Theater of the Fine Arts Center, April 29-May 2, and May 5-9 at 8 p.m., with an added matinee on May 2 at 2 p.m. Due to limited seating, advance reservations are strongly recommended.



HISTORIC OPPORTUNITY - Black students at UMass will convene the first ever Constitutional Convention for the establishment of a Black Student Union this Friday at the Malcolm X Cultural Center.

Black Greeks to perform at annual step show

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Staff

On Saturday May 2, 1992, the Beta-Beta Chapter of Iota Phi Theta Fraternity will host its Seventh Annual Umoja Greek Step Show. This year's event, which promises to be the biggest show yet, starts at 7 p.m. and will be held at the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

The Step Show will consist of performances by all nine Black Greek Organizations. The word "Umoja," which forms the title of the event, is Swahili for "unity" and describes the nature of the combined efforts of the organization which function to serve the community. The following organizations will all be performing at the Umoja Greek Step Show: Sigma Gamma Rho, Omega Phi Beta, Alpha Phi Alpha, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Iota Phi Theta, Delta Sigma Theta, Kappa, Alpha Psi, Phi Beta Sigma and Zeta Phi Beta.

The performances, called "stepping," are actually synchronized dances which symbolize and demonstrate the unity of people working together. James Roberts of Iota Phi Theta says that "the step show shows a positive outlook on Black people working together for the community."

"The step show is a long tradition among Black Greeks and stems from the dance rituals of African prayer ceremonies," said Roberts. Each group has its own traditional "step" which identifies that group. Each group will be competing for a cash prize and trophy.

The Umoja Greek Step Show, now in its seventh year, is the annual highlight of Black Greek Activities in the Five College area. The event was established in 1984 by Iota Phi Theta Fraternity to give people a different perspective of the Black Greeks.

"People are used to the stereotype of Greeks always in competition with each other," says Edgardo Mejias of Iota Phi Theta Fraternity. Although the Greeks are competing for a trophy in this year's Step Show, Mejias says "it is a time for mutual respect and cooperation."

Another event that was co-sponsored by the Black Greeks a "Unity Party" sponsored by Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority. This event was a charity benefit that raised over a thousand dollars for the Amherst Survival Center.

In addition to the Umoja Greek Step Show, Iota Phi Theta Fraternity also hosts and annual lip-synch contest, and this semester, added its participation in the Latin American Semi-Formal. Formed in 1963 at Morgan State College in Baltimore, Iota Phi Theta Fraternity is the youngest national Black Greek organization.

This year's Umoja Step Show has been dedicated to the struggles of Black people against Aparthied in South Africa. It's theme will be "None of us are free until all of us are free."

Preceding the the step show there will be a performance by the Bamidele Dancers and Drummers, which specialize in traditional African dancing.

Rafael Rose, another member of Iota Phi Theta, cited the importance of the Umoja Greek Step Show. "This event is bringing everyone together," he said.

'The Sound of Music,' 'Desk Set' now on HSCN

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hey there, movie lovers and welcome to yet another episode of the Campus Cable Connection. Brief announcement: the manager of the Housing Services Cable Network has informed me that the number to call in case of an emergency (i.e. the movie that is scheduled to play is absent from the screen) is now being flashed on Channel 7. So now, you have no excuse. If there's a problem and you don't complain, you won't have any results.

ANYWAY, back to movies . . . the flicks this week are the last of the repeats, so just stop complaining and enjoy them. There's quite a few good ones, so here we go! These movies will be shown beginning on Wednesday, April 22.

The Sound of Music—Julie Andrews, Christopher Plummer, Eleanor Parker. Like Lawrence of Arabia, this movie really must be viewed on a movie screen to get the full effect, but it's always fun to watch the film that inspired those songs your third grade music teacher made you sing constantly. The film won five Oscars, including Best Picture, Director and HA! Score Adaptation. Doe, a deer, a female deer. . . 1/2

Desk Set — Spencer Tracy, Katherine Hepburn, Joan Blondell. This 1957 film is classic for the Tracy/Hepburn chemistry that made them just so special. Based on a Broadway play, the film puts Tracy as an efficiency expert who studies Hepburn's department at a TV network. They argue profusely, and then (of course) eventually fall in love. Sigh. ****

Fire With Fire — Craig Sheffer, Virginia Madsen, Jon Polito. Ahh, a lovely tale of a Catholic girls' school which invites a (can you believe this) male juvenile delinquency facility over for a dance. (Oh yes, under proper adult supervision, of course.) A beautiful, blond, innocent girl falls for a greasy delinquent and they have this intense affair. The plot is bizarre and the ending is just so ludicrous, you want to puke. As a matter of fact, I think I did. Turn the channel, guys. NO STARS.

Flashback — Dennis Hopper, Keifer Sutherland, Carol Kane. Sutherland is this FBI guy who is assigned to bring Hopper to the scene of his crime — he was a 60s rebel hippie and he disrupted a Spiro T. Agnew rally. Lots of violence (especially the ending) make the movie worthwhile to catch, but the plot is overdone. Kinda reminds me of Midnight Run with DeNiro and Grodin and My Blue Heaven with Martin and Moranis. A little different in each case, but the plot is too repetitive for me. *1/2

House Party — Christopher Reid, Robin Harris, Christopher Martin. Featuring real-life rapper Reid who plays Kid, the movie is a humorous tale of teenagers and the events of one night before, during and after a house party. The movie's hysterical, and so is Reid's hairstyle. How on earth did he get his hair to DO that? Jeez, you could lose a flock of birds in that do! ***

The Odd Couple — Walter Matthau, Jack Lemmon. Based on Neil Simon's play about two divorced men living together. You can't get much better than Neil Simon, guys. They don't write 'em like this anymore! (Made into a TV series.) ****

Regarding Henry — Harrison Ford, Annette Benning. Look, I know the critics didn't like this but. . . hey, wait a minute. I'm a critic too, dammit! And I liked this movie! Ford is a man obsessed with his career, finding little time for his family, and is currently engaged in an affair when he gets shot in a convenience store. He loses his memory and must relearn how to read, write, etc., and turns into a really nice guy. A film that grabs the heart. ****

Roxanne — Steve Martin, Daryl Hannah, Rick Rossovich. Call me a softie, but the song that plays when the ending credits roll does something to me every single time I watch it. I cry every time. This movie is a modern version of Cyrano De Bergerac with Martin as a large-nosed fire chief and Hannah as a beautiful blond astronomer. The film is sweet and romantic, but it misses something along the way that I can't quite put my finger on. An enjoyable effort nonetheless. ***

Stand By Me — Wil Wheaton, River Phoenix, Corey Feldman. It's actually based on a novella be Stephen King, "The Body," and I'm told it is a true story. If you don't know the plot, call me, and I'll tell you. And don't you agree that River Phoenix was much cuter at thirteen than he is now? 1/2

Three Fugitives — Nick Nolte, Martin Short, Sarah Rowland Doroff. Director Francis Veber's remake of his own French comedy, Les Fugitifs. Nolte is an ex-con who is innocently mistaken for a bank robber when he is taken hostage by bumbling Short. The film is cute, and the little girl is even cuter (you just want to hug her and take her home with you), but the ending will make you say "duh." Too bad, but I did like the movie. 1/2

The Verdict — Paul Newman, Charlotte Rampling, Jack Warden. Very few "court" movies have packed such a punch as this one has. Director Sidney Lumet took the screenplay by David Mamet from the novel by Barry Reed, and transformed it into a powerful courtroom drama about a down and out Boston lawyer who finally has a case he believes in. Simply wonderful. ****

Young Frankenstein — Gene Wilder, Peter Boyle, Marty Feldman. This film is an absolute RIOT! Director Mel Brooks has done it again (and unlike Blazing Saddles, you don't have to be Jewish to get all of the humor); he took the original Frankenstein and made such a parody. . . Brooks is pure genius! Pay close attention to the scene when Wilder and Teri Garr discover all the skulls. Laughs galore! Feldman as Igor (pronounced "Eye-gore") is beyond hysterical. ****

The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the Eighth Dimension (a.k.a. Buckaroo Banzai) — Peter Weller, John Lithgow, Ellen Barkin, Jeff Goldblum. Bizarre cult classic about a hero who's a physicist, rock star, surgeon, rocket car driver and government troubleshooter. Whew! It's somewhat hard to fol-

Native American art at Hampden

By DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Staff

Are you one of those people who has to know the truth? Do you wish to enrich your knowledge? Maybe we could interest you in some notable art here on campus.

You can get all of this and more at Hampden this week. Native American artists come alive in Hampden Gallery with "Three Directions: Three American Indian Artists," and in Hampden Theater with the play "Foghorn."

"Three Directions" is a look at the effects of European colonization on native peoples through paintings, photographs and drawings. Selective works from Duane Slick of the Mesquakie-Winnebago nation, Jolene Rickard of the Tuscarora nation, and guest curator Juane Quick-To-See Smith of the Flatheads will be included.

Jolene Rickard will be presenting the slide-talk for the closing reception on Thursday, April 23, at 5 p.m. The gallery will be presenting these works through Friday, April 24.

Hampden Gallery is located in the Hampden Student Center in the Southwest Residential Area. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 3-7 p.m. "Three Directions" is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council and the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund.

Also happening at Hampden is "Foghorn," a New World Theater Production. Written by Kiowa playwright Hanay low, and not particularly enjoyable, but it's kinda fun if you like that type of movie. **

Armed and Dangerous — John Candy, Eugene Levy, Robert Loggia. It's too bad these stars were wasted on such a lame script. Sigh. Candy and Levy are two guys who end up leaving their old jobs and working as armed security guards. They are involved in a tangled yet ridiculously stupid plot, but some parts are amusing, and John Candy can make just about anybody laugh at the scene when he is trying to read lips at a loud party. *1/2

Boyz N The Hood — Ice Cube, Cuba Gooding, Jr., Morris Chestnut, Larry Fishburne. Yes, this movie's been overplayed this semester, but what the hell, at least it's a good movie, huh? It's a touching, down to earth film about a father-son relationship as it endures time as well as negative and positive outside influences. If you haven't caught this movie yet this semester, this may be your last time to do so. ****

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money comes more swiftly than expected. Invest wisely. You may be thinking of going in a new career direction. An older friend or relative offers excellent advice — follow it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A small windfall will allow you to splurge on creature comforts. Use this extra cash to refurbish your wardrobe or home. Your romantic efforts will be rewarded if you seek a quiet setting.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An ideal day for business expansion. Money is more plentiful, thanks to an unexpected source. Use considerable tact if you must impart bad news to an older person.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have plenty to smile about today. Make a dazzling impression and romance will come easily. News you have longed to hear is on the way. Be more sensitive to your partner's needs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Heated conflicts can ensue over who is playing fair or in control now. Do not take this matter lightly — it is dynamite. Put the power of positive thinking to work this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can buy and sell with the best of them today. A financial coup leads to a fantastic voyage. Venture to a distant locale to strike gold. Stick to your high standards.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid letting funds slip away. Stay on top of joint accounts - could someone be spending your money? Make time for a special date or night on the town.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have been working too much, go out tonight and forget about your responsibilities. You will be very successful in any competition today, except when playing against female coworkers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Curb a tendency to be extravagant now. Expensive entertainment could strain your budget. Small get-togethers with family members and neighbors are favored.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Adhering to a businesslike schedule will help you make the most of your time. Ask probing questions when the opportunity arises. Friends and relatives stand ready to give you a dive. Trust them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A period of transformation has begun; sit back silently and observe. If you find yourself in a financial bind, a private arrangement may provide relief.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A message from afar could mislead you — get the whole story. An aura of prosperity works to your advantage when dealing with influential people. Do not gamble with your savings.

"I didn't think much about it," she said in her typically humble tone, "other than the fact that we were only winning 1-0 [in the first game]. I knew we needed to get a hit, to get somebody on base because we were in a barn-burner. That was the pressure I felt, not because of the streak."

If the season ended today, these are some of the numbers the senior shortstop would finish with: a batting average of .539, which also happens to lead the nation; 12 triples, also leading the nation; a slugging percentage of .993 and an on-base percentage of .580. She has been A-10 Player of the Week four times this season.

She would also hold career records in slugging percentage (.869) and on-base percentage (.513).

"It's the technique," Marean said of her ability at the plate. "Getting my hips around helps a lot. It gives me a lot of power from the lower part of my body, which a lot of the younger players don't seem to get. They're all upper body."

"She has a great eye at the plate," said coach Elaine Sortino. "Very rarely does she swing at a bad pitch. She does what a lot of softball players can't, in the best days of their lives, master — going with the outside pitch."

All these hits come from a woman whose hitting prowess was cultured at an early age in an unorthodox manner.

"We had an old pine tree in the back yard," she said, "and my grandfather tied 2-by-4s around it. Then he put pencil slashes on the wood, gave me a blunt axe and made me swing at the mark. If I hit it on the mark I'd hit a line drive. If I swung up there would be a wedge and he'd know I would hit a pop-fly."

Maybe it's not every hitter's learning-to-hit story, but it seems to work just fine for Barbara Marean.

Herndon, McCoy are selected in USBL draft

University of Massachusetts guard Jim McCoy and forward Will Herndon, starters on this past season's "Sweet Sixteen" basketball team, were drafted by the United States Basketball League yesterday in Jacksonville, Fla.

McCoy, UMass' all-time leading scorer with 2374 career points, was taken in the first round, fourth selection overall by the Long Island Surf.

Herndon, who averaged 10.3 points and 5.9 rebounds for the 30-5 Minutemen, was taken in the eighth round, 72nd overall by the Philadelphia Spirit.

The USBL is composed of nine teams and plays a 26-game schedule from May 4 — July 6. A player signs a contract for one season and is free to leave to attend NBA rookie camps.

There is a $40,000 salary cap for each team (players and coaches) in the league and players earn approximately $3-500 per week.

Anthony Mason, who averaged over seven points and seven rebounds in over 26 minutes for the NBA's New York Knicks this season, was selected in the first round by Long Island last spring.

The games are attended by dozens of NBA scouts, according to Dan Lunde, the Surf's General Manager.

"[McCoy] possesses the skill that makes the league what it is," said Lunde. "[McCoy] is not a sure NBA draft pick, but he has a lot of talent. The league will give him a chance to showcase his talents to the pro scouts and also may bring his game a little higher."

Herndon, who has become popular on the UMass campus for his alley-oop slam dunks, was selected in the first round, eighth pick overall, in last week's World Basketball League draft

"[Herndon] can get a lot of rebounds and do some scoring inside," said the Spirit's director of player personnel, Scott Loft of the 6-foot-3 Pittsburgh, Pa. resident. "He can get out on the break and can score on the transition."

The first pick overall in the USBL's draft was Matt Fish, a center from North Carolina, Wilmington.

McCoy and Herndon were unavailable for comment yesterday.

Gorillas in NCAA playoff hunt, host Harvard in home finale

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts lacrosse fans, consider yourselves warned: barring a possible NCAA tournament appearance, today's match against Harvard (3 p.m., Garber Field) is your last chance to see the Gorillas in action.

The Gorillas (6-2), who enter today's game on a four-game winning streak, face yet another must-win situation this afternoon. Must-win because the Crimson, although an uncharacteristic 4-6, are a New England team who have already lost to Brown, 14-6. A loss would severely damage the Gorillas' chances for an NCAA tournament invitation.

It's unlikely, however, that either team is looking past what has been a heated rivalry since its inception in 1970. Last year's 13-12 overtime UMass win in Cambridge, in circumstances similar to this year's game, bears that fact out.

Last season the Gorillas went into Cambridge at 6-2, needing a win to stay in the tournament hunt. Harvard, suffering from a 2-7 season, took advantage of sloppy play and hung with UMass all game until Mike Cain scored in the first OT.

On paper, Harvard suffers from an anemic offense which has mustered a mere 66 goals in 10 games. Of those scores only 26 are assisted; points leaders Mike Porter and Paul Faust have 36 goals between them, but only three assists collectively.

The Gorillas enjoy considerable statistical advantages in this area. UMass has notched 110 goals, 62 of which were assisted. Seven Gorillas are in double figures for scoring, while only three have reached double digits for Harvard.

The Crimson tend to be a physical team as well. For all his scoring, Porter has been assessed 11 penalties for 10 minutes. Two other teammates are in double figures for penalties. As a team the Crimson have spent 54 minutes man-down.

WMUA 91.1 FM will, as always, broadcast tomorrow's game. Mike Fagerson will do the play-by-play honors.

coach? I would suspect it's pretty hard to prepare for next season with no one running the show. The clear cut favorite for the position is former Red Sox skipper Joe Morgan.

"Well, I'll tell ya the boys really played their hearts out there today," Morgan will say after a 73-6 loss. "Six, two and even." I really do miss Morgan.

• Time for the weekly dig at compadre Brett "Is there free food for us?" Morris. Eight games remaining, five games back and the Celtics overtake the Knicks for the Atlantic Division title. One of the greatest comebacks in the pre-post-Larry Bird era. Now, with Bird's back back for one more time it will be a tremendous ride to Banner 17.

• The hockey playoffs began last weekend. One team was beating another team something to something in the best of seven series. Best of seven first round? Hockey. Crazy.

• Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on Larry.

Marean, softball streaking

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Good hitters know when they're in a groove. Good hitters also know that grooves and streaks don't last forever. Or do they?

In this, her second and final season at the University of Massachusetts, Barbara Marean is already climbing the list of the school's softball hitting records.

The Minutewomen (21-8, 12-0 A-10) travel to New Britain today to face Central Connecticut University in a double-header at 3 p.m.

Against Rutgers this past Monday, Marean set the NCAA record for consecutive game hitting streak when she hit in her 25th straight contest. She extended the streak to 26 in the second game of the double-header. In both games she had to wait until her last at-bat to continue the streak.

Minutemen win sixth straight, 8-2

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

You know things are going right for the UMass baseball team when the temperature at Lorden Field hits 50 degrees, the team hits two home runs, gets a complete game from its fifth starter and coach Mike Stone is happy with it all.

Such was the case yesterday as the University of Massachusetts men won their sixth in a row and their 13th of 15 over Central Connecticut, 8-2.

Greg Dowd (2-0) threw seven strikeouts in his first-ever complete game and the offense got started early with the help of catcher Jeff January. January had a homer and 4 RBI for the Minutemen, who improved their record to 19-11.

"I don't have a Ron Villone-type slider," said Dowd, referring to the team's ace. "But it was working good today, and my change was too."

Dowd walked two with two outs in the first, but struck out Kevin Farquhar and never looked back. Meanwhile, the offense had the inning that they would need for the victory.

Blue Devil starter Todd Martin (0-3) nailed leadoff batter Greg LaRocca, which foretold the rest of the game. Justin Howard followed with a single, and John Carelli and Steve Corradi ripped RBI singles, driving in LaRocca and Howard.

Carelli was thrown out on the bases, but Corradi stole second and third and scored on January's fielder's choice to give UMass a 3-0 lead. The whole Minutemen order batted in the first, and when Keith Richards scored on Joe Mattivello's double, Central Conn. gave Martin the hook and brought in Dan Trudeau. At the end of the first, UMass had a nifty 4-0 lead.

Dowd did his part during the middle innings, forcing the Blue Devils to ground out. Mattivello had seven assists at third base, which was indicative that Dowd was on his game. The Minutemen put things away in the third, more or less.

January led off with a monstrous, towering home run that left fielder Scott Colletti didn't even try to chase. One out later, Bill Knight followed with his shot, a 370-foot round tripper over the scoreboard in left center field.

The Minutemen added two more in the fourth when January's 2-run single drove in John Carelli and Steve Corradi, who reached on the dreaded base-on-balls. Blue Devils pitchers walked 10 UMass hitters in the game.

Dowd surrendered a homer to center fielder Jason Brucker (who was 3 for 4) in the eighth and allowed another run in the ninth before completing the game. Stone said he wasn't about to take Dowd out.

Game Notes: The Minutemen put their six-game winning streak on the line against Dartmouth today at Lorden Field at 3 p.m.

Ex-Minuteman hits the show

DiSarcina gets starting nod with California Angels

By CHRIS CUDDY
and MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Growing up, most kids dream about pulling on a big league uniform and roaming the infield at Fenway Park.

For most, the dream soon dies, and the closest they get to seeing Fenway up close is by buying a box seat.

However, for one former UMass star the dream is about to become a reality, for when the California Angels come to town on May 15, Gary DiSarcina will realize that dream.

In 1988, DiSarcina, a Billerica native who graced the infield for three seasons at UMass under coaches Dick Bergquist and Mike Stone (1986-88), traded in the maroon and white of the Minutemen for the red, white and blue of the California Angels, and three short years later finds himself as the halos' starting shortstop.

Former UMass shortstop Gary DiSarcina is shining with the California Angels. DiSarcina, who won the starting job this spring, is hitting .343, good for tenth in the American League.

"It [playing at Fenway] seems like a year away," DiSarcina said. "It's hard to put into words what I will feel when I step on that field in a big league uniform, but it will probably be the highlight of my career."

Until that day though, DiSarcina must focus on the obvious, staying with the big club for the entire year.

As of yet, Gary is doing just that, hitting at a .343 clip (good enough for tenth in the league) while holding his own on the youthful Angels.

"The competition here is intense and ongoing," DiSarcina said. "I may have won the job, but it's hard to sit on top of the heap while people are trying to knock you off."

On top of the heap is exactly where DiSarcina was at UMass, as Gary was a three year starter for the Minutemen. He earned a spot in five different categories in the UMass record books.

"We always thought Gary had great potential," former UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "And I always thought he could be drafted."

DiSarcina was known for his strong arm, quick bat and all-around intensity at UMass, where he compiled a season record 74 hits in 1988, while also leading the team with a .366 batting average.

After the 1988 season, DiSarcina was drafted in the sixth round by the Angels and, acting on the advice of UMass coach Mike Stone, signed a minor league contract.

"Gary was always a good competitor, and he had a smooth, strong line drive arm," Stone said. "I thought that at times he was a little too aggressive and that he needed to let some setbacks roll off him, and I think he adjusted well."

DiSarcina looks back on his three years at UMass as nothing but a positive experience, and feels without them, he could never be where he is today.

"Playing at UMass was the best three years of my life because I had some of the greatest teammates anyone could ask for on a baseball team.

"UMass was the first place where I realized I had some talent in the sport of baseball," DiSarcina said. "If I had it to do all over again, I wouldn't do it any different."

DiSarcina majored in history while at UMass, and although his travels keep him from following UMass baseball, DiSarcina claimed to be the basketball team's rowdiest fan at the Angels' Palm Springs, Calif., spring training site.

Gary isn't the only budding baseball star in the DiSarcina family, as brother Glen, also a former UMass star, currently plays in the Chicago White Sox farm system, also as an infielder.

It appears for now that DiSarcina will keep the starting job for the Angels, as an unhappy Dick Schofield was recently traded to the New York Mets, and the Angels appear committed to their recent youth movement.

For Gary DiSarcina that means things can only get better, and if he continues hitting like he is, could follow in fellow
Billerica native Tom Glavine's footsteps as the next major league superstar.

Scott's shots

With weather like yesterday's, who needs classes?

• Word on the street is that everyone is running scared from "Scott's Hot Shots," my entrant in Saturday's Haigis Hoopla II. The boys have been going through rigorous three-a-days. Bloody Marys in the morning, beer in the afternoon and Kamikazes at night.

Tamir "Get that junk outta here" Lipton is looking more and more like John Stockton with each pass, Kevin "The shot killer" Müller has increased his vertical leap five inches in the past week and Greg Alexander "The Greatest" could very well possess the most deadly jumper in the Pioneer Valley.

As owner and manager of this "Terrifying Triumvirate" I've been consulting with illustrious World Wrestling Federation managers for pointers.

"Do you have a cane?" asked Classy Freddy Blassy. "Smash those pencil-necked geeks across the knees with a cane."

• I ran the Boston Marathon on Monday, no that's a lie, I watched the Boston Marathon but I was pretty damn tired after it anyway. I certainly have a new-found respect for the runners, not so much the Husseins and the Markovas, but rather for the guys and gals who had "Cheer for Earl," or "Here comes Alice" written on their shirts.

These are a hardy bunch who drew inspiration not from the lure of $60,000 but from the satisfaction of saying, "I finished Boston." As I sat eating greasy pizza, cheering for Earl and Alice, I actually felt intertwined with their cause.

• CBS has announced a new prime time show to replace "Northern Exposure," called "Calipari's Exposure." Coach Cal had his face, and let's not forget his tie, showcased at halftime of the McDonald's High School All-American game. The guy is a natural for the TV camera; he's funny and articulate and he talks the talk.

Cal's star recruit Donta Bright was not very impressive in the game, but a glimpse of his baseline jumper and his will to muscle underneath are reasons for hope.

• Jerry Tarkanian and the San Antonio Running Rebels will be world champs within three years. You've got to believe Tark took a big pay cut, but at least he won't have to answer to any more rules committees.

GEO blasts proposed benefits policy

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Employee Organization yesterday accused the University administration of violating the recently agreed-upon GEO contract in a press conference.

GEO speaker Mary Jo Connelly accused the administration and department deans of implementing a "head tax" for TA health benefits which will both reduce the positions available and waivers for graduate students which Connelly sees as a violation of the new contract.

"It's a question of a very immediate threat to jobs and education for graduate employees," Connelly said. "This has a direct impact on the quality of education available to UMass undergraduate students."

Connelly's accusation concerns a $400 to $500 health benefit fee that departments may have to pay out of their budgets for each TA they employ.

Presently TA benefits are taken out of a the total school budget, which Connelly said she believes works well and sees the proposed plan as a method to encourage TA cutbacks.

"The $400-$500 dollars is creating incentive for department chairs to administer fewer half and quarter teaching assistantships in order to avoid paying the head tax more times than necessary," Connelly said.

Citing next year's four percent tuition increase, Connelly added she believed the administration is "double-charging" students because graduate student's benefits were used as rationale by the administration for the increase.

The GEO, in a press release, attacked the administration and its methods.

"The administration is collecting funds that would pay for our waivers many times over... Now the administration is taking the full cost out of our jobs and raising tuition and fees, all in the name of GEO," the statement said.

Susan Pearson, associate chancellor and chief negotiator for the administration, said the negotiators for GEO last year knew this could happen and it should not be a surprise to them.

Pearson added that no final administrative decision has been made regarding the source of the estimated $1 million needed to pay for graduate students health waivers.

"The waivers will cost the campus $1 million — no matter where it comes from it will still mean fewer TAs," Pearson said.

Connelly stated that the GEO is estimating that 400 to 500 TA jobs will be eliminated.

Pearson said those estimates were "ridiculously high" but she also added that there would be a reduced amount of TAs next semester.

"Departments with larger TA staffs will have to pay more out of their budget or make cuts in that staff," Pearson said. "Some departments may cut some part-time TAs because they are given the same full health waver as full time TAs."

Connelly also said she had documented evidence that deans were instructing department heads to cut TA staff even though Provost Glen Gordon has said no such orders have been given by his office.

Pearson also added that the contract was not violated because no promises were made concerning how the money for health benefits were to be collected, and that if a violation of the contract had occurred the union would have filed a grievance.

Connelly said GEO members haven't ruled out filing a grievance, but added that she hopes the administration changes its current plans.

200 arrested in attempt to close abortion clinic

By DAVID GERMAIN
Associated Press

AMHERST, N.Y. — Police arrested nearly 200 abortion opponents who charged a women's clinic Wednesday in a melee that was in sharp contrast to the staid abortion arguments being presented before the U.S Supreme Court.

Anti-abortion demonstrators surged onto a four-lane highway, and tried to rush past police barricades and a crowd of about 150 abortion rights activists stationed in front of the suburban Buffalo clinic.

The arrests occurred on the suburban Buffalo area by Operation Rescue. At the same time, the Supreme Court was hearing arguments on an abortion case from Pennsylvania.

Several hundred demonstrators also waved placards and chanted outside the Supreme Court in Washington, D.C..

In Buffalo, the Rev. Robert Schenck, an abortion protest organizer from suburban Tonawanda, said the demonstration had not been timed to coincide with the Supreme Court arguments.

Protesters went limp and were carried or dragged by police through the crowd of abortion-rights demonstrators to buses. Police bound protesters' wrists with handcuffs.

Police also used the handcuffs to bind the feet of the Rev. John Hunter, an anti-abortion leader from nearby Lockport, after he broke through the line of abortion-rights activists and dashed toward the clinic door.

Some of those arrested lay handcuffed in the street for 30 minutes as demonstrators on both sides taunted one another from opposite sides of the road. Police blocked traffic on the highway and about 100 officers tried to keep the two sides separated.

A bus in which some Operation Rescue demonstrators had arrived was towed away from the front of the clinic.

Abortion-rights activists chanted "God is a woman, and she's pro-choice!" They mocked abortion opponents by shouting, "A baby a year until you drop!"

Anti-abortion demonstrators prayed and sang hymns, holding signs such as "A Baby Is a Person, No Matter How Small," and a poster showing a baby in the womb with the caption, "Mommy, Please Go Home, I Want To Live."

"We have some very courageous and conscientious protesters, said Amherst Town Justice Sam Maislin.

Four members of the media and one abortion-rights demonstrator also were arrested. The latter, an unidentified woman, was handcuffed and taken away after she crossed the street to approach two people leaving the doctor's office who'd been confronted by reporters and anti-abortion demonstrators.

"Operation Rescue thinks it's a success every time they throw themselves in the street and get arrested," said Susan Ferron, an abortion-rights activist from New Orleans.

Tsongas' medical past at issue

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Former presidential candidate Paul Tsongas instructed his doctors Wednesday to release his medical records to an independent review panel in the wake of admissions by the doctors they did not disclose his cancer once recurred.

Tsongas also said in a statement he would submit outside medical testing because he plans "to be active in political affairs in the future and needs to give the public the assurance it deserves."

The first presidential candidate to campaign as a cancer survivor, Tsongas invited the world to peer into his medical history in an unprecedented way. He campaigned on pronouncements he had been cancer free since a radical bone marrow transplant in August 1986.

Drs. Tak Takvorian and George Canellos confirmed Wednesday that a cancerous lump was found under Tsongas' arm about nine months after the transplant.

Tsongas, who was told about the lump and treated for it with radiation in the spring of 1987, said repeatedly in the campaign that he had been cancer-free since the transplant.

The physicians, both experts at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, said they either forgot about the relapse or didn't find it significant enough to mention in exhaustive interviews over the past year.

Tsongas, 51, said Wednesday that his doctors never concluded the lump was cancerous.

"It was a small node. They took it out and gave me radiation. That was the end of it," he told The Sun of Lowell Wednesday morning.

"Obviously, the matter of the 1987 node does not, five years later, change the state of my health but it does raise the question about what is contained in the medical data," the statement, released late Wednesday, said.

Takvorian, who said he made it clear to Tsongas that the lump was cancerous, was surprised that his patient did not recall that conversation.

"Time may have blotted that out," Takvorian speculated.

The discovery, first reported in U.S. News and World Report March 16, seems to contradict Tsongas' campaign claims. He counted the days from his diagnosis and declared often, as he did in a May 1991 interview with the Associated Press: "Today is seven months and eight years to the day."

UM employee sponsors benefit concert

By AMY PRENDERGAST

One-year-old Danny Colbert and his family are still waiting to find a matching bone marrow donor. And with the help of University employee Jody McKay and seven local bands, their wait could soon be over.

Colbert has a rare form of leukemia which could end his life if he does not receive a bone marrow transplant soon. His brother Paul, who is a sophomore CASIAC major, has spent the past semester raising money and trying to find a donor for his brother.

McKay, who works for Financial Aid Services, has organized a benefit concert for Danny to be held on May 3 in the Student Union Ballroom beginning at 11 a.m.

"After I read the story about Danny in the Collegian, I couldn't sleep knowing I had the power to help because of the bands I knew," said McKay.

McKay, who has a 17-month-old baby of her own, said because she was in the "band scene" for over 10 years she has gained access to many rock bands.

McKay has booked seven bands to participate in the concert, and they are all performing free of charge. The tribute band Physical Graffiti, billed as the "the ultimate Led Zeppelin experience," is scheduled to play.

Other bands include the AC/DC tribute band Back In Black, Shy Romeo, Pain Killer, Live Eagle, Operation Mind Crime and a local UMass band, Final Notice.

Although Danny's condition is "excellent," Colbert said his brother is traveling to Minnesota next week to have a transplant with or without an exact donor match, "because time is running out."

"I'd like to thank Jody McKay for all of her efforts. None of this would have been possible without her," said Colbert.

The Graduate Employee Organization and the Union Program Council are sponsoring the concert. Tickets will go on sale Monday and will also be available at the door. The $5 charge for tickets will go toward the cost of the donor testing, which is $60 per test.

Donations for Danny can be mailed to Paul Colbert, who lives in room 1002 of Kennedy Residence Hall.

Holocaust survivor seeks to tell truth

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Two white figurines stood on the table next to the podium where Stephan Ross spoke from last night — one of a rabbit, the other of a deer.

In any other context, these statuettes would appear to be made from china or glass, but Ross, a Holocaust survivor, told a room of 100 people at the University of Massachusetts the figurines were made from crushed human bone.

"The figurines were given to me when I was liberated from Dachau," he said. He said they were made by a prisoner in the camps, and noted the insignia of Hitler's guard on the bottom.

Ross, 60, a psychologist who survived incarceration at 10 Nazi concentration camps, said what he experienced as a 9-year-old child in Poland was inexplicable.

"I thought many times that I was born at the wrong time, in the wrong place," he said. "I wished I was never born."

Ross said it is impossible to relate what happened to him, saying the gamut of emotions he experienced was incomprehensible.

"The pain, anguish, humiliation, thirst, hunger and starvation — it is impossible to relate this to you," he said.

He said he believed the Holocaust was an unparalleled tragedy, and called those who inflicted the experiments and exterminations "ghoulish."

"Childrens' skin was used for lampshades, wallets, umbrellas," Ross said. "The ashes from the human bodies were used on walks and streets to walk on. These ashes were also taken away by trucks to be spread on fields."

"I know this," he said, "because I was there. I hope I can live longer to spread the truth."

Ross said when people entered the camps, they were tattooed like cattle, but "treated like cockroaches. Men were castrated and women and children were experimented on. When they left the barracks to be experimented on, they never came back."

"I cannot forgive or forget," he said, "because I was exposed to this."

"It isn't easy to come here and speak. It's not for pity. Thanks to those who brought me to the United States and gave me the opportunity to make something out of myself, I give back something of myself," Ross said, referring to his job in delinquency prevention with the City of Boston, where he works with gang members.

Ross said he was discovered at age 9, after his parents had given him to a Polish Christian family who were members of the Polish underground. The family taught him to say Christian prayers, and sent him to work in a German military fort, where he washed soldiers' boots.

"But, they knew something was wrong," he said. "I was eight years old <- they wanted me to spy. What could I do? They said words in Polish and I crossed myself. But they pulled down my pants. They beat me so much it was a miracle I was still alive."

Ross said he was then transported to the first of the camps, where he met up with his brother, who was 20 years older than he was.

He said he avoided the "selection" for the crematorium many times, once by hiding in the refuse in the outhouse; another time by hiding on the bottom of one of the cattle cars used as a transport to bring prisoners to the concentration camps.

Ross said he was liberated in April 1945 when he was 14, and said he believed the United States is the greatest nation in the world.

"After I was liberated, my brother, his friend and I were on the road to Munich. We saw an American soldier on a tank eating food from a can. He looked at me, and gave me the can. I ate some, fell at his feet, kissed his boots and cried," Ross said.

"He gave me a handkerchief, which I learned later was an American flag. I kept this for 47 years. This is pride, dignity, heritage and freedom. It is mine as well," he said.

20/20 Vision urges student involvement

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

With a minimal amount of effort, students can become involved in influencing the making of public policy in the United States, according to the founder of a local organization seeking to encourage active participation in government.

The organization 20/20 Vision will sponsor a free concert at the Hatch tonight at 8:30 p.m., under the condition that each person who attends writes a postcard to a U.S. policy maker, according to 20/20 founder Debbie Krueger.

The chapter started here last semester at UMass is modeled on the national organization 20/20 Vision.

The name 20/20 Vision mirrors the group's goal: By spending 20 minutes a month contacting those in government, and paying two dollars ($20 for the national group) a year, one will be able to see their vision of an active government for the common person taking place.

"You will be able to choose from three issues," said Krueger. "We will, also, give you all the information, so that you can make an informed choice."

Participants can write a quick note to President Bush urging him to attend or at least send a delegate to the Earth Summit Conference in Brazil. This conference will focus on reducing carbon dioxide emissions, which contribute to global warming.

Other environmental issues will be touched upon during the meeting, according to Krueger.

Another choice is to ask legislators to create jobs by transferring spending from the military to civilian investments, according to Krueger.

According to 20/20 Vision, for every billion dollars taken out of military spending and added to domestic interests, about 6,800 jobs will be created.

Finally, one can write to Congress to urge them to stop the funding for the Strategic Defense Initiative.

"The arms race costs the average U.S. wage earner one day's wages every two weeks," said senior math major Stephen Phillip.

"20/20 Vision wants to provide a chance for busy people to actively engage in the democratic process," said Krueger.

Krueger said 20/20 Vision wants people to not only become more aware of the issues, but would also like to see more involvement in the legislative process.

"It should be a common thing to have a close relationship with your senator and representative," said Krueger.

The national organization of 20/20 Vision was founded in Amherst by Lois Barber.

Campus celebrates Earth Day

Participants say event heightens support for planet

By MICHELLE ROBBINS

Mother Nature's persistent rains tried to cast a damper on the celebration of Earth Day yesterday, but participants' enthusiastic support of the environment foiled her attempts, said several Earth Day participators.

"The celebration of Earth Day developed a sense of community and togetherness among people which heightened their feelings of compassion toward the Earth," said Carol Narbis, who is a member of MassPIRG.

Earth Day, she said, would have been a success even if only one person of the estimated 500 to 600 people who attended Earth Day came to celebrate it.

"By reaching one person and making him or her aware of what different things he or she can do for the Earth means the Earth activists have accomplished their goal," said Narbis, who helped raise over $100 for the tropical rainforest cause by selling donated baked goods.

Aric Harkins, a volunteer for the Massachusetts Audobon Society, said there was lots of energy and enthusiasm during Earth Day. "I want to keep the Earth healthy so life can survive and thrive," he said.

A diverse range of people who came to Earth Day, said James Kilcoyne, a co-partner of the Progressive Resource Service which aims to expose college students to political issues. "There were people here that were both casually and deeply involved in environmental issues," he said.

"The human race must cease its destructive behavior of the Earth in order to save it," said Katya Koes, a canvasser for Greenpeace, an organization which protects the environment by trying educate people about environmental issues.

More people, she said, have signed up to write letters to their senators about environmental issues than she anticipated. "Earth Day was definitely a success," Koes said.

Carrie Desmarais, a sophomore wildlife management major, said Earth Day helped people understand the Earth's environmental problems and got them involved in different causes for the Earth. "I went outside this morning and shouted 'Happy Earth Day' and hugged a tree," she said.

SGA members anticipate budget battle

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

The proposed Student Government Association budget for fiscal year 1993 is expected to cause friction between the SGA and the University administration, according to the Chairperson of the SGA Budgets Committee.

Budgets Chair Rob Witherell said he believes the total proposed budget of $2,107,635 has "a decent chance" of approval at the next Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, but he isn't as optimistic about it receiving the approval of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jo-anne T. Vanin and other administrators.

"If the Senate passes the budget as is, there will be a battle with the administration throughout the summer to get it implemented," Witherell said. "My sense is that [Director of Student Activities] Edward Korza is going to recommend against approving the budget."

Witherell will hold a public budget hearing tonight at 7 p.m. in room 162 of the Campus Center, and said he encourages all undergraduates to attend, listen to his budget presentation and ask questions.

"With this budget, students get to determine where fees are allocated," he said. "It's all a question of priorities."

Witherell said conflict has arisen over two issues. The Budgets Committee wants to allocate $53,000 to the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy to fund a director's position. He also said the committee is recommending the cessation of funding for the position of SAO Associate Director.

Witherell said both proposals are opposed by several administration officials, including Korza, Vanin and SAO Business Manager Allen Brainerd.

Witherell called SCERA a "device for students to use to mobilize against budget cuts, to lobby at the State

Big names, big scandals

William Kennedy Smith, Clarence Thomas, Mike Tyson. Big names, big scandals. Despite the crimes they were accused of, they still remain prominent men in America. These "great men," charged with emotional and physical harm against women, are still the apple of the public's eye. One even sits on the highest court in the nation, with the power to make laws for and against women.

E.C. Thomas

And the accusers? They are forgotten as the media spotlight shifts onto another "great" hero. What some people don't seem to realize is that it's not the Tysons or the Kennedys in this world that are the heroes, but the women that have the courage to stand up to them and and fight for their rights and justice. They went forward, disregarding the accused's fame, fortune or reputation. They went forward with a message of anti-submissiveness and anti-oppression for all women.

These women not only stood up to these heroes, but also to the American public. They spoke out with bravado and valor, all the while knowing that they would become the focus of media attention and public criticism. The argument often used against these women is that they merely went forward for the glitz and glory of this media attention. They went forward for the money. Yet Tyson's accuser turned down one million dollars to drop the charges she had made against him. That's an awful lot of money to turn down, especially if money was the purpose for one's accusation. That's also a lot of money to offer someone who is supposedly lying. These women had their past and present lives dragged through the mud of the media circus. Their personal characters were attacked by people who didn't even know them. They were judged by people they knew as well as strangers. They sacrificed their private lives to fight for what they believed was right. Loss of friends and attacks from the public are a large sacrifice to make for only a price tag.

One in three women will be raped during her lifetime. Andrea Parrot, a lecturer at Cornell University, estimates that 20 percent of college women at two campuses she surveyed had been raped during their college years or before, and most of these incidents were date rapes. In a three-year study of 6,200 male and female students on 32 campuses, Mary Koss, a Kent State psychologist, found that 73 percent of the women forced into sex avoided using the term rape to describe their experiences and only five percent reported the incident to police.

In a 1980 report at UCLA, half the male students admitted that there could be some circumstances under which they would force a woman to commit a sexual act if they were sure of not being punished. In a similar study conducted at several colleges, 35 percent of surveyed college men agreed. According to the FBI, forcible rape is one of the fastest growing violent crimes committed in the U.S. and most of the rapes that occur, especially when concerning date rape, go unreported — and the rapist unpunished.

It takes great stamina and confidence to stand up for what one believes in. It also takes determination and boldness to endure what the above women did. Why they aren't seen as heroes is an injustice in itself. Their perseverance deserves a great deal of respect, for they have laid down the pavement for hundreds of women in their fight against oppression and violence (the recent rape allegations by a woman against three N.Y. Mets players is a case in point — she stated that she came forward because she saw that Tyson had been convicted). These women serve as a symbol of anti-submissiveness and strength for women everywhere. These women took a step forward not just for themselves, but for the women's race.

Assembly works to unite

On March 28, I attended an all-day national strategy meeting in Baltimore. Sponsored by the Maryland Coalition to Overturn Budget Cuts, the meeting's focus was on ways for workers, activists and oppressed people to effectively fight back against the all-out economic war waged by the ruling elite in this country. People from 26 states were there, including militant trade unionists, environmentalists, gay, lesbian and bisexual activists, state and welfare workers and activists from anti-racism, reproductive rights, housing and anti-war groups. These people, many of them poor, some of whom drove two days or more to attend the meeting, are motivated by a common bond — outrage at what is happening in the U.S. and the knowledge that seemingly separate attacks on various human rights issues are all part of one large onslaught by the government, multinational corporations, big banks and the Pentagon.

Kevin J. Smith

The brainchild of the meeting was a People's Assembly. The Assembly's premise is that the only language that oppressive governments and rich parasites truly understand is a well-coordinated mass movement against them and the illegitimacy they represent. Its strategy entails regional assemblies in conjunction with a national outreach committee. This strategy, mind you, is more than speculation; the committees were already formed before the day's end, and began work immediately upon leaving. The Assembly's driving force is the reality that isolated we remain ineffectual, but united we have the capacity to make history.

Residents and students in Amherst remain relatively shielded from the most grotesque abuses currently being inflicted by our system — racist attacks by city police forces whose only function is to protect the wealthy bankers and property owners; 50 million-plus people at or near poverty level; 37 million people with no health care, many others in serious jeopardy of losing theirs; and abominable infant mortality rate; layoffs of hundreds of thousands of workers weekly; rampant homelessness; more incarcerations per capita than any other country in the world, with inordinate percentages of Black and Latino prisoners and new jails being built every day. America is neither the land of the free or the land of opportunity. It is an odious empire rapidly falling apart at the seams. But in spite of the decay, the richest U.S. families aren't feeling the pinch. In fact, they're finding all this chaos quite profitable.

Even in Amherst, though, we are witness to one striking reflection of the attack by corporate America upon its citizens — the University of Massachusetts. For those of you who haven't noticed, UMass is being transformed into a school for the privileged at lightning speed. As a library employee, I'm watching a once-respectable facility being pilfered of its acquisitions budget, and hence, its utility as a liberal arts research library. Here, as at state colleges and universities nationwide, all departments and appurtenances considered unmarketable are being killed.

Many students, understandably, are scrambling along and just trying to graduate before things get even worse at UMass. I only ask that such students consider what they really have to anticipate after they receive their diplomas. Despite all the milk-and-honey rhetoric being doled out by government economists and the corporate media, we are in the midst of an unprecedented worldwide economic crisis. Even for those fortunate enough to land a decent job, the cycles of production-for-profit dictate that crises invariably occur, each one bringing with it more deprivation and misery than its predecessor. And all the while, food rots in warehouses, machinery sits idle, and innocent people are deprived of life's basic necessities.

We happen to be alive during a very important time. Capitalism is a doomed species, yet like a wounded animal, it has the proclivity to wreak incredible havoc in its frantic struggle for self-preservation. The People's Assembly has been formed to see that this does not occur any longer, and that a truly useful social structure is available to begin another epoch in history.

Kevin J. Smith is a member of the Tower Library staff.

Press makes our decisions for us

I would like to bring your attention to something the national press is responsible for — divulging the private lives of the presidential candidates in hopes of swaying views of potential voters. A prime example of this is the treatment Clinton is getting. His divorce is all over the newspapers, and so is the fact that he smoked some pot in college.

There has been far too much power given to the press for it to be able to dig up smut on people's lives, regardless of the issues of the campaign. The press trashes people that they can get trash on, an sometimes it's not based on the truth. The public is not given the chance to make up its own mind, because the press has already made up their minds for them. If the press gave less attention to the personal lives of the candidates they don't like, then the campaign would be more of a fare one.

Patricia Dorris MacNamara

Gays need a federal law

It's tough leaving one's home to start life over somewhere else. Lesbians and gays have to do this all the time. It's important for people to understand why so many of us find it necessary to leave our homes and families to make new beginnings.

When I came out during my junior year at a small state college in Kansas, most of my friends and professors quickly distanced themselves. My roommate read Bible passages aloud and told me lesbians were sick, violent people. Then she ended our friendship.

Trystan Skeigh

My school's student code of conduct said homosexual conduct was lewd and unacceptable. Because I had been popular and the news spread quickly, I realized I risked being expelled.

Other closeted lesbians at the University felt threatened because I openly acknowledged my lesbianism. One of them, afraid her friendship with me would jeopardize her graduate assistantship, cut off contact to protect herself.

I needed to find a happy lesbian community where I could live and be safe. But I lost hope of finding one in Kansas. The two gay bars I drove 75 miles to find were tiny and dark with unlit doors facing the street. To get in I had to show a driver's license to a doorkeeper who kept a log of names and license numbers.

Within these crowded, smoky pits the atmosphere was tense. During introductions people never said their last names or where they worked. I quickly learned never to ask. As glasses emptied and tongues loosened pain often rose to the surface. Lesbians I befriended told me they had attempted suicide — one black-leather butch even showed me a row of five different scars. When I asked one young lesbian why, she said "Because my family said I'm going to hell and kicked me out. I guess they're right."

So I got out. I had heard about Northampton from some lesbians I met in a peace march, and I decided to fly East, partially to check out the peace movement, and because the Pioneer Valley sounded like a safe place for lesbians coming out.

Over the past seven years I've managed to make a home for myself within the community here. Through studying and being with lesbian feminists, I've learned a new language of self-love that helps me combat the homophobic inner voices that still crop up from my memories sometimes when I'm feeling insecure. You can take the dyke out of Kansas, but it's not so easy taking Kansas out of the dyke. . .

Recently I flew home to visit my family. I discovered Kansas hasn't changed much since I left. Initially delighted by the news that a lesbian couple now lived in my parent's town, my stomach turned sour as friends told me how these two young women have been evicted several times, how one has been fired and the other can't get a job "because she looks too much like a dyke."

Kansas is one of 44 states without civil rights protection for lesbians and gays. It is one of several Bible Belt states aggressively homophobic in its law enforcement, conducting undercover "stings" in parks and nightclubs, publicly humiliating those apprehended for "lewd and lascivious acts," often destroying their careers and forcing them to flee the area.

Until Congress passes a rigorously enforced federal civil rights law, lesbians and gays will continue to be forced to live as fugitives, hiding in dark corners like guilty drinkers during prohibition, or as lonely exiles far from home. In a nation supposedly committed to equal rights for all, it is hard to understand why the same hateful forces responsible for the pink and black triangles in the Nazi death camps still exist.

Welcome to the People's Republic of Amherst, B.Y.O.B.

You get off the Turnpike at exit 8 and start taking the back roads to UMass. You get to look at some prototypical Western Massachusetts towns. You cruise by empty office space in Palmer and closed down mills in Thorndike. Every quarter mile or so there is a house with a For Sale sign on it. Belchertown brings a dirty looking river, Pelham has overgrown farm land.

The recession has hit this area of the world hard. High unemployment, low morale. These towns would do anything for a big business to call their community home, something to employ their people, bring pride to their citizens and put them on the map.

Something like the University of Massachusetts.

You pull into Amherst and see nice restaurant, bed and breakfasts, bars and every type of store possible. You see 20-year-olds begging landlords for an overpriced lease, you see their parents throwing money around at the uptown shops.

You see a free bus system taking residents safely around their community. You see a banner congratulating a championship basketball team for entertaining the citizens all winter. You see a brand-new, million dollar police station and modern and clean school facilities.

No empty offices, no closed mills. Just affluence. What could have given this community a reprieve from the depression of its neighbors?

Something like the University of Massachusetts.

Amherst without UMass students? Welcome to Thorndike.

You pick up the local paper and read about how the residents of Amherst treat their valuable guests. The locals say the students are ruining their town. Too much noise, too much litter, too much drinking, too many students.

Welcome to the People's Republic of Amherst, a community which can boast of having an equal number of living Civil War veterans as residents with even an iota of common sense. The average I.Q. can not be much higher than room temperature. Let's take a look at a few of Amherts finest, all I.Q.s are favorable estimates.

Dan Wetzel

Margot Parrot (I.Q. 67) — a top notch super-sleuth, who was intelligent enough to figure out that some UMass students like to occasionally enter those strange buildings uptown with neon Budweiser signs glowing in the window. But that is not all. The inspector also detected that on some nights so many people enter these strange places that they get crowded, and when patrons leave they sometimes smell like alcohol. According to Parrot, this is bad and it must be stopped.

Congratulations Margot. Your ability to figure out these puzzles of modern society is uncanny. Proceed to the fourth grade.

I guess Ms. Parrot did not realize that these uptown "speakeasies" actually charge for each drink. And guess what? Not only does Amherst collect taxes on these business but they are owned and managed by residents. That's right, these dens of sin are actually the sources of some residents income.

The Amherst Select Board (Average I.Q. 76) — a group who figured the best way to stop student drinking was to implement a keg licensing law in Amherst. Their midget minds figured that less kegs would result in less student drinking. Even the Hazard County Select Board, consisting of Beau, Luke, Uncle Jesse, Boss Hog and Flash the Dog, could not have been this stupid.

First off, now when a student wants to buy a keg they will just go to Hadley to do so. This will cost the Amherst package stores much-needed business and cost the town in lost revenues. A pretty interesting fiscal plan during a recession, indeed.

Secondly, less kegs equals more Jello-shots and punch bowls. When you consume alcohol from one of these two sources you can not tell how much you are drinking. The chances of a student becoming intoxicated without wanting to be increases drastically. Public intoxication will increase, not decrease. Select Board back to the second grade, you did not think your solution through, you pinheads.

The Amherst Peace and Quiet Commision (Average I.Q. 72) — a board made up of "concerned" residents, whose plans include closing the bars in Amherst at 11 p.m., a full three hours earlier than in the City of Boston. Their reasoning must be that if the bars close at 11 then the students will be home, tucked into bed with a story read to them, by 11:30.

Another prime example of Amherst logic. If the bars close at 11, then everyone who is at the bar will head out to afterhour parties which will start at 11:05. They will get there by driving their cars. Thus the noise problem will move from uptown to residential neighborhoods and drunk driving will increase, just what you wanted — right, guys. This group may be stupider than the selectboard; back to the first grade you idiots.

The citizens of this town are too stupid to appreciate what they have. Amherst would be nothing without UMass, but townspeople must have smoked a little too much pot in the 60s to figure this out. The more I hear Amherst residents express their intelligence, the more I wish I went to the Univerisity of Massachusetts at Thorndike.

Cynical outdoorsman muses about Earth Day

I don't know about anyone else, but I'm flattered by the amount of attention that the reputable members of the national media have been paying to the Valley recently. I found it interesting that the National Enquirer's expose on NoHo was more factually accurate, though probably less valuable as a social critique, than Esquire's portrayal of Southwest, which incorrectly identified the Grad Tower as JFK. Between the "10,000 cuddling, kissing lesbians" described by the Enquirer, and the 1,500 or so "hyperactive kids" in Southwest, you can ask the locals which make better neighbors.

Josh Reynolds

As a celebration of our running out of ozone, lumber, rainforests, non-edible non-domesticated species, fossil fuels, clean places to dirty and time to deal with the whole mess, perhaps a more appropriate name would be "Dearth Day."

Since the first Earth Day, 22 years ago, the seriousness of popular environmental concerns have escalated a few degrees (no pun intended). Back then, they were worried about saving the whales — now people are wondering if it's already too late to prevent the coastlines from flooding as the polar caps melting like the ice cubes in a drink on the patio. Considering our response time to the threat to the ozone (we've known about it since the mid-'70s) and the meager turnout that yesterday's events earned here, I can't say that I'm optimistic.

By the time world leaders with economic growth(s) on (or in) their minds ban the production of freon, there will be enough of the stuff leaking out of old refrigerators to make sunbathers look like pot roasts reheated in the microwave.

Unfortunately, holding sing-alongs, eating Ben and Jerry's and playing hackeysack by the campus pond aren't going to change things. Town recycling efforts help, but in the big picture, they're on a pretty small scale.

With every corporation from McDonald's to Union Carbide paying lip-service to environmental concerns, "Shopping Green" is of dubious value. I've seen plenty of lists of "bad" companies, but for a lot of products that the majority of people are just not willing to go without, you'd be hard-pressed to find a list of "good" companies (is that an oxymoron?). Disposable batteries, diapers or lightbulbs just aren't very green, no matter who makes them.

Our government's fight against the environment has been more successful than it's war on drugs, more conclusive than its campaign against Iraq and is legally more sound than its occupation/kidnapping operation in Panama. Reagan and Bush's secret domestic war against environmental groups such as Earth First! is reminiscent of the manhunts conducted against the Black Panthers at the end of the sixties.

But when it comes right down to it, you have to remember that these guys were popularly elected. Did anyone really think that a Texas oilman and member of the Reagan administration wanted to be the environmental president? You'll notice that the energy policy and environmental concerns get second billing to character slander and vague talk about the economy. People who are unemployed or threatened with unemployment are more concerned with saving their jobs than spotted owls, or the prospect of wearing stronger sunscreen.

Somebody remind me not to get talking politics again. I can just get carried away. Sometimes I get nightmares about beating Nancy Reagan with a rubber hose until she confesses to cheating on her taxes (that's legal now, you know). Or seizing all of Dan Quayle's property under suspicion that he once bought marijuana. Or car bombing the Supreme Court. . . I wake up laughing maniacally.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

My first rendition of "Notes." I feel so honored. For starters, the terminal at which I am typing is awful and I can barely make out the words. So if there is anything in this column that is unclear to you, it's not my fault.

What's a Hoopla? Haigis Hoopla is coming up and I am one of the lucky twenty who has been working day and night to put this whole festival together. If you have any questions, ask us. We are the ones running around trying to do half a million things at once. Hopefully by next week I will have gotten caught up on my sleep.

Kristen and Brenna were down in the Campus Center basement and were wondering if they would get into the "Notes." Guess what ladies, you're here. Congratulations.

For some new gossip, Kim is seeing a guy named Gary and he is a Skid Row buff. But don't hold that against him, because he does like hockey too.

Assistant UMass Hoop Coach John Robic, who is also in charge of those cute Mini-Minutemen, just had a baby girl. Word is he was sick of those brats and wanted to start his own Mini-Minutemen family.

Picture this. Standing with my roommate in Stop and Shop, we stared aimlessly at the near empty shelves in the "Kosher for Passover" aisle. Ouy, such choices, I didn't know where to start. Our adventure went like this:

"Okay Hope, should we get the regular matzo or the egg matzo?"

"Gee Felice, I don't know. The selection is just so huge. Why don't we get some of that gefilte fish."

"Well Hope, to me that looks like the remains of someone's science experiment."

Felice Cohen

Is it me or is there anyone out there who would give their left eye for a bagel? This matzo stuff is for the birds.

Since we're on the topic of food (a fa vorite of mine), let's discuss this business of sharing it with roommates. Lately, I have been hearing complaints from friends telling me their roommates can't seem to keep their paws off their food.

My solution? Hide your good food in a brown paper bag in the back. Then take some old, moldy, spoiled food and place that in the front. Before you leave the house, make sure to tell your roommate that he/she is welcome to help him/herself with your leftovers. If that doesn't stop them, the food poisoning should.

I do not have any grafitti of the week, but I do have some hip expressions. "I'm all over it," and "I live for you," are two of the newest and hottest forms of communications. If you don't use them, Suzanne will call you a "wank."

Nancy, from the Alumni office, called it, "Fried Green Peppers." Nancy doesn't get out much, but we still love her.

Gayle Long can no longer be reached in the basement of the Campus Center. Her new office location has been moved to the 11th floor. Cheers Gayle.

Does anyone know where Rose Perot came from? And what happened to the "H" in his name?

Everyone keeps telling me that the caricarture of me on the sports page looks nothing like me. Please, did you think I wanted my real mug in the Collegian?

With the onset of warm weather comes late afternoon meetings. You know women's "tea" times are limited. Just ask Sarah and Jodi.

Well, I promised at the beginning of the semester I would not make any references to the days remaining in the semester. But it has come to my attention that there is only one month to go. One month! As soon as I realized this I called Nana B. Her reaction? "Kin a Hurra!"

Does anyone, besides me and Debra, remember Marathon Bars? They were those long-braided, chocolate-covered caramel candy bars. They were the best.

That about wraps up this installment of "Notes." I'll leave you with this one bit of advice, "Come to Haigis Hoopla!"

Expert seeks teamwork, quality

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

Cooperation, not competition, is the key to success of any company, said an internationally known quality control advisor last night.

Approximately 2,300 people packed the Fine Arts Center to attend a lecture by Dr. Edward Demming, called "the Messiah of Management."

Demming is perceived differently by American and Japanese managers. Business magazines have called him the "curmudgeon of quality" and he is basically known as the "American who taught the Japanese about quality control" in the business world.

"Without theories, there are no questions. Without questions, there's no learning," Demming said.

"Demming has developed a system consisting of 14 points, that aims to develop in every manager an understanding of the process they and their employees are involved to meet the needs of their costumers," said Jose A. Touzon, president of the UMass' American Production and Inventory Control Society (APICS), an operations management student organization.

Demming tried to introduce his management theories in the 1950s to American companies and was unsuccessful, so he decided to accept an invitation made by Japan to advise their managers. His theories were not only well-received, but applied. The results can been seen today.

"I taught the Japanese about loyalty, long-term relationships, materials and services. . . optimization of a system," he said.

"It's about time the American management is listening to him," said Rakesh Vadgama, vice president of APICS.

Demming is trying to do for America what he did for Japan. Among the points that he advocates in every seminar that he holds during the year are that quality leads to lower costs, that most defects are caused by the system, that goods should be bought from vendors committed to quality, and that it is important to work with suppliers.

These points find their counterparts in much of the American management philosophy of selling the greatest quantity of goods possible to increase profits, according to Demming.

He supports teamwork, in which every member provides vital input to the overall final performance.

"Why is the British Royal Philarmonic great?. . . Cooperation. Each player is there to support each other. They are there to get all the merit for themselves," Demming said. "There is something in the Japanese society — they all learn cooperation."

He also said an example of cooperation is the European Economic Community and that his theories apply to agriculture, education and other fields.

The event was sponsored by Digital Equipment Corporation and the University of Massachusetts' School of Management Production and Operations Management Program. Dean of the School of Management Thomas O'Brien recognized to Alan Robinson, assistant professor of operations management, and Ericka Prew, assistant director of alumni relations, for their help in organizing the activity.

Faculty travel across state for environment

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Faculty at the the University of Massachusetts are traveling throughout the state to help local, state and federal agencies solve environmental and planning questions, according to several University professors.

The faculty are using computerized mapping as their tool which uses a software called Geographic Information Systems. The software is used to amass and analyze vast amounts of information.

"Using GIS technology, the University is doing a wide range of projects with an environmental focus," said Jack Ahearn, assistant professor of landscape architecture and regional planning.

"We want to make communities and planning agencies aware of this resource so they can come to the University for help and information," he said.

Computerized mapping is considered by many people to be one of America's most promising technologies.

UMass currently has a cooperative agreement with the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. Through this agreement, both the University and state agencies are sharing statewide data generated for the Massachusetts' GIS.

Five departments at UMass are now either using or are in the process of developing the GIS system.

These departments include the Water Resources Research Center, University Computing Services, department of forestry and wildlife management, department of landscape architecture and regional planning and the department of geology and geography.

One of the projects that the department of landscape architecture and regional planning is now engaged in is the studying of historical land-use patterns in Lexington and Concord, during the Revolutionary War period. They are studying the land patterns to determine if it is feasible to restore what has now become forest land back to farm land.

The GIS technology has other potentials besides the environmental and land-use focuses, said Ahearn.

"Fire departments can use GIS to determine the best routes for responding to emergencies based on traffic patterns, street layouts, and time of day," said Ahearn.

"Service industries, like banks and restaurants, can use GIS to determine where to site their outlets," Ahearn said.

One project which is currently in progress is the development of a new strategy to preserve an area without acquiring land. The department of landscape architecture is helping the National Park Service in this endeavor. They are doing this by mapping out resources in the Blackstone River Valley National Historic Corridor between Worcester and Providence Rhode Island.

Another project is the development of a regional GIS and database for the Pioneer Valley Planning Commission in West Springfield. The Water Resources Research Center is providing the commission with technical assistance.

Other departments at UMass are also helping the commission develop a rural land management program for the town of Southampton.

House," and he said Korza suggested replacing SCERA with a "Super SCERA" which would have administrative input. In a recent memorandum, however, Witherell rejected this proposal as counter to student interests.

"There are a plethora of unions on campus, but as of now there is nothing which directly advocates the needs of undergraduate students at the State House," he said.

The funding of the associate director's position of SAO should be eliminated, according to Witherell. Witherell said current Associate Director Suzanne Jean has "been on sick leave since October."

tor for Earthweek, said so far with combined proceed donations from Ben & Jerry's and the money MassPIRG raised from its bake sale, Earthweek activities have raised $397.47. This money, she said, will buy about 16 acres of tropical rainforest.

AIDS activists focus on women

SPRINGFIELD (AP)—AIDS data from the state's four western counties underscore the need for more prevention and treatment programs for women with the disease, a group of women AIDS activists said Wednesday.

Michelle Murrain, who teaches biology at Hampshire College, said state and federal health statistics show that over the past 11 years 68 cases of AIDS have been diagnosed among women in the Berkshire, Franklin, Hampshire and Hampden counties.

The counties have a combined population of 812,322. A total of 4,829 cases of AIDS, including 617 among women, were reported statewide during that time.

One woman with AIDS was reported in Franklin County. Fifty-two cases of women with the disease have been reported since 1981 in Hampden County, which includes the region's largest cities. Nine cases have been reported in Hampshire County, and six cases have been reported in Berkshire County.

"There is a great deal that is not known, especially about its impact on women," Ellen Koteen, director of the Springfield Infant Mortality and Teenage Pregnancy Coalition, said of the disease.

The women said they want to persuade the state to spend more here on education and other programs aimed at women.

But they offered no specific sum to lawmakers debating this year's state budget, and they did not know how much the state was spending on AIDS programs in the region.

"We are not prepared to talk about how much money is needed," said Diane Palladino, director of AIDS Allies, a Springfield-based service group for people who have tested positive for the AIDS virus. "We need to talk about a commitment frist on all levels of government."

"Our concern is with Western Massachusetts, not the state as a whole," said Koteen. But she said the women were considering approaching a similar group of AIDS activists in the Boston area.

A ponderance . . .

By DAVID DEMERJIAN
and SCOTT KESNER
Collegian Staff

A band that names themselves after a multi-breed dog, titles their album in Swahili and calls their first single "Jack Ass Ginger" may prompt the question: "Just what color is the sky in your world?"

Poi Dog Pondering may have no response to that question, but this disorientation with reality is what makes them the enigmatic breed of musical mongrels that they are.

Poi Dog Pondering began when lead singer Frank Orrall and a group of his friends formed a street band in Hawaii in 1985. For the next two years, the band relentlessly traveled North America, playing wherever they could, and adding new members along the way.

Says Orrall of the experience, "we spent '86 and '87 traveling in a huge station wagon around North America, singing for our food and gas money on street corners and in coffee houses, for whatever change the open guitar case would bring in."

In 1988, the band settled down in Austin, Texas, and recorded their debut EP, Poi Dog Pondering, which was released on Texas Hotel Records. Following the release of this album, Poi Dog again went on the road, opening for left of the dial favorites like Throwing Muses, They Might be Giants, and Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians.

The band was discovered by Columbia Records after an exceptional gig in New York City, and the band was signed to the label soon-after.

Volo Volo was released in early 1992, and "comes closest to capturing the true voice of this collective" according to Orrall. Over the past two years, the band has filtered into a stable 8-piece sound that carefully imbues a hybrid of everything from American Soul to Indian Drone. Volo Volo draws on an element previously unknown to both the band and its listening audience, rock and roll.

The band features three percussionists: Frank Orrall, Jon Nelson, and Darren Hess. Complementary to the poly-rhythmic centered percussion section are bassist Bruce Hughes, and multi-guitarists Adam Sultan, Ted Cho, and Orrall. The sound doesn't end there. Rounding out the ensemble are Dave Crawford on trumpet and organ, Susan Voelz's violin, and Orrall's stream-of-conciousness typewriter rambles (lyrics).

Poi Dog Pondering will be appearing at the Amherst College Frontroom on Sunday, April 26, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10, and are available at For The Record in Amherst, and the Northampton Box Office. Poi Dog Pondering will be performing a special acoustic performance at For the Record in Amherst on April 26 at 4 p.m. This performance will be free.

Sampson's 'Abyss' is Elvis in Wonderland

By SHAWN MCDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

When asked to describe this week's world premiere play, In My Abyss, author Elisabeth Sampson and director Kenneth Roberts exchange a knowing glance. One can tell immediately that they have been asked this question frequently, and that neither one is entirely sure how to respond.

"In My Abyss," says Sampson, "is pink flamingos, Elvis, and Alice in Wonderland."

"It is Peanuts with an edge," declares Roberts.

Theatre Review

These descriptions may seem ambiguous, even opaque, but for anyone familiar with Sampson's opus, they sound startlingly accurate.

In My Abyss is not your average, run-of-the-mill play. The style alone decides this, as one sees touched of Brechtian stage technique mix with sensuous free-form poetry and modern interpretive dance. There is live action, but there are also segments of film. There is a speaking lead who never moves, and a cast of dancers who never speak. It is an abstract reflection of an abstract reality, and one designed to affect everyone differently.

"Don't try and analyze it," cautions Sampson. "Sit back and enjoy it. Sooner or later, you will realize what it means to you." The action of the play occurs in a timeless, placeless garden, where a group of people have assembled to rediscover innocence, or hid from truth. The garden is a sort of personal Eden, a temporary way station on the way to a less happy place, and it is crafted to reflect not only the input of the cast and director, but the personality of the audience as well.

Abyss is a thoroughly theatrical piece, the kind of thing which could not be done on film. It is defined by its live performance aspect, and derives much of its power from its theatricality.

This week's production of the play represents a major effort by Student Valley Productions and displays the work of many artists. For Senior Theater/English major Elisabeth Sampson, the production is a chance to see one of her plays come to life. But the success of Abyss is reliant on the offerings of many other people.

Scenic designer Christie Tichner has fashioned the scruffy, tiered garden, currently sprawled across Hampden's Southside Room, and composer Brad Potter has supplied an original musical score. Filmmaker Steven Epstein has created short films for the production, which appear on an enormous screen extending out of Tinchner's set. The dancing which accompanies Sampson's poetry has been choreographed by Denise Dalton.

Senior Theater major Kenneth Roberts, the man saddled with the job of directing and unifying all these elements, says his work has been easier than one might expect. "The images in the play are so strong, and the metaphors so tied to the actual dialogue, that to direct it is not to instill images in it, but to explore images which are already there."

In My Abyss will be performed April 23 - 25 at 8 p.m. with an additional matinee on April 25 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $4 for students and seniors, $5 general admission and are available at the FAC box office.

Where's the magic?

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

For people who said the big-screen musical was dead, there's a flicker of life in Disney's Newsies, a live-action song and dance film that is strictly for fans of the genre. Offering little more than routine motions, Newsies tried way too hard to be a triumphant return to a once-popular format but ends up being somewhat claustrophobic and uninspired.

Film Review

Newsies dramatizes (and some say trivializes) the turn of the century newsboy strikes that paralyzed the powerful New York papers. Here, the line between good and evil is clearly drawn.

Christian Bale (Empire of the Sun) plays the fiesty leader of the newsies, rough and tumble boys who all speak in a stagey New York accent. Robert Duvall playes the villain Joseph Pulitzer as a miser who'll use any means in order to crush the strike. Also, Ann Margaret plays a dance hall singer whose appearances are so erratic she's almost nonexistent.

The songs, while far from being memorable, are catchy enough to be a decent diversion from the cookie-cutter plot. The songs seem to pop up at the oddest moments sometimes, while obvious segues lead nowhere.

Director and choreographer Kenny Ortega (Dirty Dancing) skillfully combines modern dancing with the showy, wonderfully boisterous tunes . . . but just try to remember them the day after. Newsies becomes vibrantly alive in these musical numbers, rivaling current Broadway fare.

The plot, however, is way too complicated for its own good, considering Newsies is aimed a. kids. The film doesn't seem to understand that within this type of musical, the lesser the plot, the better. The story is often too laborous and mechanical, while at the same time being completely predictable.

Christian Bale turns in a wonderfully aloof performance and while his signing voice is credible, it's certainly not strong enough to hit some of the notes. Newsies doesn't seem too concerned with fantastic signing, as no one's voice stands out.

Robert Duvall is more of a cantankerous old fart than a villain. Since he doesn't sing a note, (a big mistake: Duvall proved he could croon in Tender Mercies) his character is even more bland.

For people who don't like movies where people spontaneously burst into song, Newsies is not for you. And without the benefit of fresh material, this film won't win any new fans to the movie musical. From the glorious backlot sets to the strict good/evil emotions, Newsies has all the ingredients of a big-budget musical without enough of the magic.

Grade: C+

Coming Soon . . .

The advance word on this summer's Alien 3 is that while it's visually superb, the plot is nowhere near as strong as the 1978 shocker or its 1986 sequel. Twenty-seven year-old first-time director David Fincher (the man behind videos from Madonna to Aerosmith) reveals that Alien 3 lands Ripley (a bald Sigourney Weaver) on a penal colony with religious fanatics and battle the alien (this time with no weapons) one last time . . . Madonna, who just inked a $60 million dollar deal with Time/Warner (doesn't that make you sick) is set to star with Willam Dafoe in Body of Evidence, a thriller from the director of Last Exit to Brooklyn. Body is all about a woman who kills her lover with her body during sex . . . Hmmm, she wouldn't be doing this just to be controversial, would she? . . . Speaking of controversy, Robert Redford and Demi Moore will headline Adrian Lyne's (Fatal Attraction) new film, Indecent Proposal, which is about a man who offers a couple $1 million if the wife will sleep with him . . . Would you?

A ballerina's autobiography

By DONNA GILMAN
Collegian Staff

The Shape of Love
By Gelsey Kirkland
Berkley Books

Gelsey Kirkland, a ballet legend, and author of Dancing on My Grave, has published her second novel, The Shape of Love. Her bestselling memoir, Dancing on my Grave, was hailed as "The most mercilessly candid, directly outspoken autobiography in years" by the Los Angeles Herald. In it, Gelsey Kirkland tells the daring, true, and provocative story of her ultimate triumph over her private drug addiction, an addition that all but ended her career in the dance world.

From her smashing start as a "baby ballerina" with George Ballachine, to her legendary partnership with Mikhail Baryshnikov, Gesley Kirkland rose to fame as one of the most prestigious dancers of her generation.

Kirkland co-wrote her second novel, The Shape of Love, with her husband Greg Lawrence. This autobiographical novel chronicles Kirkland's magnificent return to the stage and to her life's dedication, with the Royal Ballet of London. Surpassing all expectations, Kirkland is able to mend her troubled past and once more become the darling of the classical ballet scene. Kirkland's story is a stunning testament to one woman's incredible courage and artistry in overcoming addiction and self-doubt.

With a writing style as lyrically moving as the music she dances to, Kirkland provides the reader with a brutally honest look into her private life.

Raw emotions pave way for a riveting trip into the nightmare a recovering addict lives, day by day. Kirkland is able to transcend the technicalities of ballet to make her story applicable to all who face an inner struggle.

Pushing her body and soul to the limit, Kirkland at last gives the dancer, who is always seen but not heard, an inner voice. In addition, Kirkland's desire to find meaning in everything she dances is especially impressive . Her novel serves as a warning to future dancers to not abuse their bodies, and, while giving the dance their all, to save a bit of their soul for private life.

Admittedly, this novel is not for everyone. In order to truly enjoy the book, the reader should have some interest in ballet, although no technical knowledge is necessary. But even for the average peruser, this novel has a bit of everything to offer: romance, glamour, and a passionate personal triumph. For anyone who has seen Kirkland dance, this novel is as emotionally powerful as her finest stage performance.

'Bad Luck' Leppard is back

By A.C. FOSTER
Collegian Staff

"Do you wanna get rocked?"

This first line from the song, "Let's Get Rocked," pretty much sums up the idea behind the new album, Adrenalize, from Def Leppard.

The song, "Let's Get Rocked," is the debut single of this long awaited LP, and it officially marks the return of the best-selling rock band in the world (yes, they sell more than U2). It is a return from yet another period of hard times that have plagued the band since its establishment.

Def Leppard's misfortune began all the way back in 1981. The group already had an album, On Through the Night, but it had barely made any impact on the music world. The group's then recently released second album, High 'N' Dry, was enroute to selling two million copies in America, and establishing the band as a musical force to be reckoned with.

However, complications arose when the band was forced to boot guitarist Pete Willis. The loss of Willis, due to alcoholism was an obvious blow to this up-and-coming group.

But Def Leppard hung tough. After the aquisition of guitarist Phil Collen, the band continued down the road, and, in 1983, recorded their third album, Pyromania.

Then they hit the Big Time. Pyromania sold eight million copies and rocketed up the charts to the number two position, second only to Michael Jackson's triumphant album, Thriller. Pyromania also featured five Top 40 hits, including "Photograph," which went all the way to number two.

Suddenly, the boyish looking, hard-rocking quintet from the working-class town of Sheffield, England, were superstars.

Then, in 1984, disaster struck. This time, it was much more drastic. Drummer Rick Allen lost his left arm in a near-fatal car accident. The group tumbled off the top of the world and came crashing to the ground.

Temporarily, that is. Allen and the rest of Def Leppard, never having been a bunch that bowed to the odds, began the long, hard climb back to the top, starting with Allen's rehabilitation.

"Our bud had nearly died," recalls Collen in an interview with Musician magazine. "He'd had an arm lopped off, and we thought 'Will this be horrible? Will he even be able to talk?' And Rick was, like, 'Hi, guys! I'm gonna play with this foot instead of this arm!' He'd already begun practicing on the edge of the bed.

"We thought, 'This guy's hallucinating.' But he followed that route."

After a long four years, the group released their now-classic album, Hysteria, in 1987. The near-legendary album sold a record-breaking 15 million copies and produced seven singles, including four Top-10 hits. The album paved the way for a world tour that lasted nearly two years, and Def Leppard, having overcome devastation, was once again on top of the world.

Whoever said "What else could go wrong?" is eating their words by now. Just when it seemed that the worst was behind the band, Def Leppard and tragedy crossed paths once again. In January of 1991, guitarist Steve Clark died of chronic alcoholism, creating yet another set-back, and perhaps the end of this tremendous rock and roll outfit.

"We spoke about it [the group retiring]. But it would have been a shame to just knock it on the head and call it quits," says bassist Rick Savage in Musician magazine. "We're still gonna go out live and play songs he co-wrote, and that's the best tribute we could do for him. So he'll be remembered that way, rather than people talking about the end of the band. We're still here to tell his story."

Regardless of their misfortune, the group pushed on in surprisingly good spirits. Collen himself has been known to say that, "There's only three and three-quarters of us left." The group has thus elevated themselves to admirable and idealized levels of determination and dedication.

Although the group was determined to record a "quick" album, in light of the time it took to record Hysteria, the combination of Clark's death with the group's reputation for being perfectionists in the studio has led to what has been a five year hiatus since Hysteria.

The double work load that was inherited by Collen as a result of Clark's death helped to considerably slow things down as well. Although Def Leppard has recently acquired Vivian Campbell (Whitesnake, Alice Cooper, etc.) as the second guitarist and fifth member for the group, Collen is responsible for all of the guitar playing on Adrenalize.

Adrenalize is a more back-to-basics-album in style. There are no instances in the songs of "heavy" messages or preachings against elements of society. The album features the classic rock and roll subjects of women, good times, women, loud music and women.

Furthermore, the album is very heavily guitar oriented, but in a different way for the group. While Hysteria thrived on the complex overlapping of the bridges, riffs, and chorus' of a twin guitar attack, Adrenalize sits on a much more simple style of melodic and tuneful playing. Collen does an excellent job of "picking up the slack," and effectively satisfies all of the albums guitar needs. Although the album doesn't have the distinct power riffs encountered in earlier Def Leppard albums, it still has an overall guitar provided crunch. It is however, played at a less aggressive level.

In many respects the rhythm for the songs is a continuation of Hysteria. Allen continues to thunder through the

Put the Hogs in the barn

Electric Love Hogs
Electric Love Hogs
London Records

When I first heard the name Electric Love Hogs, I thought "What the hell is this?"

When I first heard the music from this group's self titled debut, I thought, "What the hell is this?"

After listening to the Hogs a few more times, I've come up with an answer to that question.

For the most part, the Electric Love Hogs come across as a poor mix between the funk of the Red Hot Chilli Peppers, the power of Metallica, and the frenetic speed of Slayer.

While a few of the songs are plausible, most of the 11 song album is gar-bage, and I do mean garbage.

The opening song "Tribal Monkey" is one of the better songs on the album, although that is equivalent to saying that Bill Clinton has been one of the best Democratic candidates; it's really nothing to brag about!

"Tribal Monkey" shows off the funky style of bassist Kelly Lemieux and the heavy guitar work of tandem Donny Campion and David Tores Kushner.

The other few highlights on the album include, the ballad "Keep Getting Up", which shows off Lemieux's solid bass play, and "Father", which after an accoustical opening, is a dead ringer for early Metallica work.

The bass opening for the song "Mr. Fun" sounds incredibly similar to the great opening of Ozzy Osbourne's "No More Tears." From there the song goes downhill with John Feldman's angry and screeching vocals leading the way.

The rest of the songs on the album are just like "Mr. Fun" in that they sound forced and have Feldman's poor vocals that are heavy and overbearing.

About the lyrics, the classic saying "Pass me the crackers, cause we got the cheese" fits perfectly. Here's a sample of the cheesorama from the song "Just Another Day" — "There's a man on a hill had to pop a chill pill/ Because he ain't no fool and everything's cool/ He's got the Hog sound goin' now all the/ Chicks are mowin' down the band . . ." Need I continue? I didn't think so!

Motley Crue drummer Tommy Lee likes the Hogs enough to have produced a couple of the songs on the album. Apparently Lee has caught some of the bad taste his wife Heather Locklear possesses (oh come on, being married to Lee isn't bad taste? Yeah, it is!).

At the end of the biography I recieved about the Electric Love Hogs, it has a guarantee at the end which says "Get into 'em (the Hogs) - you'll be happy as a pig in shit when you do."

Wrong, I'm as happy as a person who just stepped into it!

Burai Fighter for GameBoy is NOT easy

By DAVID WEIZEL
Special to the Collegian

Burai Fighter Deluxe
For Nintendo GameBoy
Taxan

Go smack dab against the evil Burai in Taxan's oldie but goodie, "Burai Fighter Deluxe."

Yeah, yeah, I know the game's been out for (going on) two years now, but it really is worth a look. Honest. Follow me. . .

The Burai are several types of nasties, descending upon you in swarm after swarm on your choice of the three separate levels of difficulty: Eagle, Albatross and Ace.

Each level consists of five intensive sub-stages, with ducking, dodging and blasting galore.

The game's premise is deceptively simple: kill or be killed.

The landscape (if you can call it that) consists of weird, maze-like canyons stretching out, well. . . to the end, of course.

Enemy guns are recessed in the canyon walls, above or below you, and assorted mutants come floating straight down the middle, blazing away.

Sound easy? Well, it would be, except for the fact that. . .

"We control the vertical. We control the horizontal. . ."

In other words, the rate the screen scrolls at is completely outside your control, Spaceman.

While you're busy shooting, and showing off the real reason you went after your jetpacker's license in the first place, the walls around you keep moving and moving, and, uh. . . as I was saying. . .

So, if you're too busy blasting that insectoid over your left shoulder, and not watching for the upcoming twist in the passageway, you could end up all syrupy and pancake-like, if you get my drift.

Power-ups, in the form of weapon upgrades, are scattered about quite liberally, though many are hidden in hard to reach places.

If you can find your way into these nooks and crannies, nab your brass ring, and still extricate

Local musician bids farewell

BY BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

It is always a bittersweet thing when an established musician, with popularity and longevity in this area, decides to pack it all up and make that important career decision to move on to bigger and better things.

Such is the way of well-known bassist Fred Clayton who will relocate overseas next month to Paris, France.

Clayton grew up in Alabama and moved to Amherst many years ago as a teenager. Shortly thereafter he picked up the bass guitar and became a young presence at UMass by hanging out on campus and jamming on his instrument at every available opportunity. Jazz music became his foundation, although for the past 12 years he has played in numerous bands in this area ranging from rock and roll to theater productions.

Fred Clayton

JABBERWOCKY

Clayton is large and imposing in stature yet soft-poken and warm in nature. As a former troubled youth he holds a special place in his heart for children and spent many years working professionally with delinquent teenagers at Tri-County High School in Easthampton.

"I love working with young people," says Clayton, "The children are our future." One of his local projects which he speaks quite fondly of was a production called "Total Eclipse" that travelled to high schools and introduced teenagers to professional theater and music.

However, the man is no pushover. He holds a black belt in Tai Kwan Do karate and has competed on the tournament level. He also plays a mean bass, as the list of those jazz greats with whom he has studied and played with attest.

Avery Sharp was an early influence for him. "He was my mentor. I used to carry his equipment," says Clayton.

A grant from the National Endowment for the Arts brought Clayton to New York City to study with jazz notable Bill Lee, father of filmmaker Spike Lee. "Spike would come home from school and complain to his father about folks not responding to what he wanted to do," says Clayton about his memorable experience with the Lee family.

Over the years Fred Clayton has played with such luminaries as saxophonists Marion Brown and Archie Shepp, as well as the late trumpet player and Hampshire College professor, Ray Copeland. He and his bands have played at almost every local night spot, including the Iron Horse, Sheehan's Cafe, Dave's Place and the once popular but now defunct L'Oasis nightclub. Clayton has even dabbled in producing local jazz concerts.

But the music is his thing. When asked to cite musical preferences he says "everything, from hip hop to rhythm and blues." He describes music for himself as a "way of life, and not a hobby."

Fred Clayton will be closing the book on his long association with the Pioneer Valley in order to move to an international city where jazz music is worshipped and appreciated at a level far greater than that here in the United States.

"I've done everything I can do here. This is a chance for growth and a marvelous opportunity," Clayton said.

His itinerary will commence with work as a sound technician with Archie Shepp and his band when they embark on a European tour early this summer. Clayton plans to arrive early and get settled in Paris first. He has already lined up work playing bass.

Clayton will appear tommorrow night at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton with his rock and groove-oriented group called Special Forces.

A "Farewell Concert" with Fred Clayton will be held Sunday afternoon, May 3, at the People's Institute on Gothic Street in Northampton. The all ages show will be from 3:00 pm until 5:00 pm and will feature many friends and special guests, including Archie Shepp.

Freddie is not dead!

By A.C. FOSTER
Collegian Staff

On April 20th, 80,000 people crammed into London's Wembley Stadium to witness the historical extravaganza of "A Concert For Life: A Tribute To Freddie Mercury." The dedication to the former lead vocalist of Queen, an AIDS victim, was both a tribute to Freddie Mercury and Queen's impact on music as well as an attempt to show the importance in increasing the awareness and education of AIDS.

The show was broadcasted in part on Fox Television, as well as multiple radio stations. The estimated number of listeners and viewers was one billion total. In case you missed it, the concert will be re-broadcasted in its entirety April 25th on MTV at 12:00 PM eastern/central times.

For those of you who have yet to see the show, here's a preview of some of the night's events, and for those of you who are not going to be able to catch it, here's a re-cap of what you missed.

Metallica kicked-off the show by performing three songs, starting with their Top 40 hit "Enter Sandman," and concluding with their recently released single, "Nothing Else Matters." It was the group's first time at Wembley Stadium and they didn't dissapoint. While some of the other performances through the course of the evening left much to be desired, Metallica turned in one of the best performances of the night.

Boston's own Extreme took the stage to perform an incredible medly of Queen songs. It included excerpts from "Bohemian Rapsody," "Another One Bites The Dust," "Fat Bottom Girls," and "Radio Ga Ga," to name a few.

"We're gonna give a little bit of Queen back to the fans," said Extreme guitarist Nuno Bettencourt during the coverage. "It might be a long time before they [the fans] hear these songs again, and we're gonna do our own little thank you to Freddie and Queen, and tell him we love him without saying it."

The group received one of the best crowd responses of the night, and they kept the audience on their feet with the performance of the band's number one hit "More Than Words." Our own local boys might very well have stolen the show.

The best-selling group in the world, Def Leppard, performed the song "Animal" off of their album Hysteria, as well as the debut single "Let's Get Rocked," from their new album Adrenalize, which is the number one album in the world at this time. It was the band's first group performance in nearly four years, and it exhibited their new fifth member, guitarist Vivian Campbell, for the first time .

Are you ready for this? Spinal Tap. . . yes Spinal Tap, moved to center stage next for their contribution to the evening's festivities. To be honest with you, I don't know what it was that they performed, but they didn't sound half bad while doing it. The song was instrumentally solid and it featured a drummer that managed to avoid spontaneous combustion.

U2 followed with their song "End Of The World," being played live via satellite from Sacremento, California. Although the group wasn't present at the concert they more than sufficiently kept the audience entertained.

The contreversial presence of Guns N' Roses was anything but that to the fans. The group was greeted with ecstatic cheering regardless of the wishes of many AIDS activist groups that the fans "boo" the group off the stage.

] The other three members of Queen, guitarist Brian May, drummer Roger Taylor, and bassist John Deacon, provided the instrumental support for many other performances. Roger Daltry and Black Sabbath guitarist Tony Iommi helped out on the Queen hit "I Want It All," and Def Leppard vocalist Joe Elliot sang the Queen song "Tie Your Mother Down," with additional guitar help from Slash of Guns N' Roses.

Queen and Robert Plant continued with the song "Innuendo," off of Queen's last album of the same name. The conclusion of the song transformed into the Led Zeppelin song "Thank You," which in turn changed into another Queen song, "A Crazy Little Thing Called Love," about a third of the way through.

The mega-hit "Bohemian Rhapsody" was performed in part by Elton John and Axl Rose. The two actually sang the end of the song as a duet (did you ever think the day would come?). Consequently, the elaborate and complex song, which is very difficult to play live, came out sounding very marginal. The end result was a version that even Wayne and Garth would have trouble head-banging to. Elton John faired much better on his performance of "The Show Must Go On," and Axl Rose also sounded more at home with his performance of "We Will Rock You."

Liza Minnelli, close friend of Freddie Mercury, concluded the show with "We Are The Champions," supported by the back-ups of every performer that was present. Some of the other performers that appeared during the course of the night were George Michael, Lisa Stansfield, Seal, and Paul Young. As all the performers were paying one final tribute to Freddie Mercury with their presence on the stage at the end of the show, Liza Minnelli effectively summed-up the night with her concluding statement "Freddie, we just wanted to let you know we were thinking about you."

songs with the electrical sound that was born on Hysteria. Together with Savage's bass lines, the two provide an element that shakes everything within the vicinity of your radio. This very heavy and deep rhythm remains consistent throughout the album.

Vocalist Joe Elliot is as sharp as ever. From his traditional hard rock raspy sound in songs such as "Tear It Down," to the emotional crescendo in "Stand Up (Kick Love Into Motion)," Elliot provides a strong and solid lead for the album's music. Elliot's overlapping and overdubbing style of singing is now expected in Def Leppard music, and the powerful back-ups amplify it to give the group much of their "punch." In fact, with the reduction in the guitar led hooks, it is the vocals that make this album very catchy.

Adrenalize is the first time since the group's debut album that Def Leppard has not been produced by Robert John "Mutt" Lange. Lange has often been referred to as the sixth invisible member of the group, due to his contributions in the band's songwriting as well as for his overall musical genius.

your tiny chassis in time, you can greatly increase your score, and, very often, improve your chances of survival.

There are several options of firepower: most notably, the ring blaster, missiles and lasers, which are labeled on the screen with an R, M, or L, respectively.

As soon as you pick one up, your blaster assumes that type of ammo. The total number of weapons that you collect per round is also tallied and multiplied for bonus points at the end.

For the continuing enjoyment of your flight, you can also start a bomb collection, and gather up a shield that that swirls around you like a taut lasso, wiping out floating dangers before they have a chance to greet you.

You can "hold" up to seven bombs at a time, using them to clear the immediate screen of enemies if you like, or go for the eight bomb special, and earn an extra life.

Upon successful completion of each substage, a password will be supplied to the worthy spacejockey. Simply record it in your log, and you'll be all set for future battles.

At the end of every sub-stage, hang on, 'cause you're in for a real challenge.

The level bosses are well drawn, and certifiable tough to beat, especially after sub-stages five on each level. Across the board, the bosses will give you thumb burns so bad your fingers will be positively smokin'!

Once you've run through the Eagle level of difficulty, it's on to Albatross, and finally Ace.

Although all three levels share identical scenery, the higher the level, the faster you're propelled through. And, as you'll quickly notice, the deadlier and more numerous the enemies become.

"Burai Fighter Deluxe" is a completely engrossing game with catchy little background tunes to boot. Check it out, especially if you've got an itchy trigger finger that just won't quit.

It's a frantic, frazzling, fun game, it's got hidden rooms, lots of action, and it's not so outrageously priced.

If the big chain stores are sold out, you might try your luck at some local gaming and hobby shops, where they sell stuff second hand.

Bye-bye. Back to the awesome, bonus, Ultimate level for me — the one that's top secr. . . Oops.

Breast cancer surgery varies across country

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — A woman's chances of escaping breast cancer without having her entire breast removed were seven times higher in some parts of the country than in others, new studies show.

Two reports found striking regional differences in the rate at which doctors and patients adopted breast-sparing lumpectomies for breast cancer rather than traditional mastectomies.

The studies were based on data gathered in 1986, when agreement was beginning to emerge among cancer experts that less radical operations were just as good for women who had early stage, small tumors in their breasts.

Neither report could tell why medical practices varied so dramatically across the country, and no one knows whether they still persist now, six years later.

Dr. Ann Butler Nattinger, chief author of one of the studies, said the work raises questions about how word of new advances in medicine spreads and how these innovations are adopted by physicians.

"There is little use in knowing exactly what to do if it doesn't get done," said Nattinger, a researcher at the Medical College of Wisconsin.

She and colleagues reviewed Medicare records of 36,982 women between ages 65 and 79 across the country who were treated for early stage breast cancer. In the other study, Dr. Diana C. Farrow and others from the University of New Mexico studied the treatment of 18,897 women of all ages with early cancer in nine areas of the country.

In 1985, a landmark study was published showing that lumpectomies and mastectomies are equally effective for early cancer. However, many doctors who routinely performed mastectomies were skeptical. They continued to recommended the more extensive operation as a way to prevent cancer recurrence. Many patients also wanted mastectomies because of feelings they were safer.

Neither research team could explain why doctors adopted the new method so much faster in some places than in others.

"We have identified strong regional variation," said Dr. Jonathan M. Samet, one of the New Mexico doctors. "Now we need to understand what factors influence individual doctors and patients as they make these decisions."

Similar findings were reported in January by Dr. David Winchester of the American College of Surgeons in a study in the journal Ca.

In the latest reports, doctors found:

• Twenty-one percent of Medicaid patients had breast-conserving surgery in Massachusetts, compared with 3.5 percent in Kentucky.

• Among Medicaid patients, the conservative surgery was most widely used in the Middle Atlantic and New England states. It was least common in the South and Plains states.

• Medicaid patients were also more likely to have lumpectomies if they were treated in large hospitals, urban hospitals or hospitals affiliated with medical schools.

Weld signs new retirement law

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. William F. Weld signed a law Wednesday that will allow as many as 7,000 state employees to retire early and avoid the need for additional layoffs to reduce the public payroll.

The signing came more than a year after the issue first came before the Legislature. The period was marked by often bitter battles between the Weld administration and lawmakers, especially Rep. Kevin Blanchette, D-Lawrence, House chairman of the Public Service Committee.

The fights revolved around who would be eligible for early retirement and over estimates of just how much the plan would save.

But Democratic legislators forced Weld to remove a section of the bill that would have allowed younger workers to retire.

"We've had honest differences over what constitutes the best bill," Senate President William M. Bulger, D-Boston, said.

The law signed by Weld applies to state employees over 55 with at least 10 years of service or state workers under 55 with 20 years of service.

Up to 5,600 administrative employees and 1,400 direct-care workers can participate. Eligible workers may apply to the State Retirement Board between May 1 and June 15. The retirements will take effect July 1, the start of the new state bookkeeping year.

The administration expects about 5,300 workers to participate. The bill allows 15 percent of the positions to be filled with new workers, so that would be a net reduction of 4,500 employees.

Weld estimated the bill would save over $30 million over the next two years.

"Because of this bill, we will be able to avoid further layoffs," Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci said.

"Layoffs are off the table," Weld said.

Weld had warned repeatedly that if an early retirement bill acceptable to him was not passed, he would be forced to order layoffs.

Sen. Robert Havern, D-Arlington, praised the governor for not carrying out the threat during negotiations.

"He could have sent out those pink slips. He didn't," Havern said.

Weld said that since he took office the state work force has been reduced by 5,780 through layoffs and attrition. His goal had been to cut the number of employees by 7,600 by the end of this fiscal year.

Blanchette said he was pleased to see the bill signed, but said there were two more early retirement provisions he wanted to become law. One is a cost-of-living increase for current retirees. Weld and the Legislature are still negotiating over the size of the increase and when it will take effect. The second is a bill to give local governments the option to extend early retirement to their employees.

U.S. Rep calls bribe charges 'proposterous'

PEABODY (AP) — U.S. Rep. Nicholas Mavroules said Wednesday charges he accepted bribes in return for granting a license for a Peabody massage parlor were "absolutely preposterous."

The shop owner claims he gave Mavroules envelopes stuffed with cash in exchange for aid in getting and keeping his business license, according to published reports.

Mavroules, D-Mass., was mayor of Peabody and later a congressman-elect when two alleged payments were made in 1980 by Leo T. Manzoli, one under a restaurant table and another at Peabody City Hall, the Boston Globe said.

The charges have never been proven or aired in court. Mavroules' office refused comment, referring all queries to his lawyer, Francis X. Bellotti.

"Every time you get in a visible position, all the haters, the people who thought you were supposed to do something for them, they look at this as their chance to get even," said Bellotti, a former state attorney general. "It's one of the reasons it is good not to be in the political business anymore."

The Globe reported that federal prosecutors contacted Manzoli last week. The U.S. Attorney's office is investigating charges that Mavroules accepted the free use of automobiles from bankrupt Lynn car dealer Bob Brest since 1978.

Officials also are probing whether the 62-year-old congressman used his influence to have two federal prisoners moved to more desirable facilities.

"It appears to me that every rat who can, is coming out of his hole as this thing (the investigation) progresses," Mavroules told The Evening News of Salem. "I have absolutely no recollection of ever meeting this man. This charge is absolutely preposterous."

Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke said "the law prevents me from commenting" on the 1980 investigation. Then-U.S. Attorney Edward Harrington, now a federal judge, also declined comment, the newspaper said.

Baseball washed out, hosts Hartford

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team took an unplanned day off Wednesday when its game with Dartmouth was rained out.

The Minutemen will try to get in a game against Hartford at 3 p.m. at Earl Lorden Field today. John Russell is scheduled to start for UMass. Some quick UMass baseball facts and stats:

• Joe Mattivello is on a tear both at the plate and in the field. After seeing scant action last year, Mattivello is platooning at third base with Kevin Correa. He is second on the team in batting average, and has played well in the field, notching seven assists in Monday's 8-2 win against Central Connecticut.

Mattivello has hit in four straight games and while he has no stolen bases, his speed has helped him stretch a number of singles into doubles.

"Joe has improved tremendously from last year," coach Mike Stone said. "He plays the game hard and aggressively, and he's always looking to take the extra base. He's played well defensively also."

• Center fielder Steve Corradi has quietly put together a solid junior season. After moving from shortstop earlier in the year, Corradi has utilized his speed in the outfield by tracking down fly balls.

Corradi leads the team in stolen bases (13), slugging percentage (.495) and on-base percentage (.563). Also, the cleanup hitter is tied for the team lead in home runs with three, and is fourth in batting average. It's safe to say that Corradi may be playing his last season for the Minutemen, and that pro ball is lurking on the horizon.

• The pitching staff has performed well, holding its opponents to two or less runs for six straight games. Led by Ron Villone (6-1, 1.70 ERA), the team has 16 complete games and four shutouts. The team will need strong pitching this weekend against Atlantic 10 leader Rutgers.

"Our pitching is coming on," Stone said. "It's nice to see some of the younger guys doing well."

four one-hitters. The senior righty has won 13 in a row, lowering her ERA to a spectacular 0.61 in 115 innings pitched. She has struck out 188 and walked only 20 during that time.

Pat Conlan, 11-3, has complimented Mizesko well, winning nine of her last 10 decisions, and lowering her ERA to 0.53. Her only loss during that time was against UMass. The two have combined to hold opponents scoreless over the last 42 innings, and the staff as a whole has an ERA of 0.53.

UMass' pitching has been consistent as well. Holly Aprile has won seven in a row, increasing her record to 7-1. Her ERA stands at 0.97. Darlene Claffey has won eight in a row, and her record now stands at 9-2 with a 1.02 ERA. Freshman Kelly Daut's 5-5 mark hides a stingy ERA of 1.58, a number usually reserved for better records.

UMass has the more powerful hitting lineup. The Minutewomen have scored one run more than the Huskies, despite UConn having played five more games, and UMass has the edge in team batting, .313 to .297. Ironically, the teams have an identical on-base percentage of .350.

With all the standout hitting and pitching, the most telling statistic may be this: UMass is 5-1 in one-run games, while UConn is 3-3.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your finances begin to stabilize now. Good will suddenly abounds. Let influential people know about your special talents or skills. You could be in line for a raise or promotion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hidden facts will come to your attention at just the right time. Many golden opportunities are within your reach. Ask direct questions and seek advice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Treating a co-worker with kindness today could do wonders for your popularity. Dress for success — things are shaping up for a pay hike. Take a vacation from romance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Break away from a confining or lackluster relationship. You are about to embark on an exciting adventure. A distant locale could provide the perfect love nest. Hold tight to a lucky charm.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): As far as money is concerned, you would be smart to follow your instincts rather than other people's advice. You do not really need a lot of attention now, just some appreciation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be careful to whom you express your business ideas; you might find someone else taking credit for them. Rethink your career priorities after talking with your mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Luck may be all around you, but it is not the kind you should broadcast. Money or possessions come your way, thanks to an influential friend. Be more experimental in the arts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Various aggravations may cause you to lose patience. Be careful not to blurt out something best kept under wraps. Exercise helps to relieve temporary stress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Being nice to someone who works behind the scenes could benefit you financially. Be realistic, however. Extra caution is advised on the business front.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Carefully assess any unusual financial developments or suspicious people; but it is better to be safe than sorry. Be wary of any romantic entanglements that could cause you embarrassment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not read more into a friend's monetary suggestions than is practical or sensible. Tighten your financial belt. News from someone at a distance puts a fresh slant on your social life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A creative impulse looks quite promising, as do your romantic prospects. Parents could bask in the reflected glory of a talented child. Sports and games are your best bet for fun tonight.

team could be self-supporting and would not need, in case of emergency, Gov. Weld, the legislature or God bless'em, even the taxpayers (who could use a little lift after all).

In fact, UMass could become the very first team, if it had to, to be self-sustaining. I would like to suggest we jump the gun and do just that, in the most traditional, American way possible.

In order to become and stay a "Big East Power House," it takes money. From recruiting to those big size 13 L.A. Gears, we need money. And plenty of it.

I propose that the UMass Basketball program become the nation's first independently, incorporated, state-chartered basketball business, just like the Red Sox, just like the Celtics. And, we may have made the first move already in signing John Calipari to a good solid contract with the same perks you would find in a pro team of this size. Including another shot at Rick Pitino.

Let's make some common sense assumptions.

First, college hoops is big business and promises to remain that way, especially here.

Second, we are already professional, except for the contracts paying the players. In every sense of the business, including marketing, ticket sales and television rights, we're already a full-fledged business.

Third, it's not necessarily "dirty" to bring business into college sports.

With complete disclosure, so there are no little secrets, we could make college basketball at UMass a paying proposition, just like its bookstore, just like its cafeteria, with the sports business putting its huge profits back into the school.

What's wrong with that?

And why stop with basketball? If a team is good enough, let's capitalize on it. At the very least, the call on tax payers would be reduced.

UMass, especially UMass, is in need of a few dollars. What ways are there for us to get some?

Increase tuition? Tried that, now we have fewer students. Raise taxes? We're trying that too and still fewer students.

The only reason we don't form UMass Hoops, Inc., is because a group of middle age white males at the State House in Boston say we can't. If the NCAA were persuaded, that instead of tax dollars, we were putting basketball dollars into the school, and that no one was being paid off, then that similar group of middle age white males might withdraw their objections by reflex.

I don't notice the NCAA offering to increase the share of TV income it pays to the schools that make the NCAA rich.

Do you remember when the Boston Marathon would not allow women? It took society only a few fresh looks to discard that as absurd. Same here. Maybe the tax payers would like a little relief. Maybe we at UMass are just the ones to start to help.

Look at how much money has already been made on the UMass hoop team by T-shirts and hats alone. Yes, if I had the money to buy the team I would. And the first thing I would do? Change the mascot from the UMass Minutemen to the UMass Marketeers.

Softball plays UConn in important rematch

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts softball team hosted the University of Connecticut two weeks ago, both teams were on extended winning streaks. UMass had won 12 in a row and UConn had won 10 in a row.

The double-header these two regional powerhouses played that day ended in a draw as UConn, behind the three-hit pitching of Kim Mizesko, took the first game 2-0. UMass then took the second game 1-0, behind the five-hit pitching of Holly Aprile.

Today the Minutewomen, 21-8 overall and 10-0 in the Atlantic 10, travel to Storrs for a 3 p.m. doubleheader with the Huskies (28-6), and the situation before these games is much the same as it was two weeks ago.

Both teams have won every game since the split, with UMass on a seven-game roll and UConn on a 12-game roll. For the past two weeks UMass was ranked 19th in the national polls, but for some reason UConn has replaced the Minutewomen at that spot. UMass has fallen under the infamous "others receiving votes" section.

Mizesko, 16-2, has continued to shine for the Huskies as she recorded her fourth no-hitter of the season last week against Boston College. She also has months later.

Still, as late as her senior year, Marshall still had doubts that she could perform again at the level she was at before her injury.

"I had [scholarship] offers from a number of schools, but UMass was the only place that had total faith in my abilities and that I could come back totally from my injury," she said. "Alfie had complete confidence in me so I decided to go here."

Mitchell agreed that a big part of Marshall's problem was that a lot of people lost confidence in her.

"Her injury sort of took her out of the limelight," Mitchell said. "We looked at her medical information and talked to her doctors and decided if the information matches the girl, then she'll be fine."

"She is my first recruited athlete and the only member of the team with a full scholarship," he said. "She is invaluable to this program."

As a result of the new-found confidence, Marshall was able to bring part of her old routine back from her early high school years.

"Alfie got me to do a lot of old tricks when I got here," she said. "He helped me to prove [wrong] a lot to those who doubted me."

There are still those who think that she has reached the pinnacle of her success and doubt whether she can improve upon what she has accomplished thus far. However, Mitchell believes that she can.

"Everyone wonders whether there is anything left for her to do in her career and I think the answer to that is yes," he said. "She will get better every year that she performs. Other coaches are in awe that she could get any better, but she will."

Hodges named head football coach

Mike Hodges was named head football coach at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Mike Hodges, the University of Massachusetts football team's defensive coordinator for the past six years, was announced as the team's head coach yesterday by Chancellor Richard O'Brien and Associate Chancellor David Bischoff for the next two seasons.

A member of the UMass staff since 1978, Hodges replaces former Minuteman coach Jim Reid, who resigned on Jan. 23 after six years as head coach.

"It's the best thing for the program to name [Hodges]," said Doug Berry, last season's offensive coordinator, who was co-interim head coach with Hodges since Reid's resignation. "He has the full support of the staff and players and that allows us to be our very best."

After Reid officially resigned on Feb. 13, the UMass Department of Athletics committed itself to a nationwide search for candidates.

Hodges told the Collegian Feb. 6 he desired the job and was going to apply.

Several weeks into the search process, an eight-person committee was appointed to seek out and present a five-person list of candidates to the University.

However, the committee, headed by the Dean of the School of Education Bailey Jackson, voted last week to reopen the search by a 6 to 2 vote.

The overriding of the vote was prompted by the need to have a head coach as soon as possible, according to a release yesterday from the Office of the Chancellor.

Jackson left the area on Friday for one week and was not available for comment.

A new search committee will be named at the end of the 1993 football season, at which time the financial position, both with respect to external support and the revenue expected both from the Commonwealth and from athletic fees can be better evaluated.

Hodges, whose two daughters Jenny and Karen attend UMass, was a football letterman for two years at guard at the University of Maine at Orono where he received a master's degree in education in 1968.

Hodges was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Gorillas escape in overtime, 8-7

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts lacrosse midfielder John Schlipf scored the winning goal at 2:45 of sudden-death overtime as the Gorillas came back from a two goal deficit late in the fourth quarter to beat Harvard, 8-7, yesterday at Richard F. Garber Field.

The Gorillas (7-2) needed last-second heroics from several players just to force overtime. The Crimson (4-7) used a patient offense, a stingy defense which held UMass scoreless for nearly the entire second half and an amazing effort by goaltender Chris Miller (28 saves) to set the stage for a stunning upset.

But UMass, as it did earlier this season against Providence, Yale and St. John's, made all the plays it had to in the final minutes to make its fifth straight win.

Down 7-5 most of the fourth, the Gorillas broke through when Bill Edell (2 goals, 1 assist) scored unassisted with three minutes left. A minute later, UMass goalie Tom LoPresti robbed Harvard's Spencer Rice on a point-blank shot that might have destroyed any chances the Gorillas had.

Harvard got another break when a push with possesion call on Ernie Faulkner left UMass down a goal and down a man with 1:30 left. UMass defense rose to the occasion, and Corey Cronin's double-team forced a Crimson player to make a bad cross-field pass which Mario Lopez easily picked off.

Senior Midfielder John Schlipf cruises through midair. Schlipf scored the winning goal in OT as UMass beat Harvard 8-7.

UMass coach Ted Garber called time and set up a play designed to give leading scorer Mark Millon (4 goals) a shot at the goal. After UMass cleared, Millon got the ball in the northeast corner of Garber Field.

Even though everyone from the fans on the Hill to the dog on the sidelines knew Millon would be gunning for the cage, no one could stop him. Millon's shot found the upper left hand corner, forcing overtime.

"When it was in the clutch, [Millon] came through once again. That's why he's out there," Garber said.

Both teams had chances in overtime before Schlipf grabbed the rebound of his own shot, which bounced high off the crossbar, and shoved the ball home past Miller to end Harvard's upset bid.

Harvard stuck with it's game plan of slow offense all game, even when unsettled scoring opportunities or open shots presented themselves. The strategy worked for several reasons: UMass could not get their transition game moving, could not get a shot past Miller and misfired on all four extra-man attempts.

Meanwhile, the Crimson played a "shut-off' defense on Millon which denied him the ball.

"They would not let me touch the ball," Millon said after the game. "It was so frustrating - I'm a ballhandler and I couldn't get the ball. They just tried to shut me off."

UMass took a 2-0 lead in the first on goals by Millon and Edell. Though Harvard was able to hold the ball for up to three minute at a clip, the UMass defense would not allow them to work the ball inside.

UMass upped their lead to 3-0 in the second, as Chris Nentwich, who according to Garber had an excellent all-around game, evaded three defenders before passing to a wide-open Brad Fitts in front of the crease. Millon also struck twice more in the second, including a nifty behind-the-head goal set up by an over-the-cage pass from Greg Kline.

Harvard then rattled off four unanswered scores, giving the Crimson a 7-5 lead they carried into the fourth. The Crimson capitalized on two power plays and a defensive lapse which allowed Ames to get his own rebound uncontested at the edge of the crease.

Marshall headed to nationals

UMass gymnast enters event ranked second

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Watching her practice and perform, she is the picture of concentration and determination. Off the floor, she is your typical, nice all-American girl who would like nothing more than to prove to people that she is capable of performing with the top gymnasts around the country.

This weekend, junior Tammy Marshall, the 4-foot-11, 106-pound phenom from Hickville, N.Y. will get a chance to prove just that when she travels to Minnesota for the national gymnastics championships Friday and Saturday as the second-ranked gymnast (37.89 all-around average) in the country.

"I am obviously very excited about this weekend," Marshall said. "The competition is very good and I haven't even faced 95 percent of the people who will be there. So it's going to be very tough for me to prepare."

"But if I do everything that I've done successfully all year, and don't change anything just for this meet, I should do all right," she said.

One person who is probably more excited than Marshall (besides her parents) is UMass coach Alfie Mitchell, who thinks the Nationals will be good not only for Marshall but for the team as well.

"We are a very well-respected team in the [Northeast] region, but we are not nationally known," Mitchell said. "But when we have the number two qualifying all-arounder in not just the region but the whole country, some of those national [gymnastics] powerhouses stop and look at our team and realize that we do have quality gymnasts and that we can compete at 'their level.'"

"I am so happy for Tammy though," he said. "Not only is she the most talented gymnast on my squad, but she is also one of the most hardworking. She has rewritten every score this season."

Marshall set school and career bests in the floor exercise (9.8, set earlier this year), on the balance beam (9.75), on the uneven bars (9.6), on the vault (9.8) and an impressive 38.8 all around.

Marshall was named to the Atlantic 10 all-conference team this season in the vault (9.62 avg.), beam (9.37 avg.), floor (9.54) and all-around. It was the second time in her career she has been named the A-10 all-around champion.

In 1990, she garnered the A-10 Freshman of the Year award and was also a member of the '90-'91 U.S. World University Games team.

Things didn't always come up roses for Marshall during her illustrious career, however. As a sophomore at Hicksville High, she suffered a serious knee injury which required arthroscopic surgery at the end of the season. Somehow she managed to return to practicing just four

After the loss to Kentucky, people might have said, "So near, yet so far." But if you look at the reality of the situation, UMass has actually nearly achieved the status of an official "Power House."

King beating case put in jury's hands

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. — The volatile case of four White policemen charges with beating a Black motorist was placed in the hands of a jury Thursday after a judge instructed them in laws dealing with excessive force.

The judge rejected a last-minute mistrial motion by the defense lawyer who said he had been "slimed" by the prosecutor.

Superior Court Judge Stanley Weisberg spent more than an hour reading jurors 81 legal instruction, including specific rules involving the charge of assault under color of authority in the beating of motorist Rodney King.

He refused to grant a mistrial after attorney Michael Stone accused Deputy District Attorney Terry White of launching a personal attacks on him in final arguments.

"I feel that I've been slimed and I think the slime has landed on my client," said Stone.

"He clearly accused me of misrepresenting the evidence," said Stone, who represents Officer Laurence Powell. "He did it with great drama at a time when he was very emotional. He said, 'Can any of the people associated with Larry Powell tel the truth?'"

"Such comment should play no role in how you decide the case," the judge said.

Weisberg noted that Stone was not seeking apologies from defense lawyer John Barnett, who accused co-counsel of soliciting lies against his client, Officer Theodore Briseno.

White observed: "Mr. Barnett came as close as possible to saying that [defense lawyers] suborned perjury, which is a lot more serious."

The March 3, 1991, beating, after King was stopped for speeding, was videotaped by a neigborhood resident and broadcast nationwide. It led to a review of police brutality nationwide and issues of racism. On trial were Briseno, 39; Powell, 29; Officer Timothy Wind, 31, and Sgt. Stacey Koon, 41.

On Wednesday, Barnett and White delivered their final arguments.

White stunned the courtroom when he left the podium and raced toward Powell.

"This is the man!" shouted White as he came within inches of Powell. "This man laughed! This man taunted! And he's denying it!"

Powell sat, stunned, but his lawyer leaped up and objected. The judge calmly told White to return to the podium.

White later apologized to jurors for the outburst and ended his argument abruptly.

Barnett had launched into a veritable tirade against the other officers on trial in his summation.

He accused them of "callousness and viciousness" and portrayed Briseno as the only man who tried to stop "the holocaust of batons, boots and blood."

Barnett said Briseno placed his foot on King to try to keep him still. The prosecution claims Briseno "stomped" King.

Wind's lawyer, Paul DePasquale, told the jury in measured tones: "All Time Wind did that night was his job. He didn't joke. He He didn't have fun. He didn't take any cheap shots."

"The circumstances here are consistant with the job the man was hired to do," said DePasquale. "He was part of the line between society and chaos. He wasn't a criminal."

Women rally to take back more than the night

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Correspondent

In the past it has been called "Take Back the Night."

But according to education advocate Jen Cannon, women not only need to take back the night, but their days and lives as well.

About 300 women rallied on the Student Union steps last night and marched to the Amherst Commons in a vigil with the theme "Take Back Our Rights, Fight for Our Lives."

The theme originated from the statistics that say 65 percent of all sexual assaults occur in the victim's home, and 84 percent of all women who are assaulted know their attacker, Cannon said.

Introduced as a registered nurse, writer, poet and victim of sexual assault, speaker Anna Bowen said "It is possible to break the chains and end the silence."

Bowen told the audience that every eight days a woman in Massachusetts is killed by her husband or boyfriend.

Men attending the rally were asked to leave but were told that they could join in the vigil at the Amherst Common.

Mary Francis Platt urged the women to fight against discrimination of women with disabilities.

"We know who we want to take our rights back from. . . and what is hardest are the barrier 'isms' that keep us apart," Platt said.

"Rape is the tool of sexism," said community activist Shira Katz and Chris Selig. They also stated that 95 percent of all rapes are intraracial, while the other 5 percent are White men raping Black women.

"Violence against women can be found in Congress and the military. . . and our legal system is clearly focused on the protection of White men," said Katz and Selig.

"The end of violence against women will mean the end of all violence," concluded Katz and Selig.

After singing a song related to violence against women, march leader Donna Heber led marchers to the Amherst Common shouting, "Hey hey, ho ho, sexual harassment has got to go!"

As the march travelled up North Pleasant Street, marchers chanted slogans such as, "Sexist, racist, anti-gay, don't you take our rights away."

Local police stopped traffic and cleared a path for the march.

At Amherst Common the women were met by the Men's Resource Connection, a group of men working to stop violence against women.

A candlelit circle was formed and the chants continued, "Two, four, six, eight, no more date rape!"

The rally's moderator said 78 percent of parole officers believe that women provoke rape, while 16 percent of the community believe that it would do some women good to be raped.

Brenda Lopez, a representative from a support shelter for victims of sexual assault, told the audience that "violence is targeted at all women and none are exempt."

"We need to be heard in some way that is socially meaningful, and I'm tired of being told how free I am," said Lierre Keith, a representative from the Women's Alliance Against Pornography.

"I want to make justice our sexual practice," said Keith.

"One out of every four women will be raped, and one out of every two will be the victim of attempted rape," said Gail Keilson, a woman who memorialized the fate of 16 women now serving time for killing their batterers.

Classes end, nudity begins

ANN ARBOR, Mich (AP) — More than 200 University of Michigan students celebrated the last day of classes by jogging a mile Thursday.

In the nude.

Most of the students running in the seventh-annual nude mile shortly after midnight were campus athletes. One man made the course on crutches.

"This is a good study break," said 23-year-old law student Daren Libertiny, who watched the naked jaunt. "I have a choice of looking at these men or corporate tax."

Runners wore lacrosse helmets, swimming caps, cowboy hats, viking horns and ski masks. Members of the Michigan Crew, who claim credit for starting the mile in 1986, carried their oars.

"I've seen it before, in pictures," said student Stephanie Simon, a spectator. "Four guys I've dated have done it."

First Black Student Union meeting today

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Staff

Tonight, the Black Student Union Constitutional Convention will convene at 7 p.m. at the Malcolm X Cultural Center.

The convention, which will involve the ratification of a formal constitution, will mark the first major step in the creation of a Black Student Union.

The constitution is to be read and debated by the students attending the convention. The students, who will serve as delegates to the convention, will have the power to amend and ratify the proposed constitution.

Yesterday, students were given a chance to review copies of the proposed constitution, which were made available at the Student Activities Office. Students organizing the convention had agreed that allowing the constitution to be reviewed in advance would allow the convention delegates adequate time to read and critique the proposed document.

The proposed constitution has received high praise from Student Government Association Registrar Kevin Duffy, who reviewed the document yesterday. Duffy, who must review all registered student organization constitutions, described it as "excellent," and predicted its speedy approval by the Student Activities Office.

Arthur Jemison, general manager of the Black Mass Communications Project, is looking forward to the convention. "I'm very optimistic," he said. "The event seems well planned and hopefully it will result in a strong unified voice for us on this campus."

U.S. officials stress importance of Earth Summit

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

The U.S. government must address its environmental problems and cooperate with developing and industrialized nations to bring about a cleaner environment, said two distinguished U.S. officials last night at Amherst College.

E. Zell Steever, a U.S. Delegate to the U.N. Conference on the Environment and Development (UNCED) and a U.S. State Department official, joined Don Edwards, an executive committee member in the National Advisory Council and a member of the U.S. Citizens Network on UNCED to speak on "A Discussion of Issues in Preparation for the U.N. Conference on the Environment and Development in Brazil June 1992."

State Senator Stanley Rosenberg moderated the panel.

President Bush's choice not to attend the Earth Summit Conference was "not a question of leadership, but was a question of elector politics," Edwards said. "The U.S. opposed all but minimal regulations for reducing consumption."

The idea of setting exact dates to limit emissions goes against corporations in the United States, said Steever. He also said this is one of the reasons why the president is so stubborn about the negotiations in Brazil.

"About 20 percent of the world's population consumes 80 percent of the world's resources," said Edwards.

"How do you go about sustaining development?" asked Steever.

According to Steever the government should not only cut down on its use of gasoline, but also find other sources of environmentally safe forms of energy.

According to Edwards, "Detroit is on welfare," because the car industry obtains so much subsidizing from the government.

Yet the United States wonders where the money is going to come from to enforce these new environmental regulations, added Edwards.

Edwards and Seever said the Earth Summit Conference hopes to bring both industrialized and developing nations together for global regulations to preserve the environment. It will be the first time in 20 years, they said, for a meeting of this magnitude to occur.

Over the past two years, countries from around the world have been preparing for this conference in Brazil by having negotiations around the world from Geneva to New York, said Seever.

Some of the topics the delegates are to explore is waste management, and better conservation of land and resources. Also they would like to set up a resource and financial support between countries.

Both Steever and Edward are optimistic about meetings like this becoming a frequent occurrence in the future.

"The people's participation in this project will forever change the process at the United Nations," said Steever. "It is important that you send a message to President Bush,"

20/20 Vision was the main sponsor for the event.

Author describes gays' persecution by Nazis

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Correspondent

Dehumanization is the most powerful weapon the majority has to oppress others, said a well-known gay author at the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Brown Bag Lunch Series on Thursday.

Warren Blumenfeld

Warren Blumenfeld, author of Looking at Gay and Lesbian Life and editor of Homophobia: How We Are All Being Hurt, gave a speech titled "The Nazi Persecution of Gays during the Holocaust."

"Minorities are portrayed as inhuman, therefore society finds justification for oppression," Blumenfeld said.

"I see this as a personal journey, being both gay and Jewish," Blumenfeld said, referring to his books and his speech.

Blumenfeld said he dedicated his speech to his deceased ancestors, Wolf and Basha Mauler, and then began talking about his own family experiences with the Holocaust.

Speaking about the beginning of gay movements, Blumenfeld said that most people think of the year 1969 and the Stonewall riots that took place in New York.

Instead of the riots, Blumenfeld said that he thinks of the German author, Carl Heinrich Ulrich. Ulrich wrote books about the movement back in the 1860s.

Blumenfeld said there was a clear relation between the fate of gays to that

Cultures unite at Seder

Multi-Cultural event promotes community

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

The Multi-Cultural Seder returned to the University of Massachusetts Tuesday night in the Campus Center.

The Seder, a traditional meal held during the Jewish holiday of Passover, was attended by 50 students from various campus communities and capped off a semester-long collaboration between Hillel's Black/Jewish Relations Committee and the Black Mass Communications Project.

"We hope that this is the first step towards establishing communication, so that groups can become more familiar with each other's struggles," said Tara Gorvine of the BJRC.

A Seder traditionally includes the story of Exodus, the Jewish people's attainment of freedom from Egyptian slavery, and denotes the beginning of the Passover holiday.

Tuesday's Multi-Cultural Seder incorporated the stories, speeches, poems and essays of many other oppressed groups, represented by the Cape Verdean Students Association, the Asian American Students Association, the Palestinian Solidarity Committee, the Haitian American Students Association, Nommo News and the ALANA Honor Society, in an attempt to provide an educational look into the struggles of the various campus communities.

The BJRC initiated the effort to hold the Multi-Cultural Seder when it contacted the BMCP in early March. With the support of the Housing Office/Center of Diversity and Development, BMCP and BJRC set out to organize an event which would "promote positive communication between the campus communities," according to Arthur Jemison of BMCP.

"The most difficult aspect of organizing the event was coordinating with the various [registered student organizations] so that they all could attend, as well as submit their stories," said Steven Sparling, chairperson of the BJRC.

The event addressed the issues of slavery, stereotyping, ethnic violence, cultural and intellectual racism, as well as the need for self-determination and a greater level of understanding on the part of campus communities.

Jemison pointed out that "enduring lessons are most often learned in a cultural format, rather than in intimidating debates which serve to define and divide, whereas a cultural format defines and unites."

Multi-cultural Seders have taken place at the University in the past, the last occurring in the spring of 1990. Tuesday's return of the Multi-Cultural Seder was not only entertaining, but also put forth the hope for what Sparling described as "an annual event, during which the campus communities can join together and touch base with one another."

Artists challenge views on censorship, sexuality

By PAMELA A. GAULIN
Collegian Correspondent

One of the most difficult aspects of creating lesbian sexual imagery is cutting through the levels of censorship, members of a lesbian art collective said last night.

Susan Stewart, Lizard Jones and Persimmon Blackbridge, otherwise known as artists' group Kiss and Tell, showed a short segment of their "True Inversions" video and displayed slides from previous shows of their interactive photo exhibit "Drawing the Line" while they spoke in the Campus Center last night.

"The state is not the only group who decides what we see and read," Jones said. "Silencing comes from our own community and it's harder to fight censorship in ourselves."

Self-censorsip stems out of fear but there is power in the process of uncovering layers and layers of self-censorship, Stewart said.

The three members of the group constructed their talk as a dialogue with each other and with the audience, attempting to challenge the audience's views about the power of photographic images and questions of censorship.

"How much can a photo affect real life?" Stewart said. "Can you be against censorship and be offended?"

Their open discussion after their hour-long talk reflected the way they, as artists view their work: they welcome dialogue, questioning and criticism.

In "Drawing the Line," women are asked to write their reactions to the representations of sexual imagery on the wall and to respond to each other's comments.

"We don't think art is some sacred, holy thing or that as artists we are different than anyone else," Blackbridge said. "We can learn from criticism."

Kiss and Tell re-shoot photos and constantly revise their live performances to speak directly to audience reactions. But they also realize how subjectively people react to representations of lesbian sexuality.

"Some people react to them as reality and see their own reactions as the only reality," Jones said.

"True Inversions," Kiss and Tell's performance piece, recreates the multi-layered aspects of lesbian sexuality Blackbridge said.

"Life comes at us and views collide, seperate views collide," Blackbridge said. "We affirm our sexuality, we celebrate it. We also see ourselves as victims of abuse."

"Sometimes [our sexuality] is seen as only one or the other. In reality we are both of these things and more."

In answering a question about the difference between erotica and pornography, Stewart said the collective consider their works representations of lesbian sexuality, and that it is up to the viewers to decide between subtleties of definition.

Kiss and Tell decided to photograph only two different models for the exhibit because they wanted the comments to consist of judgements about the sexual representations and not the size and shape of the women, Blackbridge said.

"Some lesbians may be excluded, many lesbians are not included," Blackbridge said. "Living in an oppressive society is often like that. We have to keep learning to open our minds."

Multi-media performance celebrates sex and art

By PAMELA A. GAULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Few events offer an honest and uninhibited look at women's sexuality and the construction of sexual images, and even fewer center specifically on expressions of lesbian sexuality.

"Sex and Art," a multi-media celebration at the Academy of Music on Sunday, April 26 will include performances by Susie Bright, former editor of On Our Backs, performance artists Kiss and Tell (Susan Stewart, Lizard Jones and Persimmon Blackbridge), and local favorite, comic Lea DeLaria.

"'True Inversions' challenges women politically and personally, but we also hope it's a good sexual experience," Kiss and Tell said about their performance piece.

"Our sexuality is shaped by both our histories and our desires. In 'True Inversions,' we acknowledge that these things can be difficult to separate or reconcile in one person," they said.

In the performance piece, Kiss and Tell said they acknowledge the variety of lesbians' sexual histories and experiences by creating dense layers of different voices with their simultaneous use of video, music, slides and storytelling.

The storytelling portion of the live performance will be an interweaving of three very different sexual fantasies and three distinct characters, Blackbridge said.

"There's a lot of humor in the juxtaposition of them, and there's a lot of heat generated too," Blackbridge said.

The 20-minute video segment includes explicit sex scenes intercut with interviews, commentary, and still frames which raise questions of censorship, safe sex and "real sex" versus constructed sexual imagery.

Susie Bright will deliver her specifically tailored "State of the Union Address for Lesbians" in April 1992 in New England.

"She's going to make us laugh and make us think," Aliza Ansell, a member of WOW Productions said. "She'll be very, very sex positive, especially for lesbians."

"Sex and Art" will be at two o'clock on Sunday, April 26 for one performance only. Proceeds will benefit "Drawing the Line," a photo exhibit created by Kiss and Tell and showing at the APE Gallery in Thornes Market April 24 through May 18.

Tickets are $17, and are available at Prides, Food for Thought and the Northampton Box Office. The performance will be ASL interpreted and The Academy of Music is wheelchair accesible.

Students involved in local businesses

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is one of a continuing series of articles on unique University classes.

J.D. Stanley has been working hard. He's interviewed a dozen directors and managers, analyzed tons of data, and is conducting a full-blown cost-benefit study. He's trying to come up with a viable solution to a business proposal. Stanley's persevering. . . He might even get an "A".

Stanley is a student in the University's Small Business Management course this semester. The course is unique — requiring students to serve as consultants to area businesses, assisting them with any problems they have.

"The idea of the course is to get practical business experience," said Professor Jim Theroux.

According to Theroux, small groups of students are assigned businesses to work with at the beginning of the semester. The students collaborate with each other and discuss existing problems and possible solutions within the business they have been assigned. At the end of the course, students submit a final report to their business, outlining their advice for future action.

One group of students is working with Clark Paint Co., helping the business find new outlets for their products. The students have talked to local paint stores and contractors, who frequently buy vast amounts of paint, in their effort to help the company expand.

Another group is studying consumer response to an oriental food product, Mr. Suns. One test was made by setting up demonstration booths in local supermarkets.

Student Craig Kams is a member of a group that's helping an association of owners of area food companies. His group is helping the association find outside funding. They're studying the possibility of using mail-orders, and are talking to businesses that have had success with the method.

"This is a very intellectual course," said Kams. "It's good to have hands-on experience and get to know what's really out there."

Another group of seniors is doing their work with the University. UMass is considering using a "debit card" system in the future. This would allow students to buy things like food, photocopies, and tickets on campus using a single card. Each student would deposit money in an account, similar to a bank account, and purchases made would be subtracted from that account. By using this system, students would no longer have to carry money on campus.

The four students studying the proposal are using a cost-benefit analysis to determine what the University would gain by using the system and what its costs would be. Each student in the group has been assigned a certain area of the proposal to research, ranging from finance to student reaction.

"This is great learning experience," said Stanley, a management major working on the debit card project. "I'm really applying the knowledge I gained from the University. I've learned a lot about UMass, too."

Adam Baker, an economics major who is also working on the debit card project, said a lot of unexpected problems crop up during research.

"From one problem, stems 10 more. . . and there are no cut-and-dry answers," he said.

Tragedy is remembered

Friday, April 24 is National Armenian Genocide Remembrance Day. Or at least, it should be. On April 24, 1915, the extermination of the Armenian race officially came into effect as proposed by the newly installed Young Turk regime in the Ottoman empire. This action was set forth as a result of the Armenian state wanting to break away from the empire and religious disputes between Christian Armenians and Muslim Turks. On this day all Armenians of stature (i.e. intellectuals, scholars, priests, doctors, political leaders) were arrested in Constantinople and imprisoned. After a total of 600 persons were collected, they were sent to various towns in Turkish Armenia to be eradicated.

Christain G. Adanalain

Over the next several years, vast numbers of Armenian women and children were forced from their homes in villages across Turkish Armenia and were driven towards the Syrian desert. They were forced to march until they died of starvation, exhaustion or at the hands of "gendarmes;" released prisoners whose duty was to kill Armenians in exchange for their release. Men were either shot to death in the outskirts of their village or were forced into hard labor until they eventually died. Those who survived the desert were sent to concentration camps outside Aleppo and Damascus in Syria where they were murdered. These atrocities were committed by the Turkish government until 1923.

Talaat Pasha, the minister of the Interior of the Young Turk regime was the first leader to perpetuate the mass extinction of an entire race of people. Thus, the Armenian Genocide was the precursor of the Holocaust of World War II. Talaat invented the blueprint for genocide, a set of basic rules for exterminating an entire mass of people. This plan would later be implemented by the Nazi's. As a result, 1,500,000 Armenians perished over an eight year period.

In October of 1989, Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole proposed that the remembrance of the day be made official after similar attempts had been made in 1985. The proposal was shelved and brought up again in February of 1990 which caused a dispute both in Congress and in Turkey. If passed, the bill would call for the president of the United States to officially pronounce the day as Armenian Genocide Remembrance Day and to ask all Americans to recognize that day with fellow Armenian-Americans. However, the Turkish government was not happy with the proposal, continuing to deny what occurred earlier in the century. The Turkish government threatened to break all diplomatic relations with the United States and began suspending military operations on bases in Turkey. Thus, to avoid any conflicts with their strong ally, Congress threw the proposal out the window.

After 75 years, no one remembers what happened to a million-and-a-half human beings, and every time it is brought up, chaos between the United States and Turkey develops. If the politicians in this country were not such cowards, they would face up to Turkey, force the Turkish government into admitting to the atrocities, and thus pass a bill commemorating April 24 as Armenian Remembrance Day. But because the United States needs Turkey for military purposes, the United States will continue to brown-nose the Turkish government. However, the United States has officially recognized April 11 as Holocaust Remembrance Day. The fact that Armenian Remembrance Day is disregarded by the United States is unjust.

The Armenian people do not ask much from the world. They would simply like the Turkish government to admit their wrongdoings and to have a day set aside for them so that people can remember and know what happened. Not only should the Armenian people have a remembrance day, but all peoples that have suffered from mass extermination should also be entitled. Cambodian-Americans should be remembered for the atrocities committed under Pol Pot during the 1970s, American-Indian remembrance Day should be established for those who perished in the 1800s, etc.

At this time, I ask that all UMass students remember the genocide, and to show support for Armenian Remembrance Day.

Christian G. Adanalian is a UMass student.

Thanks so much for caring, Amherst

I want to extend my thanks to all the Amherst law makers who are there looking out for me. It is reassuring to know I have you, considering my mother can't be here.

The purpose of the new keg license law in Amherst is "to protect the health, safety and welfare of its inhabitants." I guess I will have to accept the fact that I was denied one and realize that it was for my own good.

Even though I know Amherst lawmakers care deeply for its residents, especially students, I still can't help but wonder if there is another motive for this law. Maybe it has to do with the pressure it put on UMass six years ago to dry up the campus. Maybe it is because suddenly there is an extremely high risk of fires in the bars so they are being closed early and fined because of too many people.

Wait a minute. I see a pattern developing. Maybe the town doesn't like students congregating and drinking alcohol. No, that can't be it. That idea would just undermine the constitutionality of both the fire and keg license laws. Lawmakers wouldn't try to mask the real issue like that. Besides, we all know that Big Brother, I mean, the Town of Amherst, is looking out for us.

Now, if I can just explain to my dad why we're drinking cans of Natural Light on graduation day.

Well, even though I'm 21, I can't have a keg and I can't get into the bars. If it's okay with the town, I guess I'll just sit at home and drink 6.89 cases of beer (keg equivalent), and I'll sleep better at night knowing that it was "healthy" and I did it "safely."

Nuclear power just isn't the answer to America's energy problems

This is a response to Michael Morrissey's Ed/Op piece , "Nuclear power rules and we need it on this campus" (4/10). Why, oh why, is it that a "red-blooded American" such as he who holds such ridiculous opinions abuses his celebrated Freedom of the Press by writing ill-informed drivel (editorials, excuse me) for the sole purpose of offending the liberal population of the Pioneer Valley and getting an ego-boost when the response letters signed by 10 million people come in? Much as I hate to nurse his ego, I feel that his willful ignorance deserves a response.

Mr. Morrissey wasted space going on about how supposedly non-polluting nuclear power is, and how "patriotic" it is to use it because it was developed in the good ole' U. S. of A (you don't see anyone from France hankering over the widespread use of the guillotine out of sheer patriotism, do you?). He refuses to take seriously the dangers associated with nuclear energy which are the crux of why many people, myself included, do not want a nuclear power plant in our backyards.

A.) It is true that there has never been a meltdown in this country before, but there have been plenty of near-meltdowns, and there is always a first time for everything. Much of Europe was badly contaminated with radioactivity after the Chernobyl meltdown. I visited Germany in 1987, and was informed that it was unsafe to forage for Pfeffelinger (edible, wild mushrooms. Foraging is a popular German pastime that I had looked forward to doing myself) because of the radioactive contamination. Only time will tell just how badly Europe's ecosystem has been damaged by it.

B.) Nuclear waste is highly radioactive and takes thousands of years to decompose. Contrary to what Morrissey believes, nuclear waste is not traditionally disposed of in outer space, but in the oceans or is buried underground. Isn't it enough that we have already littered up this planet with non-destructible waste? And even if he doesn't give a damn about the earth or its non-human inhabitants (which he probably doesn't), perhaps he'll care when he or his kids get cancer because of radioactivity. Any idiot knows that radioactivity causes cancer and a lot of health problems.

C.) The reason why alternatives are currently ineffective is because conservative lawmakers with interests in oil or nuclear power have seen to it that they have not been developed. There were many research programs conducted during the Carter administration, such as those for solar energy and biomass fuel (that is fuel derived from fermenting plant products such as corn, cattails or even marijuana!) which were scrapped as soon as Reagan took office in favor of finding greater uses for petroleum and nuclear power.

Rather than beg for a nuclear power plant, Mr. Morrissey's time would be much better spent putting pressure on our lawmakers to put more funding into research programs designed to find sources of energy that are truly clean, efficient, non-polluting and safe.

A true American villain: Robert Alton Harris

The last time I wrote a column promoting the death penalty, people called me a racist and wanted to lock me in a room to kill the murderers with a table knife, and a dull one at that. Well, Wednesday's execution of Robert Alton Harris has given me a reason to stick out my neck (so to speak) again in favor of capital punishment. I think Harris' case showed us all some things about the United States.

John Mayeski and Michael Baker were 16-year-olds in the summer of 1978. Ordinary teenagers, they went out one afternoon to go fishing and stopped at a Jack-in-the-Box in San Diego to eat first. Little did they know that it would be their last meal.

Harris and his brother Daniel decided to rob a bank. They needed a car to rob the bank. They decided to take Baker and Mayeski's. In fact, when Harris kidnapped the boys and ordered them to drive to a secluded lake, his warped mind controlled his next actions. He shot the two kids to death, in cold blood of course.

Oh yeah, one last thing. Harris was kind of hungry after slaying the boys, so he finished Mayeski's hamburger. Never one to let good food go to waste, you know!

The Boston Globe reported in Wednesday's paper that Harris's case has dragged on for 14 wonderful years. There are those who will assert that Harris's rights were violated.

Michael Morrissey

They were; his right to a fair and speedy trial, conviction, and execution were definitely violated. The poor man should've been hanged and buried a long while ago. The only grief I feel for Harris is that he didn't live in Utah; that state still uses the firing squad for executions.

Our country's legal structure is ridiculous! On the night he was to die, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ordered four stays of execution, mainly thanks to Judge Harry Pregerson, who was probably appointed by former California governor, Moonbeam Brown.

Well after 14 years, new evidence was brought in by some pabulum-puking liberal.

Thankfully, the Supreme Court told California to get on with it. Unfortunately, they didn't, strapping Harris in the chair in the gas chamber, yet taking him out 15 minutes later after yet another stay of execution.

The Supreme Court, the only law in the country that has a clue, issued a message to the bleeding hearts: "There is no good reason for this abusive delay, which has been compounded by last-minute attempts to manipulate the judicial process." I couldn't have said it better myself.

At 6:10 a.m. Wednesday morning, cyanide pellets were dropped into the chamber to kill Harris. He was dead by 6:21 a.m.

There are some who will always stand up for the rights of Robert Alton Harris, but I will always fight for the rights of people like John Mayeski and Michael Baker, those who are murdered by the mad dogs of our society.

I have no remorse killing those who cannot live within the confines of our laws. While in the gas chamber, Harris reportedly mouthed, "I'm sorry." Yeah, we all are buddy, but it's too late now.

Robert Alton Harris gets the Gas Face.
Good riddance to bad rubbish.

of Jews because Hitler felt they were both "animals bent on the destruction of children of the majority."

"During the Holocaust, gays and lesbians were among the first sent to the concentration camps. Most were rounded up in clubs, bars or turned in by neighbors," Blumenfeld said.

Blumenfeld said Hitler thought that homosexuals interrupted the minds of "normal men," and found prostitutes necessary to keep young men from turning to homosexuality.

"Homosexuals had to wear an upside down pink triangle on their left breast and a yellow band," Blumenfeld said, describing the torment homosexuals suffered in the concentration camps.

"Gays that were found out in the army were shot on the spot," Blumenfeld said.

According to Blumenfeld, Hitler referred to gays, lesbians and bisexuals as "an unparalleled breeding ground of dirt and filth." He said that this type of attitude creates the hostility and dehumanization that gays, lesbians and bisexuals must face.

Prof's 'Dreamworlds' challenges stereotypes

By SUZY HERRING
Collegian Correspondent

Sut Jhally said he wants to disrupt the way people watch television.

"Dreamworlds: Desire/Sex/Power in Rock Video," is his videotape creation made to acheive that disruption.

Apparently his goal has been met, as some audience members at the Tuesday night showing by the Educator/Advocate Program of the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's center were so disturbed by a particularly violent scene they had to leave the room.

"It scared me. It really scared me," said one woman.

In the tape, Jhally, a University communications professor, explores images of women in music videos and their possible cultural implications.

In his introduction on the tape, Jhally reminded the audience that videos are advertisements, usually trying to sell records to a young male audience. To do this, Jhally said, "The images play into the male fantasy world."

Women were shown in the tape as nymphomaniacs, as passive objects of a male gaze, as fragmented legs or breasts. "When you think of people as body parts, you deny their them subjectivity," said Jhally in his narration.

The most disturbing and controversial aspect of the film is the juxtaposition of scenes from music videos and the rape scene from the film "The Accused." It was this during this sequence that several people chose to leave, and many of those that remained averted their eyes.

Jhally said he used "The Accused" to "de-contextualize and de-naturalize" the videos to force the audience to see them in a different way.

According to Jhally, his decision to eliminate the familiar music that usually accompanies the videos was another method of making the audience reconsider the images. He said that when he showed an early version of the tape to a class, "they started to sing along." He knew then that to get his point across the music would have to go.

The film ended with statistics about rape, quoting a survey in which 60 percent of the men questioned agreed to the statement "women provoke rape by their appearance or behavior," and 30 percent agreed that "it would do some women some good to get raped."

Jhally said that while music videos do not cause rape, they foster cultural attitudes that desensitize people to the seriousness of rape as a crime.

One audience member commented that Jhally's methods of "selling his point" were equally as manipulative as the videos he criticized. Jhally responded that these methods are the only way to have a voice in this culture.

Over 900 copies of "Dreamworlds" have been distributed nationally to colleges and rape prevention programs. Jhally attributes some of the tape's success to the free publicity he received when Music Television (MTV) threatened to sue him for infringement of copyright laws.

Jhally said he laments the fact that the tape has been appropriated by fundamentalist religious organizations that use it to promote censorship. Jhally contends that he is "not anti-sex, but against the commercialization of sex." He says he is not in favor of censorship.

He said he feels the fantasies that are most often expressed are those of white, male heterosexuals. Instead of censoring those fantasies, he would like to see them balanced by the fantasies of other segments of the population.

Jhally's latest video is "A Pack of Lies," about tobacco advertising. "Dreamworlds" was shown as part of Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

Las Folkloristas play cocoons & tortoises

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Las Folkloristas
Bowker Auditorium
April 22, 1992

I travelled to the faraway lands of Argentina, Cuba, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela Wednesday, by way of the throbbing rhythms, romantic melodies, and lovely tunes of Las Folkloristas.

The seven-member ensemble came to UMass for the first time to perform a concert of traditional Latin-American folk music, including dances, ballads, and serenades. Equally important was their desire to "share the Latin-American culture by the means of music and to promote good will and understanding amongst people by learning about each other."

One member explained, "The image of the Mexican people is sitting under a big hat, drinking Tequila. This is not who we are." He went on to joke, "We also drink whiskey, beer, and others like that."

The group played a variety of music, all of which was exceptionally moving. Whether it was a Columbian dance, a Puerto Rican serenade, or an Argentinean ceremonial offering to the Earth, each piece evoked emotion and a desire to learn more about the cultures from which they originated.

This was the kind of music that you feel. It picks you up and pumps your blood harder and faster, while your mind dances with images of exotic lands. It makes you realize how insignificant our own problems really are in light of the vastness of the world.

We not only heard the sounds of the Latin-American people, we came one step closer to understanding who they are, and that they are not all that different from other races. The same human emotions, desires, and fears came across in their music and emphasized the human bond that unites all cultures.

Among the most memorable pieces was "Maria Chuchita," a Mexican song which is a tribute to the Virgin Mary, and was performed by the unaccompanied voices of Olga Alanis and Telma Rodriguez.

Equally moving was a piece called "Raiz Viva" or "Living Roots," a song which evoked images of tribal dances, ceremonial village fires and a rattlesnake-laden jungle. The sweet, melodious flute in this piece contrasted greatly with the determined drumbeat, and resulted in a first sad, then inspirational, lively effect.

"Los Gallinazos" was a Peruvian piece originally played by Africans who were enslaved in Peru and were not allowed to play or listen to music. As a result, they created music with anything that they

Stun Runner squishes you into the back seat

By DAVE WEITZEL
Special to the Collegian

Stun Runner
for the Atari Lynx
By Atari, $39

"Welcome, Stun Runner . . ." chimes an enthusing female voice. You scramble over the side and hop into the seat of your streamlined, factory-finish gravity pod/cruising vessel/Terror-of-twisting-turbulence, and strap yourself in tight. Real tight.

You barely have time to take a deep breath when the G-forces squish you straight into the back of the seat. The winding expanse of snaking tunnels suddenly stretches out forever . . . Then it's off the ground on a cushion of air, and you're skimmin' for a drag resistant tomorrow!

GAME REVIEW

Swerve left and right through maze-like tubes of metal highways, hugging the curves, twisting and turning at speeds so fast that if you blink more than twice, you'll miss the whole ride. This is "Beat the Clock" here, so try to take those turns lightning quick, using your torque to maximum speed advantage.

As you slide and slither about, you'll need to pass more than a few fellow travellers heading your way. Coming right at you are armored drones (of quite indestructable make) and several other, not so tough-skinned, types of cruisers. You're at a serious disadvantage without a horn, so it's either blast 'em or move it, like NOW. Evasive action is not always as ideally executed as one would hope, however.

Your main protection lies in keeping your shields relatively intact, by being a defensive driver with offensive manners.

Each time you hit something, or miss the faster, outside wall in a turn, it can get to be a real drag. A loss of momentum can be recovered by passing over occasional yellow speed boosters, interspersed throughout each level.

Borrow some juice from an energy boost, and you might still cross the finish line in the nick of time. If you sputter to a halt before you break through that old winner's tape, you can come back on the same course again. But two more chances are all you get.

Oh, yeah. Almost forgot. At the very beginning of every level, you get to see an overhead map of the tunnels you're about to face, with boosters and bonuses marked. You may end up a sorry strategist though, since the map is only on screen for the most fleeting of moments. In order to learn a given level well, you'll need either a photographic memory or extensive exposure to failure.

"Stun Runner" is a splashy smorgasbord for the senses, with catchy music, great sound effects, and eye-popping graphic delights. The digitized speech puts Memorex to shame. One of the most impressive effects is the Southern-accented "Yahoo!" you hear when you hit a couple of speed boosters in a row. The cries of the pterodactyls on the advanced levels are pretty earth-shattering, too. Some of the levels are strictly "indoors" (inside a tunnel, and that's it) and others are partially outside, on futuristic open roads.

But what all the levels have in common are first-person perspective, crisp, color graphics, and enough hyper-action to rev up your engine even for the gazillionth time.

So see up-close what the Lynx can really do. Get entranced by Atari's smashing arcade title, "Stun Runner." And please, people - don't forget to fasten your seat belts. This is one game that's guaranteed to make an impact.

could get their hands on, including simple wooden boxes. One of these boxes was replicated and played by one of the musicians, who sat on top of the box and hit it in various places with a stick. As one member put it, this causes the player sitting on the box to "feel the music very deeply."

One of my favorite songs was one with the same title as one of Shakespeare's plays, "Sueno de una Noch de Verano," or, "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The song has nothing to do with the famous play, but instead tells of a dream that the song's writer, Silvio Rodriguez had of airplanes that "destroyed the grace of the clear morning." This is a touching song of our battles with technology and with each other that demolish our natural harmony and human happiness.

The final song of the evening, "Tres Danzas de Concheros," or "Three dances of Conquest," originated from the Aztec culture of Mexico. When Spanish conquerors went into Mexico to teach and convert Aztec Indians into the Catholic religion, they destroyed their culture and religion. The Aztec's pretended to perform songs and dances to the God of their newly forced faith, when actually worshipping their own Gods.

Of special note were the unusual, traditional instruments the ensemble used, such as dried butterfly cocoons, animal shaped clay wind instruments, tortoise shells, Yaqui water drums, hollow mellons floating in pails of water and bones.

Despite some brief technical problems in Bowker Auditorium, the performance was superb. Even in the midst of microphone problems, the group charmingly joked that "This [noise] that you hear is not the music."

The group members are Olga Alanis, Adrian Nieto, Jose Avila, Rene Vilanueva, Ernesto Anaya, Hector Sanchez, and Telma Rodriguez. These musicians enjoyed themselves on stage, and they interacted with the audience as if we were all old friends. They were more than willing to share their culture with us. Despite the fact that they primarily spoke Spanish, they communicated very well and made the audience feel at home.

Las Folkloristas have travelled across Central and South America, as well as Mexico, learning traditional songs from village elders and campesino musicians of these countries. In addition to over 30 internationally released recordings, the group has contributed soundtracks to two American movies, Under Fire and El Norte.

Guadalajara fears more explosions

By ELOY AGUILAR
Associated Press

GUADALAJARA, Mexico — Fearing more explosions, officials on Thursday ordered the evacuation of a Guadalajara neighborhood near the district wrecked by a sewer-line explosions a day earlier. The death toll rose above 200, according to government estimates.

As investigators searched for the cause of the blasts, the governor of Jalisco state, Guillermo Cosio Vidaurri, said at least three officials would face criminal negligence charges for not evacuating the area where Wednesday's explosions occurred after residents reported a strong gas smell.

Weeping survivors thronged the streets of Guadalajara's La Reforma district, where the explosions destroyed 20 to 25 square city blocks, hurling cars and trucks into the air and blowing up adobe houses. At least 600 people were hurt and more than 15,000 others left homeless, officials said.

State spokesman Armando Morquecho said damage was estimated at $300 million.

At a makeshift morgue at a sports stadium, relatives wailed as they looked at a list of names of the dead indentified so far. Every few minutes, an announcement blared from the speaker, telling the bereaved that the government would pay for the funerals.

Residents demanded to know why the government had failed to act promptly on reports of the fumes, and what had caused the buildup of volatile gas in the sewer system.

"If authorities knew about this why didn't they tell us?" asked Ramon Guerra, 22, who had helped pull the bodies of his sister and his 6-year-old nephew from the ruins of their house.

The governor identified those who would be charged with negligence as Fire Chief Jose Trinidad Lopes Rivas, municipal services director David Aftimos Partida, and Gualberto Limon, head of the agency that operates the municipal sewer system.

Officials said the explosions might have been caused by either an industrial chemical used by a cooking-oil company or by a gasoline spill into the sewer system. The state oil monopoly Pemex denied any responsibility for the blasts, as did the cooking oil company La Central.

Mass. House seat unresolved

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court heard arguments Tuesday in a case that will decide whether Massachusetts will lose a House seat to Washington state.

In an hour-long session punctuated by questions from the bench, lawyers for the Census Bureau and Massachusetts debated the government's decision to count overseas military personnel in the 1990 census.

Comments by the justices indicated they agree with the Bay State's contention that the Census Bureau's handling of the count should be subject to court review. But they also questioned the state's position that nearly a million military employees living abroad should not be counted in the apportioning of House seats.

A decision — expected by July — carries broad implications for the House elections this fall in Massachusetts and Washington. Under the Census Bureau's congressional apportionment, Massachusetts was to lose one of its 11 House seats. Washington gained one, going from eight to nine. Both states drew up new district maps accordingly.

On Feb. 20, a special three-judge federal court in Massachusetts ruled that the census count was flawed and ordered the two states to return to their pre-census apportionment.

Hartford came back to take the lead in the top of the second, as Mike Lane reached base on first baseman Jay Dodig's fielding error before teammate Paul Francesoni cleared the bases with a one-out shot to left that barely eluded the outstretched glove of UMass outfielder Justin Howard.

It didn't take long for Dodig to atone for his error, driving home Bill Knight and Kevin Correa with a one-out double to left in the bottom of the innning, giving UMass a 3-2 lead.

The Minutemen pushed their lead to 4-2 in the fourth as Howard ripped a single to right, bringing home Knight with the game winner.

Russell held the Hawks in check for most of the game striking out six before running into trouble in the eighth, prompting Stone to look to the bullpen.

UMass responded to Ferrari's effort in the eighth, loading the bases with one out before Jeff January's sacrifice fly to center brought home Howard for a 6-2 Minuteman lead.

Hartford capitalized on Ferrari's control problems in the ninth, loading the bases, but managing only one run as Ferrari hung on for the 6-3 final.

"We got some good pitching from John [Russell] and Peter [Ferrari], and some real timely hitting," Stone said. "It was a good game."

Game Notes: The Minutemen travel to Piscataway, NJ for an all-important four-game set with front-running Rutgers this weekend.

Rutgers stands at 8-0 in the Atlantic-10, and the Minutemen (9-3 in the A-10) need a sweep of the Scarlet Knights in order to entertain any thoughts of a first place finish.

Crofts to Borg: enough!

Flashback to 1980: In the Wimbledon Final, Bjorn Borg and John McEnroe play a classic match, with Borg prevailing in five tough sets. The fourth set tie-breaker remains the most memorable tie-breaker in tennis history.

Back to 1992: In the first round of the Monte Carlo Open, Bjorn Borg and Wayne Ferriera play a forgettable match, with Ferreira prevailing in two sad sets. The first set tie-breaker punctuates just how much of a farce Borg's comeback is.

When Borg ruled the tennis world in the late 70s and early 80s, he did so with gazelle-like court speed, incredible ground strokes, and a terrific mind set.

Jeff Crofts

Now the 35-year-old Borg is the fool of the tennis world with his snail-like court speed, mediocre ground strokes, and rusty mindset.

If you haven't guessed, I am calling for Borg to end this charade right now, I mean, he is horrible. I wouldn't mind if Borg decided to play in the Seniors (35 years-plus) tour because he might actually win a few matches and not embarrass himself the way he is now.

When Borg first decided to come back, I wondered how he'd do. Well, after watching him lose, 6-2, 6-2, to scrub Jordi Arresse in the first round of the 1991 Monte Carlo Open, I had my answer; he did absolutely awful.

Borg, playing with his older-than-Elizabeth Taylor wooden racket, looked totally outclassed by Arresse, who is a club player at best. Borg must have thought he looked awful too, because he immediately went back into training with a new graphite racket.

Also, instead of playing in regular tournaments right away, Borg decided to play some senior events.

After a playing in a couple of senior events, Borg has once again decided to reenter the men's circuit.

Against Ferreira, who is a solid up-and-coming player, Borg again lost in two straight sets, this time 7-6, 6-2. This result should be a little inspiring, shouldn't it? No, not when you take into consideration the painful thigh injury that Ferriera was playing with.

It is good to hear now that Monte Carlo officials are talking about not giving Borg anymore wild cards to play in the tournament. Hopefully, this talk will turn into action.

If Borg points to 39-year-old Jimmy Connors as an example to why he (Borg) thinks he can come back successfully, then he's dead wrong.

This is because, unlike Borg, Connors has not taken 10 years off, and let his skills get rusty. Also, Connors has a passion for the game which the stoic Borg doesn't appear to have anymore.

You see, it doesn't matter to me whether Borg is coming back for the money or for his need to play competitive tennis again. He hasn't been competitive and if he keeps losing, he's eventually not going to make any money!

If I were to see Borg on the street I would say this to him about another comebacking athlete: "I hope you saw George Foreman's face after he fought Alex Stewart, it was terrible . . . and Foreman won!"

Skiing's Sparks melts snow on slopes

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

It makes no difference if Kyri Sparks is wearing skis or cleats, she knows just one way of competing.

"I know what I want to do and how I want to do it," said Sparks, a freshman on both the UMass ski team and field hockey squad. "I give it my best shot."

Sparks, of Davis, Calif., took that attitude with her on her way through numerous competitions as she became the first UMass skier to ever compete in the U.S. Alpine National Championships, held last month in Winter Park, Colorado. The exposure she gained at national events coupled with her performance for UMass helped Sparks gain the female MVP award for UMass.

Sparks joined senior skiing standout Marci Blacker as the only freshmen to ever garner that award.

"It's unique in a way," said venerable ski coach William MacConnell. "[Blacker] had a really good year, but you can't turn your back on the post-season races.

"When Kyri's there at those races with the UMass jacket on, it's great for the team and the university. She had the most outstanding initial year with the women's ski team I've seen in 16 years of coaching. She's tremendously enthusiastic, focused and hard-working."

It's a work ethic that on some days can include a 5:30 wake-up, a morning jog to clear her "bed-head," field hockey practice, a full slate of classes (she maintained a 3.5 last semester) and then ski practice. The girl thrives on competition.

"I'm competitive by nature," Sparks said. "I've been skiing since I was three, and racing for the last four full seasons. I'm good at setting goals and achieving them. Competition fuels that. I like winning a lot."

Sparks began her love of sports in gymnastics but an elbow injury forced her from the mat to the slopes. The move was fairly natural in light of the fact that Sparks' mother, whom she describes as her "guiding light," was a ski patroller at Donner Ski Ranch in California. Her ability led her to take almost half of her senior year in high school off and trained seven days a week in Lake Tahoe.

When the time came to choose a college, Sparks knew she wanted to ski and play field hockey. Ideally she would have liked a scholarship, but there were none available. The lure of Pam Hixon's nationally-ranked field hockey team and the opportunity to ski made UMass a desirable spot.

"I wasn't sure if a California person who enjoys all that powder would want to ski the New England blue ice," MacConnell said.

She did, and the combination of the two sports has aided Sparks in ways she never imagined.

"The low stance in field hockey has built up my legs in good proportion," Sparks said. "In skiing I spend a lot of time in the tuck position and now I'm stronger in the tuck."

Sparks admits to having some difficulty in adjusting to the different skiing styles in the east as compared to the west. Here, there is more emphasis on technical events, slalom and giant slalom, whereas out west the focus is mainly downhill and super G.

"I seem to have a knack for speed, a lot of downhillers come from the West," said Sparks, who is sponsored by Head. "But downhill is wicked scary, you can be going over 100 km/h.

"I think giant slalom is my favorite even though I don't do as well."

Sparks' "knack" resulted in a 27th place finish in the downhill at nationals, in a field of 60 of the nation's top racers.

the slide — stop the negative publicity and get ourselves stabilized so we can move forward and get this program back to where we'd like it to be.

"And that's not going to be an easy job," he said. "I know that, the admininistration knows that and our players know that. But, I think we can get that done."

One of the immediate concerns is the future funding of the program, an issue which caused former head coach Jim Reid to resign on Jan. 23 after learning he would have to retract five scholarship promises he made to high school recruits for the upcoming season.

"The administration has told me there would be no significant reductions in scholarships for a two-year period," Hodges said. "I can live with that."

Hodges added that the recruiting, travel and equipment budgets will be maintained at the present level and his staff will include five full-time assistants, two part-time assistants and two graduate student assistants.

"If we have the staff and the money, we have the opportunity to be successful," Hodges said. "And that's all anyone who is standing here where I am today can ask of the university."

Hodges said one of his first duties will be to replace the defensive coordinator position which he left vacant. He wouldn't comment on any candidates.

The Department of Athletics has discussed the possibility of changing football's Div. I-AA structure and voted in favor of a proposed non-scholarship division, I-AAA, at January's NCAA Convention.

Hodges immediately fired back at those possibilities. "We have enough good football players in our program right now to remain competitive in our conference," he said.

A member of the UMass staff since 1978, Hodges also hopes to improve the image of the winningest team in Yankee Conference history around the state.

"We're going to get on the phone, start mailing letters and let people know we're alive," he said.

Villone's the man as UMass travels to Rutgers

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

If you saw him standing on the mound, nearly 7 feet high with hair shaved off on both sides of his head and a scowl directed towards the batter, you would never guess that Ron Villone is a nice guy.

Villone and the rest of the squad travel to Piscataway, NJ to take on the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers University in a 4-game series Saturday that will determine the Atlantic 10 regular season champion. UMass needs to sweep Rutgers to wrestle first place from the Scarlet Knights, who are searing hot. They are in the midst of a 14-game win streak.

But that may change when Villone trots out to the mound for the first game on Saturday. The Minutemen will be taking Rutgers on for the first time since a season-ending double-header loss in the A-10 Championships that sent Rutgers to the NCAA Regionals and them on Interstate 91 North.

The trip is more than just a big series for Villone. He'll be pitching near his hometown of Bergenfield, NJ, and his loved ones will be there to cheer him on.

"It will be nice for me," he said. "It will get me pumped to have my family there to see me."

Success hasn't gone to Ron's head, which says a lot. Villone is currently having the season of his life, posting a 6-1 record and a 1.70 earned run average. His 14.5 strikeouts per nine innings led collegiate baseball of late, and he has 68 strikeouts compared to only 25 walks in his first year as a starter.

And that's not it — Villone plays for the UMass football team in the fall and was an All-Yankee Conference and All-Northeast tight end last year.

And he's only been pitching on the team for two years.

"How high will Villone's star rise," is the pertinent question. Last month, Peter Gammons of The Boston Globe said Villone is now looked at as a top prospect who may be drafted in the first or second round.

"My freshman year, we had four guys drafted," says senior catcher Lou Olivieri. "Three of those guys are doing very well in AA or AAA. Ronny at this stage in his career is than those guys."

"[Talk about being drafted] makes me feel good, a little nervous maybe, but I don't bring it onto the field with me," Villone said. "It's present with all of the scouts around, but I try not to think about it."

Villone is simply a force on the mound. Armed with a 90 mile-per-hour fastball, a nasty slider and an effective change-up, he is the best pitcher in the Northeast.

Last year, as a reliever, he took Left-Hander Pitcher of the Year honors in the A-10 with a 4-3 record and 4 saves. So why didn't Villone play baseball as a freshman or a sophomore?

Collegian file photo by Josh Reynolds

Ron Villone's fastball has made him almost unhittable and should earn him a spot with a professional baseball team.

"I played three sports growing up, basketball, baseball and football, but I played Spring football in my freshman year because the coaches wanted you to get a feel for the offense.

"My sophomore year, my first as a starter, I broke my foot and it hurt for about six months, right into the baseball season."

Villone is a tough ball player, but that doesn't surprise former UMass head football coach Jim Reid.

"Ron Villone is competitive, as competitive a player as I've ever seen," Reid said. "He has a tremendous work ethic and great leadership skills. He doesn't know anything less than 100 percent."

Women's crew earns win over Coast Guard

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

Last weekend, on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester, the University of Massachusetts crew battled Coast Guard and WPI and thanks to the women's varsity, it soundly defeated Coast Guard.

From the start, the UMass varsity women led Coast Guard, cruising to a winning margin of 44 seconds. The average margin of victory is usually 4 seconds. UMass pulled ahead after the first 10 strokes, and finished in 7:08.

The UMass JV crew, racing with both varsity squads, finished at 7:35, earning them a second place finish ahead of Coast Guard, which finished at 7:52.

The varsity women's boat consisted of junior Alison Herwitch, junior Jennifer Lambert, junior Deanna Cook, junior Mary Breslin, junior Aimee Carroll, sophomore Kim Alhowik, junior Courtney Herald, and junior Jen Thompson.

The UMass varsity men, however, were on the short end, as they succumbed to both WPI and Coast Guard, which is one of the "toughest teams" the men will face all season long. Both schools led UMass from the start and continued to maintain their leads throughout the race.

UMass finished in 6:18, 3 seconds behind WPI, and 16 seconds behind Coast Guard, who captured first place. The men's boat consisted of junior Steven Duval, junior Keith Burgoyne, junior Brian Schwartz, junior Jeff Capbainco, junior Jason West, junior Dave Ducette, sophomore Rob Malionek, and junior Brian Jewett.

In another race, UMass JV men lost to Coast Guard by a slim margin of 2 seconds. Both boats were neck and neck from the start, and continued to strive for the lead throughout. However, Coast Guard prevailed in the last stretch of the race, nipping UMass, which finished in 6:19.

UMass freshmen crew had two races as well this past weekend, against WPI and Coast Guard. The women compiled their second win by defeating both schools handily. The men were beaten by 2 seconds by Coast Guard and they defeated WPI by 25 seconds.

"Both freshmen crews are showing a lot of potential, and should continue to be fast this season, and make the varsity crews faster next season," said Lambert.

In other events this season, UMass crew opened the season against Wesleyan, with both varsity boats winning by a comfortable margin.

The second meet of the season was against Trinity and Mt. Holyoke, in which the women finished in second place, 7 seconds off the pace. The women beat Trinity for the first time ever, finishing in 7:52 to Trinity's 8:06.

UMass travels to Williams College for a meet this weekend, and the women return home Sunday for the Valley Girl Regatta with Smith and Mt. Holyoke on the Connecticut River.

Minutewomen lose twinbill in softball

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team went down to Storrs, Conn. for a doubleheader yesterday, only to be summarily swept by the Huskies, 2-0 and 5-0.

The Minutewomen dropped to 21-10 overall (10-0 in the Atlantic 10), and the 19th-ranked Huskies improved to 30-6. UConn, by virtue of splitting a doubleheader with UMass earlier in the season, took the season series three-games-to-two.

In the first game UConn pitcher Kim Mizesko increased her record to 17-2 by continuing her mastery over UMass, tossing a two-hit shutout while walking only one and striking out 13 Minutewomen. Earlier in the season she blanked UMass by an identical 2-0 score.

One of the UMass hits was a second inning double by Barbara Marean, who increased her NCAA hitting streak record to 27 games. She would not be as lucky in the second game.

UMass' Holly Aprile (7-2) lost her first game in her last eight decisions, giving up only four hits while walking one and striking out three.

UConn jumped on the board in the bottom of the third as Pat Conlon doubled and went to third when UMass' Lisa Melz errored a grounder by Chris Andrade. Shari Blackman then singled to score Conlon.

The Huskies finished out the scoring column in the fifth as Michelle Santo was hit by a pitch and was tripled home by Janna Venice.

In the second game, UMass starter Darlene Claffey took the loss, dropping her record to 9-3. Claffey was hit solidly by the Huskies, exiting after only two-and-a-third innings after giving up 10 hits. She struck out two and walked none.

UConn scored in the first after Venice and Blackman both singled. Adreana D'Innicenzo then singled, scoring Venice. Kim Stahle then singled in Blackman.

In the third Stahle singled and was sacrificed to second by Chris Woodman. Stahle then went to third on a single by Conlon and was knocked in on a single by Andrade. Santo reached first on a fielder's choice as Santo was thrown out at third. Venice then doubled, knocking in Andrade. UMass freshman Kelly Daut relieved Claffey.

In the fifth Andrade singled and went to second by a fielder's choice. Venice and Blackman then singled, scoring Andrade.

Conlon increaded her record to 12-3 by blanking UMass on four hits. She lost to the Minutwomen 1-0 in the season's earlier twinbill.

Marean went hitless in the second game, ending her hitting streak at an NCAA record 27 games.

GAME NOTES: The Minutewomen play a doubleheader against Princeton (27-12) tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Totman Field. Between games UMass will honor seniors Holly Aprile, Peggy Bush, Jen Devlin, and Barbara Marean.

Hodges now concerned with program's image

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Newly appointed University of Massachusetts head football coach Mike Hodges speaks to the press yesterday at Robsham Visitors Center.

Newly appointed University of Massachusetts head football coach Mike Hodges has made his point loud and clear — Minuteman football can no longer dwell on the past three months of turmoil and does have a future.

"This thing was over as of [Wednesday] at three," Hodges said yesterday at a scheduled press conference at Robsham Visitors Center. "Now we've come together. We're one football family again and we'll all start to work in the right direction."

Several questions arose about Hodges ability to redirect the program based on the recent history and current state of the university and its Department of Athletics with regards to the fiscal woes of the Commonwealth.

"If I thought I couldn't [change the direction of the program] I wouldn't have applied for the job," said the Minutemen's former defensive coordinator. "Everyone has their own opinion of where we are and where we're going, but our goal as I met with the administration the last few days was to stop

UMass beats Hawks, wins seventh in a row

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

It's games like these that drive a coach to drink.

Just ask Mike Stone, who watched his University of Massachusetts baseball team (20-11) come dangerously close to blowing a three-run late-inning lead to the University of Hartford Thursday at Earl Lorden Field.

With UMass holding a 5-2 lead in the eighth, the Hawks loaded the bases off Minuteman starter John Russell (1-0) with no outs, before seldom-used sophomore reliever Peter Ferrari came in to close the door on Hartford, getting Hawk third baseman Steve Matthews to pop up before striking out Mike Kostrzewa and Aaron Leonard to end the threat.

"Pete did a great job," Stone said. "He probably pitched out of one of the toughest jams he's ever been in."

Ferrari got out of a jam of his own in the ninth, loading the bases on two walks and a Greg LaRocca error, before settling down and retiring three of the next four Hawk batters for the 6-3 final.

UMass got on the board first, reaching Hawk starter Jeff Rogers for a 1-0 lead when John Carelli's sacrifice fly to short right field brought home LaRocca with the

Lacrosse's Millon firing all the right shots

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

What qualities separate an All-American lacrosse player from others with comparable skills and statistics?

Consider University of Massachusetts attacker Mark Millon. Last season, Millon was an honorable mention All-American, leading the Gorillas with 38 goals. This year, however, Millon has shown he truly is more than an "honorable mention."

For example, take Wednesday's game against Harvard. With less than a minute left in regulation, UMass trailed the unranked Crimson, 7-6. A loss would most likely have knocked UMass out of the running for an NCAA tournament berth.

UMass coach Ted Garber called timeout and gave the team's leading scorer the ball and a mission — tie the game.

Millon delivered, sending home his team-high 35th goal and making the Gorillas' 8-7 overtime win possible.

"When it was in the clutch, he came through once again. That's why he's out there," said Garber, who added Millon is "without question" one of the best players he has ever coached.

In nine games this season, the junior from Huntington, N.Y. has only:

- scored five or more goals four times,
- led the Gorillas in scoring six times,
- rung up 16 scores in the past three games,
- leads the team in all three scoring categories (38 goals, 13 assists, 48 points),
- scored or assisted three winning goals.

Millon also has moved up to an 11th-place tie for career goals with 87 and is 14th in career points with 118. If that isn't enough, he has recorded at least one goal or an assist in 23 consecutive games, dating back to the Gorillas' 1990 NCAA opening-round loss vs. Brown.

Millon gained recognition last year as a scorer. This season, Garber asked him to fill the role of graduated senior Jim McAleavey as the team's "quarterback," the player who sets up the offense from behind the goal crease. Millon has responded, showing he is far from a one-dimensional player.

"Coach asked me this year to settle the team down and run things," Millon said. "I didn't think I'd be scoring so many goals. I thought I'd get a lot more assists."

"I like to always be hustling," Millon added among things besides scoring he tries to do on the field. "I like getting to loose balls and being active when I don't have the ball. I take pride in that."

He also takes pride in being a leader off the field as well. Millon is a team captain as a junior — an honor Garber points to when describing him — and enjoys the responsibility.

"I try to lead by example on and off the field," Millon said. "It's been tough because my relationship with some of the guys on the team has changed a little bit. I can't just let things go.

"It's a big responsibility, but I like being a leader," he said.

A sports management major, Millon was recruited by lacrosse powers North Carolina and Syracuse. But Millon liked what he saw at UMass, particularly the large crowds on the Hill and the style of former coach Dick Garber, who retired in 1990.

"I had great offers, but I loved what Dick Garber did when he recruited me," Millon recalls. "Those other schools were basically kissing my butt — telling me this, telling me that — and Goose [Dick Garber] was just like 'Hey, we want you to come here. If you want to come here, come here. If you don't, go somewhere else.'"

Lacrosse runs in Millon's family. His older brother graduated from Baltimore-area lax power Towson State last year and now plays for the Baltimore Thunder of the Major Indoor Lacrosse League. Millon hopes to join his brother in the pro ranks as well.

"[My brother] taught me so much," Millon recalled. "We're so competitive and he'd always push me and get on me a lot."

As for the MILL, "It's more like something I'd do just to have fun," Millon explained. "It's something I'll probably end up doing because I love the game."

Millon's greatest goal, however, is to make the NCAA final four as his brother did with Towson St. last year.

"I got to see my brother go, and basically it's all I've worked for. it means a lot."

Saturday night's game can be heard on WMUA 91.1 FM at 6:45 p.m.

Convention ratifies pact for Black Student Union

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Staff

Over 70 students from the Black community at the University of Massachusetts overwhelmingly ratified the constitution for the Black Student Union at a constitutional convention at the Malcolm X Cultural Center Friday.

Kendelle Miller, left, and Angela Gabriel look over the proposed constitution for the Black Student Union.

The convention was designed to provide for community participation in the creation of the Black Student Union.

Ricardo Townes, an associate dean in Academic Support Services attended the convention, praising the organizers for "an excellent job" of coordinating the event.

Kevin Duffy, registrar of the Student Government Association said the constitution was the "most organized" he'd seen of any organization on campus.

The convention was facilitated by Fabiola Narcisse, a freshman majoring in English and social thought and political economy. Narcisse, who served on the convention organizing committee, said she was pleased with the turnout and outcome of the event.

"I thought the convention was a great success," she said. "People were enthusiastic, and were eager to make the Black Student Union become a reality."

After the opening remarks by Townes and Duffy, the constitution was read aloud to the delegates by sophomore engineering major Michael Pierre.

Following the presentation of the constitution, Dwight C. Henry, presiding as parliamentarian, set aside a question and answer period.

Junior psychology major Kendelle Miller, who served on the convention planning committee, took minutes of the questions as they were addressed. The questions were innumerous, and mebers of the delegation were asked to write their concerns on paper so become part of the record.

One issue which was raised concerned the limitations of the powers of the president. The president, under the proposed constitution, possessed veto power and the

Perot takes aim at Bush, likes Clinton

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot says he harbors no ill will toward either party. But the Texas billionaire has been aiming his sharpest barbs at President Bush while sometimes seeming to go out of his way to praise Democrat Bill Clinton.

Perot's blunt rhetoric may reflect what many longtime Perot-watchers say is a deep-seated enmity toward Bush, raising the question of whether winning or driving Bush from office may be uppermost in the fellow Texan's mind.

Recent polls suggest Perot draws support about equally from Democrats and Republicans. But his victory in certain key states like Texas could pose a substantial obstacle to Bush's re-election.

Perot has a history of difficult dealings with Bush over the years, culminating in the Dallas businessman's all-out opposition to Bush's conduct of the Persian Gulf War.

Perot denies bad blood and says he doesn't consider his prospective independent candidacy a grudge match with Bush.

His words and actions speak differently.

Even though he has spread several hundred thousand dollars in political contributions over the past 15 years to Democratic and Republican

Student's lips finding entrepreneurial success

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

Challenging big business and companies that have monopolized the natural products market for years, a University of Massachusetts student has found entrepreneurial success with her homemade natural product.

Gabrielle Melchionda, a UMass senior and anthropology major, has taken her idea of creating an all natural lip lubricant and has turned it into a prosperous and popular enterprise.

Melchionda, creator of "Mad Gab's Lip Lube", has had nothing but praise and encouragement for her product which she decided to make because she felt that their was no "truly natural" lip products.

"At first I started making it for just family and friends." Melchionda said. "But eventually I got the idea of making a safe and honest product business."

Mad Gab's Lip lube is being carried by several stores in New England including The Peoples Market here at UMass.

"I think the people at the peoples market have been great," She said. "I see people using it in class and it makes me feel good knowing people like it".

Melchionda, making several flavors which she feels will appeal to all sorts of people, uses nothing but natural products which she feels adds to the honesty of here business.

"I feel if you can pronounce the ingredients and know what they are then you've got a truly natural product," she said.

Using only beeswax, vitamin E and natural oils Melchionda says her lip lube is truly 100 percent natural.

"Most companies are allowed to use 40 percent and call their products 'all natural,'" she said.

Attributing consumer savvy and environmental concerns for the success of her lip lube, Melchionda says she also thinks her honesty with store owners works to her advantage.

"I'm very honest in the field when it comes to selling my product," Melchionda said. "I don't have any sales pitch and buyers like that."

Though her lip lube is does not have to be inspected by the Food and Drug Adminstration, Dr. James Abel, of the University Health Services, says her product is safe and he added that he uses it himself and finds it effective.

Melchionda also feels more students should take their ideas and take a chance as she did with challenging the big corporations who she says she'll never sell out to.

"I hope others will see what I've done and go on their own," She said. "It is hard at first but eventually it gets easier."

Hoping to take her lip lube national this summer, Melchionda has entered a young entrepreneur contest which she hopes to win the $25,000 first prize.

"It's finally starting to help pay for school," She said "But I never started it to make money."

Melchionda says she's off to a successful start and already has a store in Atlanta that wants to sell Mad Gab's Lip Lube.

Congress wants to axe deficit

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thanks to a few thousand bad checks at the House Bank, a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget looks like an idea whose time has come.

"Because of the check-bouncing scandal, members are trying to explain their position and this is the only ship afloat. They need something to go home with," says Rep. Robert Smith (R-Ore.) a leader of the drive for the amendment.

After years in which the proposal has been headed off or narrowly defeated by its Democratic opponents, foes and supporters of the measure say Congress seems likely to vote its approval this year.

With Congress returning from a two-week Easter Vacation Tuesday, support is growing for the measure, aided by lawmakers' desires to demonstrate an ability to act in the wake of the publicity over more than 24,000 bad checks at the House bank.

Even House Speaker Thomas Foley (D-Wash.) an opponent, conceded last week that "my guess is the votes are there to pass it."

Eliminating a deficit of $400 billion will require either large spending cuts or huge tax increases or both. But, as critics point out, the amendment simply requires a balanced budget, leaving the politically sensitive tax and spending decisions for well into the future.

The House Budget Committee begins hearings on the proposal next week, and House and Senate votes could come as early as May. An amendment requires ratification by 38 states after Congress gives its approval; the last one gave 18-year-olds the right to vote in 1971.

Several versions of the amendment are in circulation.

Kelley's marathon days over

BREWSTER, Mass. (AP) — Johnny Kelley, who won the Boston Marathon twice in his youth and competed for the 61st time last week, says he is retiring from marathon racing.

Kelley, 84, said he made his decision last Monday after finishing his 58th Boston Marathon in 61 tries in 5 hours, 58 minutes, 36 seconds.

"I've been thinking about it since last year, but I didn't finish well last year," he said Saturday at the Brewster Bookstore, where he was signing copies of his autobiography, "Young at Heart."

"It was raining and I fell down, and I didn't want it to end that way.

"This year, I went out with a bang. There were thousands of people in the grandstand greeting me, and I had a good race. My time was slow, and at some points near the end of the race I was walking. But my family was there with me and the crowds were great."

Kelley won the Boston race in 1935 and 1945 and was runner-up seven times.

Kelley said his wife, Laura, has been worried about his running and, he said "I don't like to have her worry."

An East Dennis resident, Kelley, who has run 117 marathons, sai he will not stop running.

"I'll run the 3- and 5-mile races, but not the marathons," he said.

Abandoned animals a UMass problem

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Peanut, a kitten, was found huddled over a steam grate at the University of Massachusetts, nursing her numerous wounds and trying to keep from freezing in the bitter cold after her owners abandoned her last winter.

Peanut's case, according to the estimation of a Placement, Education and Treatment Shelter volunteer, Claudia Beaudet, is just one example of the hundreds of animal abandonment cases that happen every year in Amherst.

"I've found cats in dorm rooms, residential hall dryers, under the dining common buildings and on the Route 116 highway," she said.

PETS, a non-profit organization which was founded three years ago by Barbara McGreagor and other former members of Friends of Amherst Stray Animals rescues stray and abandoned animals, medically treats them, spays or neuters them and then places them in volunteer foster homes until an adoptive home is found.

Although she said she hates to target the student population, animal abandonment by students is a common problem in any college town.

"I believe the problem of abandonment stems from ignorance on the student's part rather than intentional malice," said Beaudet, who has been a volunteer at PETS for about nine months.

Students, she said, want the security of a pet but they don't think about the time and energy commitment it takes to care for a pet or what they will do with the pet at the end of a semester.

"Students think if they leave the pet outside someone will pick it up and take care of it," she said. The reality, she said, is less than three percent of these abandoned animals get picked up while the rest die grizzly deaths due to such things as disease, starvation or getting hit by cars.

"There is an urgency to inform students about the abandonment problem for humane reasons as well as for public health reasons," said Beaudet, who is chairperson of PETS's community education board

Class hoping Mandela film will be aired

By SARAH LEVESQUE
Collegian Staff

Inspired by what they've learned , a journalism class is presenting a film on Nelson Mandela and organizing a petition drive demanding the film documenting the emotional U.S. welcoming of the South African leader be shown on television.

Professor David DuBois and students in his "Press and the Third World" class are spearheading the public screening tonight of "Mandela in America," the behind-the-scences documentary of Mandela's visit in 1990 to eight cities across the United States, after 27 years in prison in South Africa.

"Mandela in America," a film which has never been aired by the major networks or public television, will be shown in Room 104 of Thompson Hall tonight at 7 p.m. The event is free.

Produced by the Emmy Award-winning GlobalVision, a production company based out of South Africa, the documentary inspired the class to action as they watched Mandela speak to cheering and crying crowds from Yankee stadium to the Oakland Coliseum.

"[The film] embodies the spirit of democracy and unity as people strive together for racial equality and justice," according to the petition addressed to ABC, CBS, NBC and also PBS.

"Your refusal based on the presumption of having a limited reception both denies the importance of the African-American audience and underestimates the potential significance of the film for the entire American public," the petition states.

Professor DuBois, a visiting professor in the Journalism and African American studies departments emphasized the political message of "Mandela in America."

He said the "film shows aspects of African-American life in this country that the networks refuse to show.

"It is terribly important for our university community to see this film — to have this shown before their eyes," said DuBois.

Leigh Ann Knope, a senior journalism and women studies major in "Press and Third World," urges students to see the documentary.

"Seeing this film with an understanding that it was rejected by the major networks," Knope said.

"People should ask themselves why films like these weren't shown," she said.

Marc Randazza, a junior in the class, believes the film captures the African National Congress leader in a way that the news coverage did not.

"I drew comparisons between Mandela and Malcom X that I had never noticed before," Randazza said.

"This film addresses how universal the problem is, not just [the oppression of] Blacks in South Africa, but Blacks in America and all minorities."

Week to remember Holocaust

Events planned to raise awareness on campus

By KARA SCHMIDT

Blessed is the match consumed in kindling flame.
Blessed is the flame that burns in the secret fastness of the heart.
Blessed is the heart with strength to stop its beating for honor's sake.
Blessed is the match consumed in kindling flame.

— Hannah Senesh, Yugoslavia, 1944

Some may have noticed a verse of this poem in the yellow signs around campus. Some perhaps even stopped to take the time to read them. But how many can actually say they knew this upcoming week was Holocaust Memorial week?

Not many, says Yehudit Heller, program director of Hillel. "There's not enough awareness, there's never enough awareness. The minute I believe there's enough awareness, I can stop doing things—reaching out, encouraging people to remember."

This upcoming week a variety of activities are being held in remembrance of the Holocaust. The purpose, says Heller, is to educate people and promote an awareness on campus. "By creating a variety of events, there is a way to reach different people.

"It's very educating. The Holocaust is the extreme and bringing the extreme and putting it out there does something to you. Students can take from it and apply it directly into their everyday lives—it's around all the time."

One doesn't have to be Jewish in order to participate, either. Along with attending the events, buttons are also available to be worn.

"When I see a student wearing a yellow button a message is sent: I'm with you, I'm aware of something that happened to you. This is very important," says Heller.

This week will have an opportunity to learn about this message. Tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Hillel House, Holocaust survivor, Saba Wenger, and her granddaughter, UMass student Lisa Bovarnick will speak publicly together for the first time about the role of the Holocaust in their lives and their relationship.

On Tuesday at 2:30 p.m. at the Hillel House Conference room, songs related to the Holocaust will be taught and sung in an open session of Saul Perlmutter's course, The Music of Jewish Life.

"Poetry of the Holocaust" will be held on Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the Hillel House Conference room. Also on Wednesday the film "Korczak" will be shown at 7:30 pm in the Campus Center rooms 904-908. This film is the story of Janusz Korczak, a Polish-Jewish doctor, writer, and educator who dedicated his life to improving the lives of children.

A commemoration service will be held Thursday at 12:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

The ceremony will include the lighting of memorial candles, poetry, readings, and brief addresses by students, faculty and staff. All events are free and open to the public.

Lesbian sex skits performed

Comic and performers come to Northampton

By PAMELA A. GAULIN
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — It was an afternoon celebration and exploration for some of Northampton's 10,000 kissing, cuddling lesbians.

Comic Lea DeLaria, performance artists Kiss and Tell, otherwise known as Persimmon Blackbridge, Susan Stewart, and Lizard Jones, and editor of the Herotica series Susie Bright performed in "Sex and Art" at The Academy of Music Sunday.

"Welcome to "Sex and Art," which are the same thing to some of us," DeLaria said. "Or at least it is when you do it with me."

DeLaria introduced Kiss and Tell when she felt the audience was warmed up and "hot" enough.

Kiss and Tell's performance, "True Inversions" began with a darkened stage and a recording of simulated sex sounds. The sounds loudened, quieted and then Kiss and Tell interweaved three very different stories about lesbian sexual encounters.

"She kneels down and kisses the bottom of my dress," Black- bridge said. "It's corny, but I like it."

"We're reading together. Her thigh is touching my thigh," Jones said. "The entire world is revolving around four inches of flesh, hers and mine."

Kiss and Tell's twenty minute video of explicit lesbian sex was continually censored with graphics reading, "censored by BC [British Columbia] regulation 260/86 section 3(e)," and "censored- unsafe sex," and was intercut with interviews of the video crew.

"If something makes you angry, it's not censorship, if you don't agree with something, it's not censorship," Jones said about the lesbian separatist graphic which flashed when one of the male crew members appeared in the video.

"Some people just may not like having Paul in the video," Jones said.

After the video, Kiss and Tell read the letters they wish they could write to their mothers.

"I can't talk to you about sex. My desire to have sex with females makes me a lesbian," Jones said. "The desire outweighs the risk. I miss you but a life cannot only be a lie."

After an impromptu display of simulated sex with DeLaria, Susie Bright took center stage.

Bright said that until the mid-80s she never saw depictions of lesbian sex which portrayed a post-coming out experience and in Herotica 3, a collection of short stories by and about lesbians which Bright is editing, will reflect this experience.

"They're so gay, they're over it. They're post-gay," Bright said about the writers of the pieces in the collection.

When Bright asked people to ask her something very sexual because she wanted to know what went on behind closed doors in Northampton, nobody responded.

power to approve all financial expenditures of the organization.

Students also addressed the incoporation of other Black UMass organizations into the Black Student Union.

Michele Monteiro, co-editor of Nommo News, asked whether these organizations would receive funding if they were in the Black Student Union.

Under the proposed constitution, each of these organizations could be approved to receive one seat in a representative body that would legislate issues of concern to the Black Student Union.

A number of students suggested the constitution be ratified that evening with the understanding it could be amended in the future. The constitution was ultimately ratified by an overwhelming majority of the delegates present at the convention.

The delegates decided to reconvene at the same time on May 1 to discuss any other amendments to the constitution. This meeting will take place at the Malcolm X Cultural Center.

candidates alike, much of it to Texans, he has given nothing to Bush, who lived in Texas for 20 years and represented the state in Congress.

And in a gesture that must irritate the president's family, Perot volunteers are operating a busy drive-in petition-signing booth in north Dallas just a few blocks from the home of the president's eldest son, George W. Bush.

Perot's rhetorical venom against Bush has intensified the closer Perot gets to formally announcing an independent candidacy.

Listen to recent Perot on Bush:

• "When you've got an incumbent saying, 'I will do anything it takes to win'... then when you know what he did in the last campaign, look at what they're doing now, it's kind of all-time new low," he said in an interview with the Associated Press last week.

• On Bush's 1990 abandonment of his no-new-taxes pledge and support of a congressional budget agreement: "It was a study in White House arrogance."

• On domestic policies: "I'm talking about two-day education summits... these little video events set up to say, 'I am the education president. I am the environmental president. I am the drug president.' Then you do a stunt and go on to another issue."

• On federal red ink: "Do you ever hear the incumbent president talking about the debt? Do you hear him talking about this year's deficit?"

■ federal budget

But they all would require the president to submit a balanced budget, something President Bush has never done, despite his support for the legislation. And they all would make it difficult for Congress to run a deficit.

It would forbid each year's spending from exceeding revenues without a vote by three-fifths majorities to do so. Tax increases could be approved by majorities of the entire House and Senate, not just majorities of lawmakers actually voting.

The arguments on both sides of the issue have changed little since similar amendments fell just shy of the required two-thirds majority in the House in 1990 and the Senate in 1986.

Democratic opponents argue that a requirement for a balanced budget would lead to Draconian slashes in needed government programs.

They also say the measure could necessitate steep tax increases. That frightens business groups like the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber opposes the amendment unless it contains a provision that taxes could only be raised by a three-fifths vote of Congress.

Democrats, in turn, oppose that, fearing it would lead to still deeper spending cuts, although a smattering of liberals such as Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill.) and Rep. Joseph Kennedy (D-Mass.) are supporters.

Mass. reps gain power despite loss of seat

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Massachusetts congressional delegation is gaining power on Capitol Hill despite the possibility of losing one of its congressional seats, according to one hill-watcher.

The congressional newspaper Roll Call moved the all-Democratic Bay State delegation up from seventh to sixth in its annual ranking of the most influential delegations.

"Things could be worse for the Bay State given the anti-Democratic atmosphere there," Roll Call wrote.

A key to the state's elevation in clout is the likely ascension of Rep. Gerry Studds to chairman of the House Merchant Marine Committee - assuming he wins re-election. Although not as powerful as such panels as Ways and Means or Armed Services, the chairmanship would give Studds sway over a broad range of issues from the Coast Guard to ocean pollution, shipbuilding, oil spill regulations, and fisheries management.

The move would mean that the Massachusetts delegation would have two committee chairmanships in the House and one in the Senate. Rep. Joseph Moakley chairs the powerful House rules committee, the agenda-setter for the House, while Sen. Edward Kennedy chairs the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

There are pitfalls ahead for the delegation.

Rep. Brian Donnelly's retirement at the end of thier year will cost the state a seat on Ways and Means, the tax-writing committee, and deprive Irish-Americans in Massachusetts of one of the leading advocates of increased Irish immigration.

Studds, who had the closest re-election fight of his career in 1990, is no shoe-in this time. Reps. Joseph Early and Chester Atkins, the delegation's two members who sit on the powerful Appropriations Committee — Congress' pork clearinghouse — may be forced to run against one another if the state loses its challenge of the 1990 census.

Flynn wants 'boot camp'

Hopes National Guard will help youth

BOSTON (AP) — Mayor Raymond Flynn, who opposes a judge's call for the National Guard to patrol the streets, said he'd like to see the Guard run a "boot camp" for youths convicted of violent crimes.

"I'm not going to ask part-time soldiers to do the work of full-time professional police officers," Flynn said. "But I would welcome the Guard's help in keeping young offenders from becoming hard-core criminals."

On Friday, Dorchester District Judge Darrell Outlaw called for more law enforcement presence in high-crime neighborhoods and suggested National Guard troops could patrol the streets.

Outlaw's comments came after the arraignment of a suspect in the random slaying of Charlestown Sarjeant, 25.

Sarjeant was killed Thursday when as many as 11 people attacked him and one of them stabbed him several times. Four men have been charged so far.

Police Superintendent-in-Chief William Bratton also rejected the idea of the National Guard patrolling Boston, saying Saturday the department "is more than capable of handling any situation."

Frank McGee, counsel for the police union, was more blunt.

"We don't need another Kent State in Boston," said Frank McGee, referring to the fatal shootings of four anti-Vietnam War demonstrators at the Ohio school in 1970.

I was walking down North Pleasant street today and noticed there by my feet, written in chalk, the words "Frats stop Raping."

I was very perplexed, being in a fraternity myself, as to why someone was accusing me of rape. After all, I have never raped anybody in my life and would never consider it. Oh, perhaps the person who wrote this meant the fraternity type of man should stop raping. That's it. There is only one kind of male that joins frats and he is just the sort of person who would rape someone.

This same person probably also believes that all homosexuals talk with a lisp and all people with lisps are homosexuals; that all lesbians shave their heads and females with shaven heads are lesbians; all Blacks steal; all Jews are cheap; all blondes are stupid; all fraternities rape...In a recent report that evaluates all kinds of sexual misconduct at the University of Massachusetts done by the Sexual Assault Advisory Committee for the years of 1990 and 1991, they found that out of a total of 100 reported incidents, zero were fraternity-related. In fact, 59 out of the 100 were residence-related.

All I have to say to the person who wrote this message is don't display your stupidity and ignorance so openly. Not only can it cause a lot of harm, but it makes you look like a chump.

I was strangled by P.C.

I think I've figured out this whole multicultural thing.

When I came to the University four years ago, I was told I had to learn to appreciate different cultures, religions, ethnic groups and sexual orientations.

Being a silly ignorant 'girl' from an Irish Catholic world, I was informed that as a member of the 'majority' I was responsible for combatting racism and bigotry by treating people equally.

Gayle Long

Strange, my religion classes in high school told me to love my neighbor as myself. No labels attached — according to the sisters and the priests. Everyone was equal.

Moving into the dorm, one of the first people I met here was Jewish — I didn't really know any Jewish people growing up. She didn't judge me for my ethnicity, nor I hers. We were friends. I still consider her one of the most energetic and lovable people I've come across. I wouldn't trade her friendship for anything — and I hope she wouldn't either.

But during sophomore year, I began working at this newspaper, and I found another aspect of multiculturalism. It's called White Guilt.

I was told repeatedly I was the cause of oppression (my grandparents, who are immigrants, had to come to this country to get a job because of the tragedies in their own country; when they arrived, they had a hard time finding work because of a wonderful thing called NINA, meaning No Irish Need Apply). I began to believe it, and the cause became mine — fight the evil Republicans, the evil White males, the evil (and even worse) non-feminists.

My White Guilt started with political issues and infiltrated my entire being — all aspects of my life. Family and friends who did not see the pain of the oppressed were racists and bigots — ignorant people who had to be taught a lesson about equality and humanity.

Instead, I was the one who needed the lesson.

I tried to understand the pain of these oppressed people, tried to understand their point of view. I made and lost friends over the issue of diversification — of the University, the student body, the newspaper — everything.

Instead, I learned a few other things, thanks to multiculturalism.

First — everything is someone's fault. Whether if it who is to blame for the Gulf War, the Middle Eastern crisis or better yet abortion, usually the finger is pointed. Everyone is to blame.

Second — there is such a thing as reverse racism. Every time a person of color who does not know me accuses me of being racist — which has happened in forums and in other places — I think of the people of color who I consider friends; those who have gotten to know me and I have learned from as well.

To me, the friends I have made who did not share my sheltered upbringing but have taught me about life, love and friendship; these are the people who make mulitculturalism possible.

Third — the one thing that cracks me up about multiculturalism — it's a man's world. Don't let anyone fool you — no matter how old I get or how liberal I think I am — the multicultural movement will always see me as a little White girl with no mind of my own.

Sorry, boys, you're wrong.

The only problem I have is figuring out what's worse — a racist feminist, a sexist mulitculturalist — or an ignorant Conservative.

Stop the anti-minority hysteria and English-only movement

Two bills currently lie before the Massachusetts legislature that would make English the 'official language' of the Commonwealth and institutionalize racist cultural politics throughout the state.

Mass. Senate Bill 1421 and House Bill 439 are the statutory weapons aimed at the heart of the bilingual community in our state. This law would prevent the mandatory use of any language other than English in state or state-related business or activities. It would thus render full control of discretionary authorities over whether the bilingual community in any given area would have access to rights and services. In effect, it would institutionalize a status of second-class citizenship for those who are less proficient in English.

Therefore, in areas experiencing a wave of anti-minority hysteria, rights and services, including the right to vote, could be effectively withheld from the community.

One of the few exceptions made in the bill is for the possibility of the state pushing programs designed to assist those needing to make "as rapid as posssible a transition to English." Apart from the fact that this vision provides no role in the state for languages (and hence cultures) other than English, no funds or methods of raising funds for such programs. The current situation is that in many bilingual areas, the demand for ESL classes far outweigh the supply.

Such measures would cut many bilingual people off from access to services such as 911 emergency lines, AIDS education, unemployment and retaining programs, and clearly would threaten bilingual education programs beyond the ESL level. Elsewhere in the United States, English-only laws have challenged the use of non-English texts in libraries, restricted the use of other languages in business and encouraged the use of rules regulating workplace speech in other languages.

Luisa Quintanilla

Worst of all, many constitutional rights of the bilingual community would be threatened and violated, such as the freedoms of speech and equal protection and rights regarding both criminal and civil legal proceedings, such as the interpretation of testimony and victim's rights.

Furthermore, the English-only movement has a history of being guided and directed by individuals with clear racist backgrounds who have made explicitly anti-Latino remarks during their times in the leadership of such groups. The movement is lead by U.S. English, a group founded by John Tanton, a well known anti-immigration and anti-Latino campaigner, and funded by groups associated with pro-Nazism.

The specter of such racist and discriminatory laws infecting the public realm of the Commonwealth has sent shock waves through the bilingual, and especially the Hispanic, communities. The reaction has been the formation of a state-wide group to fight the proposed measures, Massachusetts English Plus, a group promoting multilingualism and multiculturalism.

The group is dedicated to lobbying, educating, coalition building and publicizing issues surrounding multiculturalism, particularly the struggle against English-only. They also try to empower minority communities through voter registration.

However, the battle is far from won and the drive towards enshrining racism in Massachusetts law is proceeding rapidly. The fight must be carried out at the local level, particularly in the Valley. Indeed, this law actually originates from our own area, with the Senate Bill being filed by Senator Martin J. Dunn of Holyoke. Ironically, his own city has a 31 percent Hispanic population.

Everyone is indeed in the fight against legalized and institutionalized racism in our state. Mass. English Coalition-West is located in Northampton and should be contacted if you want to get involved.

Third World Affairs page perpetuates divisions, belittles Puerto Rico

In response to Luisa Quintanilla's article, "Useless Organizations," I feel compelled to argue against it. Her article is hollow and an insult to the character of the Third World Affairs page. Her unfounded condition of jaundice and asininity has no place in the struggle.

Quintanilla, Ibish, and Rao patronize the idea Puerto Rico does not belong to the Latin American or Third World community. They attest that Puerto Rico's colonial relationship to the U.S. and the privileges and benefits that Puerto Ricans supposedly possess disjoin us from those communities. In spite of their political clairvoyance, they fail to understand the condition of Puerto Rico and its people "cannot become intelligible nor clear to itself except in the exact measure that we can discern the movements which give it historical form and content" (Frantz Fanon, The Wretched of the Earth, p.#36).

A thorough understanding of the condition of Puerto Rico its role as a captive internal colony satisfying certain conditions of existence for the larger ambitions of U.S. capitalism cannot but yield concrete evidence that Puerto Rico is a developing country and an inextricable member of Latin America and the Third World community. Do not be confounded. The attempt to establish divisions among Third World peoples is the essence of her article.

The spirit of "abject apathy" she has branded on the Puerto Rican community here is the unfortunate trademark for the Third World community. Quintanilla has rebuffed invitations to join struggles in solidarity with the Asians, Latina/o, and American Indian students.

It is a fact the predominant Latin American community at UMass is distinctly Puerto Rican. This only reflects Puerto Rico's status as an internal colony and the colonizer's desire his minions play the role as model colonists to others who are not so directly within the empire. In consequence, it is logical that a great deal of the efforts as well as the worthless multicultural activities carried out by certain leading members reflect upon our own particular experiences and interests.

I do not condone this situation. It perpetuates our own divisions and inhibits any potential sense of community among us. However, such divisive arguments about our isolationist condition must be presented within the historical context in which the dynamic occurs.

I commend the Third World Affairs page for demonstrating Spanish has a place in the Collegian. However, it is inexcusable that, in order to further disenfranchise and expose unfounded prejudices against Puerto Ricans, unethical translations be formulated. In this and many more ways, her article constitutes an inglorious defeat to the struggle and mission of the Third World Affairs page.

which aims to teach people about how to treat their animals humanely.

This summer, she said, a rabies epidemic is predicted to hit Massachusetts. A few rabies cases, she said, have already been reported in Connecticut.

Then there is the problem, she said, of the highly contagious Feline Leukemia disease which is incurable. "It would cause a mass hysteria if hundreds of animals are running around without their rabies or Feline Leukemia shots," said Beaudet, who is chairperson of PETS's public communications board.

"There is no excuse for abandonment when there are so many other alternatives available to people," she said.

If people, she said, need assistance in placing their unwanted animal they should call the Greenfield Animal Shelter, the MSPCA in Springfield, the Friends of Amherst Stray Animals or PETS.

"Although a lot of animals get euthanized in shelters, people should remember the animal's chance for survival is far greater in a shelter than outside," she said.

PETS, she said, doesn't euthanize an animal unless it is wild and has no ability to be tamed or it has a terminal illness, such as Feline Leukemia.

"Students must remember that what they want for themselves is not always best for the animal and in the end it is the animal that loses," said Beaudet.

...And the only rule is 'offend'

By SHAWN McDONNELL

Foghorn
Hampden Theater
April 16-18 and 23-25

In one scene from Hanay Geiogamah's Foghorn, a buffalo uses a broken peace treaty as toilet paper, then throws the soiled document at a white audience member. In nearly every other scene, a group of savage Native Americans go wild and kill somebody. This is a good indication of the play's powder-keg subtlety, and surpassingly bad taste.

Foghorn is not good political theater — indeed, it is not theatre at all. It is a smug assault on a captive audience, masquerading as a "statement" on the plight of Native Americans. The play is devoid of even the tiniest scrap of information on the history it purports to examine, and it seems incapable of deciding which side it is on.

While it is clear that Hanay Geiogamah is an angry man, it would take a genius of perception to figure out who he is angry at. To the layman, it appears that Mr. Geiogamah is merely throwing his hatred around, randomly, as if no one ever told him that being an extremist political hipster involved making up your mind.

Geiogamah's "play" is a hodge-podge of sketches, portraying whites as a race of impotent, Bible-thumping murderers and thieves, and Native Americans as a race of primitive, unwashed murderers and thieves. One can hardly help but ask who the heroes are supposed to be. What is the point of all this random abuse? Nobody's on nobody's side, and the only rule is to offend as frequently as possible.

Foghorn is a bundle of negative stereotypes and invectives strung together in a rambling episodic fashion, which insures that nothing follows anything logically, and that no two pieces are ideologically similar. The only recurrent theme this play has is the theme of unwarranted abuse.

Geiogamah's pseudo-intellectual scribblings have been crudely staged by W. Rochelle Calhoun, who turns them into a sort of mirthless cabaret, with embarassingly frequent blackouts and choppy movement. Calhoun brings a whole new level of insults into Geiogamah's already slanderous text, by depicting Native Americans as feather-wearing gorillas, and their white conquerers as cross-dressers and stumblebums.

The ensemble cast is functional, but mediocre. Perhaps they were the only actors Calhoun could find that would agree to appear in such a hateful, stomach-churning work.

At it's best, Foghorn is pointless, such as when a young Native American girl does a piercingly off-key impersonation of Nelson Eddy, or when a man spends 15 minutes pounding a drum and yelling. At it's worst, it is a hateful display of racial stereotyping which fails to arouse any useful reaction.

One would think that the New World Theatre, a group devoted to giving minorities a theatrical voice, would know better than to present such a tasteless expression of everything that they allegedly oppose. If the funds which this group is currently fighting for are given, one can only hope that they will not waste them on more tripe like this.

Ska show fuels crazed mosh pit

Ska is a highly-explosive musical genre. Anyone who begs to differ needs only to take a quick glimpse at last Thursday evening's performance by Bim Skala Bim at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton.

It's a given that people are going to mosh at a ska show; however, I'm not quite sure that the band was even ready for the insanity that transpired once the music kicked in. In fact, Bim was forced to stop playing mid-song about three tunes into the set, when an overly-zealous group of skinheads began to channel their energies towards one unfortunate individual in particular.

"We want you to be human to each other, for Christ's sake," shouted trombonist Vito Incognito as he jumped into the crowd in an attempt to restore some order. "You don't grab someone by the neck and throw him down!"

Energy. Pure and simple, that's what this band provides when they hit the stage. The blood that flowed from my leg during the show was testimony

The Cure's negativity can be a joy for days

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

"Burst grin giggle bliss skip jump sing and shout," for Wish, the new release from the Cure.

Okay, nobody is going to win the "positive outlook" award by listening to the Cure, but listening to this new material, however dark it becomes, can be a joy for days.

Robert Smith sings that above quote in "Doing the Unstuck," the most positive song on the LP. Other than that, there is another happy-go-lucky type of song and a stack about lost-love.

The most pressing question relating to the new Cure release was, "Can they continue to create unique and unforced music?" Smith doubted this himself on the occasion of their "breakup," awhile back. With the release of Wish, they have shown that they can make fresh music, sort of.

Innovation for the Cure is not like that of other bands. Most every song on Wish is easily placed as "Cure music," but within their own realm, they do reach past where they have been, though not very far.

The feel and texture of Wish is not as obvious as has been the previous few albums. Many songs have long, slow building instrumental introductions, a la Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Kiss Me, while others just arrive without caution. If there is one factor which separates Wish from its predecessors, it is its sometimes screeching and scratching guitar sounds. This could be an influence of new band member, Perry Bamonte, who plays guitar, bass and keyboards. Bamonte replaced original member Laurence Tolhurst, who was canned soon after recording Disintegration.

The opening song, "Open," is exemplary of the prominent guitar sound. It also shows the confusion that Smith feels right now. "I really don't know what I'm doing here," he sings, sorting through an unwanted social situation. "Open" displays some of the same ideas as "Prayers for Rain," but without the keen trimmed down lyrics.

Next is a "From the edge of the deep green sea," a dialogue between two lovers who are sick of each other yet cannot make a break. "I wish I could just stop/I know another moment will break my heart/too many tears/too many times/too many years I've cried for you," Smith sings.

"Doing the Unstuck," and "Friday I'm in Love," mark the middle of the album with an attempt at hope and happiness. Still, in "Unstuck," the singer is faced with an opposing force who says "it's much too late," for happiness. Smith tries enough, prompting her to "kick out the gloom/ kick out the blues/tear out the pages with all the bad news," but at the close of the song there is no sign of her relenting.

"Friday" is an attempt at carefree indifference, but darkness manages to squeeze through — "Thursday I don't care about you/it's Friday I'm in love."

"Trust" a solemn, mostly-piano intro goes on for over a minute and is then joined for the same amount of time by bass, drums and keyboards. The lyrics then join the instruments with, "there is no-one left in the world that I can hold onto." The vocals blend with the music in a way that makes them apart of the music. The music seems to say much more in return.

Creating much the same feeling is "To Wish Impossible Things," which also relies on the music so well to create its mood. Bongos and other percussion create a middle eastern feeling which separates this song from the others.

The last song, "End," blends all of the instruments with a vocal affect than gives the impression of spinning, as is the head of the once again confused Smith. Finally, he has come to some conclusion, "I think I've reached that point/where giving up and going on/are both the same dead end to me." He goes on, chanting "Please stop loving me/please stop loving me."

Through the wailings, disturbance, anger and longing of Wish, the Cure has produced a fresh new album. Still, it has left a craving behind, like after drinking milk. I need something more; this album would not leave me satisfied, be it the last. However, with two and three years between their last few albums, we may have a while to learn the outcome.

■ Bim Skala Bim

to that. As far as mosh pits go, I've been in nastier, but for Bim Skala Bim, this one topped them all.

It was powerful scene, that's for sure. The band played their usual repetoire of favorites ("Shoes", "Blue", "In the Mail", "Tell Me", "Fathead", etc.), along with two of their earlier creations "Chief Inspector" and "Jah Laundromat". Although their sound wasn't quite as tight as it's been in previous shows, it was overcome by the fact that the adrenaline level produced was remarkably high. Which was greater than most ska bands are able to produce, even on their best nights.

Critics and fans alike seem to have a tendency to harp on the fact that Bim does killer versions of "Sunshine of Your Love" and "Brain Damage", but they're certainly worth mentioning again. I believe that you really have to hear both songs to fully appreciate them, because, if you didn't know better, you'd probably think that they were old-style "pick-it-up, pick-it-up" classics, instead of the rock radio standards that they originally were. The new interpretations sound totally natural, as Bim's mastery of their craft invariably dominates the club, and leaves you dripping with sweat, and with an ear-to-ear smile.

This night wasn't exactly their finest hour, as far as their sound goes, but it was still a fantastic set, nonetheless. Even on a slightly subpar night, Bim Skala Bim still manages to crush most other bands like a grape.

Interesting note: look out for the opening act, The Bombastics. They've quickly been carving themselves out a spot on the local scene, by wowing crowds while opening for Bim, Chucklehead, and Who's Kiddin' Who, among others. They're a band on the rise.

Political activists sponsor free show of local bands

By ROLAND COGGIN
Collegian Staff

20/20 Vision Show
The Hatch
April 26

Friday night at the Hatch a large crowd got to check out three bands and support a cool political cause thanks to an organization called 20/20 Vision. They are concerned with a variety of issues, from decreasing military spending to protecting the environment, and admission was free to those who wrote letters to Congress or the White House.

Local Music

I asked Bush to get with it at the environmental convention in Rio (a little too politely, though.)

Sleepyhead was the first band to play, and by the time they finished their soundcheck, 20 or 30 dedicated fans were dancing up a storm.

The band goes to the University of Massachusetts, and they've been the life of many parties since they got together a few weeks ago. Guitarists Russ (formerly of the Sauce) and Jerry, who have been playing together for years, impressed the crowd with their tight playing and well-written originals. Dan Koetke (one of the best drummers on the local scene) and John the bass player had the crowd going nuts with their happening grooves.

Sleepyhead is a band worth seeing with their cool rock sound and some of the friendliest fans a band could hope for.

Flux, a funk band from Washington D.C., was next to play, but technical trouble got them off to a slow start. Though sound musically, their low energy level had many people heading for the door.

Those who stayed were lucky to see Zen under Fire, an impressively heavy band from Boston. Their crunchy riffs and intensity were a nice end to an excellent show.

Imported jazz at the Hatch

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

The Russians are coming!

Tonight the Jeff Holmes Big Band will welcome the St. Petersburg Quartet to the Hatch in the Student Union for an evening of jazz. Featured in the show is David Goloschekin, who is considered to be one of the top jazz musicians in the Commonwealth of Independent States.

The relationship between the two groups began last May when Goloschekin visited this country and heard the Jeff Holmes Big Band perform at UMass. This led to an invitation by Goloschekin to Holmes for his group to tour Russia, which they did last November as part of the International Jazz Festival in Russia.

Aside from being a top jazz musician in his country, Goloschekin is also the Artistic Director at the Jazz Philharmonic Hall in St. Petersburg. In an interview Goloschokin explained the exchange between the two groups as very important not only for cultural reasons but because "music is the universal language."

Goloschekin, in a thick accent, described events in his country. "I have a second life. It is absolutely good for music and everything. Now we are free to do what we want. I am beginning all over again."

Holmes relayed his observations on his visit to Russia at such an historic time. "It was a shock. They truly appreciated our music. They have less of the diversions we have and music is not so accessible, but they listen intently."

He noted, "when Russians ask questions about music they ask how you feel inside. They listen for the inner self versus technical ability."

Featured with Goloschekin, who plays Flegelhorn and violin, will be Pyota Kornev on piano, Eduard Moskalev on bass, and Stannisslav Strelvos on drums.

The Russians will perform with the Jeff Holmes Big Band and also as a quartet. The show begins at 8 p.m. and will be the only appearance the St. Petersburg Quartet will make while in the area.

Haigis Hoopla II pushed ahead a week

Haigis Hoopla II, the 3-on-3 outdoor basketball festival sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Sport Management program and WHMP-FM, has been rescheduled for May 2 and 3 due to inclement weather.

Roster changes will be permitted. All changes must be submitted by Thursday Apr. 30 at 9 p.m. Event personnel will staff the telephones at (413) 545-4422 Monday, Apr. 27 throught Friday, May 1, from 5-9 p.m. Messages may be left at other times. The times for next week's games will be available Friday, May 1 from 1-9 p.m. at 545-4422.

Friday night's Registration Party was a huge success with over 600 participants and spectators in attendance. Reebok's Slam Dunk contest was won by Norm Gill who dazzled the crowd with a 360 degree twirl. The Spalding 3-Point Shooting contest male and female divisional winners were Ranca Tuba, 22 of Chicopee, and Leiat Hoffman, 19 of Mount Holyoke College, respectively.

The youth division proved to be exciting with a tie at the end of regulation between Ed Bustamante, 11, and Chris Hoose, 12, both of Amherst. Bustamante eventually won the shoot-out.

The event will be run next weekend rain or shine.

NFL draft surprises, Howard to Washington

By DAVE GOLDBERG
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — The Washington Redskins showed why they've stayed at the top for a decade, plucking Heisman Trophy winner Desmond Howard on Sunday in an NFL draft spiced with swaps, including a deal that sent Eric Dickerson to the Los Angeles Raiders.

The Indianapolis Colts, after trading Dickerson for two mid-round draft choices, did the expected on a day of surprises by making defensive tackle Steve Emtman the No. 1 pick and linebacker Quentin Coryatt the No. 2 choice.

The Super Bowl champion Redskins who stole the show in the first round by dealing with Cincinnati for the Bengals' No. 4 choice to snare Howard. Then, after Green Bay took defensive back Terrell Buckley at No. 5, the Bengals made the surprise pick of the first round by taking Houston quarterback David Klingler.

AP Photo

TOP PICK — Steve Emtman, shown in a 1992 file photo, was the top pick in the NFL draft Sunday, taken by the Indianapolis Colts. Emtman, an All-American defensive lineman from Washington, has been negotiating with Indianapolis for several weeks, but they have not announced a deal.

Cain, Millon lead Gorillas to overtime victory at Rutgers

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — There should be no doubt in anyone's mind that the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team is a "fourth-quarter team" after Saturday night's 9-8 overtime win over Rutgers, its fourth come-from-behind victory of the season.

"It's always nice to have a little breathing room," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "I'm happy we came back and beat them. [Rutgers] is a good team."

The Gorillas (8-2) all but sealed up an NCAA tournament bid when Mike Cain whistled a shot past Scarlet Knights goalie John Kidon 47 seconds into sudden-death overtime, setting off a celebration among team members and the 100 or so UMass fans who made the trip to New Jersey.

"As soon as they went into that zone," Cain explained, [assistant coach Tim] Soudan mentioned that if [John] Schlipf had the ball up top that would just suck that defenseman in and I would be wide open for a shot. That's pretty much how it happened. It was just me against the goalie and I just shot it hard."

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team was checked closely by Rutgers. However it managed a 9-8 win, keeping its tournament hopes very much alive.

The Gorillas overcame both a sloppy first-half performance and a 26-save performance by Kidon. They erased two Rutgers' leads in the fourth, the second time with 37 seconds remaining, to overcome a strong Rutgers' Senior Night effort. A big part of that was the play of UMass goaltender Tom LoPresti, who stopped 16 hard shots.

"I felt really steady," Lo Presti said. "I knew I had to play tough. I knew it was going to be a one-goal game."

LoPresti also was penalized for a push from behind, which prompted Ray Suris' entry into the game. Suris came in cold and made a point-blank save on the man-down, giving UMass a boost.

"Suris went out there and stuffed them cold. That was a big play for us," Garber said.

The Scarlet Knights took 7-5 and 8-7 leads in the fourth before the Gorillas battled back. Strong defense and two goals from Mark Millon led the way for UMass in the fourth.

Rutgers took a 7-5 lead at 8:24 of the fourth when midfielder Jamie Watson burned his defender and got a clean shot at Tom LoPresti. But a minute later, Mario Lopez scooped up an errant UMass pass, rushed in on net and scored to cut the lead to 7-6.

UMass wasn't done. After Rutgers won the ensuing face off, defender Corey Cronin took the ball away and shuttled it to Kevin O'Connor, who broke through three Scarlet Knight defenders before passing to fellow speedster Chris Nentwich. Nentwich carried upfield before finding Millon (3 goals), who scored to tie the game at 7-7.

However, the Scarlet Knights weren't about to roll over. Christian Lamanna found the back of the net to recapture the lead 8-7 on a nice feed from Dan Spillet, pushing the Gorillas' backs to the wall with two minutes to go.

But UMass took the ball away from Rutgers with a minute left and worked for a shot against the Scarlet Knights' zone defense. With 37 seconds left in the contest, Nentwich found Millon, who evaded his defender and cranked a 12-yard shot past Kidon to force the Gorillas' second-straight overtime game.

Millon was not the only offensive standout. Schlipf scored two unassisted goals in the first half, burning his defender and connecting both times. He extended his career-best totals to 13 goals and 6 assists.

UMass was outshot 29-16 in the first half, although all 16 of its shots were on net. The second half saw the Gorillas turn up the heat on Kidon, as they outshot the Knights 30-14 in the second half.

"If we had made some of those earlier shots count," Garber said, "we might not have had to come back like that."

Garber also gave credit to the Gorilla defense, which held the opposition under 10 goals for the seventh time this season.

Baseball splits with Rutgers, earns playoff bid

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, NJ — The baseball rivalry between the University of Massachusetts and Rutgers University is fast approaching the intensity of a Red Sox-Yankees or Dodgers-Giants matchup. The only thing that was accomplished by last weekend's series was a reminder that the two teams despise each other.

The Minutemen, after losing a pair of games to Rutgers in last Saturday's action, 8-2 and 5-4, swept the final two games on Sunday by scores of 16-5 and 4-1, clinching a berth in the Atlantic 10 Championships.

The Minutemen broke open a two-run lead in the fifth inning in Sunday's opener. Jay Dodig had a two-run single in the fifth, while Keith Richards and Bill Knight added RBI singles.

Steve Corradi crosses the plate in a game earlier this season. The Minutemen defeated Rutgers twice yesterday to earn a spot in the A-10 playoffs.

Jeff Toothaker, last week's Pitcher of the Week in the A-10, improved his record to 6-0. UMass capitalized on Rutgers' miscues to win both games.

In the series finale, Scott Meaney (3-2) tossed a six-hit complete game, while Jeff January knocked in two runs. The split with Rutgers was the first-ever in New Jersey.

Ron Villone (6-2) may be the best pitcher in the Atlantic 10, but on Saturday, he and the rest of the UMass squad encountered a man who could be its best player: Rutgers right fielder Angel Echevarria.

Echevarria had two home runs, including a two-out, two-strike, game-tying dinger off Rich Graham in Saturday's finale that erased a 4-1 UMass lead. The shot propelled the Scarlet Knights into extra innings, where they would score on Tim Roth's RBI in the ninth that plated shortstop Bob Windows and gave Rutgers a 5-4 win and a berth in the Atlantic 10 Championships to be held in two weeks in Boyertown, PA.

Meanwhile, Villone was absolutely ineffective in the first game, an 8-2 loss, walking seven and allowing back-to-back round-trippers to Echevarria and Jay Marchase. The left-hander, pitching in front of 30 major league scouts and his family and friends from Bergenfield, NJ, was shelled right from the start.

Villone allowed two hits and three runs in the first inning and the two homers in the third. By then, the Scarlet Knights had a 5-1 lead and were on their way to their 16th victory in a row.

Junior Mike Barckley (4-3) picked up the win for Rutgers, frustrating Minutemen bats throughout. Barckley allowed only five hits and two runs.

"We didn't really swing the bats that well," UMass coach Mike Stone said after Saturday's action. "Ronnie wasn't sharp and [Rutgers] hit him pretty well."

As disappointing as the first game was for the Minutemen, the second game started out as a breeze, as Graham (2-4) went through the first six innings allowing only one hit.

Second baseman John Carelli reached base on a walk in the first and came all the way around to give UMass a quick 1-0 lead. In the second inning, right fielder Bill Knight led off, bashing a homer off starter Neil Iovierio and doubling the UMass lead.

The Minutemen would get another run in the second when Echevarria dropped an easy two-out fly ball that allowed catcher Lou Olivieri to score and gave UMass a 3-0 lead.

Knight struck again for the Minutemen in the sixth, tripling to the right field fence and scoring on Iovierio's wild pitch. The run gave UMass a 4-1 lead and Rutgers coach Fred Hill brought in Albey Mallen to finish the inning.

The baseball team got some timely hitting, in earning a series-split with Rutgers this past weekend, to earn a berth in the A-10 playoffs.

The fourth run gave UMass a comfortable lead that looked like the finishing touch. But Rutgers was undaunted.

In the seventh, Graham got Adam Deutsch to ground out and when Windows hit one right back to the box, Graham raced him to the bag and made the putout himself.

UMass was one out away, and although Graham walked Doug Alongi, it didn't really worry anyone. But the next play was straight out of the Twilight Zone.

Roth dribbled a ball up the middle that Carelli should have charged hard. Instead, he waited for the ball and tried to fire it to second behind his back. Shortstop Greg LaRocca was surprised and couldn't handle the errant throw, allowing Rutgers to put the tying run to the plate in the person of Echevarria.

Echevarria drilled the 2-2 pitch that Graham served up on a platter for him.

Donor match discovered for boy with leukemia

By AMY PRENDERGAST

Associated Press

After a 12-week worldwide search to locate a bone marrow donor for leukemia-striken Danny Colbert, a match was found Friday, his family announced yesterday.

Danny's brother Paul Colbert, a sophomore CASIAC major at the University of Massachusetts, has spent the past semester raising money and trying to find a donor for his 15-month-old brother.

"I am really excited we found a donor. This couldn't have happened without all of the efforts and contributions we've received," he said.

Colbert said the donor is a 36-year-old woman from the Midwest whose bone marrow matches that of Danny's.

The family is scheduled to fly Saturday to Minneapolis, where Danny will undergo several weeks of treatment before a May 20 transplant at the University of Minnesota Medical Center.

"It's absolutely great to know that we found our match and that Danny gets a new chance at being cured," said Danny's father Charles Colbert.

When Danny was one-month-old, his family learned that he suffers from acute myelogenous leukemia, a relatively rare form of cancer. Doctors said only a bone marrow transplant could save him.

In hopes of finding a donor for Danny, his parents visited cancer treatment centers from Seattle to Kentucky, and spoke with doctors in England and Germany.

In January, they hooked into the National Bone Marrow Registry, which lists thousands of potential donors from throughout the United States and Europe.

So far, Colbert said, the search has cost $220,000, including the expense of 3,300 North Shore and Boston area residents who turned out for local donor drives.

The family has succeeded in raising about $100,000 so far, but the family will incur more expenses when they move to Minneapolis to be with Danny during his hospitalization.

Danny will be monitored for 60 days after the transplant to see if his body accepts the donated bone marrow. After that, he will be released from the hospital, but will require daily checkups through September, his father said.

He will also need chemotherapy and new drugs to be used instead of radiation to help his immune system kill off any remaining cancer.

Paul Colbert said the medical costs are "outrageous" and his family is still $100,000 short. Colbert hopes a benefit concert scheduled Sunday in the Student Union Ballroom will help alleviate the costs.

The concert, which begins at 11 a.m., will feature seven bands including the Led Zeppelin tribute band Physical Graffiti. Tickets for the concert are $7 and can be purchased at the door or from Paul Colbert who lives in room 1002 of Kennedy Residence Hall.

Forces battle in Kabul

Muslim guerrillas ignore cease-fire

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — Rival Muslim guerrillas battled to a standoff Monday over the southern approach to Kabul and ignored a reported cease-fire agreement as they fought for control over the Afghan capital.

A convoy carrying members of a guerrilla-led interim government that supported more moderate factions left Pakistan for the 120-mile journey over rugged roads to Kabul. The rebel leaders planned to formally replace the fallen regime of President Najibullah.

A truce that Pakistan's government said was agreed to between the leaders of radical fundamentalists and more moderate guerrillas went unheeded. Red, green and yellow tracer bullets and flares illuminated the sky above Kabul into the night.

Roughly 90 percent of the city was under the control of a coalition commanded by Ahmed Shah Masood. It failed to dislodge the radical fighters of his bitter rival, Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, from their strongholds.

Both sides fought with tanks, rockets and machine guns. Masood's fighters were supported by soldiers and even a warplane from Najibullah's military.

Masood and Hekmatyar both want to establish an Islamic state, but they differ on how strict the theocracy should be.

In Islamabad, Pakistan's capital, a spokesperson for the Foreign Ministry, Javed Hussein, said the leaders agreed to a truce. He did not release any details, but Pakistan's state news agency said the agreement was mediated by Pakistani Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif and senior Saudi Arabian leaders.

In Washington, State Department spokesperson Margaret Tutwiler said Masood's forces seemed to have fared best in fighting that began Saturday after rebels advanced into the capital.

"Hekmatyar seems outclassed militarily and isolated politically," she said.

She said the Afghans should seek a political solution involving a broad-based transition government.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali met in Tehran with Iranian leaders to seek help in stopping the fighting.

The civil war has claimed an estimated 2 million lives and driven 5 million people from their homes. Monday was the 14th anniversary of the Marxist coup that touched off the Muslim uprising.

Fighting was concentrated on two hilltops facing across the highway leading south from Kabul. Scattered skirmishes also flared in the city center and in other

Dukakis blames Bush for health care issue

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Former Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis said yesterday in a speech at Amherst College that it is "embarrassing" that the United States remains nearly the only industrialized nation lacking universal health care for its citizens.

"Nearly every industrial nation in the world has succeeded in providing universal health insurance for its citizens," Dukakis said. "Only the United States and South Africa have failed."

Dukakis, a professor at Northeastern University, cited the lack of political will from the "man in the White House" as a major reason there is currently no national health care plan.

"Why can't George Bush come up with a responsible plan and deal with an issue which is 20 years old?" Dukakis said. "I don't know. Bush's plan is so bad he won't even submit it to Congress."

Dukakis, the 1988 Democratic presidential nominee, spoke before a crowd of about 200 in Johnson Chapel on the campus of Amherst College.

Dukakis also blamed the national press for not making health care a big enough issue in the 1992 presidential campaign.

"We all know who Gennifer Flowers is, but no one knows where the candidates stand on health care," Dukakis said. "The candidates are talking about it but our friends in the national press corps are not covering it."

Dukakis favors the health plan which is currently in use in Hawaii as a model for the United States. The

Syria affirms rights of Jews

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON — Mideast peace talks resumed Monday with Israel offering to hold elections among Palestinians in the territories and Syria making the conciliatory gesture of lifting restrictions on its Jewish community.

Israeli spokesperson Benjamin Netanyahu called the offer of "pilot municipal elections" on the West Bank and Gaza "the largest experiment in democracy in the Arab world."

Palestinian spokesperson Hanan Ashrawi said this time there was a "distinct possibility" of progress.

The talks will be held through Thursday and should be resumed in Rome within a few weeks, Netanyahu, a close aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, told reporters. "Today we began a real discussion," he said.

"This is going to be a hard, step-by-step process," said spokesperson Margaret D. Tutwiler.

Palestinian spokesperson Ashrawi said her delegation had received, and would study Israel's proposal to begin municipal elections among the 1.7 million Palestinian Arabs. The idea is to choose leaders to work out arrangements for Palestinians to take control of their own day-to-day economic, judicial, educational and other affairs.

She said the Israeli proposal "was not a complete plan" and failed to address Palestinian demands for elections leading to a transfer of authority in the disputed territories. She condemned Shamir for saying Israel would never give up the West Bank and Gaza.

The White House and State Department announced Syria's 4,500 Jews would be permitted to travel abroad, and buy and sell property.

Tutwiler and White House spokesperson Marlin Fitzwater stressed that Bush and Secretary of State James

A. Baker III had taken up the plight of Jews with Assad.

"All members of the Syrian Jewish community will now be accorded the same rights as those accorded to all other Syrian citizens," Tutwiler said. "This means Syrian Jews will now be allowed to travel abroad as family, on business and for vacation.

"Further the Syrian government has removed the difficulties encountered by its Jewish community with regard to the sale or purchase of property in Syria. We have been told by the Syrian government that these measures have already been put into effect."

Hekmatyar's tanks behind the Muslim cemetery on the hill repeatedly bombarded Masood's forces in Bala Hissar. Black smoke billowed from inside the fort's mud walls and brilliant flames shot up as the shells hit.

Hawaii plan calls for employers to pay for the health insurance of each employee and sets ceilings on how high insurance premiums can go, which protects smaller businesses.

Several members of the audience questioned whether the Hawaii plan could work nationally. Dukakis stood by the plan and said the fact that the plan was being discussed was ultimately most important.

"Whether or not you agree with my ideas is not important," Dukakis said. "What is important is that we work together to get some type of plan enacted, whether it be the one from Hawaii or Canada's or some other nations. Whether you come from Massachusetts, Montana or Mississippi you shouldn't have to worry about receiving health care."

Dukakis stated that America spends approximately $820 billion, about 14 percent of the gross national product, on health care each year.

Dukakis took time out of his speech to poke fun at Vice President Dan Quayle and offer his opinions on this years presidential election.

"Bill Clinton has a definite chance to win the presidency," Dukakis said. "He is the best governor I ever worked with and the other current 49 governors would agree with me. What has to happen is that we start to focus on the issues and not the trivial stuff like Bill Clinton's sex life or Dan Quayle's golf game.

"Bush is in real trouble. I think the American people are ready for change. This is a crucial election, the first election since the end of the Cold War and it is important the American people select the best man for the job."

Minutemen travel to Boston

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — University of Massachusetts coach John Calipari and his team visited the Statehouse Monday to serve as ambassadors for the state university system.

The team made it to the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Division I basketball tournament.

Calipari and his team were honored in the House and Senate, where the coach spoke not only of the team's record, but also of its graduation statistics and overall grade point average.

Eight of eight players that became seniors during Calipari's tenure have graduated, and the coach said he hopes it will be 16 out of 16 by the end of next summer. The team's overall grade point average is 2.6 on a 4.0 scale.

Calipari, who worked at the University of Kansas, said one of the major differences between that state and Massachusetts is that in Kansas, most legislators are University graduates.

"They may not be grads, but at least they become UMass fans and supporters of our program and our university," Calipari said of Massachusetts' lawmakers.

He said he views basketball as a draw to get people to the Amherst campus, located about two hours from Boston by car.

"We have closed that gap somewhat," Calipari said. "That is what we have to do, and whether it's through basketball or any other program at the University, that's what needs to be done. It just happened this year it was through basketball. But believe me that's far from the best thing our campus has to offer."

Calipari invited legislators to attend a special Statehouse night next season

Prof aims to scrub acid rain

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Correspondent

Adding to the recent dramatic increase in the number of international efforts to protect the environment, a University of Massachusetts professor plans to do his part by focusing on the pressing problem of acid rain.

Peter M. Haas, assistant professor of political science, has been awarded a research fellowship to study international efforts to control acid rain.

The $30,000 award from the German Marshall Fund will allow Haas to complete a book on the dynamics of international environmental cooperation. Haas says he will use the money for income needs and travel expenses.

"I will be continuing my research on how governments coordinate international environmental policy," Haas said. "I will identify the major patterns by which countries cooperate to protect the global environment."

Research will begin for Haas in June when he travels to Rio in order to attend a United Nations Conference.

Only a dozen are awarded each year in the U.S. to researchers in the social sciences.

Two years ago, Haas received a $50,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to do research on international environmental cooperation.

Earlier this year, the National Science Foundation awarded Haas and William Clark a $250,000 grant for a joint research project on international environmental cooperation.

As an undergradute at the University of Michigan, Haas went on to attend the Massachu-

Gay men learn to fight back

By AARON-JOHN RICADELA
Collegian Correspondent

When a gay man gets threatened with violence, karate instructor Adam Sloat would prefer he avoid a fight, but still know how to deliver a good punch in the nose if need be.

Sloat, an instructor for the Larry Kelly Karate Health and Fitness center in Amherst, taught a self-defense class Wednesday for last week's Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week.

Sloat, who holds the black belt degree in Tai Kwon Do, Chinese Kempo and American Spirit Karate, said he teaches a self-defense class for gay men to deemphasize the "whole macho aspect" and impart a sense of body awareness, self-confidence and "a few physical tricks."

The three men grappled, punched and headlocked their way through three hours of training moderated by Sloat. The instructor demonstrated the proper way to grab and and sock it to a potential gay-basher when negotiation techniques failed.

Although the students were hesitant at first, they were soon confident enough to execute the moves on patient punching bag Sloat.

Sloat said it is unfair when gay men are put on the spot by hetrosexuals.

"People try to start fights just because someone is gay, often with a numerical advantage," he said. "It angers me that someone has to stand up for themselves just because of their sexuality. As a heterosexual, I feel it's not fair, and I want to teach these guys not to behave like victims."

Figures from the National Gay and Lesbian Task force show that 20 percent of gays and lesbians in Massachusetts were assaulted because of their sexuality in 1990. Anti-gay harassment rose 75 percent in the Boston area and anti-gay crimes rose 200 percent for the area in 1990.

Sloat, who has practiced karate for 10 years, said he teaches students to head-off violence and diffuse confrontations, but also believes students must know how to "hurt someone before he hurts you."

"This course, unlike a goal-oriented defense program, is a one-shot deal," said Sloat. "I teach a few basic moves and hope people get as much as they can."

LGBA member Jeff Bergman said the class provided methods of dealing with a "marked increase in baiting and physical abuse."

"I live in Northampton and despite what you hear about the town as a haven for gays and lesbians, there are streets where I won't walk hand-in-hand with a lover," said Bergman.

"Even in the heart of the gay/lesbian section, my partner was baited. I know what it's like to be threatened with physical violence, and hopefully this class gives me

UM prof studies worm control

AMHERST (AP) — The ancient wisdom of the Aztecs guided scientist Bert Zuckerman as he searched for a natural means of killing a worm that is gnawing away at the roots of modern agriculture.

Eight years later, he is trying to patent three worm-killing microbes he isolated during studies of highly rich soil from a farming region near Mexico City and a similar area of Costa Rica.

"They understood it was beneficial, but they didn't know why," he said Monday of the farmers. "They knew they were getting great crops."

Zuckerman, a plant pathologist at the University of Massachusetts, is among a worldwide body of researchers who are trying to control the scourge of nematodes. Hundreds of species of the eyeless worm, which is 125th of an inch long, attack the roots of farm crops.

"Just about any crop you can mention has a nematode pest," said Richard M. Sayre, a nematode expert with the U.S. Department of Agriculture. He said some estimates put U.S. annual damage from the root-knot nematode alone — which feeds on tomatoes, spinach, lettuce and other crops — at $4 billion.

Since World War II, chemical pesticides, like temik, have been used to keep the worms in check. However, the U.S. government has now banned or restricted nearly all those chemicals for fear of danger to humans or the environment.

"The chemicals are not going to be available for too long," Zuckerman said. "They're being regulated out of existence, so alternatives have to be found."

He started his own search in 1983 by studying soil samples near the city of Texcoco, about 25 miles outside Mexico City. The area was known from generations, as far back as the Aztec civilization, for the quality of its soil.

Zuckerman discovered that when he sterilized the soil, it lost its special properties. He concluded that the active ingredient must be alive. He eventually discovered a bacterial strain, which gives off a poison that kills the worms.

He started digging in another farming area in the central American nation of Costa Rica and hit pay dirt. He has now isolated and applied for a patent for town worm-killing strains of bacteria called bacillus thuringiensis, and a second patent for a strain of streptomyces.

About $600,000 in grant money for the project came from the U.S. and Israeli governments, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and a variety of foundations.

where they would attend a dinner and reception, meet the players and see a game, with luck at the new William D. Mullins Memorial Center now under construction.

The center, a combination sports and convocation facility, should be opened by next season, university officials said.

"This new building will have people come in and see what a special place this campus is. It's going to get them to the campus," Calipari said. "It's almost like having a sale and getting people in to see what you have. When they visit the place, they are going to like it."

Calipari said even with a new contract raising his salary, the UMass basketball program is still one of the leanest in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

"I'm very conscious of what's going on around me and we are trying to do more with less," he said, referring to the fiscal crisis that has cut state financial support for the University.

But he said the basketball program is an investment because of the national attention it brings the university and the private donations it attracts.

Legal fund started for rep.

WASHINGTON — Supporters of Rep. Nicholas Mavroules are setting up a legal defense fund to help pay lawyers representing him in a reported federal investigation, a spokesperson for the lawmaker said Monday.

Mavroules (D-Mass.) gained permission from the House ethics committee to establish the fund, which would allow contributors to donate up to $5,000 each. Donations to political campaigns are limited to $1,000.

Mavroules is reportedly the subject of a federal investigation into his admitted use of cars provided free of charge by a now-defunct Lynn auto dealer, Bob Brest. The grand jury is also reportedly looking into whether Mavroules accepted payoffs to move certain federal prisoners closer to their relatives.

Mavroules spokesperson Jerry Parisella said that up to now the seven-term congressman has been paying his legal expenses out of his campaign fund.

a higher chance of staying alive," he said.

"It's important that the LGB community struggle for civil rights, and time society and the law caught up. To me, these skills are a practical step toward that," said Bergman.

John Beck, co-ordinator of Awareness Week, said he was disappointed at the low turnout. "I'd definitely recommend self-defense skills to the community, but it's unfortunate that the class, like everything else in Awareness Week, should have been better publicized," he said.

Sloat said he encourages gays to sign up for a longer program. "In three hours, I have to teach something that's going to work, but the confidence that comes with a good self-defense program carries over into other problems in life," he said.

The real welfare problem

This country has got one of the most wasteful, irresponsible, and unfair welfare systems in the world. There's no reason why people who are perfectly able to work for a living should get free hand-outs from the government.

Oh, wait a minute. You thought I was talking about the programs for helping low-income mothers get by while raising their kids, or for helping people who are out of work get back on their feet? No, no, I wasn't talking about those. Those little programs hardly cost us anything. Most people on public assistance are mothers who would otherwise have to work full-time and overtime to support their kids. And how do you raise a kid when you're working overtime? It's impossible. So, no, I'm not talking about those little programs. I was talking about the real drain on our society: massive hand-outs to the rich.

That income? Well, if he owns stock in, say, General Motors, then it was all the workers at GM who worked for Weld's big bonus.

But that's how our system has to work. There's no other way, right? OK, I'll accept that. I don't know much about economics, so if someone with a big degree says it's got to be that way, I'll have to say OK.

But why, please tell me, why do we have to give the rich big welfare hand-outs? Weld, for example, got some very big hand-outs.

Weld paid hardly any taxes this year. He got massive deductions for things like another house, a big loan he took to run for governor and charitable contributions. And you know what charities he gave to? $25,000 to Harvard, and $16,000 to his prep-school alma mater. So he got out of paying most of his taxes, which we need, so he could 1) buy another house, 2) run for governor and 3) support two already wealthy private schools.

In this society we all have a responsibility to pay out a portion of our income to support the services we need (roads, police, etc...) But it so happens that in this state, for example, the richest 1 percent of the people pay out around 7 percent of their total income in taxes, while the poorest 20 percent pay out around 14 percent of their income. When I look at that I see a big hand-out.

And then look at the S&L bailout, the excess military spending, the deregulation that allows super profits at our expense, and so on. Those are all even more concrete examples of hand-outs to the rich.

So when I hear someone talking about how "welfare mothers" are sapping the nation's resources I think, "Ya, right." But then I explain very politely to them the relative amounts given out to the rich and to the poor. It doesn't take much to show people what's up. That's because the situation is painfully clear.

Zack Exley is a UMass student

Zack Exley

There has been a tremendous gain in national income during the last 15 years, but 94 percent of that gain was scooped up by the top 20 percent of income earners. The other 80 percent of the people only saw 6 percent of the total gain.

Now, where does such a gain come from, and why should it be absorbed by such a small number of people? Well, where does wealth come from? Kind of a strange question, but if you think about it, it's clear: wealth comes from work.

So when I first saw those figures my first thought was, "Geez, they must have worked their fingers to the bone!" But then Gov. Weld's taxes came out and I got a little glimpse into how the upper crust "earns" its living. He got over half of his $170,000 income from interest on bonds, and dividends on stocks. That means he didn't do a single days' work for half his income! Who did do the work to create

The 'Real World' awaits

Have you ever woken up after having a terrible nightmare and breathed a huge sigh of relief when you realized that it was only a dream?

Last night I dreamt I had graduated college and was working full time. When my alarm went off this morning, boy did I breathe a huge sigh of relief!

Except I almost choked when I remembered that the reason my alarm went off was because I had to go to work.

What a bad way to start a day.

To save you from this rude awakening, I have jotted down several "constants" I observed in my new "Life After College" (yes, there is such a thing). Of course, it's up to you to read further, but I warn you. The five minutes it'll take you to read this will be less painful than waking up to realize you are living out your nightmares.

Hilary Wheeler

Let me begin by putting your life into perspective. You have probably been in school since age three when you started nursery school. You are now a 22-year-old senior ready to graduate (unless you have attempted to fit the presidential terms of both Reagan and Bush into your college career). So what does this all mean?

It means you have been in school your entire life.

You might now be wondering if you will continue to be in school for the rest of your life (and for some of you the answer is yes). Perhaps the light bulb has already lit and you've realized that there is a world after college. A world where your days don't contain large chunks of free time, where you can't sleep in on a rainy Wednesday or drink yourself into oblivion on a Thursday afternoon (you can do that after you hit 40).

If not, I hate to break it to you, but there is such a world. It is commonly referred to as THE REAL WORLD. You may have heard it mentioned but thought it merely a silly parental threat used to provoke a few ounces of responsibility. I'm here to tell you that THE REAL WORLD does indeed exist — and it's as real as the Twilight Zone.

I have a few rules I've learned, and will now pass them on to help you college seniors prepare for the rapidly approaching REAL WORLD. The first rule is very important and may be a tough lesson. To explain better, I'll tell you a quick story.

I had been enthusiastically going to work for a month when I woke up one morning and just didn't feel like working. Had I not been in the REAL WORLD, this dilemma would have been solved with the aid of my snooze button. Since these are unheard of in this new world, I lay in bed and contemplated my situation. Sure, I could skip work. But then who would pay my rent, my car insurance or buy my groceries? With these comforting thoughts I made a bee-line to the shower. (Reminder — allowance becomes a fond memory the moment you are handed your diploma.)

This brings us to work itself. Somewhere in my four years at college I missed the class "REAL WORLD-101." That's probably where I would have learned that work begins at one of those early hours you've only heard rumors about. I know they also would have told me that (Rule No. 2) you only get one break in your day and that's your lunch hour. Contrary to its name, this hour is usually 30 minutes long.

Then there's the hard part: you have to come back after lunch instead of napping (Rule No. 3). When you get back from lunch you'll probably notice that there are four more long hours until 5 p.m. Now don't get tense and try to bolt — remember Rule No. 4: no matter how much you were used to leaving class early, you may not leave work early. Your boss, unlike your professor, does care if you leave. He's paying you — you're not paying him.

Never fear, 5 p.m. will eventually roll around and you'll get psyched up to leave. Hold on — this is where Rule No. 5 comes in. If you had been paying attention in "REAL WORLD 101" you'd remember that a young college graduate must always stay late to prove herself. Realistically, a normal person could achieve this in eight hours. But you're not normal. You are a college graduate with no experience. To say "Oh, I learned that in class" does not count. So sit back down and work for at least another hour.

One day the realization that you've become a person in the REAL WORLD sneaks in somewhere between getting up at 5 a.m. to contend with traffic, having lunchtime conversation about something other than how much beer you can drink and falling asleep at 10 p.m. Carson? Letterman? Who are they?

I don't want to frighten you. There are some good things in the REAL WORLD. What I'd like to do is prepare you. If you will permit me a serious moment (not that this subject is remotely humorous) I would like to warn you that the transition from college to the working world can be very awkward. You may feel restricted in school now and yearn for graduation and the subsequent freedom. But think first. You are now being provided with housing, shelter, food and friends at a moment's call. You really don't worry about how all this got here — you probably don't even care. Why question the source when you feel comfortable with the situation?

Do you honestly think that when you graduate this will all be provided for you once again? No way — your freedom is now inexorably linked to the quest for money to pay your rent, buy your food, pay your car insurance and buy whatever else was "free" before. This freedom is also having complete financial independence from your parents, yet having no money with which to be independent. Perhaps this freedom also means being able to walk into a bar alone and not see one familiar face, because all your college friends are scattered across the United States?

I just want you to keep in mind that what you may have taken for granted is something you'll have to earn with hard work in the REAL WORLD. Hopefully, with a little idea of what may be ahead, the transition will be smoother.

Oh — before I go I'd better tell you that they don't offer "REAL WORLD-101" until after college. Don't worry — it may be mandatory, but it's free!

Amherst is just refusing dessert, not turning down a UMass meal

Is Dan Wetzel from eastern Massachusetts?

I'm guessing that he is.

How? By his strange notions of what Amherst would be like without the University of Massachusetts. He thinks it would be like the rest of western Massachusetts, which he apparently finds to be uniformly depressed and polluted.

He believes that the soft-headed folks of Amherst do not recognize the hand that is feeding them. This has something to do with their being commies or pinkos ("People's Republic," exqueezeme?). His sort of tirade betrays a lack of familiarity with both logic and history.

The people of the hilltowns and the people of the valley have been separate cultural entities for a long time.

The valley denizens are 'flatlanders' and the hilltown citizens are Yankees. Most of the farms of Pelham were abandoned in the early 19th century when the superior farmland of the Ohio River Valley was cleared and settled. The mills of Thorndike are idle because it was found that Southerners tolerate more exploitation that Yankees do. Furthermore, Amherst is a special case. It was a wealthy town long before the University was established. Some of the deeper rooted families are the much vilified owners of the "means of production" that made this country what it is today — like it or not. The University made the service economy of the town larger and crasser; it didn't create it. Amherst without UMass would resemble Shelburne Falls more than it would Thorndike. As you leave Shelburne Falls, a green highway sign informs you "Boston 104 miles." The people of that town have business in Boston. They are leaving town to go and check on their investments, not to go down the road to the farm supply.

It has been noticed that whenever our Brahmin governor is asked about western Massachusetts, he begins to talk glowingly about all the great hunting and fishing he does out here. Do you think he rents a cottage for the hunting season? I don't think so.

I would agree in part with Mr. Wetzel; some of the powers that be in the town of Amherst are silly, left-wing, regulatory zealots, but he is mistaken in his belief that they are biting the hand that feeds.

They are merely refusing a fattening dessert, not pushing away a meal. The people that he so coarsely libelled would, if they weren't so utterly bourgeois and polite, tell Mr. Wetzel to take his 'right to party' and . . .well . . .you can imagine. Especially if you are neither bourgeois not polite.

With the departure of Mr. Wetzel and his oh-so economically significant friends, Amherst could and would go back to being the drowsy gentry town that it once was. Until he learns something about the cultural and economic history of this region, Mr. Wetzel should refrain from calling people 'idiots.'

Four Cuban students compare US and Cuba

By ELLIOT MONTEVERDE TORRES
Collegian Correspondent

Last Thursday, four Cuban students gave an informal presentation on life and education in their socialist country at the East Lecture Hall at Hampshire College. The audience of approximately 25 people included Gregory Prince, president of Hampshire College. Hampshire College constituted the last stop of a nine-day itinerary throughout the East coast. The trip was made possible through a joint program between the United States and Cuban governments and the sponsorship of a private foundation.

The following is an interview with two of the four students. The students were: Vladimir Vazquez, a graduate student in History from the province of Holguin; Enith Alerm Prieto a graduate student in industrial engineering from the Jose Antonio Echevarria Polytechnic Institute in La Habana; Tomas Sotolongo Cotino from the province of Holguin, a student at the Institute of Physical Education of Holguin and, Arelys Yauner Loza from the province of Cienfuegos, a sixth year student at the Division of Medical Sciences of Cienfuegos.

The following was translated from Spanish.

Collegian: With frequency the media in the U.S. alleges that as a result of Cuba's precarious economic condition, your country has resorted to investment with foreign agents that signal Cuba's inevitable defection towards a capitalist program. How much truth lies behind such arguments?

Vazquez: As you may well know, about 85 percent of the Cuban economy gyrated around Council for Mutual Economic Assistance. As a result of the disintegration of the socialist bloc, Cuba has had to re-condition its economy by recurring to suitable measures. These measures, however, are carefully put together in ways that do not trample upon our own national integrity. Let me explain.

Today Cuba's petroleum is in its abundant touristic resources. We need to exploit that. Therefore, one aspect of the reorganization of our economy deals with the establishment of hotels. Of course, much of our businesses is to be done with international entities. Of importance, however, is that these transactions are carried out with individual entities, like those from Canada and Spain, and not with the capitalist governments themselves. The foreigners apportion the market (the tourists) and the capital as well as those commodities essential to the whims of the tourist (i.e., Pepsi, etc.).

Cuba, on the other hand, apportions the labor, its resources and the force to operate these facilities. As you can see, the joint enterprise yields monetary gains to both parties on terms of equality.

Alerm Prieto: These allegations seem to omit the fact that all profits revert back to the people of Cuba. Keep in mind that the success of the Revolution, which people seem so quick to condemn, lies in a government that has never hidden anything from or lied to the people. These measures are symbolic of our collective desire to progress. We must resist but we must also progress.

Vazquez: The concern among us Cubans is not with the exploitation of our resources for tourism but the potential deprivation from enjoying these resources. It has been as a result of this concern that our government has enhanced this particular aspect of the reorganization so that the Cuban people can indiscriminately enjoy the new facilities being built.

The Department of Tourism routinely provides passes to groups from different sectors in our society to visit and enjoy these facilities — a good way for the tourists to interact with the people of Cuba.

In general, people have a clear understanding of the measures being taken by our government. Furthermore, we are conscious that it is preferable to exploit the tourism than to confront hunger. Not one beach or resort in Cuba is off limits to us Cubans.

Collegian: What is your opinion of the condition of women in the U.S. vis-a-vis Cuba?

Alerm Prieto: I have seen marked differences. In Cuba 62 percent of the technical force is women. The general feeling today among women in Cuba is to further become independent and useful to our society. In fact, it is nonsense to speak of overt discrimination in Cuba against women for we constitute an integral part of the Cuban life. It is true, however, that the minds of the Cuban people have not kept an adequate pace with the acceleration of our socialist reality.

I am very regretful that this subject has not been adequately discussed or put forth during our stay here in the U.S. What I have certainly appreciated is that in this society human beings' worth, seems to be congruent to how much money the individual possesses. I would like that the vast richness of this country be distributed more fairly.

Collegian: What have your experiences been in the U.S.?

Alerm Prieto: The impact has been very positive. Evidently, I came with determined expectations. In turn, I have encountered lots of solidarity and respect towards us Cubans. Of interest is that during our stay one of the characteristic features has been that the majority of the persons we have interacted with has been Latin Americans.

Meet some Latinos playing UMass sports

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

Puerto Ricans are represented almost everywhere on campus. You can find them working almost everywhere, majoring in diverse concentrations and participating in organizations with different interests.

Sports are one of those areas in which you can see the participation of Puerto Ricans. You can find them in swimming, baseball, volleyball club, basketball, water polo, etc.

Brendaliz Sierra is the first female Puerto Rican who has ever participated on UMass' swimming team and is also the first female Puerto Rican to play any sport at UMass. She is a freshman School of Management major.

Brendaliz came to UMass because of its academic reputation and the swimming scholarship she received. She has been swimming since she was six years old and internationally since 12.

Brendaliz has represented Puerto Rico on different occasions such as in the Curacao's Centroamerican Games in 1986, where she won a gold medal in the 200-meter free style. Nineteen eighty seven was a good year for her. She was third in the 400 free style in Puerto Rico's Centroamerican games. In Indianapolis' Pan American games she was sixth in the 800 and seventh in the 400 free style where she set Puerto Rican records of 9:18 and 4:31, respectively. In 1988, she won the bronze medal in the 400 free style and was fourth in the 800 free in the Mexico Centroamerican Games. In 1990, she won the silver medal in the 400 free in the Copa Latina in Curacao.

Last summer, Brendaliz had a car accident in which she broke her shoulder which has kept her from collegiate competition. In the meantime, she's recovering and has been training.

Brendaliz Sierra and Javier B. Gonzalez

Brendaliz wants to earn her degree, as every college student, but her biggest desire is to make history in the swimming team for her performance. Her greatest challenge, she says, is against herself and her recovering arm but she does not gives up easily and she wants to make it although it is going to be difficult.

On the water polo team is Javier B. Gonzalez. He is freshman biology major. Benini, as he is known, has played water polo since he was 10 years old. He was approached by the water polo's coach on winter of 1990 by whom he was recruited as driver. He has represented Puerto Rico in Florida swimming championships of 1990. In July 1991 he played water polo on the Centroamerican Games in Mexico, where the Puerto Rico won the gold medal in the 16-17 years category. In August of the same year he went to California to play in the Junior Water Polo World Championships.

Actually, he is training for the Pananamerican Games in August where he is going to play with Puerto Rico's team. He says he wants to take UMass' water polo team to play in the National Collegiate Athletic Association level. After college he wants to play in the Puerto Rico National team at senior level, but his dream is to play in the Atlanta Olympics in 1996. He also wants to become a dentist or a radiologist.

Next fall Giddel Padilla will play for the basketball team. Last semester he went to University of Nevada at Las Vegas but he decided to come back to New England and play for UMass. He says he prefers to be on the Valley area, were he is living along with his family and is more familiarized with. He says this year has been "relaxing" to him.

This summer he is going to Puerto Rico to play in "summer leagues." On his goals he wants "to take the basketball team to the Final Four and be part of the winning tradition." He also wants to pursue his major, hotel restaurant and travel administration and play in a professional basketball team.

The next person wants to play beach volleyball. He is a freshman engineering major and is from the town of Cayey. He is in the Volleyball Club were he is the outside fitter. His name is Roberto M. Torres. He has played volleyball since he was 12 years and also played for his high school's volleyball team, which was in the top 10 of Puerto Rico.

Freshman Manuel "Tito" Fernandez says he has played baseball "since he was born." He is also from the town of Cayey for which he has played. He is a red shirt in the UMass baseball team and is majoring in pre-medicine.

Fernandez says that to play collegiate baseball was one of his goals in life, but what he really wants is to play professional baseball and become a doctor.

Ask Dr. Sage Guru about all your cat problems

Dear Dr. Sage Guru,

I am in a horrible situation. Our next door neighbor used to have a cute calico cat that came to visit my house from time to time. That is, until yesterday. Last time she came to visit me, I gave her some sardines. They were a bit smelly, but she seemed to like them at first. However, after about half an hour or so, she became very ill, lost consciousness, and her fuzzy little belly stopped moving in and out.

I don't know how, but I guess the sardines must've been spoiled and fatally disagreed with her. I feel tremendous remorse about killing my neighbor's kitty, as I know he is very attached to her. He has come by, asking if I had seen her, but I managed to change the subject . . . this time. What should I do? Should I tell him so he can give her a proper burial? Please help.

Signed,
Cat Lover

Dear Cat Lover,

Many T.V. sitcoms have already portrayed the idea of trying to find an identical animal to serve as a substitute. Of course, that approach is doomed to failure because cat owners seem to be able to distinguish their stupid fleabag from the rest. And you can be sure such an attempted subterfuge would more likely end in a fist-fight than a cheap laugh.

Dr. Sage Guru

Society, on the other hand, would have you believe that the "right-thing-to-do" is to bring the cat to your neighbor, truthfully explain the whole situation, and work things out in a civilized manner. However, reality is seldom that simple, and that tactic would probably work about as well as the sitcom approach.

I'd prefer to advise you to just put the rotten hair-ball in a biodegradable bag and toss it in the garbage — which is where all cats belong anyway — and forget the whole incident.

Unfortunately, I can't do that because animal rights people would spin into a frenzy. It seems the only other viable solution entails bringing the body to your neighbor for a "proper burial," whatever that may be.

You can then either tell (all or part of) the truth or claim to have discovered it that way. What you choose depends on the present nature of your relationship with your neighbor and the direction which you desire the relationship to progress.

Please note: hanging the corpse on your neighbor's doorknob and running is not advisable, unless you are adamant in your desire to severely upset your neighbor and involve the authorities.

Your Friend,
Dr. Sage Guru.

If you have any questions or comments—serious or not—which you would like Dr. Sage Guru to address, please send them to the Collegian. If it's printable, the doctor will be more than happy to respond. Dr. Sage is a Collegian staff member.

The Spin Doctors are back!

BY ROLAND COGGIN
and TRACY HORNE
Collegian Correspondents

Some people go to a Spin Doctors show because the Dead or Phish aren't around at the time. Others go to dance to some of the funkiest tunes around — from "Little Miss Can't Be Wrong" to "Two Princes." But whoever sees their show will have a good time; the Spin Doctors will make sure of that.

By the time the Spin Doctors released the EP Up for Grabs, they had built a following through extensive touring and acclaimed appearances at the Wetlands. Their catchy songs and refreshing funkiness caught on quick and they have since become one of the most popular club bands in the Northeast. The recently released Pocket Full of Kryptonite on Epic Records has shown a new dimension of the band and gives them more to work with for their live act.

The Spin Doctors aren't the most amazing band musically, but they groove like few bands can. They are so danceable that almost no one can resist joining in the fun. Chris Barron's vocals are unique and touch a crowd as the rhythm section keeps them moving. Their last two appearances at Pearl St. were huge successes, so put on your dancing shoes and check out the Spin Doctors.

The Spin Doctors will appear at Pearl St. in Northampton this Thursday, April 30. The show is 18+, and doors open at 7 p.m. Tickets are $7 in advance, $9 at the door. The Bombastics will open the show.

DOONESBURY By GARRY TRUDEAU

OKAY, QUIET DOWN, EVERYONE! WHO KNOWS WHAT SEASON IT IS NOW? TEDDY?
SPRING!
VERY GOOD, TEDDY! WHAT MONTH IS IT? MICHAEL?
IT'S APRIL!
RIGHT! OKAY, WHO KNOWS WHAT DAY OF THE WEEK IT IS?
I DO! JULY!
NOPE. ANYONE ELSE? ROB, WE HAVEN'T HEARD FROM YOU! ALBERT? KEVIN?
WHAT'S THE DEAL HERE? MAYBE I NEED TO LOSE SOME WEIGHT.

CALVIN AND HOBBES By BILL WATTERSON

I THINK WE NEED A NEW POLICY IN THIS HOUSE.
AND WHAT'S THAT?
FROM NOW ON, WHENEVER YOU TELL ME THINGS, I DON'T WANT TO HEAR ANY REASONS, EXPLANATIONS, SUBTLETY OR CONTEXT.
I JUST WANT TEN-SECOND SOUND BITES. OK?
SO MUCH FOR THAT POLICY.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

Today Ruth and I sat and tossed popcorn to the ducks.
Ruth was telling me she liked the water.
"I've always liked lakes, boat rides, and all that," she said."
But she said it's been a long time since she's been on a boat, and she tried to recall when the last time was.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An influential person offers valuable career or financial help. Speak your mind freely. Routine procedures can be streamlined to boost profits. Seek experts' advice.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New horizons beckon; it is time to answer the call. A lengthy undertaking has bright prospects. No time for play - it is all business today. Be wary of romance on the rebound.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be enthusiastic about your associations. The contacts you develop now will put you on a winning streak, one that could stretch far into the future. Relax tonight and laugh away tension.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Many profitable paths are visible now. Link up with newcomers or kinfolk at a distance; you could discover a fresh money-making concept or valuable merchandise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You continue to attract a large number of fans, and should see growth in your long-term plans. Take a giant step into the future with family members. Kiss a prize-winning goat today.

VIRGO (Aug. 22-Sept. 22): Your domestic plans progress nicely. New ventures, perhaps linked to distant sites, look promising. Longtime allies help a long-range campaign speed out of the starting gate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Projects fall neatly into place both at home and work. Funds flow your way, perhaps via new job duties. You have an eye for true value; become a comparison shopper to save money.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A domestic upset could make you feel as if a tornado has struck. It is vital that you stay cool and collected. Do not be too proud to ask influential people for help.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You will have more luck promoting an idea now. A work relationship may not be as cordial as you would like. If you act too headstrong, things could go badly. Lighten up.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An active social life keeps you hopping. New friendships and passions are exhilarating. Be certain to scrutinize legal documents before signing them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Communications shed valuable light on the future, particularly long-distance linkups. Avoid borrowing or lending money if there is the slightest risk involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Let others do the talking at work today. Higher-ups may be in a fault-finding mood. In social relationships and affairs of the heart, be an open book. Discuss your hopes.

classroom with Judith Martin of "Miss Manners" fame for a week. They were a disgrace to the Ivy League, and even pleas from Brown coach Dom Starsia couldn't shut up these morons. What a shame.

Curley Field, Loyola: The turf at this place has a vendetta against the human knee, as redshirted defenseman Rick Mullins will tell you. But the fans are knowledgable and Sports Information Director Steve Jones is a class act all the way. The press box, however, is outside. And it was very cold out there.

Rutgers Stadium Complex: The turf is padded underneath, so it's not as rough as Loyola's. The stands are set up well and the lights are pretty good, but there's no press box. However, like much of the Rutgers campus, it's in the middle of nowhere. Playing a game under lights there was like watching The Twilight Zone.

Last but not least: Nothing shuts up Chuck Person like losing.

Marshall wins national championship

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts gymnastics phenom Tammy Marshall ended her stellar season last Friday and Saturday at the St. Paul Civic Center in Minnesota in front of a crowd of 15,000 by giving the performance of her life as she scored a 9.812 to clinch the national championship in the vault exercise.

The junior from Hicksville, N.Y. also earned All-American honors in the floor exercise as she placed seventh with a score of 9.725. The top eight finishers in each event earn All-American status.

"This was such a great performance by Tammy considering that she was competing against 85 of the best gymnasts in the country," said UMass coach Alfie Mitchell. "She had some problems on the uneven bars [9.1] to start off but then recovered and hit a great beam [9.65]. Of course her next event, the vault, was just spectacular."

Marshall's first trial was good but her second, an impressive 9.85, was what vaulted her into the finals.

"In the finals, she had to do two different types of vaults or else she would have lost a point [because of NCAA rules]," Mitchell said. "She had never had a problem hitting both in practice so it was just a matter of concentrating and knowing what she had to do to win.

"She absolutely nailed both of them to clinch the title," he said.

Marshall qualified for the NCAA floor exercise championship with a 9.9 at the regionals. Her other career and school bests include a 39.0 all-around and a 9.75 on the uneven bars at the Atlantic 10 Championships. She also claimed a 9.75 on the beam and a 9.8 on the vault, both also at regionals.

Marshall's all-around score of 38.475 last weekend placed her 14th at the meet overall. Last year, she placed 16th all-around at Nationals with a 38.15, which qualified her for last summer's World University Games. Unfortunately, the games are only held every two years so Marshall's season ended last weekend.

"It's too bad Tammy's season has to end but I think she deserves to take a little time off," Mitchell said. "We're all going to savor this one for a while."

Orangemen, Gorillas on different field

Just a couple observations, all of them extremely subjective, on the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, better known as Garber's Gorillas. . .

First of all, I will shoot to kill the next person I see on campus wearing any item of Syracuse lacrosse gear. That's like showing up at Curry Hicks Cage in a Temple T-shirt — insulting and potentially dangerous to the wearer's life. Just say no.

Syracuse stands for everything UMass lacrosse isn't about (except winning). Alumni boosters who follow the Orange like the Grateful Dead, a domed stadium and obscene amounts of money are, fairly or not, synonymous with Syracuse lacrosse.

Greg Sukiennik

The important things Syracuse has — family tradition (The Simmons family in Syracuse, the Garbers in Amherst), a history of winning and community support — UMass already has those. Three national titles would be nice, true, but Dick Garber never was a "win at all costs" coach. He wanted his players to get an education and have fun playing lacrosse. That's the difference between college athletics (UMass) and pro sports (Syracuse).

The latest United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association coaches' poll finds Syracuse (surprise!) at the number one ranking in the nation. The top 10 didn't change much otherwise, with some teams exchanging positions but none falling far.

The second 10, however, show some serious shuffling. UMass moved up a notch to No. 13 ahead of Duke (6-5), which lost over the weekend. No. 11 Virginia (6-5) and 12th-ranked Army (8-3, dropped UMass from schedule last year) sit in front of the Gorillas.

In other surprises, St. John's (18) switched places with Rutgers (20). The Johnnies play a tough schedule, sure, but who have they beaten? And Rutgers split last week, losing to UMass and barely squeaking by lacrosse non-entity Villanova, 12-11.

However, remember in the past the NCAA has pretty much ignored the USILA rankings when setting up the tourney field. Ticket sale potential and strength of schedule, and some say in that order, are the NCAA's criteria for the tournament. The Gorillas' strong schedule should benefit them, although a home playoff game may be a stretch to wish for unless UMass beats Syracuse.

There's no place like home, as the Gorillas proved by going 6-0 at Garber Field. It's too bad there weren't more fans there, though. Yes, there was a lot of cold, rainy weather and most of the games were on Wednesdays. But y'all missed out on some really good lacrosse games. If they get a home game in the tournament, do yourself a favor and show up.

As for the road, here's a list (in order) of the best and worst venues on the Gorilla road show. Keep in mind I didn't make it to Newark, Del. No loss, I'm sure.

Stevenson Field, Brown: If only there were no fans at this game, there would be nothing wrong with this place. Well-kept grass, a press box and a nice set of stands make Stevenson the best of the venues the Gorillas visited.

The fans, however, ought to be forced to sit in a

Softball wins 3 of 4 in weekend trip, hosts Providence today

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Mother Nature continues to dictate the schedule of the University of Massachusetts softball team.

Saturday's doubleheader against Princeton, which was supposed to be UMass' "Senior Day," was postponed due to rain.

Sunday the Minutewomen travelled to Long Island to play Adelphi University, and swept the twinbill, 2-0 and 3-2 in 14 innings.

Yesterday the team travelled to Hofstra to play another doubleheader, and split with the Flying Dutchwomen, losing the opener 7-6, and winning the nightcap 6-4.

UMass' record is now 24-11 overall and 10-0 in the Atlantic 10. The A-10 record gives the Minutewomen their third league title in a row.

In the first game against Hofstra UMass banged 15 hits off freshman Stacy Jackson, but came up short. Holly Aprile took the loss, dropping her record to 9-3.

UMass, which went up 3-0 in the first inning only to lose the lead in the third, went up 6-4 in the fifth on run-scoring hits by Laurie Dondarski and Angyla Brumm.

Hofstra tied the game with two runs in the bottom of the fifth on a double by catcher Megan Scharf, and won the game in the sixth when Kelly Lemin reached on a fielder's choice, stole second and third and scored on an infield hit.

The second game started much like the first as UMass jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first on RBI singles by Barbara Marean and Sherri Kuchinskas. Hofstra tied it before UMass pulled away with a three-run sixth.

Kelly Daut (6-5) gave up seven hits before squelching a late Hofstra rally to end the game.

In the first game against Adelphi, UMass rode the six-hit, two strikeout and one walk pitching of Holly Aprile (8-2).

In the sixth inning Peggy Bush reached on an error and went to second on a single by Jen Devlin. Laurie Dondarski then doubled both runners home with only her fourth and fifth RBIs of the season. In the second game neither team scored until the 10th inning, when both teams scored twice.

With the score 2-2 in the 14th inning Dondarski singled and reached second on a sacrifice by DuEst. After Lisa Melz struck out, Aprile doubled home Dondarski with the winning run.

Aprile (9-2), who relieved Claffey in the 10th inning to pick up the win, then struck out the side in the bottom of the 14th.

GAME NOTES: The Minutewomen host the Lady Friars of Providence (29-11) today in a 3 p.m. doubleheader at Totman Field.

UMass-Maine, not this year

Game cancelled, Minutemen face Saints Wednesday

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Due to the rain that has plagued much of the Northeast over the last two weeks, today's scheduled baseball game between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Maine has been cancelled.

It seems that Maine lost some of its scheduled conference games to Mother Nature, and decided now would be a good time to make them up.

So, it's time to look at the Atlantic 10 playoff picture. UMass, after returning from this weekend's split with first place Rutgers, sits in second place in the A-10s Eastern Division with an 11-5 record. Rutgers sits atop the East with a 10-2 mark, while Temple holds onto third at 5-7.

St. Joseph's, after taking three from Rhode Island this weekend are in fourth (5-10), while the Rams have a stronghold on the cellar (4-11) record.

Temple travels to Piscataway, N.J. this weekend for a four game set with Rutgers, and if Temple can take three out of four from the Scarlet Knights, UMass will take over first place in the East.

UMass and Rutgers have already wrapped up the two playoff spots in the East, and travel to Boyertown, Pa. on May 8-10 for the A-10 Championships.

The winner of the East will play the second place team in the A-10 West, while the first place team in the West will play the second place team in the East.

As it stands now, it appears opening round match-ups will be Rutgers versus St. Bonaventure, while UMass will take on the Mountaineers of West Virginia in Friday action from Boyertown.

Kudos to Minutemen righty Jeff Toothaker, who was last week's A-10 pitcher of the week, the fifth time this year a UMass hurler has been given that honor.

Toothaker, after this weekends's 16-5 win over Rutgers, ran his record to a perfect 6-0 which ties him for the team lead in wins with Ron Villone.

Speaking of Villone, Peter Gammons of The Boston Globe speculated in Sunday's edition that Villone could be the first pitcher taken in June's amateur draft, although Gammons reported that the scouts were in Amherst on Saturday to watch Villone. If scouts were in Amherst on Saturday, they didn't see much, as Villone was on the hill in Piscataway, N.J.

Freshmen right fielder Bill Knight has caught fire as of late, raising his average almost 40 points over the last two weeks, while hitting two home runs this weekend to take over the team lead from Steve Corradi.

Corradi leads the team in batting average (.340), as well as slugging percentage (.536), stolen bases (17), walks (34) and on base percentage (.515). He recently made the switch from shortstop to the outfield, with Greg LaRocca moving in at short.

The Minutemen play host to the Siena Saints on Wednesday, while the Wildcats of New Hampshire come to Lorden Field on Thursday for a twinbill starting at 1 p.m.

Housing tells UM students to leave dorm

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Housing Services has ordered 16 residents of Kennedy's sixth floor to move out of the tower and into new dorm rooms spread out across campus by 5 p.m. today because of what officials called "floor vandalism and hostile anti-community conduct."

Residents were informed of the decision the day after the floor was the sight of reportedly extensive vandalism late Saturday night, including the tossing of a dryer out of the lounge window during a fire alarm.

In a letter delivered to the sixth floor residents by hand Sunday, Kennedy Residence Director Paul Vasconcellos said the students living on the half of the floor facing campus will be relocated. All those being moved out of the building are never to return to the tower and could be arrested for trespassing if they try to enter the building. Also, he said everyone living on the floor would be billed for the total cost of damage done to the floor since the beginning of the semester.

Anne Miller, associate director of Housing Services, said that the events of Saturday night were not the only deciding factors in the decision and that the sixth floor's behavior has been a recurring problem. She said Vasconcellos has met with the students of the sixth floor several times this semester warning them to change their destructive behavior.

The action has sparked some criticism among students because Housing Services has not been able to determine exactly which residents are responsible for the vandalism. The students are being billed for the damages and forced to move to another dorm only two weeks before finals begin, regardless of whether or not it has been proven they actually had a part in the vandalism.

"Housing's inability to identify the students responsible does not give Housing the right to punish those who are not guilty as well as the guilty," said Student Government Association President Jen Wood.

Sixth floor resident Brian Ridley, who is being relocated to the Northeast Residential Area, said Housing Services never asked anyone who was responsible for the damage to the floor or the dryer. Brian Johnson, who is also being relocated to Northeast, said he was not even on the floor that Saturday night.

"They weren't even asked what happened," said Ridley. "They didn't even try to find out who was involved."

Miller admitted Housing had no idea who actually was involved in the damage, but she said she had no other option than to move the students out of concern for the safety of students living in

Clinton, Bush easily beat rivals in Penn. primary

By JACK W. GERMOND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton rolled over essentially token opposition in presidential primaries in Pennsylvania Tuesday and moved a step closer to a head-to-head confrontation in the general election Nov. 3.

Clinton defeated former Gov. Edmund G. "Jerry" Brown Jr. of California by what appeared to be a margin impressive enough to give the Arkansas governor a strong case to make when he flies to Washington Wednesday to seek the support of uncommitted super-delegates from the Senate and House.

Early returns gave Clinton 54 percent to 29 percent for Brown and 12 percent for former Sen. Paul E. Tsongas of Massachusetts, who suspended his campaign a month ago.

Meanwhile, Bush could claim at a party fund-raising dinner that his defeat of Patrick J. Buchanan had put him "over the top" — meaning, given him enough delegates to assure the 1,105 he needs to be renominated for a second term at Houston in August. Early returns showed Bush winning about 75 percent of the vote.

In the most intriguing and perhaps politically significant race of the day, Lynn Yeakel, a longtime social activist but neophyte politician, took an early lead over Lt. Gov. Mark S. Singel for the Democratic nomination to oppose Republican Sen. Arlen Specter in the general election. She was declared the winner Tuesday night by CNN, based on exit polls and partial returns.

Specter won the Republican primary, by about 2-1 based on the first returns, over state Rep. Stephen Freiny, a leader of Pennsylvania's strong anti-abortion movement.

But the Republican incumbent is now facing what politicians in the state consider a serious challenge from Ms. Yeakel, who entered the campaign in angry reaction to Specter's prosecutorial role toward Anita Hill in Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on the nomination of Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court.

The only shred of suspense in the presidential voting was on the Democratic side, where the results were studied for evidence on whether Clinton has begun to shed the political baggage he has acquired earlier in the primaries.

And a poll of voters leaving the polling places found that only 33 percent harbored doubts about his honesty and integrity, compared with 46 percent in New York April 7. But, although the proportion declined, half the Democrats said they would have preferred the opposition of other candidates.

The exit poll also showed Ross Perot, the Texas billionaire and prospective independent candidate, with a respectable base of support in both parties, 23 percent among Democrats and 24 percent among Republicans — impressive figures when the poll participants are party primary voters.

Conflicts with town anger students

Residents, UMass administators seek to improve relations

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst is increasingly being held in low regard by many University of Massachusetts students who say they fear their rights as citizens are being suppressed and denied by the town.

"I don't understand why the town is coming down so hard on the students now, for instance, with the implementation of the new keg law," said Dennis Morsey, a junior legal studies major. "It could scare potential students away from enrolling at UMass."

"Why didn't they implement these policies when UMass had the reputation as the 'ZooMass,' especially since the undergraduate enrollment at UMass is down to 17,000 undergraduate students compared to 23,000 at its high point," he asked.

The reasons why many students at UMass are up in arms are ordinances such as the recent keg licensing law that was passed on March 30 and rumors that bars in Amherst might be forced to close at 11 p.m.

If there was any chance these assumptions were misleading, it was evident Monday when the Peace and Quiet Commission of Amherst held an informal meeting at the Bangs Community Center.

News Analysis

"I enjoy having the students around town and I think all the commission, the town and students really want is mutual respect for everybody," said Jim Bernotas, a North Amherst resident and business owner. "I don't think anybody wants any new regulations."

Another obstacle plaguing student/town relations is the inactive role both students and permanent town residents feel UMass has taken in regards to solving this problem.

"The hardest part for students is that the University's failure to address the role that they have played, in the deterioration of student/town relations ultimately reflects poorly upon the students," said Jennifer Wood, president of the student government.

The discussion which took place Monday between permanent town residents and University officials could be the first leg over the hurdle to solving this problem.

"We have common goals and should work together to help solve them," said Anne Miller, associate director of housing at UMass and a member of the Chancellor's Committee on Alcohol and Drug Use.

Initially the Commission set up yesterday's meeting to accomplish three objectives. The commission has been meeting periodically over the last few weeks to come up with solutions to improve town/gown relations.

The committee's first objective was to meet with Miller and discuss UMass' current alcohol policy. The second was to draft a list of recommendations resulting from the public forum held on April 11 for submission to the Amherst Select Board. The third objective was to set up a meeting schedule for the summer months.

Only one objective was actually achieved, as the discussion took on overtones that could result in the town becoming both more visibly and vocally "student-friendly."

There was also a plea from commission members for students to show respect and restraint for neighboring houses or apartment complexes when attending off-campus gatherings or coming home from drinking establishments located in Amherst.

The meeting also touched upon ways in which the town would be able to reach the student body at UMass, thus giving the students a forum where could express their views to town officials.

"It is helpful to know the feeling of students through the Editorial/Opinion page in the Collegian," said Laurie Benoit, staff liaison for the commission. "Knowing their opinions can help us do something to make relations better."

One idea presented to the commission was to hold a public forum on the UMass campus to hear student views. This forum could possibly be held next semester.

Another idea put forth was to publish a pamphlet that would inform students of the laws in town, places where they could register to vote, and recycling information. The pamphlet would be a "welcoming guide" for students returning to the town.

It is clear, advocates say, that this is a problem that needs to be addressed by both representatives from the community and the University.

Labor activist and educator Friedman dies

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Correspondent

Long-time labor activist and labor educator Harvey Friedman died after a long illness on Monday at the age of 69. An Amherst resident, Friedman retired as director of the Labor Relations and Research Center at the University of Massachusetts in 1990, after a 25-year tenure.

Friedman was first named assistant in 1965, and became the director in 1970. His research specialty was pre-retirement education and training.

In addition to leading the labor center, Friedman also taught in the School of Education and the department of political science. In 1989, he received the Chancellor's Medal for his work at the Amherst campus, and last week he was also honored by the University's Boston campus with a Chancellor's Award for distinguished service in the education of working people.

Originally from Bridgeport, Connecticut, Friedman attended Clark University and held a law degree from Boston University. In 1948, he was admitted to the Massachusetts bar.

Before joining the University faculty, Friedman worked closely with labor unions, serving as an arbitrator, factfinder, and mediator. He was an election examiner for the National Labor Relations Board and the New England assistant director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the AFL-CIO.

He also advised labor organizations at the local, state and national levels. He had been a visiting lecturer at universities in Denmark and England and was widely published in encyclopedias, journals, reviews and newspapers.

Provost Glen Gordon said Friedman was an advocate of higher education. "He [Friedman] had a tremendous commitment to the institution as a land-grant university, that is, to the idea of public higher education serving the Commonwealth."

His wife, Alice, is a retired faculty member from the School of Nursing at the University.

Patricia Greenfield, director of the labor center, described Friedman as "one of a unique breed of labor educators/labor activists. His commitment to the labor movement and working people is reflected in the continuing mission of the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center."

Services will be Wednesday at 1 p.m. at the Jewish Community Center of Amherst on Main Street. The family will welcome visitors at the home Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday through Monday between 7 and 10 p.m.

Survivor remembers past

Woman recalls struggle to live through Holocaust

By KARA SCHMIDT
Collegian Correspondent

The crowd sat on the edge of their seats at Hillel House Monday night as Saba Wenger told her story of how she survived the Holocaust.

Wenger's granddaughter, UMass student Lisa Bovarnick, introduced her grandmother while reminding the crowd of the importance of remembering the Holocaust. "Fifty years is not so long ago. Unless we are reminded by the past, it is possible that a situation like this could be recurrent in the future."

Wenger's story began when the Germans attacked Poland. "I heard this loud noise and looked out my window to see German planes shooting and distributing leaflets. The leaflets said, 'Kill All Jews.' I didn't believe it."

"The Nazis came in and filled our biggest temple with Jewish people. They covered the temple with gasoline and set it on fire. More than 2,000 Jews burned alive that night. I saw the flames while hiding in my house."

She went on to tell of the ghettos that were established, circulating a picture of these shack-like wooden structures surrounded by a high fence topped with barbed wire. "We were forced to live there," Wenger said, "and one person from each family was required to work in the factories. I worked for my family."

Soon they learned their ghetto was to be liquidated. Wenger, her mother, and her sister with two babies hid in a basement constructed under the apartment and accessible beneath the stove in the kitchen.

They were eventually discovered, hit over the head with guns and dragged into the streets. Wenger and her family were separated from her brother and loaded on a train.

"People all night long were jumping from the train and getting shot," Wenger said. "I begged my mother to let me jump too so I wouldn't have to go to the oven. We waited when the jumping had stopped and we thought the Germans were asleep. Then we jumped."

They landed safely and wandered for days, seeking shelter. Eventually Wenger and her family came to a ghetto strictly for factory workers 18 to 20 years of age. Wenger lied about her age and while her family hid, went to work in the factory.

"One day I took a day off of work to rest," Wenger said. "The S.S. came in and told all the Jews who didn't go to work to get out in the street or be killed. They picked ten to be killed: six young men, two ladies older than twenty, a little girl and myself."

"The Nazis stood with their guns pointed at us and one asked me my age. I told them I was eighteen and after an argument between them decided to let me go to work and kill me later. Meanwhile, the little girl was screaming to her mother, 'Don't let them kill me.' The other nine were shot."

Holocaust survivor Sara Wegner spoke of her ordeal last night.

Wenger proceeded to tell of how her life was toyed with many times. On one occassion, she was taken to a building by a Nazi who was laughing and saying, "I'm going to kill you." She later learned that she wasn't returning to the ghetto for everyone had been killed, including her mother, her sister and two babies.

Wenger's story concluded with the return of the Russians. On somewhat of a lighter note she was reunited with her brother. However, when she later returned to the ghetto no one could tell her where her family was buried.

When asked why it took her thirty years to speak about the Holocaust, Wenger replied, "Nobody asked about it, nobody wanted to hear about it."

"I made it. It was very tough, I'll remeber it until I die. It is tough even now. I can still hear the screaming from that little girl begging her Mommy not to let them kill her. I still can hear it."

Semester at sea offers hands-on experience

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Imagine spending a semester in the warm, bright sunshine, learning how to navigate a 135-foot sailing vessel and studying the coral reefs of an island off the coast of the Central American nation of Honduras.

This is exactly what Kimberly Mueller, a senior pre-medicine zoology major, did for 12 weeks during this semester while many University students were "land-locked."

"It was an excellent experience that enabled me to learn about the ocean, sailing and myself," she said.

The Sea Education Association, which was founded by Corwith Cramer in 1971, is the only organization that gives undergraduates across the country the chance to study the deep ocean hands-on, said Dale Dean, who is the group's communications assistant.

Mueller said after spending six weeks studying oceanography and developing navigational skills ashore at SEA's campus in Woods Hole, she and 25 other students and 13 crew members flew to Miami and boarded the SSV Corwith Cramer to begin their six week study at sea.

"The hands-on experience at sea allowed me to use the information I learned on land in real life situations," she said. The students, she added, were responsible for many things such as navigating the vessel by using the sun, moon and stars, keeping a 24-hour watch so the vessel didn't crash at night and fixing meals.

"This trip gave me confidence in myself and the ability to dive into situations and take charge," said Mueller, whose 3,000-mile sailing expedition took her from Miami to Cuba to Columbia and then to Honduras.

For recreation on the vessel, she said, the students would climb the mast and play cards. "There isn't room to run around on the vessel and because people are busy with their duties there isn't much free time either."

Some inconveniences, she said, were the scarcity of fresh fruit and vegetables, drinking powdered milk and taking salt

Lecturers claim tobacco industry targets youth

By KRISTEN LAMBERT
Collegian Correspondent

"Pack of Lies: Tobacco Advertising and the Cultivation of Addiction" was more than just a puff of smoke. It was an informative lecture that added some humor to a serious subject.

Filmed for national distribution, the two-hour lecture examined techniques used by the tobacco industry to pinpoint younger consumers.

"The average six-year-old is now recognizing 'Old Joe' more than Mickey Mouse," said Richard Pollay, speaking to a packed audience at Bowker Auditorium on Monday night.

"The nicotine problem is far worse than we think; 430,000 people will die this year alone from nicotine addiction," said Pollay, who has testified as an expert witness in many tobacco trials and is a professor of marketing at the University of British Columbia.

Pollay said that while testifying, he was not only spied upon but had his mail tampered with by people from the tobacco companies.

The tobacco industry claims that they only target their ads to smokers who want to switch. But ads such the Camel "Old Joe" campaign have increased the sales of their cigarette from 1 percent of smokers to 33 percent, according to Jean Kilbourne. Kilbourne has been twice selected "college lecturer of the year" and has produced such films as "Still Killing Us Softly."

Phillip Morris will take in more than $5 million today alone from cigarette sales, said Pollay.

Cigarette print ads often show people in the picture of

Kennedy Tower and to "break up the group dynamics that lead to this behavior."

Miller expressed some reluctance to relocate students who may not have participated in the damage, but she maintained the action is not meant to punish the students but to ensure their safety and the safety of everyone living in Kennedy Tower.

"It could be one person, it could be several, but it's not trying to be punitive, it's trying to be protective," she said.

Wood, however, held that the action still violates the students' rights no matter what the reasoning.

"We have rights and sure one of those rights is to be safe in our homes, but the punishment should be meted out to those responsible for the damage."

Miller stressed that moving the students is a matter of keeping the "safe environment" clause of the Housing Contract and does involve any disciplinary codes.

water showers which made people "smelly" because soap doesn't lather well in salt water.

"Even though I gave up some conveniences, it was worth it because I gained many incredible learning experiences from the trip," said Mueller.

Making good friends, she said, was easy because she was with the other students 24 hours a day. "By the end of the trip I knew some people better than I know my best friend," she said.

Even though she only spent five days on land, she said, she managed to make friends with a native from the island of Roatan, an island off the coast of Honduras.

Her friend, she said, took her to island parties and introduced her to her family, which consisted of ten brothers and sisters. "The natives are extremely friendly and fascinated by outsiders."

perfect health and happiness, but very rarely show them actually smoking cigarettes, Pollay said.

In addition, these advertisements target teenagers who want independence or rebellion, he said, but the tobacco industry denies this.

"Cigarettes kill more Americans each year than alcohol, cocaine, heroine, fires, car accidents, homicides, suicides and AIDS combined," Kilbourne claimed.

"The U.S. is the leading drug pusher because it sells the most cigarettes," she said.

The lectures were sponsored by the Center for Communications at the University.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

"WELL FRIENDS, WE'VE SUCCEEDED IN CLOSING ALL THE BARS - AND WE'VE STOPPED ALL OFF CAMPUS PARTYING!".
"AMHERST IS NOW THE TOWN IT ONCE WAS - PEACEFUL, QUIET, AND BEAUTIFUL."
Yes!
"AND NOW ON TO THE NEXT ITEM ON OUR AGENDA..."
"SOLID WASTE MANAGEMENT."

A little fact-finding would help

According to his editorial in the Collegian of April 24, Michael Morrissey believes that Harry Pregerson, judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, 9th District, who presided over the last minute appeals in the case of Robert Alton Harris, was "probably appointed by former California governor, Moonbeam Brown."

Mr. Morrissey may be disappointed to learn that Pregerson, a former Marine and President of the Student Body at UCLA, an active supporter of agencies such as Big Brothers, Toys for Tots, International Orphans, Por la Raza, etc. — was appointed by President Carter in 1979.

These facts, no doubt, will be deemed irrelevant by Mr. Morrissey. Robert Harris probably did not consider talking with the loan department of the bank he had targeted. Mr. Morrissey probably likewise rejected the notion of visiting the University Library for a little fact-finding before shooting his mouth off in the pages of "the largest college daily in New England."

The Editorial/Opinion page welcomes diverse points of view on just about anything. If something on campus bothers you, if you've been slighted by naysayers, if you've got something to complain about, if you want to tell us how great a job we're doing, or just want to share your agenda, we're here for you. Write a column or a letter, or draw a cartoon. We may not print it right away, but we'll get to it soon enough. You just think we're closed-minded.

Sexual assault every day

Sexual Assault Awareness Month is coming to a close and we are all being reminded of the gross statistics that exist (although we can never be reminded too often). These statistics are not just numbers that someone threw down on a sheet or made up to scare UMass students, they are real. Women have endured tragic and unnecessary experiences that made them one of those numbers. No one wants to be a statistic on a sexual assault report. No one should have to be a statistic on a sexual assault report. One hundred cases of sexual assault were reported at UMass between September and May of 1991. Many of you may be saying, "Wow, that many?" I am saying (along with thousands of other concerned women), "That's all that were reported?"

Stacy Malone

Do we all realize how often women are invaded on our campus? Obscene phone calls cause women to be wary when answering their own phones. An increasing number of date rapes make women extra cautious about whom they go out with, what they wear and how they act (i.e. how much they drink, how much affection they show their date). Women are not able to walk across campus after the sun sets without fear. Women are not even able to take showers and go to the bathroom on this campus, because of some perverted men who insist on taking away their privacy! Women are supposed to be free human beings. Do any of those fears help constitute women as free people? No, I just don't think so.

There are thousands of women who live on this campus. Why do I seriously doubt there were only 100 incidents where women were sexually assaulted between September and May of 1991? Because many women don't report incidents of sexual assault. It isn't known how many sexual assaults actually occurred in the residence halls, fraternities and off-campus houses, because most women don't report sexual assault incidents.

It is known that they occur in all of these places — whether we want to believe it or not. Just because last year's statistics do not state there were sexual assault incidents in fraternities or off-campus houses does not mean they don't happen there. It means they went unreported.

It is extremely difficult to deal with any incident of sexual assault and even more difficult to report it. Why are women so hesitant in reporting incidents of sexual assault? Fear of being blamed. Fear of embarrassment. Fear of others seeing it as a minor incident. FEAR. There is no such thing as a "minor incident" of sexual assault. Sexual assault is a major invasion to a woman's privacy and her freedom.

Women should feel safe when they are in their own dorms, but as the statistics show 59 percent of those 100 incidents occurred in the residence halls. Women should feel safe being with their friends, but the statistics show that only 13 percent of the sexual assault offenders were strangers. Most of the women knew the men who sexually assaulted them!

Sexual Assault Awareness Month is only one step. We should be aware of sexual assault every day, because it happens every day.

'Frats Stop Rape' and 'Frats Stop Raping' mean very different things

This letter is in response to Scott Ingulli's Monday editorial [April 27, "Generalizing cheapens your view . . ."]. In your editorial, you recounted how you were taking a leisurely stroll down N. Pleasant St., when all of a sudden you looked down to notice that your L.L. Beans were resting on the chalk-scrawled words "Frats Stop Raping!" Your complaint was that whoever wrote this probably "meant [that] the fraternity type of man should stop raping." Your point was that the unknown "chump," as you implied, was generalizing that all men in frats are incapable of distinguishing the word NO from the word YES.

Well, if I had in fact written "Frats Stop Raping," then your anger at such an unjustified, "stupid and ignorant" generalization would have been understandable. However, the suggested demand which this "chump" scribbled onto the sidewalk during last Thursday's "Take back the night" march was: "FRATS STOP RAPE!" The connotations of the two phrases are quite distinctly different. "FRATS STOP RAPE!" is not the "stupid, ignorant" generalization you claimed it to be. "FRATS STOP RAPE!" means to educate your brothers about date rape. "FRATS STOP RAPE!" means to meet us on the Amherst Common during the latter half of our "Take Back the Night" vigil, instead of peeking out your fraternity windows and skipping outside to yell at us for writing "NO MEANS NO" in front of your frat houses.

"FRATS STOP RAPE!" means to show your support with a banner on your house or candles in your windows during the one night of the year when we women don't have to take the long way home because the short-cut doesn't have street lights. "FRATS STOP RAPE!" means to donate the time of your new pledges to the escort service. "FRATS STOP RAPE!" means to have an educator/advocate from the Everywoman's Center to come talk to your frat about date rape and/or what you can do if someone you know is raped. "FRATS STOP RAPE!" is a summons, or at the very least, a suggestion, to use your power as a man, as a Greek, as a presumably respectable and socially concerned organized student association, to help end the violence against women on this campus.

"FRATS STOP RAPE!" is not an accusation. It is an attempt to urge the Greeks on this campus who still care whether or not a woman gets home safely to speak out against violence against women, against not knowing yes from no. I'd like to see your support in our rally next year. Oh yeah, sororities, where were your candles and signs of solidarity during our march last Thursday night? See you all next year, at the very least.

Stop Israeli occupation of territories, end oppression

As a son of a Palestinian-American I find it necessary to draw attention to the Palestinian's share of the struggle against repression, suppression and oppression. In our present situation, it is impossible to separate our culture from our struggle and our struggle from our culture. It is vitally essential to stress an equal feeling of cultural balance, identity and understanding amongst the multi-cultural mixture present here in the Amherst area. The Palestinian's fight against injustice and inequality is not only a Palestinian-Arab cause, but it is a part of the world struggle that all human beings, minorities and majorities, share and oppose. If the Palestinians cannot look to our fellow oppressed than who can we turn to for strength and encouragement?

For 25 years Palestinians have been subjected to a methodical system of oppression which has never allowed them to control their own cultural, traditional, economic, political and medical affairs. The four-year-old Intifada is the popular civil uprising of the Palestinians in response to Israel's self-justified system of land expropriation and totalitarian control over the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Israel, the "reluctant Goliath," has suppressed the unarmed civil uprising with brutal military force that has led to more than 1,200 deaths, one quarter of them young children, and 115,000 serious injuries of which 40,000 are permanently disabled.

For four years there has not been a single day without confrontations, without obvious organized symbols of defiance from the occupied and oppressed population.

Micah Nassar

The only question the world community can ask after realizing Israel's repressive measures such as the beatings, the mass arrests, the collective punishments, the regular raids of homes, the school closures, the frequent curfews, the house demolitions, the expulsions, etc., etc. — the only question that I ask is how can the Jewish people, who know too well the dreadful and unforgettable misery of such an existence, govern by terror, contempt and complete disregard of the basic human dignities of life!? And what about Prime Minister Shamir's insistence that the loan guarantees cannot be linked to the peace conference and settlement expansion since they are for humanitarian needs? How "humanitarian" is it to usurp and confiscate one people and their lands to make way for another? And how "humanitarian" is it to directly pressure other countries to close their borders to the Soviet Jews in order to force them to come to Israel when in fact most would prefer to go to Europe or to the United States?

For 25 years Israel has defied the repeated calls by the International community, the United Nations Council and the occupied people themselves to protect the human rights of the Palestinians in strict accordance with the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 and to withdraw from the West Bank and Gaza Strip immediately.

President Bush's insistence of a 120 day delay for considering Israel's request for $10 billion in loan guarantees allows the American people to seriously discuss how much the U.S. should support Israel's military occupation. It is a critical time for Palestinians in the territories. They are finding themselves further marooned on tiny bantustan-like pockets of land, closely resembling the dependant "Indian Reservations" of North America, surrounded by ever-increasing Jewish settlements. As the election year continues, we must urge our elected officials that Israel's request must be firmly linked to an end to settlement expansion and agreement to trade land for peace.

We understand and admit that the Palestinians have not been 100% innocent throughout our oppression — we have revolted and will continue to revolt. For until people will listen to our cry and discuss with us our pain, Revolution is our only hope.

It is important to acknowledge that Passover is a time to celebrate the freedom of Jews from years of oppression and while we join you in your celebration of freedom, all we ask is for your understanding and support, so that someday we may gather together to celebrate our freedom as well.

Third World Affairs

Third World sell-outs: the enemy within

"When my restless hands caress a White woman's breasts, they grasp White civilization and dignity and make them mine."

"Black Skin, White Masks," Frantz Fanon

It began with a two-pronged assault — mercantile colonialism, the plunder and exploitation of Third World resources and labor, and cultural imperialism, the pillage of artifacts, distortion of history, and debasement of Third World cultures and value systems.

The first led to destruction or disruption of the way of life in every corner of the globe; the second cultivated deep feelings of inferiority, the loss of a sense of pride and dignity, and even strange sexual neuroses.

For example, in the words of Nehru, "Greater than any victory of arms or diplomacy was the psychological triumph of the British in India, when we developed the mentality of a good house-servant, and the slave began to think as a slave."

This negative and demeaning self-image inculcated in Third World societies was then exploited by colonial education institutions, which often produced a class alienated from their own societies, who had a contempt for menial labor and a profound embarrassment about non-European aspects of their culture.

Several of them went on to participate in government, where they either became parasitical agents of their European mentors, or, after decolonization, turned out to be even more ruthless and exploitative than their European predecessors.

In the modern era, decolonization has merely marked a transition into newer, more sophisticated forms of economic, military, and cultural domination.

Increasingly difficult to isolate and combat is the cultural hegemony of the West, basically the United States, through its stranglehold on the international communications system.

The end product in the Third World is dismaying: colonization of the mind on an unprecedented scale, a global sell-out at every level. And the most pathetic products of all end up in the West.

You don't have to venture far to observe it. Our habitat is filled with superb specimens both in the media and in public.

Madanmohan Rao

How delightful are the tokens of the public sphere, colorful media celebrities who provide fashionable droppings of simulated dissent, chronically neutral and unable to take a stance of substance on current Third World issues. These sell-outs come from everywhere, with homegrown versions right here in the Valley.

Hats off to those Third World intellectuals, professors and students, who are so colonized that they can only quote Europeans, such as Tocqueville, Foucault, and Challiand.

Hardly better are those model Third World students in science and engineering whose world is filled with little more than test-tubes, equations, and computer terminals, slaving for the benefit of the White masters.

In contrast are the quaint Third World students in the humanities and social sciences who analyze and pontificate to no end, and look down on their compatriots in other disciplines. What meaningful contributions have they made to any discourse except as prime examples of the colonized mind?

Pathetic indeed is the sight of those who come from the Third World on scholarships thanks to subsidized education in excellent schools at home, scrambling for any job at all as the recession dims hopes of attaining their goal, the ever-elusive green card.

Even more nauseating are most of those from the Third World who pay their own way, squandering exorbitant sums of money merely for a good time, and are completely uninterested in the fate of their less-fortunate brethren. They are the despicable international jet-set crowd, clothed in Gucci and Cartier, parasites who are the first to prostitute themselves before the almighty Westerners, but also first to opportunistically exploit their Third World background. Can there be anything lower than the upper-class nouveau-riche opportunist? These characters are becoming increasingly and appropriately visible in the New World Order era United States.

All of this has manifested itself on campus of late in delightful ways. Take for example those Palestinian students who tried to deny the fact that their compatriots in the Occupied Territories cheered from their rooftops as Saddam's Scuds hit Israel, for fear of offending their liberal Zionist friends.

And how about the brilliant organizers of "Asia Night" who designed a poster with Asian flags which did not include the flag of Palestine, but featured that of the Israeli settler-colonial state in the very center of their advertisement.

Let's commend those Third World Communities whose collective organizations only care about annual cultural parades, instead of promoting public discourse about the economic chaos and upheaval that reign back home. During a time when colonial assaults devastate and threaten the entire Third World from Iraq to South Africa, Libya to Peru, Cuba to India, the least one would hope for would be some small display of concern if not dissent.

What the ALANA communities here have been witnessing for years, the lust for White meat, White thoughts, and White looks is increasingly manifesting itself in our Third World communities. The international system is perfectly mirrored by attitudes and events on campus.

Please welcome the New World Odor.

Dialogue: are Puerto Ricans Latin Americans?

It is unfortunate that after 500 years of resistance on the part of all Latin American and Native American peoples we Puertorriquenas/os (Puerto Ricans) are still accused of not being Latinas/os.

Although unfortunate, it is not surprising. This kind of attack only shows that our oppressors succeed in their ideological domination.

Puerto Rico has been a colony of the United States since July 25, 1898. Our country has been occupied by a foreign country for over 500 years.

Aixa Rodriguez

In the last 94 years the U.S. citizenship has been imposed on us (1917), and our colonial status has been hidden behind the name of Commonwealth or Free Associated State (1952). Our minds too have been colonized.

We have been told that we are passive, inferior, that we cannot survive without the United States and that communism will take over if we become independent.

Yes, those are all lies. They have been repeated until they have become "truths," not only for many Puertorriquenas/os but for many Latinas/os as well.

Our domination has been perpetuated through very clever ideological strategies.

We never learn about our indigenous people's (the Tainos) resistance, nor do we read or learn about the revolts led by Black slaves or the many revolts by the "Nacionalistas" in the island. The independence movement has been repressed in all possible ways by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and their accomplices within Puerto Rico's government.

It is remarkable that we the independentistas as still alive and fighting for the freedom of our nation.

At the same time, Latin American countries have repeatedly received the distorted message that Puerto Ricans don't want to be Latinos, that we are gringo "wannabes." And they too believe that lie.

The real effect of all these lies is to divide and conquer, to isolate Puerto Rico from the Latin American community, to destroy the possibilities of solidarity and therefore of any serious movement in favor of Puerto Rico's independence in Latin America.

In spite of the lies there is solidarity with Puerto Rico not only in Latin America but around the world. The decolonization committee of the United Nations has acknowledged our colonial status and our right to self-determination has been confirmed.

Those who deny Puerto Rico its place as a Latin American and Third World nation are taking away part of our identity. Those who think Puerto Ricans are different because we are citizens of the United States are simply reproducing the lies our oppressors have told them and us. Their ideological domination explains these erroneous attitudes but they are not justified anymore.

Before you judge Puertorriquenas/os take the time to learn and understand our colonial history. Before you call us hypocritical just because we come to the metropolis to get college degrees, stop to think how much the United States owes us for more than ninety years of economic exploitation and human degradation. Before you judge all Puerto Ricans by a particular group which has no political conscience, stop to think that they are the product of 94 years of internalized oppression and NOT different from young people with no political conscience in any Latin American country or the United States.

But even more important, before you judge Puerto Rico please notice that we Latinas/os are all colonized people. That we have internalized our oppression and with it we have made it very easy for the United States to keep us apart.

The case of Puerto Rico in the Latin American context is not different from the isolation of Cuba, or the isolation of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

This is the first step of colonization: destroy the possibility of solidarity, impose a feeling of isolation and impotence. How can we in 1992 still fall for that?

We all have the responsibility to develop a political conscience and to take on the challenge to dismantle the ideological structures that keep us apart. Puerto Rico is a distinct Latin American nation and very much part of the developing world.

In 1992 we commemorate 500 years of Taino, Black and jibaro resistance in our nation: Puerto Rico.

Aixa Rodriguez is a UMass graduate student. The opinions in this article are not necessarily those of the Collegian.

The question is "Are Puerto Ricans Latinos?" Latin Americans such as myself, are amazed at the question.

A second question begged by the first is, "Is Puerto Rico a Latin American (and thus a Third World) nation?" The answer is, of course not! Puerto Rico is, for the most part, a willing U.S. colony. Indeed, it has always been a colony, never had any independence, and doesn't seem to want it now. Therefore, very few Latin Americans see Puerto Rico as part of our family of nations.

Luisa Quintanilla

True, Puerto Rico was once a Spanish-speaking island. But that is being eroded by every year of U.S. rule. Some claim that Puerto Rico must be considered a part of Latin America because Spanish is the most widely spoken language in the island. But clearly, there is more to Latin America than the Spanish language. In any case, let's say that Puerto Rico achieved its dream of becoming a U.S. state: would anyone dream of calling it Latin American?

Had Puerto Rico achieved independence instead of becoming a U.S. colony, it surely would have become a part of Latin America. Unfortunately, the "Americanization" that has taken place has created an unbridgeable gap of culture and mentality.

Really, only Puerto Ricans themselves believe they are Latin Americans. Apart from their contented colony status, there is an issue very few Puerto Ricans seem to grasp. They are U.S. citizens! They happily serve in the imperial United States Armed Forces, and travel with their compatriots from the 50 states around the Third World killing people such as Panamanians, Grenadans and Iraqis. They benefit from the empire in ways no one from Latin America could dream of.

Puerto Ricans have something that many in Latin America and the rest of the Third World live and die for — the right to come at will to the United States and partake of the extremely luxurious life here. As they travel around the globe, Puerto Ricans have the security of that all-important little gold eagle on their little blue passports, receiving all the deference accorded to U.S. citizens abroad, breezing past huge lines of Third Worlders at immigration desks the world over. Anyone who doesn't understand the gulf that exists between U.S. citizens and Third World people is not in touch with the realities of life.

When it suits them, the Puerto Ricans are U.S. citizens. When it doesn't suit them, they are Latin Americans. Forget it! No one is going to buy this. Puerto Ricans are U.S. citizens, most of them happily and proudly so, according to vote after vote, referendum after referendum. Therefore, axiomatically, they are not Latin Americans or Third Worlders. Perhaps they would be better described as "Hispanics," a word many of them favor. Hispanic is generally taken to mean U.S. citizens of non-European Spanish-speaking origin. In other words, a U.S. minority.

Of course, no one is going to deny that mistreated minorities or residents of a colony are not in an oppressed position. The struggles against domestic discrimination and imperialism may well be compatible. We ought to sympathize and cooperate with each other's struggles. But we cannot begin the real work of breaking down the barriers between us until they are recognized. Until then, they will continue to smolder between the lines. As long as Third World opinions that U.S. minorities don't like are condemned as evidence of colonized mentalities, the barriers are up.

These sentiments do not qualify as "internal" or "internalized" oppression. No one is insulting or criticizing Puerto Ricans, only pointing out the obvious truth. This is not an "internal" issue, but between different peoples. This has been underlined by the response from much of the community, as they ignore abuses from sell-outs or the majority, but spring into action when a Latina raises uncomfortable issues.

Of course, we must not forget the brave freedom fighters, los independentistas, who unfortunately remain on the fringes of their society. They have earned our respect magnificently, even if the rest of the island hasn't. All respect to those who have, and still fight for Puerto Rican independence!

Unfortunately, they seem to be waging a losing battle, primarily because so few of their compatriots are interested in breaking the ties which, along with all the other benefits, bring them the highest standard of living in the Caribbean.

All this is obvious to virtually everyone from Latin America, or the rest of the Third World for that matter, but may not be to many Puerto Ricans. But, let's all get it straight once and for all: Puerto Ricans are minority U.S. citizens (Hispanics), they are not, repeat not, Latin Americans (Latinos) or Third Worlders.

Classic films on HSCN this week

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to yet another edition of your oh-so-favorite column, the Campus Cable Connection. This week, the movies are. . .dare I say. . .DIFFERENT! YES! There are no repeats this week and Boyz N The Hood is not on! Okay, okay, calm down now, and pay attention to the plethora of movie greats and movie flops. Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, April 29:

Agnes Of God — Jane Fonda, Anne Bancroft, Meg Tilly. Tilly is a sweet-faced, innocent nun who is accused of killing her baby that she claims was a result of an immaculate conception. Fonda is a court-appointed psychiatrist who must determine whether or not Tilly is crazy, but along the way discovers that there is more to the case than what it seems. An all-around fine film, with standout performances by Tilly and Fonda. ***

Pygmalion — Leslie Howard, Wendy Hiller, Wilfrid Lawson. Excellent adaptation of George Bernard Shaw's classic play about a poor flower girl who is "educated" into a lady. "My Fair Lady" and "Pretty Woman" were based on this masterpiece of modern drama. The humor is tasteful, sophisticated and witty. ****

Children Of Paradise — Jean-Louis Barrault, Arletty, Pierre Brasseur. This is a wonderful love story between a beautiful woman and a pantomime. You'll smile, you'll cry, and you'll want to see it again. Barrault is magic. ****

Breathless — Jean Seberg, Jean-Paul Belmondo, Daniel Boulanger. This 1959 French film was remade in 1983 starring Richard Gere, but the original is definitely something to see. Belmondo is a crook based in Paris who is being chased by police after he has stolen a car and killed an officer. The acting is spectacular and the New Wave plot is directed with flair. Watch this one first, then go and rent the one with Richard Gere. 1/2

Kon-Tiki — Narrated by Ben Grauer, Thor Heyerdahl. This is an excellent documentary that won an Oscar in 1951, and though it may seem boring (and I know it would if I described it), it's definitely a film worth catching this week. Heyerdahl talks about his raft trip from Peru to Tahiti. See, I told you, it sounds boring, but give it a chance, guys! ***

Pandora's Box — Louise Brooks, Fritz Kortner, Franz Lederer. Ahh, another classic flick this week! Made in 1928 and restored in 1983, this film is unprecedented in its effect upon audiences. Loaded with drama and sexuality, Pandora's Box is about a flower girl who becomes first a protegee and then a wife of a newspaper editor. One of the best silent films made. ****

Whistle Down the Wind — Hayley Mills, Alan Bates, Bernard Lee. Based on the novel by Mary Hayley Bell, this tale of childhood innocence is a treat to watch. A fugitive murderer seeks escape in a barn when he is discovered by children who think him to be Christ. The movie is believable, sweet and wonderfully acted. ****

The Lavender Hill Mob — Alec Guinness, Stanley Holloway, Sidney James. This 1951 movie won an Oscar for Best Story and Screenplay, and even has a brief scene with Audrey Hepburn at the end. It's a side-splitting comedy with cops and robbers and chase scenes. (Hey, you guys, there are some REALLY good movies on this week! I haven't had one slam yet!) 1/2

The Importance of Being Earnest — Michael Redgrave, Michael Denison, Richard Wattis. An excellent cast does justice to this film based on Oscar Wilde's comedy of manners. Who hasn't read the book yet? You either? Well then, catch the movie! ***

Salt of the Earth — Juan Chacon, Rosoura Revueltas, Will Geer. This movie about New Mexican mine workers has a strong feminist viewpoint that I think carries a very worthwhile message to viewers. Apparently the film was extremely controversial when it was made, and the director, producer, screenwriter and Will Geer were all blacklisted. (Just a little tidbit from little ol' me.) 1/2

Torch Song Trilogy — Anne Bancroft, Matthew Broderick, Harvey Fierstein. Fierstein wrote this movie based on his play about a drag queen, and I've heard the play is much better, though I enjoyed the movie thoroughly. Fierstein is a Jewish homosexual who describes his life in such elaborate detail I was glued to the screen. Some hysterical moments are offset by incredible tearjerkers, including Broderick's brutal murder by "gaybashers." The issue of AIDS is touched upon, but not overdone. Overall, a fantastic film. ***

Berry Gordy's The Last Dragon — Taimak, Vanity, Chris Murney. Oy, here we go. Thank goodness! I thought I wouldn't have a chance to slam a movie this week. Strictly kid-stuff martial arts crap. A wanna-be martial artist falls for this glitzy video deejay and gets involved with all these gangsters and stuff. The movie is overdone, boring and cheesy. Very little humor gives it some points. *

Funny Girl — Barbra Streisand, Omar Sharif, Kay Medford. Streisand's Oscar-winning debut about a singer-comedienne whose unhappy private life is masked by her comedic front onstage. Great musical, and Barbra's singing. . .like BUTTAH! ***

All About Eve — Bette Davis, Anne Baxter, George Sanders, Marilyn Monroe. Realistic look at life in the theater with a brilliant portrayal by Davis as an aging star who takes in a star-struck fan only to later realize that the fan has slowly been taking over her life. Brutally poignant — won six Oscars, including Best Picture, Director, Screenplay and Supporting Actor. DON'T MISS! ****

. . . And Justice For All — Al Pacino, Jack Warden, John Forsythe. Lawyer Pacino is fed up with all of the crap and singlehandedly takes on the judicial system of Maryland. Biting satire is painfully realistic and thoroughly depressing in parts. Pacino is powerful and passionate. ***

Movies that are on HSCN but are not reviewed are: My Girl, Come See The Paradise, Necessary Roughness, Ramblin Rose, and Freddy's Dead (one of those Nightmare On Elm Street movies, but I lost count after 4.)

BMCP sponsors encouraging seminar tonight

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

The flyer calls to students who are "stressed" and "unmotivated," and to those who feel they have "limited options" concerning the future.

The Black Mass Communications Project welcomes all students and faculty to attend an entrepreneurial seminar titled "Turning Obstacles into Opportunity" they are sponsoring this evening at 7 p.m. in the Malcolm X Cultural Center.

The purpose of the seminar, according to Peter Ribeiro, the primary coordinator of the event, is to enlighten students about the practical implementations of positive individual ideas to evolve into opportunities for future success.

Ribeiro asserts that Black and other minority students have negative aspects of "being Black" or of a "minority" thrust upon them. While White students are often encouraged and shown positive things to motivate success, he claims, Blacks are told different, negative things.

Ribeiro hopes this seminar will go back to the "base" of the problem, and successfully deal with the low self-esteem that is often generated by such social standards. This, he claims, is something the UMass department simply does not do.

"It's a unique perspective about building positive self-images as what you have to do," Ribeiro says of the seminar. "Social problems such as sexism and racism are merely symptoms of the much larger problem of building self-image early on."

Two prominent guest speakers, Beryl Irene Bailey, professional educator, and Michael D. Samuels, entrepreneur and educational consultant/educator will lecture.

Topics of discussion include entrepreneurship, building and channeling positive self-esteem and self-images, as well as stress and time management.

Jen Crenshaw, business manager for B.M.C.P., emphasizes that tonight's seminar is "very educational, useful and self-motivating. The community will benefit from it."

On behalf of B.M.C.P., Ribeiro encourages all "people who want to experience the wealth of the knowledge, information, and methods to develop skills and implement ideas to become opportunity" to attend tonight's seminar.

Vibrant characters entertain from the Abyss

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

In My Abyss
Southside Room, Hampden
April 23-25

The first and second acts of Elisabeth Sampson's In My Abyss may well be two sides of the same coin, but for me at least, they did not have the same worth.

Abyss is an unusual offering, the type of play that is invariably called "experimental" because no one knows what else to call it. The plot is about the actions and interactions of a group of people, in a mythic paradise-like garden; the result is Samuel Beckett, by way of Monty Python.

What makes this mix such spectacular fun, at first, is Sampson's self-effacing humor. The characters argue over ownership of bubble-pipes, dispute the color of the sky, fart, and look for basketballs. Yet, they possess a keen sense of their own absurdity which makes their daily disputes hilarious, rather than mundane. When the show turns into a psychological examination of one of its characters, this humor disappears — and so does much of our interest.

Still, In My Abyss is a great evening of theater, because it does what theatre does best. It entertains, it enlightens, it creates its own boundaries, and it tests the limits of the audience's imagination.

Film maker Steven Epstein has created movie segments to accompany the onstage action, and the results are wonderful. His films are no more structured than the average music video, but the images are not random — they fit the show perfectly. Likewise, Bradford Potter's original musical score manages to complement the play with unpredictability and whimsy. Only Denise Daltons' modern dance segments fall flat, perhaps because the integration of interpretive mime is just not a good idea.

The show is also strengthened by Kenneth Robert's unlikely but engaging direction, and a couple of fine performances.

As the immobile Pira, Laurie Ciarametaro provides the emotional and physical center of the show. All action revolves around her, and she is smugly aware of it. Ciarametaro was the casting coup for this production — an actress able to handle everything from light comedy to weighty drama, and one who is also strikingly beautiful.

While Sampson's text gives enough reference to Pira's beauty to carry any actress through the role, when played out by Ciarametaro the character's self-loathing has a particularly powerful impact. She is what everyone around her covets, but she sees in her mirror-reflection nothing but ugliness.

Also fantastic is Ed McCarthy as Carlisle, a bubble-pipe-sucking, "Flamingo-dancing" philosopher. McCarthy has a great gift for comic acting, and stopped the show with his hilarious "dance" routine, in which he twists himself into grotesque shapes while the other characters marvel at his grace.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 10): Never underestimate the power of positive thinking! A domestic problem or personal matter could threaten to distract you from important business. Put first things first.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A day when you can gain access to influential social and business groups. Big ideas should be taking shape now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A clear head and guarded approach will prevent a domestic or professional setback. Although a purchase may be OK, so is saving your money. Get together with friends and plan a fun event.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Fools rush in where wise men never go. Avoid splurging on luxuries, even if a friend urges you to do so. It is a run-errands, talk-it-up day. Reach for the stars.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A work conflict may place you between a rock and a hard place. Compose yourself. You will have no trouble getting the information you need. Make good use of your natural talents.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Business success depends on you showing more initiative in the workplace. If someone gives you valuable inside information, us it wisely. New friendships and adventures could be heaven-sent.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Although unrest lingers, victory is at hand. You have a lot to gain from being friends with an influential associate. Be a doer instead of a watcher. Take out your sketch pad or dancing shoes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This is not time to wear your heart on your sleeve. Be the Rock of Gibraltar to a friend in need. Lie low today and spend a peaceful evening at home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Although playing second fiddle is not much fun, it is better than being passed over completely. Live in the present and be content. The evening looks great; invite friends for dinner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Financial speculation will almost certainly result in loss. Focus on creative enterprises and listen to the advice of someone more experienced than yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The social scene offers you ample opportunity to rub elbows with friends and VIPs alike. Your decisions will pan out, life will improve. Prosperity makes a comeback and good luck abounds.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Rise above petty squabbles at work or home. Do not shake the foundations of your life in pursuit of an elusive objective.

Women's crew tops field; men second

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts crew hit the water at Lake Onota in Pittsfield last Saturday for a meet against Williams and Ithaca. According to coach Howrad Moore, the eight-man men's varsity team "came together as a boat."

In a race that was slow due to a strong headwind, the UMass men's varsity eight finished in 6:51, six seconds behind Williams. All three crews got off to a fast start, as Williams pulled ahead of UMass and Ithaca in the first 1000 meters.

Ithaca challenged UMass for second, as both boats reached sprints. However, UMass held on to its second place finish, three seconds ahead of Ithaca.

"The varsity men had a really good race this weekend," said Moore.

The UMass women's varsity eight led a clean sweep of Williams and Ithaca. UMass had what Moore termed a "strong race," defeating Ithaca by six seconds and Williams by 22 seconds.

UMass passed both opposing boats quickly after the start, and held on throughout the race. UMass' sprint was enough to hold off Ithaca, which put on a late charge, finishing in 7:48.

"We were happy that we solidly beat Ithaca, which is always a high-placing crew at nationals," Lambert said.

The UMass JV men came in second place, finishing behind Ithaca's lightweight boat, and ahead of both heavyweight boats from Ithaca and Williams.

Ithaca's lightweights led from the start, jumping out to about a five seat lead on UMass. UMass stormed back as it continued to vie for the lead, but Ithaca prevailed at the finish, beating UMass by five seconds.

The UMass JV women rowed a solid race, defeating Ithaca by three seconds. Both boats were even throughout the race, rowing neck-and-neck until sprints.

In the end, UMass sprinted ahead of Ithaca, finishing in a time of 8:08.

The UMass novice crew's were both victorious last weekend, as they continued to impress. UMass men's novice heavyweights defeated Williams by two seconds in 7:06. UMass women's novices beat both Ithaca and Williams in 8:14

UMass crew prepares this week to travel once to Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester for the New England Championships.

"Women's crew has a good chance of medaling if they race as well as they have recently," said women's coach Stefanie Moore.

"We are confident, and we know we now can compete in the New England's," said crew member Bob Lowry.

Donald Junkins, a member of the football head coach search committee, with the university ombudsperson (good to know we have one of those). Junkins, and others, are incensed at the handling of the search process, which ended when O'Brien and Bischoff named Hodges coach.

"I was saddened and shocked at the sudden aborting of the search process," Junkins said. "It has affirmative action overtones."

Junkins points the finger at Bischoff claiming "it seems that he is angry at the alumni group so he aborted the search process."

Stay tuned for more compelling drama in "As the University Turns."

• My cousin Herb, a Patriots diehard, subscribes to the team's newsletter "Sideline Report," and the current issue is "looking toward the season with optimism." I asked Herb why he subjects himself to this torture.

"THIS is the year, Chung was a great pick, Mac is a great coach and Kiam is gone." Herb believes himself and that's important. I'm even beginning to go along with his views. Good whiskey Herb, damn good whiskey.

• The Hartford Whalers had under 7,000 people at the Civic Center for one of last week's playoff games. Imagine the Celtics having even one empty seat for a playoff game? I'd venture to guess the effects of the strike linger.

• Craig Janney never would have scored off the face-off and Adam Oates did. Good trade. The Bruins are fine to watch and I certainly appreciate Number 77 and it would be magnificent if they drink from the Cup, but the Celts are the REAL story. John Bags of Popcorn. Reggie Lewis. Coach of the Year Chris Ford.

• If you're still on this ride, it might be time to jump off as we wind our way into the L.O.B. Sox. Twenty-four men left on base in two games? 24? XXIV? Vingt-quatre? Let Don Zimmer pinch-hit or the Rooster, or Sherm Feller, anyone. It is beyond comprehension.

• The horseback riding trials and tribulations continue as Black Devil and I gather our stuff for the trip to Lexington. The big board has us as 3-2 favorites to win the Kentucky Derby.

Some might say I'm not ready for the Derby, having only ridden for the past three months. I got the lackadaisical Joker to canter like a young stallion. That, my friends, is credentials enough.

• Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on Ron Villone.

Softball sweeps Providence, 6-0, 10-2

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

After dropping three of its last six games and struggling for the three wins, all against tough opponents, the University of Massachusetts softball team showed a little bit of everything yesterday in sweeping Providence, 6-0 and 10-2, at Totman Field.

Last week the Minutewomen (26-11), the region's number two team, were swept by Connecticut, the region's number one team. Sunday, UMass beat Adelphi 2-0 before winning 3-2 in a 14-inning marathon. Monday, UMass and regional seed number three Hofstra changed leads five times in a 7-6 Hofstra win. UMass took the second game 6-4.

The Lady Friars arrived in town yesterday one day after UConn beat them 2-1 to win the Big East title, so they probably weren't too thrilled to play a Minutewomen squad whose bats have been uncharacteristically quiet of late.

In the first game Providence pitcher Kelly Tabor, a freshman with a long, funky windup, didn't allow those UMass bats to make much contact, as she allowed only three hits. She did, however, allow eight walks.

UMass got on the board in the first as Rachel Lawson walked and scored on a Barbara Marean double down the left field line.

After the first, Tabor set down the next eight batters she faced, but then the bottom fell out in the fourth.

With two outs Tabor walked Jen Devlin, Stacey Nichols, Laurie Dondarski and Tracey DeEst. Caryann Scully replaced Tabor (3-2), and Holly Aprile greeted her with a line drive triple to left center that scored all three runners.

UMass added a single run in the fifth as Marean walked, went to second on a single by Sherri Kuchinskas, was wild-pitched to third and scored on a Providence error.

UMass pitcher Kelly Daut (10-3) cruised to the win, setting down 10 Lady Friars in a row at one point and not allowing a runner to reach third base. She struck out none and walked none.

In the second game Providence reached UMass starter Kelly Daut for two runs in the first. Holly Thompson singled to lead off, but was forced at second on a grounder by Kim Robbins. Jennifer Finley singled to put runners at first and second, and Kim Dowd moved them to second and third with a groundout. Dawn Guerriero then singled both runners home.

UMass tied the score in the bottom of the first off PC pitcher Merry Perkowski as Lawson singled with one out and scored on a long triple by Marean. After Kuchinskas flied out, Peggy Bush plated Marean with a double.

The second inning was a monster for the Minutewomen as they scored four runs with two outs. Nichols bunted safely for a single, but was forced at second on a grounder by Dondarski, who went to second when Daut was hit by a pitch. Aprile then hit a grounder that forced Dondarski at third.

With runners on first and second Lawson hit a spinning half-line-drive that eluded the shortstop. The bases were loaded for power-hitter Marean, who promptly deposited the ball over the left-center field fence for her second home run of the season and the first UMass grand-slam since 1989.

Scully replaced Perkowski and shut the Minutewomen out in the third, but gave up a run in the fourth as Bush was hit by a pitch and went to second on an error by Scully, who picked up Devlin's grounder to the mound, only to drop it. Nichols reached on a fielder's choice that didn't produce an out, and Dondarski walked to force in Bush.

Marean was the big stick again in the fifth, as she doubled in Aprile, who had singled and reached third on a fielder's choice and a wild pitch. The RBI was Marean's sixth of the game, tying a team record. Kuchinskas then doubled in Marean.

In the sixth Angyla Brumm walked and stole second. Pinch-hitter Jen Salisbury lined to left fielder Wendy Cofran, who saw Brumm halfway to third, and threw the ball past the second baseman and into foul territory down the right field line, scoring Brumm.

Depp, Schlipf lead Gorillas to 18-8 rout of Boston College

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. — The 13th-ranked University of Massachusetts lacrosse team entered last night's game against Boston College having won the last 18 meetings between the two, dating back to 1974.

And the Gorillas (9-2) made it 19-straight last night at Alumni Stadium as they soundly concluded the Eagles (7-7) season with an 18-8 rout.

However, in the early going, it appeared as if the unranked Eagles might be able to pull off their first-ever win against the Gorillas, winners of seven consecutive games.

The Eagles scored the game's first two goals and kept the Gorillas at bay for the entire first period, as the first ended with a 3-3 tie.

Nonetheless, the Gorillas scored five goals and shut out the Eagles' scoring in the second period to take an 8-3 halftime advantage.

"We just said [at the end of the first period] that we have to calm down and get the ball around, take our time and not force the ball," said UMass assistant coach Tim Soudan.

Three of the Gorillas second period goals came within 53 seconds after they called a timeout at 9:35. John Schlipf scored at 10:10 and 10:26, followed by Wes Depp's goal, assisted by Bill Edell, at 10:26.

"We just told them [during the timeout] to take it to them and find the open man," Soudan said.

Depp, a sophomore from Garden City, N.Y. led UMass with a career-high five goals, three in the first period. Schlipf also scored a career-high four goals to increase his career-high, single-season total to 17.

Mark Millon, UMass' leading scorer with 41 goals and 16 assists, added three goals and two assists.

The Gorillas extended their halftime lead to a commanding 13-4 advantage after scoring five unanswered midway through the third period.

The closest the Eagles came in the second half was four as Colin McLane, the Eagles' all-time leading scorer who led his team with five goals, opened up the second half with a goal, assisted by Chris Angelone to make it 8-4.

The Gorillas are becoming accustomed to falling behind in the first period as they have in their last two contests before last night's, both overtime wins over Harvard and Rutgers University.

"We just wanted to really take it to them at first," Soudan said. "We were a little too anxious and just too sloppy."

UMass' Tom LoPresti recorded 16 saves in his tenth start in goal. The Gorillas dominated the faceoffs, winning 20 of 28 and outshot the Eagles, 48-33.

Victor Ianno stopped 19 shots in goal for the Eagles.

UMass' Dan Collins, a freshman from Peabody, Mass. scored his first career-goal in the fourth and defenseman Corey Cronin recorded his first point of the season, an assist to Depp in the third.

Mike Valente scored a goal and assisted on three and Mike Cain scored two goals and added an assist for the Gorillas.

The win was a must "convincing win" for the Gorillas as they seek their seventh-straight NCAA tournament appearance and copnclude the regular season with this weekend's matchup at top-ranked Syracuse.

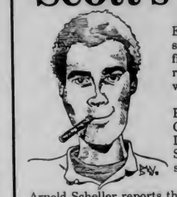
Scott's shots



Kudos to the New England Patriots for selecting me with their final pick in the 13th round. I look forward to working with Mac.

• Goodbye UpChuck Person. So long Reggie Cheryl Miller. Adios Detlef Schrempf Scampi. Out-diana, how sweep it is.

• Team physician Arnold Scheller reports that "Scott's Hot Shots" phenomenal center Kevin "Bone Chiller" Miller will have to sit out this weekend's Haigis Hoopla II, due to back spasms. The one week postponement was thought to be a blessing in disguise for my boys in high-tops, but Scheller is not optimistic.

"When you play the kind of aggressive, dive-for-every loose ball style that Kevin does, it takes time to recover from such an injury," I heard him say.

David Scott

Dave Gavitt has been advising me on basketball operations, so there is always the outside chance that the injury is all a smokescreen.

• How about M.L. Kleine? The guy is emotion personified on the bench and on the court. Give me six Joe Kleines and six Ed Pinckneys and I'll have a team that can't play outside the paint. Never mind just give me 12 Michael Jordans and I'll give you a championship.

• Good luck to Mike Hodges as head coach of the UMass football team, he just may need it. The program is in obvious disarray and Hodges has been promised "no substantial" further cuts, which at this university could mean Hodges will end up cutting the Stadium grass himself.

The whole situation was reminiscent of the manner in which the Celtics handled the hiring of Chris Ford after Jimmy Rodgers got the axe. The Celtics had an amply qualified candidate in their own house and went to the House of Duke in pursuit of Coach K. While there was no super-coach in UMass' plans it was, nonetheless, a slap in the face for Hodges, a 14-year assistant and six year defensive coordinator.

It would be nice if Hodges could have some of Ford's good fortune. Then again, the Celts have Red Auerbach and UMass has Chancellor Richard

Kennedy residents vacate

Staff restricts building access as 13 make tense exit

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Citing concerns over safety and security, John F. Kennedy Residence Hall staff and Housing officials restricted access to the building for over three hours yesterday as 13 men were forcibly removed following a weekend of vandalism.

While several top administrators watched the chaotic and tense move-out of half the occupants of the sixth floor, access to the building was restricted to residents only. At one point, residents yelled in disgust when they were not allowed to sign in guests.

On Saturday night during a fire alarm, all public space windows were broken and a dryer was thrown from a sixth floor lounge window, according to Housing officials.

Former sixth floor Kennedy residents Dave Ridley, Jim Peirce, Dave Guaragna and Jim Majka pause in the lobby on their way out of the building.

On Monday morning, Steven O'Halloran, Jim Majka, David Ridley, David Guaragna and nine other residents were notified by hand-delivered letter that they were being relocated to other residence halls in a Housing policy known unoffically as "dispersement."

"If it was so unsafe why did it take them a year to do something?" said Brian Johnson, a freshman being removed. He claims he was not in Kennedy over the weekend.

The residents were not offered an appeal of Housing's action against them, according to residents. According to the residence hall contract, if Housing removes a student from the residence hall, an hearing and an appeal must be offered. It is unknown if it applies to a "relocation."

"Aren't you innocent until proven guilty? This strikes me as immoral," said Amherst attorney Thomas D. Whitney. "It would make as much sense to fire Housing, they are responsible."

"If there is crime in New York City, then is the solution is to arrest everyone?" he asked.

Vasconcellos said although the order was due to an accumulation of events he said past problems, some dating back to the September move-in, were not to the extent of those this weekend.

"I don't think its fair that half have to leave and half

Jury acquits L.A. police in King case

By LINDA DEUTSCH

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. — Four White Los Angeles police officers were acquitted of all but one assault charge Wednesday in the videotaped beating of Black motorist Rodney King. A mistrial was declared on one count.

The verdicts, in the seventh day of deliberations, came after a year of political uproar sparked by the graphic videotape of a Black man being beaten by White officers, denounced in many quarters as brutality. The backlash brought down the Los Angeles police chief.

"My client and I are just outraged," King's lawyer, Steve Lerman, said after the verdict. "It sends a bad message. It said it's OK to go ahead and beat somebody when they're down and kick the crap out of them."

"I'm stunned beyond belief," said Los Angeles City Councilman Mark Ridley-Thomas, former head of the local Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Several hours after the verdicts were announced, several hundred demonstrators rushed the main doors at the Police Department's Parker Center headquarters in downtown Los Angeles. They backed off as helmeted officers blocked the doors. One man was arrested and objects were thrown at

Student voting power still a 'sleeping giant'

By JOSH REYNOLDS
Collegian Staff

The voting strength of the University of Massachusetts is a sleeping giant that occasionally stirs, or even rolls over, but has little effect on local politics.

Fifteen students voted out of 1,493 registered on-campus students in the March 24 presidential primary, according to the voter's list.

But, with 8,920 University students living in the residence halls and 7,138 undergraduates and graduates living in Amherst, University of Massachusetts students potentially hold an enormous amount of political clout.

Some student leaders, including Matthew Pavesi, town meeting member and Student Government chair of public policy, believe that institutional obstacles, not apathy, are the biggest problems.

"[Voting] is a pain in the ass, and I don't blame them," Pavesi said.

Precinct lines divide the campus, scattering students across five different precincts. In fact, there are no polling places on the sprawling University campus.

In spite of these institutional obstacles, the high-water mark of registration reached during the Question #3 debate showed that a concentrated "get-out-the-vote" drive can be successful.

During the 1990 gubernatorial election, the Citizens for Limited Taxation advanced a ballot question which many believed would cripple the state higher education system by reducing money available from state tax revenues.

Threatened by the looming prospect of drastically raised tuition and more budget slashes, the Student Government Association with the help of MassPIRG launched a four-day voter registration drive which registered about 2,200 students.

Citing this as a success story, Student Government members said between 80 to 90 percent of those registered did vote.

In fact, 700 of those newly-registered voters registered outside of Amherst, excluding themselves from Amherst town politics.

Furthermore, a check of the voter's list indicates that only 65 percent of on-campus students registered in Amherst voted, falling below the town's 74 percent overall average.

While it's difficult to say for certain how many off-campus students voted, research indicates that there's little difference between their voting habits and those of on-campus students.

The vote against CLT demonstrated what can be achieved through a con-

The Amherst housing code limit of four unrelated residents under one roof, the recent keg licensing law and the "Peace and Quiet" Commission's effect on downtown bars are proof that local politics have a significant effect on student life.

Numerically, students have the political strength to advance their interests, but in practice most of the minority of students who do register in Amherst never visit the polls.

Though it varies from year to year, typically UMass students registered in Amherst account for between 15 and 20 percent of Amherst voters, and are the majority of the population of precincts 4, 10 and 3.

Pulitzer winner tells her success story

By JENNIFER D. HAWKINS
Collegian Staff

"I will never be up there," Nan Robertson used to say when she gazed at the wall where the pictures of New York Times Pulitzer Prize winners were displayed. She was wrong.

Among numerous other prestigious awards, Nan Robertson, who spoke at the University last night, won the Pulitzer in 1983 for a feature story about her own brush with death from Toxic Shock Syndrome. "Terrific," she said of the feeling of winning the prize.

In 1955, when she first joined the New York Times, she said she believed she would never win the Pulitzer because "Women were never sent to cover the stories that win Pulitzer Prizes." She said women journalists wrote about "food, fashion, family, furnishings, and that was it."

Robertson's latest book, The Girls in the Balcony: Women, Men and The New York Times, illustrates women's struggle against sexism in the journalism world. She described the balcony as being at the far end of the Press Club, which was a popular stop for foreign leaders. She said women journalists were forced to stand in the balcony merely watching, while the male journalists participated in luncheons with foreign leaders. "I stood in it," she said. She added that not until 1971 were women allowed into the Press Club and finally "came down from the balcony."

However, in 1972, women at The New York Times were still being paid thousands of dollars less than their male counterparts and there were no women holding positions of power, Robertson said. She described the Times as known for its liberal positions and said, "Strangely enough, their public stance and their private treatment of employees were two different things."

She said the "central dramatic episode" of her book is the lawsuit that a group of female New York Times employees filed against the management in 1974. In 1978, the court ruled in favor of the women, but not until after the careers of the seven women who were named as plaintiffs were "blighted or stalled," according to Robertson.

Robertson said one of the reasons she wrote the book was to "make visible the women who contributed to this great institution (The New York Times)." She also said many women still feel angry and frustrated today, citing what she calls the "nodding head syndrome." She said throughout her book tour when she would speak about feminist struggles, the women in the audience would always nod their heads.

Robertson began her career in Europe, working as a foreign correspondent for various newspapers. When she went to Paris to begin her career, she said she had no idea how she was going to support herself and didn't know how to speak French.

JFK autopsy may be released

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The private advocacy group Public Citizen sued the National Archives on Wednesday for the re-release of more than 250 autopsy photos and X-rays of assassinated President John F. Kennedy.

The group told reporters the material could resolve lingering doubts over whether Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in the gunshot slaying of Kennedy on Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas.

In the suit, Public Citizen charged the government with wrongfully withholding public documents by claiming they are the private property of the Kennedy family.

"The photographs and X-rays are government records," said Public Citizen attorney Theresa Amato. Neither the government nor the Kennedy family, she said, can "deny the public the right to see them under the Freedom of Information Act."

Founded in 1971 by consumer advocate Ralph Nader, Public Citizen pursues a variety of consumer, environmental, public disclosure and health issues. The group filed the suit in U.S. District Court on behalf of author and historian Mark Katz after the archives rejected his request for the materials under the Freedom of Information Act.

Some of the grisly autopsy photos, showing the murdered president's blank stare, tracheotomy scar, and massive head wound, have been published in assassination books and tabloid magazines. But the bulk of the photographic record remains under lock and key at the archives, available only to qualified forensics experts and pathologists who gain Kennedy family permission.

The photos and X-rays of the president's body were taken at Bethesda Naval Hospital in Maryland the night of Nov. 22 and on Nov. 23, 1963. The record includes 14 negatives and 29 prints from X-rays, 131 prints, 27 slides and 27 color negatives from the autopsy, and 25 envelopes containing other prints and negatives.

The government turned the material over to the Kennedy family along with his bloodied clothing. On Oct. 29, 1966, Robert F. Kennedy deeded the photos and X-rays to the government on condition that they be kept out of public view while the late president's immediate family members were alive.

Archives spokesman Susan Cooper said attorneys were still examining the lawsuit and the agency would have no immediate comment.

Melody Miller, spokeswoman for Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said the family considers the photos private but has allowed qualified experts and government investigators full access to the material.

"Unrestricted public release of the autopsy materials would obviously be very painful to the Kennedy family," Miller said.

Katz, the author of two books featuring historical photographs, said he wants to settle the debate over whether the few autopsy photos that have been published were doctored to support various assassination theories.

"I'm very sensitive to the Kennedy family. This is nothing personal," Katz said. "It's just to get to the truth."

Student fights harassment

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — There was a time when Betsy Miller didn't realize boys in her school shouldn't look down her blouse and make comments about her jeans.

Miller, a senior at Sharon High School, knows better now. She says she knows what constitutes sexual harassment and she knows it happens all around her.

But Miller fears few of her peers understand and so she's lobbying in support of legislation to make sexual harassment education mandatory.

"It is alarming to me that so many people are unaware when they're being harassed," said the teen in a Statehouse news conference Wednesday.

"There's a lot of disrespectful name calling, comments about physical appearance."

"It's a degrading experience in general that's been accepted by our society."

Miller and members of the state's student advisory council gathered to support a bill being sponsored by Rep. Barbara Hildy, D-Amesbury, requiring all secondary schools to include sexual harassment in its health curriculum.

"Studies now find that sexual harassment is pervasive in all school districts, urban and rural," Hildt said.

She said research has indicated children are verbally and physically abused by peers and teachers.

"Victims report feeling embarrassed, angry, fearful and powerless. Students also report physical effects such as insomnia, listlessness and eating disorders," she said. "Most students don't even report sexual harassment. And the youngsters are inundated with conflicting messages about human sexuality on television, in advertisements and sometimes in their own homes.

"A lot of students have questions about what constitutes sexual harassment," said Elliot Barnett, a senior at Swampscott High School. "They don't feel there's anybody there to answer it."

Jenn Darcy, a senior at Randolph High School, said school instruction would also assist children who have part-time jobs and do not know how to deal with harassment.

"They need to know what their rights are," she said.

Senate hears explanation for removals

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

A Housing Services official told the Undergraduate Student Senate last night that yesterday's removal of 13 residents from Kennedy tower was not a disciplinary action, but an attempt to salvage the health of a residential community.

Anne Miller, associate director of Housing Services, said the 13 sixth floor residents were sent letters on Monday requiring them to find alternate housing by 5 p.m. yesterday. This move was in response to the tossing of a dryer through a lounge window during a fire drill Saturday night.

Miller said the sixth floor of Kennedy had been the site of "several raucous, but not unsafe situations" since September, and that the residents had been reprimanded on "at least two" occasions by housing officials.

Still, Miller gave senators her assurance that the forced move is not a punitive measure.

"I have defined this situation as a community problem," she said. "I'm responsible for changing that environment. I have no idea who is guilty and who is not guilty. My decision is not based on guilt."

Jennifer Wood, Student Government Association president, said she spoke to Legal Services attorney Tom Coish, who said the actions taken by Housing Services may be illegal.

"[Coish] said that, according to state law specifically for dormitories, students had to be given seven days written notice [before removal from housing]," said Wood. "He said [Housing] cannot exercise a group punishment, especially if they can't determine whether or not you are a threat."

Miller said the seven day period only applies to situations where a housing contract has been terminated, which she said is not the case here.

"This is not a termination of a contract," said Miller. "The Housing contract assures a space, but not necessarily a specific space. In this instance, my understanding is that the seven day expectation does not apply."

Some senators protested Housing Services method of "community billing" for damages — which Miller said included the price of a new dryer, replacement for five broken windows, damaged lounge furniture, broken ceiling lights, and damaged electrical wiring — saying that requiring all sixth floor residents to pay for damages amounted to "guilt by association."

Miller, while conceding that the assumption that everyone should be billed whether involved in the incident or not "might be wrong," said that residents of the floor, and all undergraduates, will pay for the damage.

"We assume that people will take care of their indi-

Under arrest for DUI

Detailing procedures for busting drunk drivers

Sargent Scott Livington of the Amherst Police Department examines Collegian staff member David Rivera's drivers' license in mock arrest.

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

"About how many drinks have you had?"

Normally this question wouldn't worry anyone, but when asked by a police officer who has stopped you in your car, the question takes on a completely different significance.

A field sobriety test may seem simple, but after two or three drinks this simple test becomes becomes a monumental nerve-racking task. The police officer has a variety of ways to test your sobriety.

First your motor skills are tested. This is done in one of several ways, including walking heel to toe with your eyes closed and arms stretched out from your body. Then he or she can ask you to recite the alphabet. If after these tests the officer feels you have been driving while under the influence of alcohol, you are then handcuffed and informed of your legal rights.

At police headquarters the procedure becomes much more mechanistic. After you give your name, residence and other details, the officer then photographs and fingerprints you.

The breathalizer test, which is optional, can determine the level of intoxication and either help convict you or help acquit you of the charges of driving while under the influence.

According to the federal Office of Substance Abuse (OSAP), as many college students will die of alcohol related causes as will receive their masters and doctorate degrees. With increasing pressure from residents and town officials, local bars are strictly enforcing capacity laws, forcing more and more students off campus and out of Amherst to seek social interaction.

Scott Livingstone, a sergeant in the Amherst police department, has seen a growing increase in alcohol related incidents since the 1988 campus policy was instated.

"I've seen a drastic increase since 1988," Livingstone said. "It's a problem that's only going to get worse if something isn't done.

Livingstone, a 15-year police veteran, remembers 1981 when 12 alcohol-related vehicular deaths occurred in Amherst. It was that high number in one year that created the Speed Alcohol Program (SAP) which, through a state grant, allowed Amherst to monitor its roads for drunk driving offenders.

'Cosby Show' study shows series breaks barriers

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

What 8-year-old situation comedy achieved the status of the most popular Black television show in history, helped break racial barriers, provoked White people to feel warmth and affection toward a Black family and airs its final episode tonight?

"The Cosby Show," of course.

"The Cosby Show"'s impact on mass media was so tremendous it peaked the curiosity of two University of Massachusetts communications professors, Sut Jhally and Justin Lewis, into conducting a two year study on the impact the show had on race relations.

"Bill Cosby was trying to get rid of the negative images of Black people and get White people to identify in a positive way with Black people, and I believe he achieved that," said Lewis.

Jhally and Lewis said their $16,500 study, which was funded by Cosby and involved about 270 Black and White people from different social classes, revealed that the show had both a positive and negative impact on attitudes about race relations.

"[Jhally and I] found a remarkable and unprecedented level of identification and warmth among White people for the Huxtables," said Lewis.

Black people were tired of all the negative Black images on television and were very grateful to Cosby for producing "The Cosby Show," according to Lewis.

"To Black people the show was like a breath of fresh air," he said.

Boston Globe columnist Steven Stark said in his column last Monday that he also believes the show broke racial stereotypes.

The series told viewers you don't have to be White to be upper-middle class, acquisitive or have a stable family," he said.

But because of the affluent Black characters featured on the show, said Lewis, many White people now believe anyone can make it and there is no longer a need for programs like affirmative action when just the opposite is true.

"If Black people fail, then White people can look at the successful Black people on "The Cosby Show" and say they only have themselves to blame because they are lazy," said Lewis.

Jhally and Lewis said they believe this problem of White people's blase feelings about things like equal opportunity stems from network television as a whole and not from "The Cosby Show."

"Cosby is not responsible for representing every type of Black person on television. It is the network's responsibility to provide their audience with shows that feature Black people in more than one social class," said Lewis.

Jhally and Lewis, whose Westview Press-published book, Enlightened Racism, is due to hit bookstores in three weeks, said even though Cosby funded their study he made sure there was no conflict of interest.

"Cosby said there was no way he would interfere with the questions Jhally and I asked nor the conclusions we came up with no matter how critical they were of 'The Cosby Show'," said Lewis.

"This is a tribute to Cosby's openmindedness, generosity and dedication to education," added Lewis.

Right to life out of hand

When opposing sides can only see one side of an issue, compromise is impossible. Just ask the residents of Buffalo, N.Y.

Buffalo is usually a pretty sedate city. Its residents are blue-collar, hard working people who love chicken wings, call soda "pop" and live for sports of all kinds. It's also a city steeped in immigrant tradition. Just ask me — I was in town to visit my grandparents for Easter.

Greg Sukiennik

Into this portrait add thousands of pro- and anti-abortion protestors, holding signs and screaming epithets at each other in front of a downtown clinic. Headlines of The Buffalo News forget all about the minor league baseball team's opening day and focus on arrests, politics, personal convictions and religion.

Much like the "number six" in Blazing Saddles, Operation Rescue had "come a-ridin' into town, a-whippin and a-whuppin." In the same way, pro-choice activists arrived in Buffalo. The average city resident had invited neither.

Have you ever seen Operation Rescue leader Randall Terry in action? He is one crazy mo' fo.' The television news clip of Terry preaching in a church in suburban Tonawanda was scary to behold. He looked like he was either a) possessed or b) a sufferer of St. Vitus' Dance.

On the other hand, the leadership from the other side of the argument didn't exactly distinguish itself either. Surrounding a priest on a sidewalk, taunting him and shoving him off the sidewalk isn't exactly high-class activism.

And behind these more vocal people were the thousands of ordinary citizens who, for one reason or another, felt strongly enough about the abortion issue one way or another to stand in the pouring rain for the good of their respective cause.

But "good" is an entirely subjective term when considering the abortion debate. I know I'm stuck in the middle. I mean, women should be able to control their own bodies. Few could argue with that. Then again, that little dude inside the womb is alive. Where there's growth, there's life. I can't get past that fact.

So when you have two sides who truly believe their cause is right, that they are doing the right thing and anyone who tries to stop them is ethically or morally wrong, you have the potential for a lot of ugliness. Violent ugliness.

What will it take for these polar opposite points of view to see the whole side of the story?

Hell, if I could answer that question I wouldn't be in college. Do you know how many wars could have been prevented if both sides could see the whole picture past their own tunnel-vision perspective? All of them.

Roe vs. Wade, as civil libertarians will tell you (thanks, Prof. Goldman), is in deep trouble these days. The constitutional right to an abortion may not last the year, leaving the decision up to the states. What was once one big debate will split up into 50 or more smaller ones if the legislative responsibility returns to the state level.

Won't that be fun. It's easy to act concerned when you see protesters in Wichita Falls, Kan. or Buffalo. When it's your home town, however, people will come gunning for you and ask you where you stand.

That's not a happy reality. Thinking about abortion is not pleasant, not only because it's not a particularly nice procedure but because no matter where you stand, people will believe you're dead wrong.

When that day comes, try to see both sides of the issue — the unwed mother and the life within — before you decide.

As for me? I'm still working on it.

Phoning columnists is harassment

There are many different kinds of people on campus, which accounts for all the different opinions. The Collegian is one of the ways in which to voice an opinion you think should be heard.

Anyone is welcome to write to the Collegian to voice their opinion or to respond to an opinion someone stated in the past. However, it is unnecessary as well as rude to call up a columnist on the phone in order to tell them that you disagree with the opinions stated in his or her article.

To the young woman who bothered me at home with her whining: in the future, show some respect and maturity by writing your feelings in a letter and mailing it to the Collegian. I'm sure they would love to be enlightened by you.

A good business attitude

"Hi, may I help you?"

Remember these words? Do they sound familiar? Chances are, probably not. Today's consumers are facing some harsh treatment by store employees, which to me seems terribly ironic. In this economy, businesses cannot afford to be rude to their customers, for they are what keeps businesses from filing Chapter 11.

Felice Cohen

On Monday I read an editorial in the Wall Street Journal written by James. W. Near, chief executive officer and president of Wendy's International, the Old Fashioned Hamburger restaurants. He explained the reasons for Wendy's decline in the 80s and the reasons for their recent success was because too much attention was spent on the balance sheet and not enough on the consumer.

He then described what he called the "Mop Bucket Attitude," which states "that all the business sophistication in the world pales before the 'wisdom' of a clean floor." Meaning that no matter how much brain power you use, the basic line is simple: the customer comes first, for without them, you have no business.

Near added, "But if you get customers in the door and disappoint them, it's a disaster. Not only must you offer customers quality, value and a pleasant experience; you must offer it consistently."

How true.

Ever eat at a restaurant or shop in a store and found the employees rude or obnoxious? I bet not only did you not return there, but told all your friends about it. This is an owner's worst nightmare, for one of the most important aspects of marketing is "word of mouth." This can either make or break your business.

I am hardly one to complain, (they don't call me the "feel-good writer" down here for nothing), but last Sunday I had a very unusual experience. At 4:30 p.m. I called the Video House in North Amherst to inquire what time my video was due. I was told 5:00 p.m. or else I would be charged a late fee.

Arriving at the Video House at 4:59 p.m. I was greeted to a locked door with a closed sign in the window. Peering inside I spotted two employees watching a video. I began knocking on the glass door.

Glancing up, they continued with what they were doing, all the while ignoring me. Well, I wasn't about to walk away.

I continued to knock. They continued to ignore.

Finally, approaching the door with an aggravated look on her face and keys jingling in her hands, a woman opened the door and said, quite rudely, "What do you want?"

Immediately cluing in to this woman's attitude, I told myself, "Okay, if that's the way she wants to play, I'm game." So I said, handing her the video, "I came to return the video" as sweetly as I could. (Knowing that being nice always makes people more upset.)

"Well, it's late," she snapped. I could feel her aggravation mounting. "You are going to have to pay the late fee."

Immediately I pointed out that, "I have been knocking for over a minute. I was here before five and you ignored me."

With a dirty look, she shot back, "Well, it doesn't matter. You still owe a late fee."

As I walked away, I said, "No, I don't think I do. But when I get through talking to your boss tomorrow, I'll let you know how it goes."

A 1986 survey was done by US News and World Report titled "Why Customers Quit," meaning why customers stop shopping at certain stores. This was the breakdown:

One percent die.

Three percent move away.

Five percent develop other friendships.

Nine percent leave for competitive reasons.

Fourteen percent because of product dissatisfaction.

And the number one reason? 68 percent said it was because of an attitude of indifference by an employee. How interesting.

I learned two things this week. One: No customer enjoys being treated as though an employee is doing them a favor by helping them. Any customer will agree.

And two: A dissatisfied customer is more important than a satisfied customer. Especially if that dissatisfied customer has access to 19,000 readers. Any business owner will agree.

Gays, bi's can be allies

Homosexuals and bisexuals both experience oppression within this heterosexist society. Yet instead of uniting against the common source of their oppression, a look at the political rhetoric reveals both sides are waging a painful and unnecessary war against each other.

Trystan Skeigh

In the popular bisexual anthology, Bi Any Other Name, Sharon Forman Sumpter asserts, "Indeed, we are finding that homosexuality may be a transitional phase in the coming-out process for bisexual people," and the book's editors Hutchins and Kaahumanu use the phrase "monosexuals" in the overview to refer to homosexuals and heterosexuals. To my lesbian ears these bisexual assertions sound suspiciously similar to those coming from conservative heterosexuals. Both voices assert homosexuality is "just a phase" and assign labels of "otherness" to lesbians and gays. ("Monosexual" versus "Homosexual").

As bisexuals come into their own as a political community, some backlash against lesbians and gays seems inevitable, because many bisexuals blame homosexuals for the dominant gay/straight world-view that renders bisexuality invisible.

I only hope the bisexual community will reconsider placing the blame for this restrictive world view on homosexuals, and instead re-direct its anger toward the heterosexual majority. It was the heteropatriarchy that created a a dualistic world-view of human sexuality that led to the lumping together of different sexual minorities behind a homosexual flagship. Although it may appear lesbians and gays voluntarily accept and perpetuate this dualism, in truth, historically I doubt a single one of us ever desired to be labeled and set apart from the rest of society. It certainly is not the fault of homosexuals that bisexuals and other sexual minorities were submerged within our stigmatization.

Lesbians and gays who have copped to society's heterosexist hate program and call bisexuals as "fence sitters" need to realize they have been duped into believing in a world of opposites in which homosexuality alone exists against heterosexuality. Acknowledging the numerous bisexuals and other sexual minorities placed in our midst is a revolutionary act that breaks apart the root assumptions underlying our own oppression.

Bisexuals have an equal responsiblity to respect homosexual identity. As comfortable as it may feel for bisexuals to hold a sexual liberation politic that says all people should be free to love whomever they wish, regardless of gender, the fact is, some of us, for whatever reasons, are exclusively same-sex or opposite-sex oriented.

I cringe whenever I find bisexuals latching onto Freud's belief that humans are born bisexual or Kinsey's estimate that 80 percent of the population exists within a bisexual continuum. Although I concede these arguments are powerful challenges to heterosexism, they also feel inimical to my own reality as a homosexual. I can't help but reject a world-view that places lesbians and gays alongside our heterosexual oppressors in a new category for sexual deviants — "monosexuals" in a world filled with bisexuals.

Bisexuals, like lesbians and gays, desperately need a healing and affirming political rhetoric. Ironically, their liberation theory's division of the world into "bisexual" and "monosexual" feels no less polar than the straight/gay dichotomy they understandably detest and condemn.

When I listen to bisexual people talk about the pain of feeling invisible in straight and gay culture I feel a kinship because as a lesbian I too suffer from invisibility within heteropatriarchy. I fail to see why both communities cannot renounce their polarized thinking and work together for a world in which no one is rendered invisible.

On-campus voting, yes!

In spite of a state legislature unsupportive of student rights and a growing body of local legislation targeted at curbing student (mis)behavior, students at the University of Massachusetts seem unable to wield any significant amount of political clout.

The Collegian* believes that obtaining a polling place on campus would be a large step in the right direction. At present, the campus population is parcelled off into five different precincts. Although students make up the majority in some precincts, there are no polls on campus. This is a special hindrance to an institutionalized population, most of whom are dependent on mass transit.

MassPIRG deserves credit, and our support, for its frequent voter registration drives, but few registered voters have exercised their power in recent elections. Somehow, students have convinced themselves that their votes do not count. This has become a self-fulfilling prophecy. Their votes do not count because they are not cast.

Though many students have political ties to their home town, we strongly encourage those who do not to register in Amherst, and to exercise that right.

We hope that an on-campus polling place can be secured, and that in conjunction with increased registration efforts student concerns will command more respect on both state and local levels.

Don't give up on love in college; it's worth all the work it takes Spring, the flowers bloom, the grass is green again and everybody seems to be breaking up. If you glance around, you might see a lot of broken hearts.

I dated a man for one and a half years and now we have split up. I loved him dearly but decided that it was time to experience college again and try to fit back into the single life. If I can advise any other woman, don't make the same mistake.

I found that single life at college is nothing special. Sure, in some ways it's better, but it's not worth losing that love that some people don't find in a lifetime. The real problem existing between my boyfriend and I was not really between us but between college and us. For so long I felt tied down and deprived of what I was not getting to experience. I realized after a couple of weeks that I had lost my best friend and sturdy comfort here at college.

I was able to get back with my boyfriend and now we try to work not against each other but against the problems that exist here at college. College is not worth leaving a loved one for. To all those couples having trouble, slow down and work at those problems over a period of time. You may regret giving away a chance to love a lifetime.

Town/Gown relations need work

Are you sick and tired of the Town of Amherst bad mouthing you? Do you feel like no one cares what you have to say, or that people have forgotten what it's like to be 21 again? Well, then read on! (No, this is not another bash-the-town article.)

There is one group that is trying to help students and other residents to live together peacefully, the Amherst Peace and Quiet Commission. Started to discuss the problems of noise and other behaviors in town and residential areas, it has turned into more. We are desperately trying to deal with Town/Gown relations.

The Commission is made up of students, administrators from the University and the other colleges in town, residents and business owners. We do not make or enforce rules and do not plan to pass any bylaws. We only listen to suggestions from anyone who wants to give them. We'll review all suggestions and eventually we'll make recommendations to the Select Board.

Bad experiences and a lack of understanding and communication, on both sides, has led to anti-student/anti-town sentiments. No one wants us to stop having a good time. The ultimate goal is mutual respect for different lifestyles. The most harmful thing to town/gown relations is misinformation, and believe me, there has been lots of it! My caution is: don't believe everything you read, find out for yourself. For example, the new Amherst keg law is not just about buying kegs. Whether you buy a keg in Amherst, Pelham or China, you must get a license to tap it in Amherst. How many of you knew that? Also, remember that just because people try to enforce state law (checking IDs, enforcing occupancy rates, etc.), they are not anti-student.

So anyway, if you don't like what you've been seeing or hearing, please attend one of our meetings. If you think past suggestions by residents (for example, closing bars at 11:00 p.m.) are crazy, make some of your own. Remember, the Peace and Quiet Commission is very willing to hear from everyone. Our next meeting is May 11, 1992 at 4:00 p.m. in the Bangs Community Center and is open to the public.

More theories on Jesus

Did Jesus Christ really rise again from the dead? There are many influential Christian scholars that I have turned to for evidence and arguments concerning the resurrection. My favorite author, Josh McDowell, has printed a piece entitled "Evidence for the Resurrection." I have determined Josh had the best approach.

Diana D'Avanzo

First, let's set the scene. Jesus was buried according to the Jewish burial custom: wrapped in a linen cloth that had about 100 pounds of spices mixed together to form a gummy substance covering it, placed in a rock tomb with a rock weighing about two tons rolled up against the entrance. A Roman seal was fixed to the tomb and Roman guards were guarding the tomb.

What would have happened had the resurrection been some kind of a hoax? Well, first the culprits, the disciples, would have to have gotten past the Roman guards, moved the rock — which would have broken the Roman seal — undressed Jesus (remember, his clothes were left behind appearing in the form of the body and slightly caved in) and carried him off somewhere.

To think the disciples, or anyone, would have done this is ridiculous.

In order to get past the Roman guards, the guards would either have been asleep or goofing off. A guard's penalty for messing up would have been death. If the guilty guard could not be determined, lots would be drawn to figure out which guard would die. Do you think any of the guards would have messed up with this hanging over their heads?

However, assuming the guards goofed, the thieves would still have to move the two ton rock, which would also break the Roman seal. Keep in mind that, under Roman law, breaking the seal meant automatic upside-down cruxifiction for the seal-breaker. Obviously, moving such a huge rock would make some noise, no matter how many people are helping. This noise would surely get the guards' attention.

However, assuming the guards remained fast asleep, the thieves would still have to untangle Jesus from his clothes and carry his naked, severely wounded, dead body off to some hiding place — without being noticed, of course. Remember how Jesus' graveclothes were prepared? Untangling Jesus would not have been an easy task. Even if the thieves had gotten this far, how could they leave the clothes looking untouched?

However, had the plan gone smoothly till this point, how does one account for the more than five hundred witnesses, including hostile witnesses — Saul of Tarsus was no friend of Christianity — testifying to a risen Christ? Dr. Paul Maier says that "positive evidence from a hostile source. . .is the strongest kind of historical evidence. . ." A hallucination theory has been proposed to explain what these people saw. McDowell states that this theory is "Unsupported by the psychological principles governing the appearances of hallucinations. . ."

There is one other theory concerning a false resurrection: Christ was still alive after the cruxifiction, revived in the tomb and freed himself. This means Christ, after having been whipped, hung to a cross by nails driven through his hands and feet, and a spear thrust so deeply through his side that blood and water came out, revived in the tomb. After this, he got out of his clothes, moved the rock, took on all the guards, fixed himself up, then appeared to over 500 people claiming to have risen from the dead. Yeah, right.

The possibility that Roman or Jewish authorities moved the body is also unreasonable. These forces were strong enemies of Christianity — useing every means of persecution available to stop these Christians, from stoning to cruxifiction to throwing followers to the lions. Had either authority stolen the body they would surely have publicly presented the dead body to stop Christianity before it spread any further.

So, what difference does all this evidence make to you? A lot! McDowell states: "On the basis of all the evidence for Christ's resurrection, and considering the fact that Jesus offers forgiveness of sin and an eternal relationship with God, who would be so foolhardy as to reject Him?" Just think about it.

'Reverse racism' does not exist

Racism is something that everyone thinks they know how to handle. People assume they understand what it's like to be oppressed simply because they have a Black friend or they listen to NWA or they are part minority. The fact is that no matter how much everyone tries to be up on the subject, it is something that pervades the lives of almost everyone.

The reason I am writing this is because of a statement that was made by Gayle Long on Monday, April 27. She noted that "reverse racism" does exist.

I come from a suburb right next to Chicago. My high school had roughly 3,000 students, and just under half of them were White (including myself). About 35 percent of the student body was Black. I think I am fortunate for a few reasons. One of them being that since many of the students in my high school were minorities, I was able to connect with people of ethnic origin other than my own. Another reason is that I was able to feel racism directly from Blacks.

What I learned from living in this environment was how it really does feel for an entire group of people to dislike you because of the color of your skin. What I also learned was that "reverse racism" does not exist. Using this term implies that racism directed toward Whites is even more unjustifiable, which it is not. Racism is racism, no matter who it is from and who it is directed toward.

I am fully aware that the problem of racism is something that is difficult to solve since it seems to be something that has been grounded in our culture ever since we can remember. I do, however, believe that the first solution is not to simply blame other people who are guilty of racism (or "reverse racism"), but to examine the very way that you yourself have handled the situation.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement, in your face

Someone sent in graffiti this week. I'm truly flattered, you're not just reading the comics after all. It read, "My make-up is like my Mastercard — I don't leave home without it." I'll bet she keeps a putty-knife and a can of Bond-O handy too.

So, the Housing office emptied the entire floor of Washington over the loss of a clothes-dryer. I can't vouch personally for the culprits, but I do have a friend who was involved in a similar incident. His case involved the willful and premeditated execution of a couch by defenestration from the seventh floor of Grayson. He assures me that it is a wholly cathartic experience. "It's the most fun I've ever had in five seconds."

Unfortunately, for such a short rush, it is expensive. His share of the couch came to about $175, which works out to about $160 per second ($x^2=2D/s^2$).

Those of you who have been reading the Associated Press articles we use as filler in the middle pages will remember Judge Darrell Outlaw's suggestion that the National Guard should restore order by patrolling the streets of Boston. It's strangely appropriate that the state that fostered Shay's rebellion is now talking about placing itself under martial law, that's a treat we usually reserve for the Third World.

At last, the state will get that federal assistance the state has been looking for. Too bad they want to spend it on personnel carriers rather than restoring the vestigial social programs, or consumer protection from banks that "redline" these areas.

Josh Reynolds

Mayor Flynn suggested that instead of patrolling the streets, the National Guard could run a "boot camp" for violent youths, and Mike Barnacle thinks it's a good idea (and you know how influential those newspaper types can be).

The National Guard was originally created to break unions, but today, unions are of little danger to anyone that can fund a PAC, as shown by Caterpillar Co.'s hiring of replacements rather than settling with their own striking UAW-affiliated workers. Incidentally, UAW is the same union that the GEO may someday look to for support.

Once unions had been sufficiently housebroken and domesticated, the Guard was justified as a reserve militia by over-zealous cold-warriors. Now, in the absence of any credible external threat, National Guard units nation-wide, including those in Massachusetts, are scheduled for massive reductions.

Up to 50 percent of the Massachusetts Guard could be dismantled. The guard attracts a lot of poor and minority inner city residents looking for college money. Now, instead of putting them out of work, we could put them to work patrolling their own neighborhoods. Jello Biafra, where are you now.

I'd like to hear from anyone out there who is gonna get screwed over by the University's tightened Continuing Ed. policy. Imagine the nerve of somebody thinking they could get an affordable college education in this state. I've heard that once upon a time, the SGA used to watch over the goings-on at Whitmore. This year the Student Senate couldn't make quorum three weeks in a row. How things have changed.

Boston bisexual says local community in flux

By STACY MALONE
Collegian Staff

The local bisexual community is in a state of positive change, said a visiting member of the Boston bisexual community Tuesday.

Robyn Ochs, co-founder of the Boston Bisexual Women's Network and the East Coast Bisexual Network, facilitated the workshop in Machmer for about 12 attendees.

"Things are changing for the better as important dialogues are taking place between lesbians, gay men and bisexuals," Ochs said.

She said her interest here is "getting in on the ground floor of debate for constructive strategies."

Ochs she was particularly interested in coming to the Amherst/Northhampton communities to give workshops because she believes what is happening here is "the forefront of the debate that is taking place nationally."

"While these discussions are happening all across the United States they are also happening in Europe, New Zealand, and Australia," she said.

The problem with the bisexual community in this area, she said, is that it is "very small and tentative, because this does not feel like a very safe place to be bisexual."

"If we can learn from what is happening here we can avoid in making mistakes elsewhere," Ochs said.

"The discussion is magnified here by the fact that this is a small town," she said, "and everybody knows each other, along with a very high concentration of the groups most central to this discussion: lesbians and younger bisexual activists."

"Time is one obvious solution. Change takes time," Ochs said. "In order for the bisexual community to solve its problems," she said, "We need to continue listening to one another and respect each other's identities, space and contributions."

An active member of Boston's Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Speaker's Bureau, Ochs has been published in many anthologies and has taught courses on bisexuality at both MIT and Tufts University.

Distinguished Teachers Award winners named

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has announced 1991-1992 Distinguished Teachers Awards and the 1992 Faculty Fellowship Awards.

"I am very flattered to be chosen and I am honored that my kids think that much of me," said Walter M. Chesnut, a professor in the music department and one of the winners of the Distinguished Faculty Award.

The recipients of the awards are nominated by students and alumni and are chosen by a committee of their peers.

The other two winners of the Distinguished Faculty Award are: professor Fred A. Feldman of the philosophy department and professor George H. Rowe of veterinary and animal sciences. These three award winners will receive $3000.

Five faculty winners won Fellowship Awards. They include: psychology professor Susan Tufts Fiske, history professor Gerald W. McFarland, professor of art Robert W. Mallary, botany professor Lynn Margulis and professor of biochemistry and molecular biology Robert A. Zimmermann.

"She is just delighted to pursue her research with less interruption," said Donna Reppard, the administrative assistant to professor Margulis, who could not be reached for comment.

Each of the Fellowship Award winners will also be receiving $3000.

There were also three students who were chosen for their distinguished teaching.

Winners of the Distinguished Teacher Student Award include: William Clements, of the English department, Padideh Jalali of the mathematics and statistics department and Dix McComas of the English writing program.

The students will receive $2000 for their accomplishment.

"This is one of the nice things for a teacher at the University, because it is one of only a few awards that recognizes teaching," said Chesnut.

"It just goes to show that even through these budget cuts, we still have a number of distinguished professors among our faculty," said Bob Monaghan, former speaker of the Student Government Association at UMass.

To sing without sound

Gay writer talks on finding his voice

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

While working on a Gothic romance about a woman locked in a tower by her evil piano-playing father, he was told by a writing teacher to try to write something "real" for once.

From this advice Lev Raphael, a gay Jewish writer, wrote "War Stories," a short story about a young man and his parents who are concentration camp survivors.

"I was trying to sing without opening my mouth," Raphael said at a reading Monday night in the Campus Center from his short story collection Dancing on Tisha Ba'v, winner of the 1990 Lambda Book Award.

An audience of about 30 people came in celebration of both Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Awareness Week and Holocaust Memorial Week.

He talked about the difficulty he had finding his voice and especially writing about his experience as the son of Holocaust survivors.

"I knew I was putting on paper family secrets," Raphael said.

Raphael received Master's of Fine Arts degree from the University of Massachusetts, and his talk was interspersed with humorous anecdotes about his experiences.

"There are few places to feel more isolated as a Jew than East Lansing, Michigan," he said.

He also read a story titled "Shouts of Joy," about a man who was gay and Jewish.

"I do missionary work to straight Jewish groups," Raphael said referring to his efforts to get acceptance as a gay man within the Jewish community.

An audience member asked him his feelings about pink triangles, which he was wearing. Pink triangles were used by Nazis to mark gay men in concentration camps, and has since been taken by some gay organizations as a symbol of pride.

Raphael said that he initially was opposed to the symbol.

Now, he looks at the symbol as a "warning."

"It's supposed to be shocking. This is the worst that can happen and it did happen," he said.

He also talked about his successes as a writer and the ups and downs he's experienced.

"The best review called me a 'fiction master,'" he said. "That was in San Francisco, of course."

State employees rally to protest health plan

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — State employees rallied Wednesday against a Weld administration proposal that would raise their contributions for family health insurance coverage by more than $1,400 a year.

Gov. William Weld, in his fiscal year 1993 budget, has recommended increasing the employee contribution from 10 percent to 35 percent.

Based on a projected average premium for family coverage next fiscal year of $5,840, that would increase the employee share from $584 a year to $2,044. Premiums for individuals would be about $2,455, and the change would increase the employee share from $245.50 to about $860.

The premium examples were provided by Dr. Alan Sager, a professor at the Boston University School of Public Health, and were a composite of the charges from the John Hancock Insurance Co. plan and by health maintenance organizations available to state workers.

"You are not responsible for the world's highest health care costs in Massachusetts," Sager told about 200 workers at the Statehouse. "Tell your legislators you will not pay for the governor's mistakes."

Sager said Weld made the health care cost situation worse last year by winning passage of a law that deregulates hospital charges.

Sandy Felder, president of Service Employees International Union Local 509, said the increase, if not stopped by the Legislature, would make state employment so unattractive no one would want to do it.

Most state workers have gone without a cost-of-living increase for four years, she said, and cannot afford to pay a greater percentage of their incomes on health insurance.

But Virginia Buckingham, a spokeswoman for Weld, said the proposed percentage increase is aimed at bringing state employee contributions in line with those paid by workers for private businesses.

"We're trying to bring state employee contributions to their health insurance plans into line with what those in the private sector pay," Buckingham said.

Student voting power still a 'sleeping giant'

certed effort. But in other recent elections involving student issues, they have not flocked to the voting booths.

In the Feb. 18 primary for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat, Gov. Weld's controversial tuition retention plan was a hotly-debated issue.

But only 10 percent of registered on-campus students voted.

None of the 67 registered voters in John Quincy Adams voted. In the John F. Kennedy residence hall, none of the 52 registered students voted. With just over 13 percent, Butterfield had the highest turn-out of any hall on campus, but still well below the town average of 33 percent.

During the campaigns of the major Democratic candidates Jon Hite and Ellen Story, both contenders telephoned registered voters in the dorms to urge them to vote. Hite even stood outside a dining commons on the night of the race, encouraging exiting students to vote.

When the final ballot was counted, Story edged out her nearest competitor by less than 100 votes — higher student turnout could easily have tipped the scales in either direction.

Apathy or voting obstacles?

By bus or on foot, it takes many students about half an hour to vote. The campus straddles five precincts. Residents of precincts four and 10, which divide the Southwest residential area, must go to the center of town to cast their vote.

Depending on the route taken, it is over a mile from Southwest to their polling place in the Bangs Community Center.

In fact, there is no residential area closer than one-half mile to its polling place.

Jen Wood, president of the SGA, said all Amherst precincts had their polling places within the precinct itself, except for precincts 4 and 10, who must go to the Bangs Community Center in Precinct 5.

"I guess people can draw their own conclusions," Wood said, as to why exception was made for these student-denominated areas during the town's last round of redistricting.

When Amherst was last redistricted in April of 1987, precincts nine and 10 were added, further dividing the campus population.

Harry Oldham Brooks, member of the Amherst Select board, said "they just drew the lines" without much regard for what it would do to the student vote. "Could [the polling place for] four and 10 have been on campus? Sure."

Wood said the Student Government was considering the Boyden Gym or the Visitor's Center. "Ideally, we'd like to use the Cape Cod Lounge." Visibility is important, she said. "If they don't see it, it's difficult to get them to participate."

Securing on-campus polling places

Brooks said it may not be clear what is at stake in such cases. He said students were often not knowledgable about town politics, and politicians forget what they did as students.

"When I was a student... I didn't know much about local government," he said. He said students may not understand the mechanics of election issues, or local government.

Wood said, "That's not the issue. Let's just make it easy as we can for students to vote." Wood and the nine other student town meeting members want to convince the Select Board to put a polling place on campus during the round of redistricting scheduled for 1993.

Amherst Town Clerk Cornelia Como said that as of yet the students have not brought a petition to the Select Board, and the motion to secure on-campus polls is not on the agenda.

Wood said students were still trying to decide how to present the motion. "We're still strategizing," she said.

Indecision delays redistricting

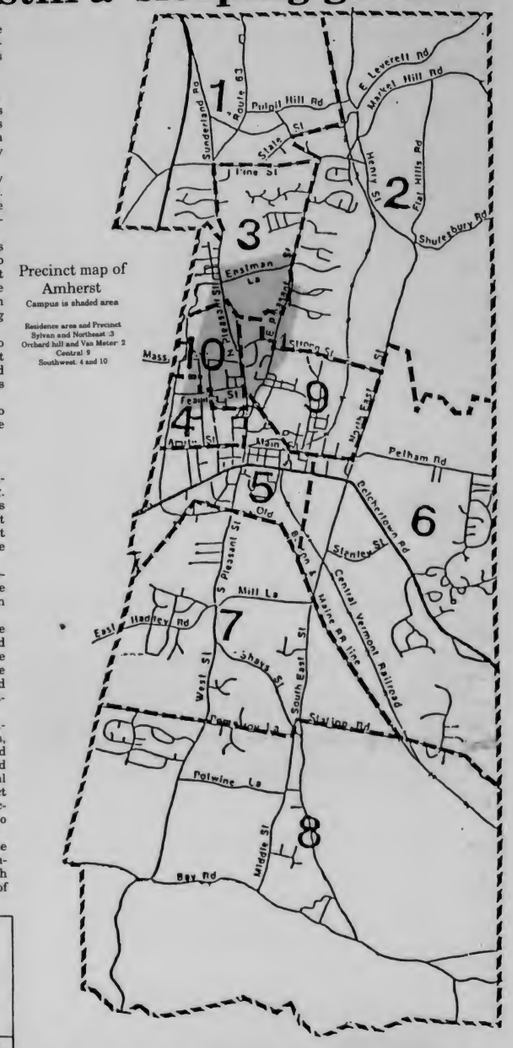
While the SGA strategizes, the machinery of government has been turning. Earlier this month, the Secretary of State's office said a bill in the Statehouse that would have required Amherst to redistrict by July 1 was killed after the legislature twice delayed voting on the bill.

Had the measure been voted on, redistricting would have happened over the summer intersession, before any action had been forwarded by the SGA.

According to Cathy Fallon, legislative aid to Ellen Story, the date has been pushed back to 1993. Another matter still to be resolved concerns whether the entire campus population or only those registered in Amherst will be counted for redistricting purposes.

Current state law requires that institutionalized populations such as hospitals, prisons, and college campuses be districted according to the number of registered voters in residence, instead of by general population. Amherst's current precinct map was drawn under this old law, according to general population and with no exception made for college campuses.

Como said she would rather count the students according to their total population. Wood said she was uncertain which method would better serve the interests of students.



The present precinct map of Amherst, which has been in effect since 1987, splits the campus population between five different precincts. Amherst is scheduled to re-draw the map in 1993.

SNL's Sandler gives UMass some cheap laffs

By LISA J. CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Comedian Adam Sandler, featured performer on NBC's Saturday Night Live, will be performing at the University of Massachusetts' Fine Arts Center Sunday.

If you're not familiar with Sandler from SNL, perhaps his goofball antics, as a street punk from MTV's Remote Control, will ring a bell.

Sandler creates kooky characters such as Cajun Man and Iraqi Pete — the insidious character who taunted TV viewers and the jeering and booing studio audience with his anti-American propaganda. Sandler appears as the co-host of the section of SNL entitled, Weekend Update.

He joined SNL as a writer and performer during the 1990-91 season, performing several different characters and impersonations including boxer Hector "Macho" Comacho and singer Axl Rose.

Sandler, 26, began his comedic profession at age 17 after his brother coaxed him into going onstage (without the benefits of rehearsing) at a comedy club in Boston.

He performed regularly in comedy clubs (including the Comic Strip) and colleges while pursuing a degree in fine arts at New York University. Eventually he auditioned for SNL executive producer Lorne Michaels at the Chicago Improv.

He is currently living in New York City.

Sandler's performance is sponsored by the Commuter Area Government in an effort to raise funds for their scholarship fund which benefits undergraduate students with children. The awards are need based and given in order to keep the students in school, says Joanne Levinson, advisor to the Commuter Area Government.

"It's combining programming with social good," says Levinson.

Adam Sandler will perform at the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. Admission is $3, and tickets are available at the FAC Box Office in advance as well as the evening of the performance.

The Iron Horse hosts Indigo Girls' party

By AMI BENNITT
Collegian Correspondent

Another year. Another album. Another shade of indigo.

Perhaps the most spirited and exciting twelve songs of the duo's seven-year career, is the fifth Epic release by the Indigo Girls, entitled Rites of Passage.

Rites of Passage, produced by Peter Collins, known for hard rock recordings with Queensryche and Alice Cooper gives this album a new razor edge unknown to previous the Indigo Girls endeavors.

"We thought, no way we'll want to work with this guy! But when we met with Peter we knew he could produce any kind of music," said Emily Saliers.

The supporting cast on Rites of Passage includes bassist Sara Lee, of the B-52's; drummers Jerry Marotta, Kenny Aranoff and Budgie of Siouxsie and the Banshees; and Georgia "home folks" like Cooper Seay of Atlanta's Ellen James Society, and Michael Lorant of Big Fish Ensemble. Special guests include violinist of John Mellencamp's band and Martin McCarrick, also of the Banshees on cello. Jackson Browne and David Crosby sing on "Galileo" and "Let It Be Me."

The new album, available in May, includes original songs never before performed live prior to their recording. That, says Emily, "is the freshness of this album, that we cut these songs without any pre-conceived notions of how they should sound." The sole outside song is a stark and riveting Amy Ray solo performance of Dire Straits' "Romeo and Juliet," a Mark Knopfler cutsie ballad that Ray turns upside down and inside out with tearing vocals that would call the cows home.

Past indigo projects have included their self-titled debut release, Indigo Girls, which included guest performances by all members of R.E.M.; a second LP, Strange Fire, which was actually a reissue of the album released on their own Indigo label; Nomads, Indians, Saints, the third release featuring the singles "Hammer and Nail," and the multi-rythmic "1,2,3," which came out in the summer of 1991; an eight-song live EP also released in 1991 that included a classic version of Bob Dylan's legendary "All Along the Watchtower," and was recorded at Notre Dame University, West Georgia College, and the Uptown Lounge in Athens, GA. The Indigo Girls have also released a home video, Live At the Uptown Lounge, that was released in May of 1990.

The Indigo Girls performed at the second annual Earth Day concert at Foxboro Stadium among the likes of Steve Miller, Bruce Hornsby and Midnight Oil on April 25 and will start their Rites of Passage touring in June.

Epic Records and the Ironhorse Music Hall will host an INDIGO GIRLS listening party, featuring unreleased music from the upcoming album, Rites of Passage during their Sunday brunch from 1:30 to 3:00 p.m. There will be free prizes and giveaways. All are welcome.

A woman never asks to be raped. ■ No Means No ■ Whether there is physical force or violence, against her will is against the law.

■ Every 4 minutes a woman is raped. ■ No Means No ■ If you've been raped, tell someone.

■ Men can be victims of sexual assault. ■ No Means No ■ 84% of college women know their attacker.

FBI statistics indicate that one woman reports a rape to police every 10 minutes in the U.S. That means that during the month of April, Sexual Assault Awareness Month, 7,300 women will report a rape to police. Given that only one in ten women who are raped will report the assault to police, 73,000 women will be raped during the month of April in this country. The information provided on this page is designed to give you some of the facts about rape. We hope you understand that these are not just numbers. They are people's lives. None of us enjoys reading this information. None of us wants to believe that something as horrible as rape will happen to us or to someone we know. Nonetheless, we challenge you to read this page, to look at the statistics, to know they are true, and to think about what the implications of this information are for your life. Talking about rape is painful -- it can make us feel powerless. However, it is everyone's problem, and if everyone does their part, we can make a difference.

Rape: Myths & Realities

Myth: Women who are raped ask for it.
Fact: Rape is not sex, it is a crime of violence and power. Rape is a violation of a person on both physical and emotional levels. Rape is a violent act through which a woman loses total control of her life. Most rape survivors report that they genuinely thought they were going to be killed during the assault. No one asks for an experience like this.

Myth: Most rapes occur between members of different racial groups.
Fact: 93% of all rapes occur between members of same racial group.

Myth: Rape is an impulsive act of sexual frustration.
Fact: 90% of all rapes are considered planned or premeditated; 2/5 of all rapists have an active sexual partner or are married. This myth implies that rapists are animalistic, with no control over their sexual drive and desire. Psychological study and everyday life experience tells us this is not the case.

Myth: Rape occurs primarily in back alleys, "bad" neighborhoods, at night and by strangers.
Fact: Rape occurs everywhere. It has no boundaries of day or night, socio-economic class, home or street; 84% of college women who were raped knew their attacker; 65% of all rapes occur either in the victim's or assailant's home; in over 50% of reported rapes, the rapist knew the victim well, over 95% of those convicted of raping children are relatives or close friends of their victim's family.

Myth: Men cannot be victims of sexual assault.
Fact: 93% of rape victims are female and 7% are male. One in seven males under age 18 will be a victim of sexual assault. Statistics indicate that the clear majority of these assaults happen to boys under the age of 12 or to men who are in prison.

Myth: Gang rapes account for an extremely small percentage of the total rapes in the United States.
Fact: Pair or gang rapes account for at least 40% of all rapes. 97% of gang rapes and 92% of pair rapes are planned. These rapes can occur anywhere and are perpetrated by men of all ages, races, professions, and economic classes.

Speaking of Rape...

A man raped me last year when I was walking home from class. It was a violent act in which I was brutally beaten, choked, and sexually violated. That incident took maybe 20 minutes of my life, but it was not just an immediate, life-threatening crisis. It has maintained a strong presence. A woman may be raped once, but feel raped all the time.

After that man raped me, I moved out of my home, left my job, school, friends, and a strong community in Boston, and moved to Northampton, a place I'd only heard about from friends in the women's community. I eventually got a job as a waitress at a well-known restaurant out here, but was fired when they learned I was a rape survivor. I became suicidal, took anti-anxiety medication, feared everyone and everything, felt increasingly isolated and victimized, wondering when would someone rape me again?

Rape was a violation of my body, but it also took from me an innocence and spontaneity that I still trusted from time to time. Now, a year later, I still have to fight every day to hold my own ground because so much of what I took for granted to be safe no longer passes my rigorous inspection. I'm afraid of stairwells, elevators, public bathrooms. All my movements become restricted because I feel compelled to assess every situation for its safety. I essentially remain under a psychologically induced lock and key to protect myself from future violations. I know the long term struggles involved with surviving rape, and I don't know how to feel safe anymore. And I would rather be paranoid than go through that again. Not that it can necessarily be avoided without having 24-hour bodyguards on duty...who aren't rapists.

People don't usually realize how long a time it takes to heal from rape. Thus, most people also fail to appreciate how strong women are who have survived being raped. Every woman who perseveres, who lives through this experience, has had to actively fight to reclaim control over their lives. Not only do we have to deal with the actual act of violation itself, but then there is often the police to deal with, hospitals, physical and emotional injuries, the media and legal systems, the possible loss of employment, subsequent financial and housing problems, the pain of dealing with friends and family who don't understand, who might think we wanted this God-awful thing, or who stigmatize us as rape victims.

I am still a rape victim, but I've also become one of the strongest women I know. Having successfully survived rape and its aftermath, I know I can do virtually anything. But I sure do wish that I'd had this last year's energy to do something other than heal from rape. With the energy so many of us use to heal from violence inflicted by others, we could have healed the whole bloody world by now!

If you want to know what to do about rape, here's a few thoughts. First of all, and most obviously of course, don't rape anyone. If you aren't sure what someone wants or doesn't want, ask them. They are the only ones who know what they want. Don't think you know better than they do.

Secondly, if someone tells you they've been raped, ask them what they need from you. Don't do everything for them. They may seem confused or scared, but give them back the power to choose that was taken when they were raped.

Ultimately, be supportive of her choices, let her be strong and acknowledge her strengths, but also accept and help her to accept that she may feel depressed, afraid, and angry and mistrustful of the world. Most importantly, be there when they need you. Everything might seem fine for a while and you might begin to think that they are all better. But check in from time to time and let them know that you are still there no matter what. They may still be having a hard time but be feeling too ashamed or uncertain to tell someone.

Finally, join the growing efforts to stop violence against women. There are many avenues to become involved. Use your skills to do what you can to stop this from happening to you, your mothers, sisters, partners, neighbors. Rape doesn't just happen to the victim/survivor. Rape happens to everyone close to her, in one way or another. It affects everyone.

Rape survivors need people to help them build back their trust in people. You can play a crucial role in helping them do that.

Nancy

RAPE IS EVERYONE'S PROBLEM!

Dear Rich:

I've been meaning to write you for quite awhile now. I've been thinking a lot about the old days. You know, partying and trying to pick up women. You know, when I see young men doing that now I laugh at how foolish we must have looked and acted.

I suppose some of the stuff we pulled was pretty serious. Do you remember one night you took me to that party out in the country? It was at your friend's house. Actually, it was at his parent's house, but the folks were away. I couldn't even begin to tell you any names. Anyhow, do you remember this one woman who was there? She was being quite flirtatious with both of us. I think you and she left for a while, and then I ended up taking off with her. Taking off meant we went into some room and started fooling around.

I didn't really remember any of this until recently. I've been thinking a lot about what it means to a man, and how I have been a man in the past. Part of what being a man for me has been is violence and viewing women as an object for "conquest." At this point I'm pretty disgusted by some of the things I've done. The worst of it happened in that room with a young woman whose name I don't even know. I ended up raping her. I didn't even realize it at the time. I didn't even give it a second thought. I thought rape occurred on a dark street behind a hedge. We didn't even have a phrase like date/acquaintance rape back then, or at least if there was a phrase "date rape" I had never heard of it. I'm not trying to make an excuse, I'm trying to sort things out.

I have more recently been involved with a woman who is going through the process of recovery from being sexually assaulted. It has been an intense experience, at times horrifying for her as well as me. Then I started getting flashes of that night. I realized that some woman may well be going through all sorts of crap because of me. Or she may not even realize she was raped. But I do. I don't really know what to do. I want to contact her, to let her know I never hurt anyone else like that, to tell her I'm sorry, to have her tell me to buzz off if she wants, to deal with it. I have no idea if this is the "right" way to deal with the situation, but remaining silent to her is no solution either. I'm scared and confused.

I mean, I feel like this isn't even who I am anymore. I would never do something like that. Ask anyone I know. But that's part of the lie. The more I learn about the topic of violence against women, such as rape, the more I realize that a lot of us probably have done some really awful things to women that we felt was just normal, or okay. But frankly I'm not talking about anyone else right now, I'm talking about me, which involves a few other people too. By the way, my partner does know about this event from my past. It was really hard at first, but she decided to stay with me and we're working it out.

I am writing you because I need to hear from you and get your opinion. What should I do? Should I contact this woman? Can you help me her or her friends? I realize this may be a lot to be dumping on you, but it's time to start facing up to the past and shaping the future in a peaceful, honest, and perhaps painful manner. Please write back.

Against Her Will Without Consent Or Forced Consent Is Rape

I Should Have....

I don't understand what happened to me.
He raped you.

I shouldn't have been there.
He should have known that your being there didn't mean you wanted to have sex.

I shouldn't have been so trusting.
He shouldn't have betrayed your trust.

I shouldn't have kissed him.
He should have asked if you wanted more.

I should have pushed him away.
He shouldn't have forced you.

I should have done more.
He should have taken a 'no' for a 'no.'

It was my fault.
It was his fault--he made a conscious decision to hurt you.

How did this happen to me?
He made a decision to force you.

Why did this happen to me?
He made a decision to force you.

I never thought it could happen to me.
I guess it can happen to anyone.

Women Remember	Men Remember
..Trust your instincts and leave a situation if it feels unsafe.	..Know your sexual desires and limits. Sexual excitement does not justify forced sex. Never force a woman to have sex.
..Examine your feelings and needs about sex. It's ok to have sex. It's ok not to have sex. You decide.	..Take "No" at face value. Accept a woman's decision.
..Know your sexual limits and communicate them clearly. Say what you mean, Yes or No.	..No one asks to be raped. No matter how a woman behaves, she does not deserve to have her body used in ways she does not want. No matter what.
..Take your own car or tell a friend where you are going.	..Remember that against her will is against the law.
..If raped, tell someone.	..Forced sex is not a measure of masculinity.

Startling Facts About Rape

- One in four will be raped while in college.
- Rape is no respecter of relationship. A woman's risk of being raped by someone she knows is 4 times greater than being raped by a stranger (Robin Warshaw, I Never Called it Rape, 1988).
- 1 in 4 girls and 1 in 7 boys will have been sexually assaulted by age 18 (Russell, 1983; Finkelhor, 1978; Sgroi, 1978).

FOR SURVIVORS:

For the many of you reading this page who have been raped, you may have tried some of these strategies. Others of you may not have thought of using them. In either case, and in all cases of rape, what happened to you was not your fault, no matter what anyone tells you and despite the messages you receive from the media. Whether the assault occurred yesterday, last year, or ten years ago, you can seek support from the Counselor/Advocate 24-Hour Hotline, 545-0800.

'Road House in a leper colony,' says Mr. Lupo

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Wow! It's Dirty Dancing in Calcutta! It's Road House in a leper colony! No amount of good intentions can make City of Joy any more than a patronizing redemption farce albeit with above-average acting. In an attempt to make Patrick Swayze a serious actor (there seems to be no other point in making this movie), normally probing director Roland Joffe (The Killing Fields, The Mission) has lost all concept of solid drama, opting for the more crowd-pleasing melodrama.

Patrick Swayze plays an embittered doctor (which means Swayze walks around pissed for the first half of the film) who goes to Calcutta, India to find spiritual renewal. Om Puri plays the head of an Indian family who also travels to Calcutta in search of fortune for his daughter's dowry. Puri eventually gets a job as a rickshaw runner for the oppressive leader of the slums known as the Godfather.

Swayze is approached by Pauline Collins (Shirley Valentine) to work for the City of Joy clinic. In the ultimate groaner of the film (and oh-so unpredictable) Swayze assists in a birth. But wait — not only is it a breech birth, but it's in a leper colony. To beautiful strains of music, Swayze holds up the baby triumphant and wouldn't you know he's a better guy for it.

Now, he's White man to the rescue, accepting leper patients in the clinic (which leads to protest and an eventual mutiny in the slums) and befriending Puri and his family.

City of Joy works best when it focuses on Puri's family, however more often than not they're saddled with lines like, "No family of mine will beg." The family is almost obnoxiously righteous and City of Joy is the type of movie that makes poverty seem downright attractive.

Swayze incites the rickshaw runners to strike against the Godfather and his evil son. City of Joy makes the line between good and evil so achingly simple. Swayze's (and ultimately the film's) logic is that the poverty problem can be solved simply by the poor standing up for themselves. Just like in The Power of One, a wishy-washy crowd-pleaser that trivializes apartheid, City of Joy too often goes for sitcom theatrics and hollow gloss.

Patrick Swayze tries very hard to be a tragic misguided soul but it's clear he's still in the minor leagues, since any attempt at resonance is overshadowed with a single stroke of Om Puri's excellent, studied performance. It's amazing how easily he can transcend the hokey dialogue and the story's contrivance.

In all honesty, Swayze is not that bad, here making it easy to forget this is the same guy who did Next of Kin. However, Swayze still has the same magnetic personality that powered Dirty Dancing and Ghost. In City of Joy this works to his disadvantage as I could almost see him teaching Pauline Collins the mambo in the middle of the monsoons.

There's also superb supporting performances by Shabana Azmi as Puri's wife as well as other noted Indian actors. Perhaps in another movie their talents could be better showcased. And a better script wouldn't hurt.

For all its earnestness and overabundance of good intentions, City of Joy doesn't challenge itself or the audience. An easy to swallow, flaccid fantasy, City of Joy comes off as an over-ambitious episode of Macgyver.

Swayze has said that he doesn't know "if it's a movie for cynics." Well, he's right, it's not. But anyone with a clue will see right through this film.

Grade: C

Final Magic Triangle Concert is tonight

Brian Lynch

BY SEMAJ SELOM
Collegian Staff

If you were lucky enough, perhaps you can say that you saw the young Thelonious Monk and John Coltrane at the Five Spot. Or perhaps you saw Duke Ellington or Count Basie in their primes. Or, you may be like today's generation of music lover's — no tremendous collection of ticket stubs or records, just a love for the music, and a desire to hear it whenever or wherever you get the chance.

Well, tonight you have one of those chances, a chance not only to hear some fine music, but to see and hear some of today's most promising young musicians. And you never know, a generation from now, you may be able to say, "I saw Brian Lynch before he became famous."

WMUA 91.1 FM radio concludes its third annual Magic Triangle Series with a performance from a quintet led by the Milwaukee native. Lynch has found his young career full of enviable employment, including Charles McPherson, Horace Silver, Toshiko Akiyoshi, Eddie Palmieri, Art Blakey and most recently, Phil Woods. Such a varied line of employers speaks well of Lynch's talent, but his playing is the most accurate barometer of what lies ahead. While in the area a few years ago with Blakey, Lynch wowed the crowd with his fiery solos, full of uncanny logic, and tempered with the undeniable element of the blues.

Lynch's three albums as a leader (the most recent being "In Process" on Ken records) have shown Lynch to be putting his apprenticeships to good use. His albums have always featured a strong lineup of young musicians and an equally strong lineup of original compositions. While many "critics" today feel that younger players are mindlessly rehashing the music of the 1960s, Lynch seems to be concerning himself with unfinished business. He combines the "hard bop" of Blakey, the blues of Silver, and his own unique sound in order to forge one of the brightest and most original voices on today's "jazz" scene.

Joining Lynch will be three more of today's "young lions", in addition to a "seasoned veteran". Bassist Christian McBride, pianist David Hazeltine, and drummer Tony Reedus find themselves helping to hold the banner for the next generation of players. McBride has been used on many album dates, including Wallace Roney's latest "Obsession" on Muse records. Reedus and Hazeltine have likewise been finding much work, with Reedus just releasing his debut as a leader, "Incognito" on Enja records. The veteran camp will be represented by tenor saxophonist Craig Handy, whom has found employment with Ray Drummond and others.

The Brian Lynch Quintet will be in performance tonight, Thursday, April 30, at 8 p.m. in Hmpden Theatre. Tickets are available at the FAC box office or at the door. Prices are $7/$5 for 5-College Students.

Student's art thesis has unusual materials

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Looking for something different to do this weekend?

If you are ready to venture out and explore the wonderful world of art in and around the UMass campus, you might very well like to check out Kathlee Gilrain's latest sculpture exhibit, "Family Secrets," which is being presented in the Student Union Gallery until May 1.

Gilrain, who undertook this project as a Master of Fine Arts degree thesis in the Spring of 1991, asserts that the exhibit is "all about the secrets that families keep," she said, "[and about] the places for private things that families don't talk about."

While some of the sculptures and themes are related to her own family, she explains, others are general, and applicable to many different family situations.

The exhibit consists of approximately 23 works made of bronze or wax, but also consist of plaster, wire, paint, cloth, chia, candles, wood, twine, graphite and paper. Some of the sculptures also contain unusual materials, such as horse and human hair.

Gilrain explains that the wax sculptures, which are closed or solid looking figures, represent unshared secrets, while the bronze, opened ones represent "revealed secrets that are still veiled, and not obvious." She claims that these pieces lead the viewer to a better, but not complete understanding of these sacred matters.

The price range of Gilrain's works is from $200-$700, but some pieces are not for sale.

Gilrain's work has been shown at the Bridgewater Lustberg Gallery in New York City, and, in November of 1991, a large collection titled "Coconut Tree Grove: An Aids Project," was also seen on the Amherst Commons.

Gilrain obtained he Bachelor's degree at Cooper College in 1984, and emphasizes that being at school and working with professors and peers helped to inspire her work.

She is currently a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts, and will receive her degree at the end of this semester.

Gilrain has also been invited to build a public sculpture on a site located on the outskirts of Paris and will travel there in May of this year to do so.

SVP's Working Titles assists local artists

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Working Titles
May 1-2
UMass Campus Center

Student Valley Productions has a long history of helping student artists.

Their productions are predominantly student-written, and (like the UMass Theater Guild) exclusively student produced and acted.

However, Student Valley Productions (SVP) goes a step further in assisting its artists, by producing a series of non-profit Working Titles. The purpose of these productions is to allow student artists a forum for expression — a way to test their talents before an audience without the pressures of a full production.

In the past, the Working Titles program has produced staged readings of many plays — but this semester, it is turning the stage over to comedy and music.

Acoustic Panic, a new student band, features the compositions of UMass undergraduate Brad Potter. Potter organized the sound system for last semester's Titles, and composed the score for last week's In My Abyss. He is one of Panic's three student members, and looks forward to presenting his compositions to an audience as a main attraction instead of a background.

Joining Panic on stage will be the increasingly popular Mission Improvable, UMass' resident improv troupe.

Described as "witty, spontaneous combustion," the group's brand of humor is totally unrehearsed, and they rely on their audience to provide them with ideas for sketches of games.

This can be hilarious, as they nimbly extricate themselves from whatever situation they have been placed in by the audience. As their show continues and the audience grows more daring, the fun always increases.

The only thing Working Titles needs to be successful is an audience, so take this opportunity to support student arts.

Working Titles will be presented May 1-2 at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 168. Admission is free.

Bowl Day features strong line-up of local acts

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Spring has finally sprung and the focus for this weekend is getting outdoors to toss some frisbee and listen to some great music. The weather is awesome.

JABBERWOCKY

The "Bowl Day" concert this Saturday, put on every year by Orchard Hill Area Government, features a strong lineup of top local area acts with an emphasis on the dance groove and funk.

The concert begins at 11:30 a.m. in Orchard Hill and the bands scheduled in order of appearance are: John Monopoly, Hot Damm, the Bombastics, Free Press, and headliners Who's Kiddin' Who.

Both John Monopoly and Hot Damm are UMass student bands. Hot Damm is a new group with a "Commitments" like R&B sound.

The Bombastics have been building quite a reputation for themselves this year while developing a following as an opening act at Pearl Street and by the great shows they've done at the Hatch in the Student Union. The word is funk here.

Free Press began as a UMass band back in 1985 and since then they have managed to stay together and gone on to establish themselves as one of the top drawing local bands in the area. They bring a political slant to their infectious ska influenced sound and frontman Rob Skelton is always capable of outrageous behaviour and full of surprises.

Who's Kiddin' Who have got to be the best band in the Valley. No kidding. Their ensemble lineup, featuring a killer horn section, packs plenty of punch and their combination of skilled musicianship with consumate showmanship provides what the band likes to call "serious sweat". The group has a world beat sound and their repertoire is a versatile range of funk and rock to rap.

As Chuck Papert, saxaphonist for both Free Press and Who's Kiddin' Who, said, "This show is really an event. The Bombastics, Free Press and Who's Kiddin' Who are all closely intertwined. This will actually be the first time the three bands have all played together on the same bill. We're calling this the Northampton band invasion!"

Papert says Who Kiddin' Who is finishing up on recording and mixing tracks for a full length CD album that will be out sometime this summer. The group is recording at Longview Farms with ace local soundman Peter Kepler at the controls.

Bowl Day in Orchard Hill is open to all UMass students. There will be other activities taking place during the day, such as a tie-dye booth and a dunking booth. Their will also be a barbecue, which is free to Orchard Hill residents and will be one dollar for all others.

At present, there are 1,493 on-campus undergraduates registered to vote in Amherst.

• Ellen Story, the recently elected state representative from Amherst and Pelham received the democratic nomination with 1, 515 votes.

• U.S. Representative John Olver, elected in a special election last year, won by 1,800 votes. With off-campus and graduate students living in Amherst, the UMass student vote in local elections may top 2,000.

"We have the power to make a huge difference," said Student Government member Matthew Pavesi. He said if students would only turn out and vote, "We'd be scary. We could elect our own congressman."

Recently however, students have been unable to match Amherst's residents' percentages in local, state or federal elections. Factors contributing to the student body's political paralysis include the inconvenience of voting, lack of knowledge and frequent changes of address.

A pain to get to the polls

In the prime voting hours of the late afternoon and evening the campus shuttle buses, which have 20-minute cycles, deliver students near polling places. Evening service for PVTA buses passing through Amherst Center to the polls for Southwest residents, or down North Pleasant street for Sylvan and Northeast residents take 30 minutes between passes. For many students, getting to and from the polls consumes almost an hour.

An hour can be a lot to ask of a student with a full academic concourse load. Quentin Clark, a junior physics major, said, "This is going to sound terrible, but I just blew it off." Clark said he would have voted for Jon Hite in the Feb. 18 primary based on his ties to the University and his stand on tuition retention. Clark, a Sylvan resident, would have had to walk to the Immanuel Lutheran Church on North Pleasant street. "If it had been anywhere on campus, I would have done it."

Clark follows the general pattern of on-campus residents. he registered in Amherst during the 1990 drive to stop the Citizen's for limited Taxation ballot question #3, but has not voted since.

Student registration in constant flux

The transience of the student population necessitates frequent voter registration drives. The SGA has secured the right to have student deputies from the Town Council and Board of Registrars. At present, students can register to vote in the SGA's Student Union office.

Student President Jen Wood said they would like to go door to door through the residence halls, but do not yet have permission from the Board of Registrars. "Once we prove that students are responsible as registrars, we cans ask for more freedom," Wood said. That would be another large step towards student empowerment said Wood "there's a big difference between being a registered voter and an eligible voter."

Many students register to vote outside of Amherst because they do not consider Amherst their primary residence, or have political ties to their home towns. It is possible that the most politically active students never participate in Amherst politics.

In spite of the free local media available to them, much of the student body in uninformed of local politics. "Sometimes what they read in the Collegian doesn't stick in their head," said Pavesi. In addition to the Hampshire Gazette and the Springfield Union News, the Amherst Bulletin is free, and available at several of the Munchy stores on campus.

Students registered in Amherst often disqualify themselves by moving after the town's annual census. Students who change address, but fail to notify the Town clerk do not appear on the annual census, and are placed on the suspend list. These students must visit the Town clerk's office before going to the polls.

An eligible voter must register 28 days before a state or federal election, or 20 days before a town or special election, said Town Clerk Cornelia Como.

Registration is permanent if you stay in Amherst, but the Town Clerk's office must be notified of changes of address. No duration of residency is necessary.

■ drunk driving

Though the numbers of drunk driving incidents in Amherst have dropped since 1982, Livingstone believes they will increase because the SAP program no longer exists and he sees the University administration pushing under aged drinking into the town with its 1988 alcohol policy.

One UMass student (who wishes to remain anonymous), was arrested for drunk driving after he was forced to leave a downtown bar by the town fire chief.

"I probably wouldn't have been drunk if I was allowed to stay and leave when I wanted to," the student said.

Elisa Campbell, who chairs the Amherst Select Board, also feels that the current situation is a "big problem" which she thinks communication is needed to solve.

"I'm not in favor of telling the University to allow or condone under-aged drinking." Campbell said. "What I would like to see is more communication between the town and the University so something can be agreed upon.

Campbell added that local bar owners are now aware that the town will enforce its capacity bylaws, which regulate the amount of patrons allowed in an establishment, and that the University may have to create social establishments that can meet students needs.

Melonie Dreher, chairperson of the UMass Alcohol and Drug Policy Committee, thinks the present policy existing is in accordance with Massachusetts state laws, and even though the committee has reconvened to review the policy they feel a large change is not realistic.

"I think there may be room for expansion within the policy," Dreher said, "but how much will be determined once we examine the situation."

Dreher added that the committee has decided nothing as of yet but she did hope to include the town views and input.

"We will be working to create a policy that will address the current problems," Dreher said, "but you cant expect to please everyone."

have to stay," said Jim Peirce, a sixth floor resident who is not being removed. Peirce, a sophomore economics major, said there were people who were responsible for damages who were also staying.

"This is a ridiculous inconvenience. There's not much time left in the semester. They didn't take into account academics," said O'Halloran, a sophomore CASIAC major.

Some students complained about the random nature by which Housing decided which students were to be moved.

"With three weeks left in the semester and no proof of anyone doing anything I think this is ridiculous," said sophomore David Guaragna. "They know who did it. They know who's been doing things all semester, still they're throwing all of us out. They didn't go by write-ups or who gave RAs a hard time. They just threw us all out."

But administration officials stressed that the action was not punitive and that it was a question of health and safety.

"People don't understand the dangers involved. The issue now is safety," said Gladys Rodriguez, associate dean of students.

"I think that there are a lot of times when we have to use judgement," said Anne Miller, associate director of Housing, speaking last night before the Student Senate. "I personally think of removing a floor as an extreme situation. When it crosses the line, when it becomes unsafe, we're obligated to take action."

"Now there's less people on the floor to monitor," said Paul Vasconcellos, residence director of Kennedy. He also said the students staying all lived on the same side as the RA and that the staff would make extra sweeps of the floor.

"The Housing contract is too general," said Johnson, one of the residents removed. "It allows them too many rights. They don't have to prove you did anything."

Rodriguez also said Housing was aware of the inconveniences involved and was working to accomodate students.

Housing vans were available to help residents move in the event they didn't have transportation.

Although a letter signed by Miller, stated that students vacating Kennedy will not be allowed to visit the building, Vasconcellos said was not the case.

Former residents will be permitted to visit Kennedy as long as they are signed in by a current resident, said Vasconcellos.

At last night's Senate meeting Miller retracted the statement, saying that it could only be implemented through a disciplinary measure.

Collegian staff member Michael Linsky contributed to this report.

officers.

Television news cameras also showed sporadic acts of violence and lootings throughout the city's largely Black south side.

Earlier, a small crowd jeered as co-defendants individually left the courthouse amid tight security. About 40 protestors showed up later at the scene of the beating.

The jury acquitted the officers of the more serious assault charges and secondary charges, but deadlocked on one count of excessive force against Officer Laurence Powell.

A hearing was scheduled for May 15 to decide whether to prosecute Powell on the undecided count.

The jury said it cast four guilty votes and eight innocent votes in the excessive force count against Powell after three days of deliberation on the count alone.

The officers could have faced four to seven and a half years in prison if convicted on all charges.

After the verdict, the defendants hugged relatives, shook hands with attorneys ad slapped each other on the back. Black community reaction was stunned disbelief.

"I grieve for America," said Rose Brown, 43, of Los Angeles who came to the courthouse for the verdicts. "I think this is appalling."

George Holliday, the civilian witness who videotaped the beating with his camcorder, "has a difficult time reconciling how his tape could have been so important when the four officers just got found not guilty," said Holiday's lawyer, James Jordan.

The jury, which included no Blacks, heard from 54 witnesses whose recollections of the violent night of March 3, 1991, often conflicted.

Most of the testimony came from police officers and police employees, with three of the defendants testifying.

The most powerful evidence remained the videotape. On a large-screen TV that dominated the courtroom, attorneys played it again and again at varying speeds.

Illuminated by the glare of police car headlights, it was a nightmare vision of a Black man writhing under baton blows of White police officers who clubbed and kicked him for 81 seconds.

Prosecutors said they counted 56 blows. King's leg and facial bones were broken.

Koon, the officer in charge that night, took the stand and calmly described the beating as "a managed and controlled use of force."

It's violent and it's brutal," he said. "sometimes police work is brutal. It's a fact of life."

Powell, accused of striking the most blows, said he thought King was under the influence of PCP. No sign of the drug was found in King's body, but tests show he was drunk.

"I was completely in fear for my life, scared to death," said Powell.

Blue Cross hike blasted

Health insurance to go up 40 percent

By JONATHON YENKIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Health insurance customers on Wednesday blasted a Blue Cross and Blue Shield proposed 40 percent rate hike for individual subscribers, saying it could force some people to drop their coverage.

A Blue Cross executive acknowledged the rate increase could have a "tremendous impact" on access to health insurance for the chronically ill or unemployed who can't find coverage elsewhere.

But he also urged the state to help devise a better system for insuring this group.

"It is unconscionable that inequities in the marketplace make such tough choices necessary," said Steven Tringale, a Blue Cross vice president. He and others spoke at a hearing of the state Division of Insurance, which will rule on the rate request.

Tringale proposed the hearing process be delayed a month to give government and insurance officials a chance to draft a reform package. But Insurance Commissioner Kay Doughty said she doubted a solution could be found by then.

The rate hike would affect approximately 64,000 non-group subscribers. For individuals, annual premiums would rise from $2,148 to $3,030. For families, it would rise from $4,683 to $6,357.

These people typically turn to Blue Cross — the state's "insurer of last resort" — because they can't get coverage through an employer, either because they're jobless or work on their own. In some cases, the people are chronically ill or need frequent services and have been rejected by other insurance carriers.

Anthony Scavongelli, an attorney for the State Rating Bureau, said he reviewed the Blue Cross filing and found the request "clearly excessive and unreasonable."

One subscriber, Priscilla Pitcher of Boston, called Blue Cross' proposal a "barbaric request for a stranglehold increase."

"I will be forced to drop my coverage and thus be without any health care," she said.

Another witness, Laura Belanger, 23, described how her brother has been diagnosed with a serious heart problem, which makes it difficult to get coverage from other insurance companies.

"We're hoping that between my mom and myself . . . we will be able to afford my brother's health insurance" through Blue Cross, she said. "Even with the rates at their current levels this is doubtful."

"If the rates were to increase, it will be impossible for us to pay for the insurance," she said.

When people drop insurance, they can apply for coverage from hospitals through a free care pool, said Robert Restuccia, executive director of Health Care for All, an advocacy group.

But many of the Blue Cross subscribers wouldn't be able to meet the income requirements for this free care, and even if they do qualify they would still have to pay for prescription drugs or doctor's office visits," Restuccia said.

Restuccia said the rate filing means "the insurer of last resort is closing the door on people who need."

Ousted Haiti pres. asks for diplomatic solutions

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Ousted Hatian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide urged the United States Wednesday to continue supporting his quest to return Democratic government to his country, but backed diplomatic solutions over military action.

At the start of the two-day visit here, Aristide also stopped short of criticizing the Bush administration for repatriating Haitians who have escaped his country since he was deposed.

"Today it's time to build solidarity — American and Haitian — to make sure democracy will be back in Haiti and that way our refugees will stay in Haiti instead of fleeing repression," Aristide said.

The soft-spoken Roman Catholic priest was greeted with full honors in Boston, where he stopped at City Hall and then came to the Statehouse to address the Legislature after meeting with state leaders. There are an estimated 60,000 Haitians in in the greater Boston area.

As Aristide refused to criticize the Bush administration outright for its policy of returning Haitian who have left their country, he described them as political refugees. The United States considers most of the Haitians escaping the country as economic refugees, and has sent them back to the island.

"If they left the country . . . it's because they are political refugees because they (the military-controlled government) killed more than 2,000 people," Aristide said.

Due to the continuing exodus of Haitians, the United States has considered taking extra steps to pressure the military-controled government to return to democracy. One measure under consideration would be to tighten the embargo against Haiti, by barring tankers that deliver oil to the country from making stops at U.S. ports.

Aristide did not specify what kind of action he is looking for from the United States When asked where he hopes to be in three months, he replied: "I hope we will continue in the same way until we have democracy back in Haiti."

vidual costs," said Miller. "But we also assume that the University pays for those costs we can't identify the source of."

Kennedy Senator Jason Wisuri estimated the amount of total damage at $7,000, but Miller seemed to disagree, saying "That's the first I've heard of that figure."

Despite much senate displeasure about the actions of Housing Services, Miller staunchly defended her decision.

"There will be a police investigation to see if we can figure out who threw the dryer," she said. "If we knew who was responsible, I would work with those people. I don't know who was responsible, so that option isn't open. I am, however, obligated to do something."

Boston TV in trouble

BOSTON (AP) — For the past year, Boston's much-praised local TV programing has taken hit after hit.

Victims of a tough economy and a changing TV dial, canceled shows have included standbys as "Good Day" on Channel 5 and "Evening Magazine" on Channel 4 and local programs on the independents and PBS affiliate.

The recent elimination of the post of program director at WBZ-TV signals the final blow to what many broadcasters nostalgically consider the "good old days" of Boston-area television.

Those were the days in the mid-1970s — pre-recession and pre-cable expansion — when the Boston market won kudos around the nation for the breath and creativity of its local programs.

And while Boston still continues to rank high in the amount of time devoted to local shows, news and documentaries, TV executives say the market for local programs has been permanently changed.

Liljeblads have everyone seeing double

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

In physics, two like forces repel each other.

On the University of Massachusetts women's track and cross country teams, two exact forces repel the opponent.

Kelly and Kim Liljeblad, identical twins for Coach Julie LaFreniere's Minutewomen have had the competition running behind them the past year.

But, not everyone knows who is who. "Sometimes they cheer for the wrong person," said Kim, in reference to cross country meets. "My father did that once. [Kelly] always comes in first and she was injured for a while, so I was ahead and I hear him say, 'c'mon Kelly.'"

The two admit they have never tried to fool the judges or the opposition based on their physical likeness.

"We've thought about it, but we never though we could pull it off," Kim said.

As to how anyone can tell the difference between the two on the track or across the countryside, Kim puts it plain and simple. "One is better than the other," said Kim, who is also differentiated physically by her longer hair. "[Kelly] can totally kill me."

All-League, All-Conference and All-State selections from West Islip, N.Y., the Liljeblads, who have an older sister and one older and one younger brother, didn't begin their respective college careers on the same track.

Kim, who has yet to decide on a major, transferred to UMass in the fall after attending the University of South Carolina, Coastal Carolina for one year where she competed intercollegiately in cross country. Kelly is in her second year at UMass and just declared her major as Sport Management this semester.

Although the twins, both members of the Sigma Delta Tau sorority, are regarded as threats by northeast competition, they don't see each other as so.

"We don't like to compete against each other at all," Kelly said. "Sometimes I even say, 'Kim get up here.'"

During the track season, Kelly sees her strongest events as the 3000 and 5000-meter runs, Kim prefers the 800 and 1500. However, on one occasion, one of them ran all four, that is according to a certain official.

"I can't believe you ran all those races and still won,' an official said after one meet," Kim said of an official unaware of the twins. "So we just went along with it."

Although Kelly is known as the more competitive racer, Kim has untapped potential according to LaFreniere.

"Kim always took the back seat to Kelly," LaFreniere said. "But, Kim has no clue to how good she really is. Kim has come a long ways and has been running really well, although she'll never tell you that."

"The people that know us think we're two totally different people," said Kelly. Such is evident when asked about their future running aspirations.

Kelly said, "I want to compete. I want to do marathons as I get older. I'd like to try New York City and Boston."

Kim said, "I do want to run [a marathon]," which causes Kelly to burst into laughter. "But, I don't know if I'd make it the whole way."

themselves ranked second in the region behind the University of Connecticut, which has a 3-1 record against UMass this season, and ahead of number three Hofstra, which split a doubleheader with UMass last week.

This weekend the team travels to UConn for the Diamond Classic, in which it will play the host team as well as Florida State and Southern Florida. Next week will bring home doubleheaders against regional foes Adelphi, which is also 'Senior Day', and Princeton, which is a make-up twinbill.

All are big games for the Minutewomen's chance to play in the regionals.

"We have a lot of difficult games coming up," Aprile said. "They're all really important. Because of the rain, they're all back-to-back. We have the opportunity, but we have had the opportunities in the past. We can only control what's left to do."

clip as the Minutemen fell just short of the NCAA regionals, losing two heartbreakers on the tournament's final day to Rutgers.

The 1992 edition of the Minutemen, led by captain Carelli will have a chance for revenge this year, as they travel back to Boyertown next weekend with Rutgers looming as a possible second round opponent.

"I'd love a chance at Rutgers. But we'll take a chance with anyone," Carelli said. "There is going to be a lot of good teams down there, and going to the regionals would be a dream come true."

In the meantime, Carelli and the rest of the team will focus on the task at hand, preparing for the A-10's.

Carelli and the Minutemen did just that yesterday, splitting with Siena , as Carelli reached base three times to close out the 1992 home schedule for the Minutemen.

Next Tuesday should prove interesting for Carelli, as UMass travels to Northeastern to take on the Huskies and the coach that lost faith in Carelli two years ago.

The 1991 Minutemen, loaded with talent, including three 1991 draft picks, finished the season with a marginal record of 26-25-1. On the other hand the 1992 Minutemen, without the benefit of a proven offensive superstar like Bright or Dana, look to finish the season somewhere about 29-14.

"The big difference between this year and last year is pitching," Carelli said. "Last year we just couldn't seem to put it all together, but we've been rolling this year."

Credit this year's success to better pitching, stronger team unity, and the leadership of a 5'6" second basemen by the name of John Carelli.

Baseball splits twinbill in home finale

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team ended its home season yesterday with a double-header split, losing a disappointing 5-3 game to the less-than-talented Siena College Saints after killing them 9-0 in the opener.

Ron Villone and Rich Graham ended their careers at Earl Lorden Field with six innings of combined one-hit ball. Sophomore Peter Ferrari retired the side for the shutout in the opener.

Seniors Lou Olivieri, Rob Graziano, Jay Dodig and John Carelli also saw substantial action in their last home game.

The Minuteman offense had two big innings that put Siena in the coffin. A six-run second and a three-run third was the only scoring for either team in the first game. UMass batted around in the second inning.

Olivieri led off the second by reaching on Siena second baseman Paul Seifert's error, going to third on Dodig's single and scoring on Greg LaRocca's single. Steve Corradi followed with a sacrifice fly RBI after Carelli walked.

The Minutemen got three consecutive hits with two outs, including Keith Richards' 2-RBI triple that gave UMass a 6-0 lead. Villone set Siena down in the top of the third, and UMass went back to work on offense.

Three Siena two-base errors in a row scored Kevin Correa and put two runners on for Corradi in the bottom of the third. He responded.

Corradi's two-run single scored Dodig and LaRocca and gave the Minutemen the 9-0 lead that they would hold. Corradi had a big day in the first game, with 3 RBIs and two stolen bases.

Graham pitched three innings and retired nine Saints in a row. The senior right-hander struck out five in front of a few hardy major league scouts who stayed after head coach Mike Stone took out Villone.

"It hasn't sunk in yet at all," Graham said. "It's hard to believe that four years have gone by."

Villone ended his career at Lorden Field for a different reason. The junior lefty was projected on ESPN last Tuesday night to be a high first-round draft pick by baseball analyst Peter Gammons. Gammons said Villone may be the Indians' pick at No. 2 in the first round, if not the first pick overall.

The second game was as disappointing as the first was fulfilling.

"We did not hit in the second game," Stone said. "We gave them a couple of chances and they capitalized."

That pretty much sums up the game, as catcher Phil Oliva smashed an 0-1 split-fingered fastball in the sixth off UMass reliever John Russell that broke a 3-3 score. Siena held on to win, 5-3.

The Minutemen had their chance in the last of the seventh, putting the winning run at the plate in the guise of Bill Knight. Knight hit an atom ball to Seifert to end the game.

UMass went ahead in the first inning 1-0 when LaRocca singled, stole second and third, and scored on Corradi's sacrifice fly.

Siena took a 3-1 lead in the third off starter Rob Graziano with help from four not-so hits. Three of the four hits dropped five feet behind UMass infielders, and the fourth went right underneath third baseman Joe Mattivello's glove.

UMass showed its resiliency in the bottom of the inning by tying the score at three when LaRocca tripled, Carelli doubled him home and freshman phenoma Bill Knight doubled him in. But the 3-3 tie wouldn't last forever. Stone opted for Russell, who gave up the game-winning dinger.

"It's disappointing, but it's something we can't stand for anymore," Villone said. "We can't let it happen again and we can't dwell on it."

Aprile impresses at bat, mound

Senior's successful softball career winding down

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

When Holly Aprile graduates this month, she will leave a list of records, both hitting and pitching, that will have University of Massachusetts softball players reaching for years.

Consider these statistical categories she will lead after this season: hits (220); triples (21); doubles (42); runs scored (123); at-bats (628); multiple-hit games; games pitched (112); innings pitched (642.3); pitching wins (68); saves (four).

Along with her numerous pitching records, senior Holly Aprile has set six career offensive marks for the University of Massachusetts softball team in her celebrated career.

Other records may fall as the Minutewomen (26-11 overall, 10-0 and season champs in the Atlantic 10 for the fourth consecutive year) finish out this season.

"Your stats reflect how you play, to some degree," Aprile said. "But I don't feel one dimensional as a pitcher or as a hitter. I feel more like a player. If I had to choose one, I would rather pitch well than hit well because I feel I have more control over what's happening."

Aprile, a native of Afton, N.Y., was named A-10 Rookie of the Year in 1989, and A-10 Player of the Year the past two seasons. She was also named to the New England Coaches' All-Star Team last year.

In addition to the hitting and pitching prowess Aprile displays, she is also one of the team's fastest and most aggressive baserunners. In a game earlier this season Aprile was on third base when the opposing catcher walked the ball back to the pitcher without calling timeout. She sprinted home and was in the dugout before anyone could even come close to tagging her out.

Add to that her quick jumps to fly balls while she roams center field, and she is probably the most dangerous all-around player on the field.

To the average fan watching Aprile get mad at herself for grounding out to the second baseman, the wrong idea may be inferred. She simply expects a lot from herself and does not let up for one second.

"My father taught me all about the game," she said. "There has been different coaches along the way, but the way I play and my attitude is basically from my father.

"I expect to win everything I'm a part of."

"That's how she is," said teammate Stacey Nichols. "She's like that because she's a perfectionist. She expects the best of herself all the time. At times it's not good, and she knows that. She'll be the first to admit it.

"I'd consider both her hitting and pitching to be extremely valuable. Losing her is going to be an extreme loss for our team. Her pitching, hitting and fielding."

In Aprile's four years her team has won four A-10 championships, and in '89 and '91 the team advanced to the NCAA regionals. Both times they were eliminated before reaching the softball World Series.

As this season winds down the Minutewomen find

Carelli leads Minutemen to A-10's, again

CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

When the 1991 University of Massachusetts baseball season ended in disappointment at Bear Stadium in Boyertown, Pa., many thought the 1992 season would be a rebuilding year for UMass.

After all, as the 1992 season opened the Minutemen were without five of their starters from the previous year. Noticeably absent were team leaders Brian Bright and Derek Dana, who forfeited their senior seasons at UMass for the professional ranks, leaving UMass with only one captain for the 1992 season.

That lone captain turned out to be senior John Carelli, UMass' sure-handed second baseman whose intensity and aggressive style of play prompted his teammates to elect him captain after only one season of roaming the infield at Lorden Field.

"It meant a lot," Carelli said. "It was nice recognition from the guys. I don't really look at myself as captain. I more or less see all five seniors as the leaders."

Carelli, a native of Worcester, who attended St. Peter-Marian High School, headed for Huntington Ave. and Northeastern University after graduation, starting at second base for two seasons with the Huskies before differences with NU headman Neil McPhee landed John on the UMass campus.

"John's leadership made a difference on our team," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "Last year we had more talent, but this year we're a closer team."

Carelli became an instant success on a talent-laden Minuteman squad, racking up 11 doubles and 26 RBI's while batting .303, good for fifth on the team in his inaugural season with the Minutemen.

However, Carelli's brightest moment of 1991 came in the Atlantic 10 Championship's, when John anchored the UMass squad, hitting at a .583

Turmoil rocks nation after King trial

18 killed in L.A., Bush 'sickened'

By JEFF WILSON and TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES and WASHINGTON — Riots, arson and looting raged throughout the Los Angeles area Thursday and the death toll rose to 18 as National Guard troops moved into neighborhoods torn by outrage over the Rodney King verdict.

About 450 people had been injured and 300 arrested in the outburst of destruction that terrorized vast parts of the city for a second day, from downtown to the suburban San Fernando Valley.

In Washington, President Bush went from expressing "frustration and anguish" over the King verdict to declaring revulsion and pain" over the violent uprising that terrorized Los Angeles.

The evolution toward a hard-line, law-and-order stand against rioters was prompted by fears — particularly at the Justice Department — that Bush's original remarks might be seen as encouragement for people to protest the verdict and act out their frustration violently.

Intent on erasing that impression, Bush at midday Thursday declared, "The murder and destruction in the streets of Los Angeles must be stopped. Lootings, beating and random violence against innocent victims must be condemned. And society cannot tolerate this kind of behavior."

Three hours later, during a speech in Columbus, Ohio, Bush went even further. He said the violence in Los Angeles "was purely criminal. It was outrageous what happened. And we are all sickened by what we saw."

At nightfall Thursday, violence had spread into San Bernardino, 60 miles to the east of Los Angeles, where a gun battle between a security guard and a motorist that police said was riot-related left one dead. Santa Monica, to the west, closed its beaches, and vandals descended upon historic Hollywood Boulevard, setting fire to at least one business.

As many as 40 fires were burning as a citywide dusk-to-dawn curfew took effect. At least six new major blazes ringed downtown, enveloping the city's skyscrapers in thick smoke.

Arizona Gov. Fife Symington said California Gov. Pete Wilson had asked him for National Guard equipment and

Protests held in Boston

Reaction to L.A. trial called 'peaceful'

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — After the long march from Northeastern University to Boston Common, demonstrators protesting the innocent verdicts in the Rodney King case fumed while police held them up on Tremont Street.

"Don't step on me," warned a police officer who was part of a wall of blue blocking up the march to Government Center.

"Don't push me," retorted the demonstrator, eyes blazing. "That's how this... all started."

Despite some in-your-face staring, shouted obscenities and minor jostling, Thursday's march was peaceful, police said. It capped a day of protest and concern 3,000 miles away from the city where four white policemen were acquitted in the videotaped beating of a black driver, King.

A group of mostly young demonstrators marched through downtown Boston Thursday evening chanting, "no justice, no peace." A few waved an American flag scrawled with a rhyme alleging ethnic prejudice by whites — "White country tis of thee..." Another sign read: "America, America, God shed a tear for thee."

"America is trying to divide and conquer," Cedric Thomas of Boston, one of the march's organizers, told the group. She said they planned to hold another rally today at Grove Hall in the city's Roxbury section.

At Government Center, police formed two rows of lines to keep the King protesters from crashing a large rally outside City Hall for ousted Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Police said they kept the two groups separate for security reasons.

After being held up by police on Tremont for about 20 minutes, the marchers approached the Aristide rally with fists upraised. While the Aristide crowd dispersed, a woman yelled "This was for Rodney!" through a bullhorn, spurring chants of "Rodney!"

Students rally to protest verdict

By MARTIN F. JONES

Over 200 students and faculty gathered in front of the Tower Library for a rally responding to the acquittal of the four Los Angeles police officers on trial for the beating of motorist Rodney King.

The rally was organized spontaneously by a group of students from the Department of Social Thought and Political Economy. Senior STPEC major Craig Zelizer spoke to a number of other students last night following the news of the verdict.

"We called around and discussed the issue among ourselves," Zelizer said. "This morning someone suggested that we hold a rally."

see related story page 4

After about an hour of organizing, the rally began at approximately 12:30 p.m. in front of the Student Union Building. It was later moved in front of the Tower Library due to a Holocaust memorial week event which was taking place at the Student Union.

There was no set group of speakers, and students were allowed to air their views openly over a sound system.

There were a number of different views aired at the rally. One student called for students to take action beyond the rally itself. "If there are things you can do, don't rely on those speaking before you today to do it for you," Zelizer said.

One student gave a different perspective from the widely-held view that the verdict was racially motivated.

"It's not a racial problem," he said. "It's all about authority and who has it. It doesn't matter if you're Black or White, it's about privilege."

Arnold Lazana, a sophomore STPEC major, displayed an opposing view on the issue.

"Obviously we have a lot of people out here who are a bit disillusioned on what it is all about," Lazana said. "It does matter in America if you are Black or White."

"A lot of people here are caught up in the moment," Lazana added. "They are thinking, 'Oh, this is great, I can protest about something.' I get offended by that because it trivializes the struggle of my life."

Women decry rape, assault

"It wasn't erotic — it was brutal. I felt sick. Even today he doesn't believe he raped me," said Holly Schick.

Schick is one of the six University students who spoke against sexual assault at the Student Union yesterday.

After grabbing everyone's attention by blowing a whistle, people gathered around the circle of performers standing on chairs. They read poems, participated in a short, dramatic skit on rape and quoted statistics about rape and violence against women.

Organized by the Peer Sex Education program from Health Education and the the Educator/Advocate program at the Everywoman's Center, the "speakout" is part of the events sponsored for Sexual Assault Awareness month.

"We wanted to dramatize and make real the reality of sexual assault on campuses, and have women see it. It really happens," said Veronica

Tour guides show UMass off

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Correspondent

Tuition is on the rise, and the application deadline for incoming seniors has been extended this year, but that has not put a damper on the University's tour guides attitudes here on campus.

"Tour guides at this University are the only personal contact that incoming students have," said Deb Lardner, a senior who has been a tour guide for two years.

The average size of a tour can range anywhere between one and 40 people. Last week, over four hundred students toured through this campus, a large number of them being from out of state, as well as juniors in high school.

After an extensive training period that includes a three-hour per week training session for an entire semester, guides usually discover that there are specific areas that need to be covered.

"A lot of students think that we only point out the specifics, but we do talk about special programs, the police force and the history of the school," said Donna Butler, a tour guide who has been giving tours for one year.

During the one-hour tours that take place twice a day, seven days a week, concerns vary among students and their parents. "Parents are more interested in the security, laundry facilities and whether or not their children will be monitered," said Butler. "Students wonder more about the Greek system and the social life."

Questions like, "how many books are there in the library?" and "is there maid service on campus?" are typical on almost every tour, according to Brenna Autry, a senior guide who has been touring for a full year.

A concerned father once asked while touring the campus with his daughter, "are the men of reputable standing that attend this University?"

"We are totally honest with the people on our tours," said Autry.

When asked whether or not the University was going to be affected by the lowest enrollment level in over twenty years, Kim McKleen responded, "There aren't as many students nationwide."

"The University isn't accepting students just to fill space," said McKleen.

"We are coming out of a slump, especially because of the basketball team and the alumni and graduating seniors pulling together," said Autry.

The response of the students after attending a tour makes the job of the tour guide all the more important, according to several guides.

"A lot of students are impressed by our tours, and I, personally had decided right after my tour whether or nor I would attend this University," said Butler.

When it comes to responding to the students who walk by the tours with comments like, "Don't come here," tour guides respond to their groups by saying, "Remember those jerks you had in high school?. . . well, a few slipped through our system."

"If these particular people are not happy, they should reconsider why they are here," said Lardner.

Currently there are 12 tour guides working for the University. This semester there were over one hundred applications from students on campus interested in filling positions. Seven were accepted and are being trained.

UMass honors memory of Holocaust victims

By DAVID MOHEBAN
Collegian Staff

Mourning and remembrance among University faculty and students for the six million who lost their lives in the Holocaust marked the Commeration Service concluding the observance of Holocaust Commemoration week.

The "Blessed is the Match" Holocaust Memorial week concluded yesterday afternoon Service in the Cape Cod Lounge featuring readings and songs by invited faculty members and students.

"I've let my heart be open here and so it is hurting very badly," said UMass microbiology Professor Albey Reiner. "You should be strong enough to keep your heart open in hell, and the Holocaust is pretty close."

"It's an event that is unfathomable to a mind like my own," said Lisa Bovarnick, an accounting major, who talked about her grandmother's experiences during the Holocaust.

"Nobody wanted to hear her story," Bovarnick said. "I am not surprised in the least. I can remember a time when I too did not want to listen."

"I never quite gave myself enough time to become aware of what the Holocaust really means and to become aware," said Julie Weiner, a member of the Holocaust Planning Committee.

"I can't imagine having my brother and mother missing one day and find out they are dead," said Lisa Katz, a microbiology major and president of Hillel, who spoke on her grandparent's struggle during the Holocaust.

Katz said there are groups who claim the Holocaust never occurred. She said people who are survivors should tape their stories. It is up to the public to take these experiences and fight these groups because they are gaining power, Katz said.

"On April 24, 1915, one million Armenians were killed. This was the first genocide of the 20th century," said Sonya Dulgarian, a Soviet studies and international relations major, who related the Armenian massacre to the Jewish Holocaust.

Director Carol Wallace of the Everywoman's Center spoke on the Holocaust from a woman's perspective.

"Less has been written on women in the Holocaust. . . the women who fought in the Warsaw Ghetto uprisings, the women who were raped, and the women who saw their sons and daughters murdered," Wallace said.

Five candles were lit during the commemoration service, in memory of those who perished and lost their lives in the concentration camps.

"Even if there are no more survivors, if not for the Holocaust my life would be different," said Mitchel Kotler, a graduate student in mathematics.

"Our struggle has to be about fighting for our lives. The Holocaust right now is the AIDS epidemic," said Amy Lesen, an LBGA member, who dedicated her candle to those losing their lives to AIDS.

The Holocaust commemoration service was sponsored by Hillel, the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment fund, the German Studies Department, the Program for GLB Concerns, the Office of Human Relations and Everywoman's Center.

Physical plant worker prevents disaster

By MARK PRESTON

Harold Asher

With little regard for his own safety, Harold Asher took his life into his own hands as he removed a welding tank that was on fire at Marcus Hall last semester.

"I felt it was my responsibility as a University of Massachusetts worker to make sure everyone in the building was safe and that the least amount of damage occurred to the building," said Asher.

The National Fire Protection Association will commend him for his actions today outside the Physical Plant. The ceremony will take place at 9 a.m.

"Harold is truly one of our better employees," said Peter A. Wozniak, director of the University's Physical Plant. "He did an outstanding job responding and reacting to the incident with quick action to avoid a major fire."

Asher, who is a plumber for the physical plant, was part of a team of workers who were installing a roof drain in the building at approximately 11:30 a.m. on December 11, when the potential life-threatening incident occurred.

The workers were in the process of making a hole in the roof in order to install the drain when they came upon a support beam blocking their path.

A welder began to cut the beam when a spark fell and ignited gas that was leaking from the welder's tank.

"It was a regular job that should of have only taken five minutes, but the regulator valve was defective on the cylinder of gas," said David J. Beaudin, associate fire prevention officer for the University Health and Safety office at UMass.

"Had the tank gone up, it would have had the explosive force of dynamite," said Beaudin.

Asher not only removed the burning cylinder from the building and extinguished the fire, but he also made sure someone called fire department.

Asher previously had participated in a employee fire safety training program conducted by the Environmental Health & Safety, who nominated him for the commendation, according to a prepared statement.

"If it wasn't for going to the meetings, I would have never known what to do," said Asher. "I have to give credit to Peter Wozniak for sending me to these seminars — I found them very concise and informative."

"When I found I had to go to these meetings, I figured they would be really boring, but I figured they would at least be good for a free coffee and doughnut," he said. "Now I realize the importance of the seminars for Physical Plant workers and surrounding community members."

Exhibit draws varying response to portrayal of lesbian sexuality

By PAMELA A. GAULIN
Collegian Correspondent

How would you react to photographs of lesbian sexuality in galleries? What if some of those images include not only hugging, kissing and fondling, but a crucifix, handcuffs and a male voyeur? Where do you draw the line on lesbian sexual imagery?

"Drawing the Line," brought to Northampton for its first New England appearance by WOW Productions, is an exhibit of 100 photo- graphs of lesbian sex constructed by Kiss and Tell, a Vancouver artists' collective, and asks women to write their reactions directly on the gallery walls. Men are asked to write their reactions in a book.

"Women are so silenced over images of themselves. This is a time when you can vent," said Aliza Ansell of WOW Productions. "You're asked not to be silent and to write all your feelings, and that is the rare opportunity for women's voices to be heard."

"We welcome all opinions, specifically because they can write them on the wall," Ansell said. "If they find this offensive, if they find this degrading, or consider it pornographic, or whatever, please write that on the wall. That's part of the whole dialogue that exists."

The writing on the walls transforms "Drawing the Line" into an interactive event in which viewers react not only to the photos but to other women's comments, according to WOW members.

People can read their own realities into the photos, bringing unconscious social, cultural and class related imagery into their reactions, Kiss and Tell member Persimmon Blackbridge said.

"There are ways people put their ideas on the photos and don't recognize that it's coming from them," Blackbridge said.

The photos, ordered from "least to most controversial," prompted viewers to write about the lack of racial representation in the exhibit and raised questions about the artists' decision to photograph only two models.

"There is no excuse for 'whites only' space," one woman wrote. "The realm of art is not confined to this exhibit," was one reaction to the above.

The artists said they only photographed two models because they hoped to focus on representations of lesbian sexuality and not on the women themselves.

The discussion on the walls also involved the difference between perceptions of what is pornographic and what is erotic.

"Someone in my women's philosophy class would find this pornographic, I think it's erotic," one woman wrote under the first set of photos.

Halfway through the exhibit, where the writing grew larger in reaction to the "more controversial" images, a few viewers drew their lines.

"This is the last set of my 'comfort zone'— everything else seems to be an imbalance of power — a 'taking' instead of sharing that scares me, not excites me," one woman wrote.

Many of the comments also reflected viewers' pleasure and thanked the artists for sharing these images.

"It is refreshing to see diverse lesbian imagery in 'politically correct' Northampton," one woman wrote.

"The revolutionary thing about this is that we actually get to see that women have sexuality that is really diverse," one woman wrote.

Some comments included, "I could linger all day looking at this," as well as and "Looks like medieval torture."

The exhibit is showing through May 17 at the APE Gallery in Thornes Market.

UM student suffers injury

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

UMass sophomore John Ziebel sustained a knee injury in a two-car accident the East Pleasant intersection near Butterfield Residence Hall last night.

Ziebel was taken by ambulance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. No one else was injured. A hospital spokesperson said Ziebel's injury was "minor" and he was released shortly after his arrival.

Ziebel was a passenger in a south-bound car that struck a vehicle making a left-hand turn onto East Pleasant at about 10:30 p.m., according to UMass student Mike DeMello, who identified himself as the south-bound driver.

DeMello said he "came up over the hump" near the intersection, saw a car pulling out, locked his brakes trying to stop and could not prevent a collision.

UMass student Eric Hirsch, who identified himself as the second car's driver, said he had inched out to make a left-hand turn, saw DeMello's car coming over the hill and stopped, and was subsequently struck by DeMello's automobile.

DiMello said he was traveling about 35 miles per hour at the time of the accident.

Hirsch said he believes left turns onto East Pleasant street at the Butterfield intersection are dangerous because an adjacent hill about 50 yards to the north impedes a clear view of on-coming traffic.

"I didn't see it (DeMello's car) because of that hill — it's a terrible blind turn," Hirsch said.

"I'm almost very happy," Hirsch said, and went on to explain the accident could have been much worse if DeMello hadn't stayed in the south-bound lane. Hirsch said a third car stopped to make a left-turn in the north-bound lane would have been hit head-on if DeMello had swerved to avoid his car.

"He (DeMello) saw me and hit his brakes and they locked. It was a choice to hit me in the side or hit the other car head-on. I won the lottery," Hirsch said.

UMass and Amherst police responded to the accident. Officers at the scene declined to comment. At the time of this report no charges had been filed.

Students across nation react to King verdict

By SARAH LEVESQUE

Students on campuses nationwide expressed shock at the acquittal of the four White policemen in the videotaped beating of Black motorist Rodney King.

Mark Charnock, Managing Editor of U., The National College Newspaper which is based in Century City, L.A. said he was worried about the riots. He and the staff at U. were evacuated from their building by security officers.

"All of L.A. proper is declared in a State of Emergency. Shopping malls and other public places have been shut down and there is a curfew from dusk to dawn," said Charnock. "Even the national guard has been called in. We've been told that we'd better go home — that we'd be safer at home."

Brian Dillard, staff member of The State News, Michigan State University's newspaper, discussed MSU students' reactions to the King decision. "When I called various people to ask their initial reaction to the case, everyone expressed disgust with the jury's verdict," said Dillard. "Some students in the Black Caucus said they were surprised with the outcome while others said they weren't surprised at all."

Dillard said he believes there is a lot of individual criticism of the King decision, but not "a strong united protest against the verdict."

"Students seem really upset," said Dillard, but he admits "the overall response seems slow."

Entertainment editor of the Clemson University Tiger Michael King, no relation to Rodney King, said students he talked to were "shocked, surprised and concerned." King said he and other students found themselves "glued to CNN, somewhat like when the Gulf War was happening. I watched CNN until 3 a.m."

"Those officers were so obviously lying. What they were insinuating was ridiculous," said King. "Many of us also wondered about the personal safety of those jurors and that judge."

Jim Suydam of The Daily Texan, the student newspaper of the University of Texas at Austin, said he covered the many different local rallies protesting the King case verdict, which he said he felt was "a catalyst for feelings which were a long time coming."

Around noon yesterday, 50 people protested in front of the Austin police station, and later there was an even larger rally in front of the state capitol. "A lot of local groups were there and one person had a sign saying, 'Honk to stop police brutality.' And it was noisy — everyone was honking."

Alex and John Nazaar, high school students in Long Beach, L.A., both said they were angered by the verdict and scared of the results.

"There aren't any sitcoms or anything on T.V. right now — every channel is news about the riots and looting. It's out of control," said 14-year-old John Nazaar.

"This was for every black man, black woman, every human being who has been beaten by the police," Thomas said. "We have to protect our own."

Police spokesman Scott Gillis said no one was arrested in connection with the march. "It was a mixed group. . . not all white or all black," he said. "They seemed to be very peaceful."

Gillis said he "was under orders" not to tell the media how many officers were assigned to the demonstration. There appeared to be at least 200 officers escorting the marchers, lining the route and forming lines to hold them back at certain points.

Jeff Kramer, a freelance reporter for The Boston Globe, was shot five times. Kramer, a former reporter for the Middlesex News of Framingham, Mass., was in stable condition at California Medical Center.

At City Hall, Mayor Raymond Flynn said the unrest was caused in part by drugs, poverty and other urban problems long ignored by the federal government. He said he will urge President Bush to appoint a national commission on urban neglect.

told him: "It's out of control." Wilson was flying to Los Angeles from the capital, Sacramento.

Much of the city shut down. Bus service was halted, professional sporting events were postponed, thousands of businesses and schools were closed, and some flights were rerouted around columns of smoke.

Police spokeswoman Sharon Michaelson said 17 deaths had been confirmed in Los Angeles from the rioting. That was in addition to the death in San Bernardino.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Class struggle reaffirmed

On April 29, after seven days of deliberation by a jury that excluded Afro-Americans, all charges but one, which affects only one of the defendants, and is presently deadlocked, were dismissed. The outcome of the Rodney King case is no more than a vindication of the existing realities at work in the American society today. The acquittal of the four defendants of the L.A. Police Department is, however, more than an issue of racism.

Elliot M. Torres

The prevalent phenomenon of racism is characteristic of a capitalist system that by design has to sustain a state of fragmentation, oppression, marginalization and absolute inequality. Although a large sector of the European-American community is also the victim of such a system, this sector, given its ethnicity and physiological characteristics, can only be the victim of a single marginal condition. On the other hand, the so-called minorities of the U.S are the inevitable wretches of a triple marginalization.

It is essential for people to understand that on account of our ethnicity, skin color and membership in a society proven to be disposed to discriminate and do evil against many people of color, our position of subordination is with frequency triplicate. Unfortunately, when a people has systematically confronted and experienced not only the repressive methods of oppression by a state bureaucracy, but the methods and procedures of an organized system that seeks to enhance our condition of disenfranchisement and isolation, we may often seek to redeem our character as human beings by engaging in acts of individual violence in an attempt to regain some of the dignity and integrity that the system has extorted from us.

I have re-examined a previous thought and I am now in agreement with another brother. I now believe that this just and symptomatic violence occurring in L.A. today is not to the collective benefit of our brothers and sisters — at least at this time. There is, however, another violence that is deliberately not only omitted from the media reports, but goes totally unpunished by this society. I am referring to the structural violence of a system and the violence that results from injustices like the acquittal of the four "necrophiliacs" of the L.A. Police Department.

I commend and support my brothers and sisters who in one way or another are reacting to the violence of the oppressors. This violence, however, ought to be organized, prudent and conclusive. Do not be confounded. There will always be a large "liberal" sector that in itself, was the first to establish tyranny, hate, negation, terror, exploitation and oppression through brute force. Yet, in spite of its "liberalness," it will not fail to label the real victim as the disorderly, the barbaric and the violent — including some of our own people.

One more thing, brothers and sisters. Do not be consumed by manipulative measures (i.e., rallies) deliberately concocted to anesthetize and distract us from our only goal: freedom and justice. Let's instead look for those factors which we have in common and not emphasize petty differences. We can then proceed to engage in a collective class struggle against the system. Companeros, a la lucha!

Elliot Monteverde Torres is a UMass student.

The L.A. police are guilty!

I'm pissed off at our legal system, and in case you've been living in a hole (like the jurors in the King case have), I'm pissed because of the acquittal of four Los Angeles Police Department officers in the beating of Rodney King.

And I'm a conservative White Protestant male.

People say that racism doesn't exist in the U.S. in 1992, and those people are at the root of the problem. Anyone who can honestly say that justice was served in the King case is either retarded or the son/daughter/relative of a police officer.

Michael Morrissey

Let's look at a few facts. A videotape of the beating showed that four officers beat King 54 times. For speeding. Oh yeah, they thought he was on PCP.

Now, the next step was going through the motions of a trial, because everyone has a right to a fair trial under our "fine" legal system. But the jurors had undisputable visual evidence that excessive force was used. The police would have to pay for their attack, and for once, a point would be made that if police abuse Blacks they will be punished.

The legal system failed, plain and simple. It failed because it had to pick jurors who knew nothing of the case, had to choose complete and utter morons. The type of person who does not follow the King case is the type of person who is a poor citizen.

We need good citizens to preside on jurors, not retards. The people on the jury probably live in caves. They made the wrong decision in their infinite ignorance.

The 12 non-Black jurors found the four White police officers not guilty of beating the Black lawbreaker, because the 54 blows to the Black were deemed acceptable force. Do you see a trend here?

What I got out of the King trial was a message, and I know others got the same message. There is no way that Blacks, by playing by the rules of the legal system, can win.

There is no way, because if a videotape of a beating can't convict police officers, than nothing can. Police officers now have carte blanche to kill, beat, rape Black people "in the line of duty."

Whites don't think this concerns them, but it does. Because if our police officers abuse their authority to one group, eventually they'll abuse their authority towards Whites too. The legal system that fails the Black man is the same that will fail the White man too in a few years.

A simple rule of life is that he who makes the rules, controls the game. As long as Blacks (and Whites) against racism try to fight within the rules, they will not win. They won't. The White establishment is stopping them, and it is omnipotent in the United States.

We have no choice but to change the rules, and that's exactly what Blacks in South Central are doing right now. They won't let an injustice to this magnitude go unchecked.

The White truck driver is on his way to bring groceries to the White supermarket that feeds White people who help in oppressing Blacks. He is perpetuating it all, so why not cut off the food chain? People say killing him is wrong, but is it?

Black people in L.A. must win this battle, because if they lose, things will stay the same. Whites will get off free from various crimes against Blacks, the legal system will still be [expletive] up, and Blacks will still be oppressed.

If through playing by the rules, Blacks can't beat racism because of the White establishment, they must break the rules. They must establish their own rules, and do whatever they have to to make sure they win this time.

Student says King verdict symptom of larger problems

This is an open letter to you because I am a student active in the UMass Community and today my heart is heavy and I need as many ears as will listen.

Today is April 30, 1992, and I can't believe the events that have taken place over the past 24 hours.

The cops from the Los Angeles Police Dept. were acquitted of the charges of excessive force in the Rodney King beating. In retaliation, and frustration, a few individuals in South Central L.A. have taken to rioting and looting.

Ladie Sundiata

I thought I said today was April 30, 1992!

It's been nearly 35 years since the height of the Civil Rights era and things are still the same.

When will justice be served to all persons, regardless of race, religion, gender or sexual preference?

I'm tired of the corrupt political system. I'm tired of the corrupt judicial system. I'm tired of Americans of European descent telling me we have it better today. I'm tired of trying to fit the mold that has been laid before me according to their models for success.

I'm tired of the media exploiting my people, and then ignorant European-Americans get on the Oprah Winfrey Show and ask for a "White history month."

I'm tired of defending my race especially when there's no need to defend because we are truly the victims.

I'm tired of being studied by academic scholars and experts, trying to figure out why we are not making it when compared to our Euro-American counterparts.

Well, guess what, I'm a senior African American woman who intends on completing my studies here at the University. To all my brothers and sisters I leave behind, continue to persevere — you'll get there.

And to the Euro-American faculty and staff, pull your heads out of your briefcases and give us the help and support we need.

Stop insisting that we're failures, we are not.

To the Afro-American department, your role here is not a mere 9-5 job.

We need you, your presence and support. And by the way, give the students back the New Africa House so we can make some real changes — and if you want an academic building, go back to Herter.

And to CCEBMS, your program is lacking in some areas as is every department on this campus, but continue striving for excellence and one day your efforts shall surely shine through.

And finally to my brothers and sisters. Mark April 29th in your heads and never forget it.

We have heard and read about civil rights but we never lived through civil rights.

Today that has just changed. We are back where we started.

It is up to us to unite and take a solid stand. None of this wishy-washy stuff and a week later we're back to bickering amongst ourselves.

Brothers have had their bouts with Umass police and the Rodney King trial has just given police everywhere permission to go buck-wild on any and every person of color. And honestly I'm afraid, not of them, but of the work that has yet to be done.

I'm devastated this morning of April 30, 1992. I feel sick because with the veto of the civil rights bill and now this, we're headed down the wrong road.

It's time to make a change, it's time to come together. "We shall overcome."

It'll be "by any means necessary."

Ladie Sundiata is a UMass Student.

Lazana also said, "this struggle is not something you can be in just for today. It's a long struggle. It's been long and it will be long. If you're not in it for the long haul, don't be in it at all."

Ricardo Townes, associate Dean of Students, shared some information that he recently received regarding the incident.

"Jessie Jackson and a group of Black leaders met with President Bush at 8:30 this morning," Townes said. "They are trying to pressure the Bush administration via the Attorney General to immediately file Civil Rights charges."

Townes also added that "despite what we may think about most politicians, they do respond to letters and phone calls. We need to pressure the Bush Administration to immediately file civil rights charges against the officers."

There will be a second rally today at noon on the steps of the Student Union Building. Speakers will include students and faculty members John Bracey and David DuBois of the Afro-American Studies Department.

Frenkel, the coordinator of the Educator/Advocate program.

"Women feel it's their faults and it's not," Frenkel said. "It's important for women to see they're not alone."

Senior education major Jill Baroni emphasized this message in the dialogue spoken between herself and junior history and sociology major Schick.

"I shouldn't have kissed him," said Schick.

"He should have asked if you wanted more," said Baroni.

"It was my fault. I should have pushed him away," said Schick.

"It was his fault — he made a conscious decision to hurt you. "He made a decision to force you," said Baroni.

"Why did this happen to me?" asked Schick.

"He made a decision to force you," repeated Baroni.

Baroni also participated in a poetry reading.

"There is no difference between being raped and being run over by a truck, except that afterward men ask if you enjoyed it," said Baroni.

"There is no difference between being raped and going head- first through a windshield except that afterwards you are afraid not of cars, but of half the human race," she said.

"Ninety percent of all rapes are premeditated," said Schick.

Sophomore communications major Emily Stanford said "the message is clear" about "pornography selling lies about women's sexuality."

"Any female body is available for comment, to be grabbed, to be undressed, to be beaten, mutilated, raped or murdered for the exotic pleasure of men," said Stanford.

Sophomore political science major Martha Kempner said one in three women will be raped in their lifetime.

"Women who report date rape suffer triple victimization. Not only is she attacked and then not believed, but she carries the added burden of losing faith in her own judgement and trust in other people," said Kempner. "The main motivation for rape is aggression, anger and hostility, not sex."

Senior English major Deidre Flanagan said she feels her voice is "largely silent," but that her blood "shudders."

"It boils, reading about murderers who laugh at their luck, while the families of their victims weep a lifetime at theirs," Flanagan. "Translating the possibility into my own life fills me with a heart-wrenching fear, as does living in a society that will probably never lose its devotion to violence."

"Just because genitals are used in a rape does not make it sexual. If I hit you over the head with a frying pan would you call it cooking," asked Flanagan.

Singing Woody Harrelson to perform at Smith

By LISA J. CURTIS
Collegian Staff

His lead performance in White Men Can't Jump is in the movie theatres, his television show Cheers is on television and his band, Manly Moondog and the Three Kool Kats is going to open for Salt 'n' Peppa at Smith College tonight.

Woody Harrelson, Ted Danson's sidekick in the sitcom Cheers, explains with a healthy dose of humor the part of his r&b/rockabilly/folk 10-member band's name that alludes to him. "Well, I consider myself a bit of a dog," he said. "And we needed to make it macho."

Harrelson plays gigs with his eight-month old band whenever he has time.

"I've been into music for a long time," he said. "I loved playing with my friends on guitar and piano, but when the band's playing I leave [which instrument to play] up to the professionals."

Harrelson isn't cutting any record deals now because, "I don't want to go through a record deal. You have to give away half of what you make. I'm in a position now where I can afford to make it myself and find someone to handle distribution."

His band, which has played 45 gigs together, recorded an album a month and a half ago which is made available at his shows.

"I write all the lyrics and collaborate on the music with Alfonse [Kettner]," says Harrelson. Guitarist and musical director Alfonse Kettner assists Harrelson with the music's composition. The band has its own horn section, composed of arranger Les Lovitt on trumpet, Tim Misica on tenor sax and Gerald Pinto also on sax.

The solid body of original material often focuses on Harrelson's socially conscientious lyrics.

He wrote his first song at age 11, titled "Better World." "I had the same themes even then," says Harrelson.

Manly Moondog and the Three Kool Kats' television debut was Apr. 14 when they played as part of the Amnesty International benefit, "Free to Laugh."

Harrelson stresses that this is not just another case of a star indulging his rock star fantasies. "I never considered putting a band together because of the age-old stigma of 'another TV star trying to sing', so I didn't want to be a part of that," he said.

"I thought it was going to be harder than it has been. I thought about Don Johnson and Bruce Willis, and I thought is that going to carry over to me?"

When he decided to start up his own musical act, Harrelson wrote the witty "TV Stars Blues," which deals directly with the stigma of a TV star ready for the music world, but wary of skeptical reactions to the new avenue in his career.

"It may turn into a primary interest of mine, but it's definitely a primary passion," says Harrelson of his music. "I'm a hack, but it's music to my ears."

Harrelson's first break came when Neil Simon recommended hiring him for a Broadway production of "Biloxi Blues," from which his acting career took off.

Forster's 'Angels' leaves viewer wanting more

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

In a purely cinematic sense, novelist E.M. Forster is one lucky guy. Five of his six novels have been made into motion pictures and with only The Longest Journey left to be filmed, Forster is a proven, successful franchise.

With Howard's End receiving widespread critical acclaim, it would be easy for this other Forster creation, Where Angels Fear To Tread, to be lost in the shuffle. While the former is being produced and directed by the Merchant-Ivory team who did A Room With A View and Maurice, Angels is an independent production. It would be a shame to miss the superb subtleties and comedic warmth of this wonderful, layered film.

Where Angels Fear To Tread stars Helena Bonham-Carter (who has appeared in four out of the five adaptations) in a brilliant tale of love, society and an obnoxiously societal English family.

When her husband dies, a carefree Edwardian woman (Helen Mirren) finds she is still shackled to the family she abhors. During a trip to Italy with her friend (Bonham-Carter), she falls in love with a 21-year-old Italian man (Giovanni Guidelli) and marries him, much to the consternation of her extended family.

However, when Mirren dies during childbirth, everyone wants the baby; some for love, others for "the good of the child." The contenders are the baby's father, Bonham-Carter and the in-laws: a brother and sister team (played by Rupert Graves and Judy Davis).

What ensues is typical Forster — that is — typical inventiveness and probing into the motives and agendas of the characters, keeping a sharp eye on the strains of society versus love. The result is a mantle full of wondrous images — from a father and his infant son to Bonham-Carter waiting in a train depot.

Director Charles Sturridge (A Handful of Dust) lets the witty script and excellent actors do much of the work, wisely choosing to avoid the luscious Italian scenery everyone talks about but hardly ever sees because they're too busy with appearances.

Where Angels Fear To Tread reaches new heights in ensemble acting. Helena Bonham-Carter (Hamlet) is simply radiant as Caroline, hiding her love within her contempt.

Rupert Graves has done a marvelous transformation from his latest foray into Forster. In Maurice he played a cockney English groundskeeper in love with the title character. Here, he plays Phillip, a twittish man who states: "Some people were born to do nothing." It is clear Phillip is one of those people. He strides through the film with absolutely no clue and Graves is positively charming.

Judy Davis (Naked Lunch) is hilariously nasty as Grave's catty sister Harriet. You'll love to hate her. Helen Mirren and Giovanni Guidelli make a memorable couple, combining passion with wit. Each perform their pivotal roles perfectly.

The film is so engaging and engrossing it's easy to fall into it. Perhaps the one flaw is that it leaves the viewer wanting more. Angels tells the story so well, plays the characters so vibrantly that no ending would be completely satisfying.

Where Angels Fear To Tread is a film filled with many small pleasures and is a genuine small wonder.

Harrelson cites Elvis Presley as one of his biggest musical influences. "I really got into him after he died. A posthumous infatuation you might say," he joked. The night he says the music bug really bit him, he was asked to come on stage to sing "Jailhouse Rock."

His other musical influences include Paul Simon — "I'm a huge Paul Simon fan" — Rickie Lee Jones, Cat Stevens, Van Morrison and Bob Marley.

As for his future plans, Harrelson says he hasn't chosen which movie he will be working on this summer.

Manly Moondog and the Three Kool Kats will perform in J.M. Greene Hall tonight at Smith College. Doors open at 7:45.

White Sands — A boring excuse for a thriller that, when not busy being utterly convoluted, provides some of the blandest performances of the year. Willem Dafoe (Platoon) plays a sheriff who stumbles on a murder and $500,000. Dafoe takes on the identity of the murdered man to solve the case. What follows is an ever-twisting game of 'who's side are you on.' Mary Elizabeth Masttranonio (Robin Hood) and Mickey Rourke (Wild Orchid) co-star in this thrilless bore directed by Roger Donaldson (No Way Out).

White Sands looks very nice, combining the flashiness of a music video and a car commercial. This is just a pitiful attempt to make us forget how stupid the movie is. To give you a clue of how bad White Sands is, while I sat knowing exactly what was going to happen (and not giving a care), I reached over and started reading the paperback I brought along.

The Samples
Iron Horse Music Hall
April 28

I could just imagine what the scene was like outside of the Iron Horse Music Hall on Tuesday night. Someone was walking down the street, and came upon the generally mellow, enjoy-your-drink-while-listening-to-the-music establishment. He happened to peer inside, and caught a glimpse of the dancing, moshing hordes that filled the Horse that evening, a sight rarely seen in such a sit-down type of place. The passer-by probably wondered to himself, "What in the world is going on in there?"

The answer is that Colorado's folk-ska pioneers, The Samples, were performing their first-ever Iron Horse show as the headlining act, and they were in the process of wowing a packed house with a very, very tight set. Possibly the first band to ever bring the marriage of quiet acoustic strumming with two-tone beats to the masses, they proved that they are much more than a mellow Police rip-off band, and that they should deserve the full attention of music critics in the days to come.

It was quickly obvious that people came to this show to dance, and they were not to be let down, as the band immediately kicked into their 1990 hit, "Feel Us Shaking". From there, they dove into two sets of favorites, sprinkled liberally with material from their just-released new album. Although the majority of listeners (myself included) were unfamiliar with the new material, it seemed to garner a favorable reaction from the crowd, and has taken a spot on my must-buy list of new albums, although my current financial situation in Whitmore may tell me otherwise.

I was most impressed by the highly-skilled musicianship that each of the four band members displayed. Sean Kelly's guitar work is certainly adequate, but it's his tremendous voice that makes him so worthy of noting. Al Laughlin is a solid keyboardist, and established himself as a crowd favorite by the very cool stage-dive that he executed near the end of the set.

The real story, however, is the tremendous rhythm section of Andy Sheldon and Jeep MacNichol. Sheldon laid down some tremendously difficult basslines, and provided the band with the ska backbeats that have become their signature. MacNichol is a rare breed of drummer, cut from the same mold that gave us Stewart Copeland. His great quickness and consistency probably impressed me more than any one musician that I've seen live since the last time that Bob Mould brought his guitar wizardry to town.

It was a truly one-of-a-kind scene. The interjection of the metal classic "Iron Man" into "My Town" not only was the most humorous moment of the evening, but it also led to possibly the most unusual scene in Iron Horse history: the Horse's first — ever mosh pit. Wonders will never cease.

DOONESBURY By GARRY TRUDEAU

MRS. DOONESBURY, I'M ACUTELY AWARE OF THE PROBLEMS OF GENDER BIAS IN THE CLASSROOM TODAY, ALMOST ALL TEACHERS ARE...
BUT YOU WOULDN'T BELIEVE HOW FORCEFULLY BOYS CAN PROJECT THEIR PRESENCE. THEY MAKE THEMSELVES VERY HARD FOR US TO IGNORE.
I UNDERSTAND, BUT IT DON'T BE AT THE EXPENSE OF THE GIRLS' SELF-ESTEEM.
THOSE EARLY, EMPOWERING INFLUENCES ARE SO IMPORTANT. IN MY CASE, I LEARNED FROM MY MOTHER TO BE TOUGH AND INDEPENDENT AND STAND ON MY OWN.
HOW'D SHE TEACH YOU?
WELL, BY... UM... ABANDONING ME. OKAY, BAD EXAMPLE.

PAUL GAUGUIN ASKED, "WHENCE DO WE COME? WHAT ARE WE? WHERE ARE WE GOING?"
WELL, I DON'T KNOW ABOUT ANYONE ELSE, BUT I CAME FROM MY ROOM. I'M A KID WITH BIG PLANS, AND I'M GOING OUTSIDE! SEE YA LATER!
SAY, WHO THE HECK IS PAUL GAUGUIN ANYWAY?

GREAT MOMENTS in the history of White Trash

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Production delays or a health problem may be a part of the picture today. Meet a challenge head- on and you will emerge victorious. Patch up your differences with a relative.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your mate may be asked to pinch-hit for you if you are unavailable. Pay no attention to gossip, and give rise to none. A past indiscretion could come to light. Maintain a dignified silence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take care of essential financial transactions today while other people are cooperative. The emphasis is on safeguarding your business and personal assets.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money could be made and lost overnight now. It would be an error to abandon conservative business practices in favor of speculative ventures. Take things one step at a time in romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You feel more confident today and are able to assure that you are on the right track. Reduce your heavy-duty workload by learning to delegate routine responsibilities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A reckless or careless approach could bring about a monetary loss or damage to valuable holdings. Avoid discussing controversial subjects with potential financial backers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An enterprising spirit will serve you in good stead when you tackle creative pursuits. Gently guide your loved ones in the direction you hope they will take. Reminisce about the past.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day to wheel and deal with big business types. Make certain you know with whom you are dealing. Sign legal papers, run important errands and make key business calls.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Go off by yourself when you have strictly private matters to attend to. Follow your nobler impulses and assist a worthy cause or charity drive. Success is linked to staying flexible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A communication from a friend raises your hope. Answer your mail promptly and get in touch with people who can boost your personal fortunes. Support the efforts of a good friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A business overhead or inventory may be inflated. Ask probing questions before authorizing new expenditures. Strike a healthy balance between work and play.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make the most of someone's friendly attitude while it lasts. An unexpected visit or surprising news is featured this afternoon. A good friend's advice will serve you well tonight.

Men's track defeats Lowell

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

What a difference a week makes.

After losing big to Connecticut last week at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the University of Massachusetts men's track squad bounced back to defeat UMass-Lowell resoundingly, 125-35.

UMass increased its record to 5-2 in the outdoor season with Sunday's victory.

Leading the way for the Minutemen once again was Kevin Walters, who captured first place in the 100 and 200-meter events with scores of 11.1 and 22.1, respectively.

Teammate Lionel Benjamin finished right behind Walters, scoring an 11.2 and a 22.1.

"They're a great one-two punch," said UMass middle distance runner Jim Avery, who was fourth in the 400 hurdles (58.2). "But there were plenty of other guys who had great meets as well."

Indeed there were, with Tom Galligani (42'11.25") and Kris Dimatteo (42'4.25") taking first and second place in the triple jump as UMass swept the event. Tom Hooper was impressive in the 400 as he won with a time of 51.3.

In the javelin, UMass claimed the first three spots with Scott Marchant (163'9"), Alan Movessian (156'0") and Jeff Peterson (154'1"). Lowell's Brian Phil was a distant fourth.

Peterson claimed his second ribbon later in the day with a discus throw of 126'4". UMass swept this event as well.

Other notables for UMass include first place finishers Matt Simon in the 1500 (3:55.5), Jeff White in the 110 high hurdles (15.3), Steve Brown in the 800 (1:53.6) and Paul Doyle in the 400 hurdles (57.0). Doyle was also third in the 110 hurdles.

As a team, UMass captured first in the 4x400 (43.4) and, overall, achieved 15 firsts and swept four events.

"Everything really clicked for us on Sunday," Avery said. "Hopefully we'll be able to continue this for the season."

Track Notes: This Sunday, the UMass tracksters will travel to Rhode Island for a noon meet at the Brown Invitational.

SPORTS NOTICE

University of Massachusetts senior Shawn Chalmers shot an even par, 108 (36-37-35), to win the New England Women's Golf Championships last weekend at Orchards Golf Course.

Chalmers, who played as an individual because UMass doesn't sponsor a team, made four birdies and four bogeys to record the lowest score in 11 years. She hit 22 of 27 greens in regulation despite the heavy rain which shortened the tournament by nine holes.

Chalmers outdistanced her nearest competitor, Dartmouth's Sarah Devine, by seven strokes.

and UMass' first-round opponent, is the South Florida Lady Bulls. The Lady Bulls sport a record of 34-15, and are 1-7 against Top 20 teams this year. Their only win is a 1-0 win over UConn, and three of the losses have come at the hands of FSU.

Robin Alamillo is USF's answer to UMass' Marean, as her four home runs and 26 RBIs are team best marks. The pitching is led by Jill Klein's 19-5 record with a 0.98 ERA.

One of the keys to beating South Florida is getting on the board early, as UMass often does. The Lady Bulls have outscored opponents by a combined 76-15 in the first and second innings this season.

GAME NOTES - The Minutewomen play USF at noon tomorrow. A win would have them play later in the day at 4 p.m., and a loss would put them in the loser's bracket at 10 a.m. Sunday.

Gorillas seek first win over Syracuse since '81

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

When it comes to lacrosse, you can't get bigger than Syracuse.

With that in mind, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team is heading to Central New York for Saturday's regular season finale against the No. 1 Orangemen at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, N.Y. Gametime is 2 p.m.

"It's a big game, but we have to approach it like any other game," UMass coach Ted Garber said. "We're trying to stress preparation in practice. We can't just go haywire."

As was the case last year, a big performance against the Orange could go a long way towards landing the 13th-ranked Gorillas (9-2) in the NCAA tournament. While the Gorillas' chances look good already, a win or a strong performance would certainly help their chances or fetch UMass a home game.

"It's all in the committee's hands," Garber said. "I would hope we get a home game if we beat Syracuse. Beating the number one team in the country should do something for you. But it's in the committee's hands. . . it's hard to say."

Last year at the Stadium, the Gorillas battled back all game before falling 13-9, and wound up seeded ninth in the big show. The Orange (9-1) will be vying for the number one seed in the tourney, as well as the first-round bye that it brings.

This year's Syracuse team is typically loaded. The Orange's strong suit has always been goal-scoring, and to date SU has racked up 186 scores.

Matt Riter and Tom Marachek have both scored over 30 goals. Teammate Jamie Archer compliments the two with 25 assists. Five Orangemen have over 20 goals and nine are in double figures. The Orange have taken 571 shots and scored on an impressive 24 of 51 extra-man opportunities.

"[SU] sees how many goals they can put up on the scoreboard in 60 minutes. They just throw the balls out on the field and go at it," Garber said.

So the logical thing to do against Syracuse is to play "stall-ball," maintaining possession in order to keep the Orange from scoring, right?

Not neccesarily, according to Garber. While he admits trying to run with SU is potentially dangerous, he also doesn't see the need to change everything the Gorillas have been doing.

"I think our players are smart enough to play a disciplined lacrosse game," he said. "It should be a great game, but we don't want to get into a track meet."

"We don't want to sit and stall—you've got to pick your spots against Syracuse. But if you don't play ball control they can shove it down your throat."

The Orange aren't exactly a joke on defense, either. Syracuse assistant coach John Desko pointed out that while the Orange have given up close to 11 goals per game, many of those scores have come in what would be euphemistically described as "garbage time."

"We like to get our players in," Desko said. "So at the end we give up a few goals. It's just the way we do it."

However, Desko pointed out the Orange held Loyola College (Md.) to five goals and North Carolina to 10.

Garber also had good things to say about Syracuse's defense.

"Their man down is as good as most team's even-up defense," he said. "I don't think they care if they're man down. . . their defensemen are big and cover a lot a ground."

GAME NOTES: WMUA 91.1 will broadcast the game from Syracuse with Mike Fagerson and Joe Donovan describing the action.

The University Of Massachusetts lacrosse team will play their final regular season game Saturday at Syracuse. Game time is 2 p.m.

Minutemen sign Donta Bright, women sign four

Donta Bright of Baltimore's Dunbar High School, one of the most highly regarded basketball players in the nation, has signed a national letter of intent to attend the University of Massachusetts in September.

A McDonald's All-American, Bright is a 6'6", 190-pound forward who was also named first team All-American by Parade Magazine and USA Today. He averaged 20.5 points and 10.8 rebounds for Dunbar's Poets. Coach Pete Pompey's team ended the season with a 29-0 record and the nation's Number One ranking by USA Today.

Bright is the first sophomore ever to receive the Baltimore Sun Player-of-the-Year Award, an award he received twice. The Most Valuable Player at the Nike All-American Camp, he scored 1994 points and grabbed 1209 rebounds in his four years at Dunbar.

The Gatorade Player-of-the-Year in the state of Maryland, Bright is a Street and Smith Top Five Player. He was also recruited by Ohio State, Clemson, Seton Hall and St. John's.

Coached by John Calipari, UMass had a 30-5 record this past year, won the Atlantic 10 regular season and post-season championships and advanced to the "Sweet Sixteen" of the NCAA. The Minutemen lose three starters from last year's team: guards Jim McCoy and Anton Brown and forward Will Herndon.

Women's Hoop signs four

UMass women's basketball coach Joanie O'Brien has announced that four high school seniors have signed a national letter-of-intent to enroll at UMass in September.

Kim Gregory, a 5'8 guard from East Orange, NJ, Octavia Thomas, a 5'8 forward from Newark, NJ, Tricia Hopson, a 5'6 guard from Ocean City, NJ, and Melissa Gurile, a 6'2 center from Pataskala, OH, will be O'Brien's first recruiting class. O'Brien, in her second season at UMass, assumed the coaching responsibilities late last summer.

Gregory attended Clifford Scott High School, which had a 23-4 record this past season and was

Softball at UConn for Classic

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

After a long spring schedule of playing double-headers every other day, sometimes two days in a row, one would think the University of Massachusetts softball team would want to rest up for next weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament.

This is not the case though, as the 22nd-ranked, 26-11 Minutewomen will travel to Storrs, Connecticut, this weekend for the Diamond Classic, an event that will present them with the toughest competition since March's spring break trip to California.

"This is an opportunity for us to really see competition that is typical of the NCAA Tournament," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "And God willing, if we get a berth, this is the kind of competition we'll be up against. This is the way we're going to have to play."

Sortino met with her players yesterday to tell them, "this is our chance to go out in the sun and shine. We're at that point in the season where we are who we are. Our bats have come alive again, and we've really put our defense together over the past few weeks."

"To me, it's a great opportunity for us. We're very fortunate to be in this kind of a field at this time of the year, because it's perfect timing. And we're ready for it."

The UMass bats have indeed come alive as they have scored six or more runs in each of their last four games, and have ten or more hits in four of their last five games. Leading the hit parade, as she has done all season, is Barbara Mareau, whose average almost dipped below .500 last week. Going four-for-six in a double-header against Providence this past Tuesday brought it up to .513, tops in the country.

Catcher Sherri Kuchinskas is batting .362, pitcher/center fielder Holly Aprile is batting .350, and Jen Devlin, Rachel Lawson and Peggy Bush are all above the .300 mark.

The UMass pitching trio of Darlene Claffey (10-3), Aprile (9-3), and Kelly Daut (7-5) has been consistent throughout the season and combines for a 1.41 ERA.

Playing with UMass in the Classic is the host school, old friend UConn. The 19th-ranked, 36-6 Huskies have won 20 games in a row since the Minutwwomen beat them 1-0 in early April. The UConn pitching staff of Kim Mizesko, Pat Conlin and Janna Venice have held the opposition to a scant 10 runs during the streak.

UConn has taken three of four from UMass this season, outscoring the Minutewomen 9-1 in those games.

Usually UConn would provide enough opposition for one weekend, but also playing in the Classic will be the 19th-ranked, 57-7 Florida State Lady Seminoles, winners of 12 in a row. FSU has pitched only two players all season, but it seems to have done the job so far.

Rebecca Aase's record is 26-0 (15 shutouts) with a 0.81 earned run average. Add this season's record to the eight wins in a row she finished with last season, and the sophomore's 34 wins in a row is an NCAA record.

Toni Gutierrez has pitched an amazing 241 innings this year, and is 31-7 (20 shutouts) with a 0.38 ERA. Earlier this season she was clocked at 67 mph, a bit higher than UMass' fireballer, Aprile.

Rounding out the double-elimination tournament,

Protesters target Whitmore, Collegian

Ten new minority faculty promised

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

An estimated 350 students occupied the Whitmore Administration Building late Friday afternoon forcing the University of Massachusetts administration to agree in hiring 10 new minority faculty members over the next three years.

Jubilantly, after a nine-hour sit-in, students walked out of the main entrance of Whitmore hand in hand, confident they had succeeded in getting Chancellor Richard O'Brien to meet their demands.

The group, which had come from a rally at the Student Union, were voicing anger over the Rodney King beating verdict and what protesters called "a growing trend towards racism on campus and around the country."

From the Student Union, marchers proceeded to the offices of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, where they demanded reform within the newspaper and better minority representation. A window was broken in the Collegian office's graphics department as several hundred protesters filled the entire offices of the newspaper.

The final stop for the students was the Whitmore administration building, where Vice-Chancellor Jo-Anne Vanin addressed the crowd at an entrance while standing on a chair.

"As a person of color and as a woman, I feel the same anger and emotions that you are feeling," Vanin said.

Demanding to see O'Brien, the group walked past Vanin and entered the building hoping have their demands met.

All doors to Whitmore were closed at 5 p.m. and security guards prevented anyone from getting in. Students centralized themselves on the third floor offices of Provost Glen Gordon.

Secretaries and staff members watched in amazement as students began using office phones, fax machines and photocopiers to tell the students outside and the media what was taking place.

"We're staying here until O'Brien meets our demands to hire ten new minority faculty members," said Rudy Krigger, who began negotiating with Vanin and other administrators to have O'Brien address their demands.

Because the outside doors were secured, protesters sent notes to the outside asking for supplies in case they remained in the building overnight.

As protest leaders negotiated with O'Brien, students wandered around through the otherwise empty Whitmore building admiring furniture and office luxuries. One student sat at Glen Gordon's desk and admired his hand-carved pipe, and three students who chose not to identify themselves played a card game on his desk.

"UMass is very apathetic about the levels of racism here on campus," said Allison Ritter, "We just want the chancellor to come here and talk with us."

After several hours of negotiations, O'Brien agreed to meet with students and was surprised to find they had one demand —the immediate hiring of 10 new minority faculty members.

"We only have one demand," said Loyda Guzman, a senior political science major. "We want 10 new minority faculty members hired, five women and five men."

O'Brien claimed he had no real hiring powers when it came to faculty, but students would not budge on their demands.

Following their meeting with O'Brien, students prepared to stay as long as possible to get their demands met. Barricades were set up in some of the third floor hallways in case of police action against the students.

Avanti Pizza heard of the student sit-in and sent over10 pizzas, "as a sign of solidarity" according to the new owner.

After almost 10 hours of negotiations, the chancellor sent a letter to the students promising to meet their demands to hire 10 new minority faculty over the next three years. The letter also stated that no "disciplinary action or other reprisals" will be taken against the students involved.

"We've learned a lesson that should last us the rest of our lives," Rudy Krigger said while addressing the crowd minutes

Rallies force paper to vacate offices

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

With an impending threat of a protest take-over, the University of Massachusetts Daily Collegian evacuated its offices and publishing equipment to an undisclosed location.

Marc Elliott, editor in chief of the Collegian, ordered equipment and supplies moved to a secret location following a Friday afternoon sit-in involving 250 people that caused minor damage.

Local student activists criticize the move as "underhanded" and expressed their anger at another rally yesterday.

"This is the ultimate form of censorship," said Alexander Nguyen, former multicultural page editor. "This shows how truly racist the editors are."

Nguyen spoke to a crowd of 200 supporters who were still showing emotion and solidarity from their sit-in at the Whitmore building on Friday.

"This is the Collegian's response to our victory on Friday, " Nguyen said, "Where have they gone and why are they hiding?"

Elliott defended his decision saying that his first concern is publishing the paper and he felt that would be impossible to do so if the protesters were to take over the offices.

"On Friday they threatened to shut us down and I can't allow that," Elliott said.

Elliott added that he had no assurance that the protesters would not take over the offices and added that he had to take extreme measures to guarantee the continual publication of the Collegian.

"We're not a perfect organization, we make mistakes, but we are not racists," Elliott said.

Madanmohan Rao, editor of the third world affairs page, blasted Elliot and the Collegian.

"This action is just a escalation of the racism at the Collegian," Rao said, "I condemn this blatant racist behavior."

Rao also added that he and other editors of color were not informed of the moving which he says proves his position of racism at the Collegian.

"I was not told of the move," Rao said. "Where is the equipment?"

Cheers actor booed off Smith stage

By LISA J. CURTIS
Collegian Staff

After Woody Harrelon, who plays Woody Boyd on the sitcom Cheers, discussed the topic of the riots in Los Angeles, he was told by a member of the audience his comments were perceived as 'racist.' When Harrelson returned to refute the accusation, the crowd at Smith College hissed and booed until he left the stage on Friday night.

The crowd was listening to Harrelson and his band before a show from Salt 'n' Peppa in Greene Hall at Smith College. Harrelson, between numbers, asked the crowd about their opinion of the Rodney King trial and the riots in Los Angeles.

"How do you feel about what's going on in L.A. right now?" he asked the crowd in his first attempt to address the topic. "It's not an issue of race."

Harrelson said later he had been preparing a speech about the riots and had been working to get a satellite hook up with NBC to Greene Hall in order to televise his speech. "The satellite feed didn't work out, but I care enough about the violence where I wanted to say something about it."

Harrelson said he was approached after his set

Sports at UMass aren't equal

Female athletes not getting fair chance to compete

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is in violation of a federal civil rights law mandating equal opportunity for men and women to participate in sports, according to an official at a New York based women's advocacy foundation.

Kathryn Reith, the communications and advocacy director for the Women's Sports Foundation said she believes recent cuts to certain women's varsity athletic teams, widened the gap between the men's and women's athletic programs, violating Title IX, a statute which calls for equal participation and funding of sports between men and women.

"There is clearly a violation [of Title IX] ," Reith said.

Reith sees a violation of Title IX existing with the opportunities for women to play on a varsity team and with UMass accepting outside funds which support the men's soccer team.

"As a result of cuts, the percentage of athletes who are female have decreased from about 41 percent to 30 percent . Essentially, that's where the violation of Title IX comes in," Reith said.

What the statute is intended to do is maintain balance — a 50-50 split between male and female sports, not necessarily team-wise, but in the number of men and women who participate in collegiate athletics.

However, currently at UMass three women's varsity s teams have been cut (tennis, lacrosse and volleyball) since 1989 compared to one men's team (tennis), leaving 13 male teams (not including hockey, which is scheduled to become a part of the University in upcoming years) and 10 for women.

Reith said UMass is violating the law by not creating equal opportunities between men and women.

"By cutting three women's and one men's team, the opportunities for a woman to participate in athletics have not only not been increasing to approach repre-

Elliott said he didn't tell those editors that participated in the Friday afternoon take-over because he wanted to prevent another possible take-over.

"As Editor in Chief, it's my job to assure that the paper gets published," Elliott said, "and after Friday I had to take steps to make sure we had a paper on Monday."

Some protesters vowed to boycott any business that advertise in the Collegian, some have even suggested starting their own paper.

Elliott hopes to meet with organizers and work out an agreement that is acceptable to everyone.

"I want to talk and the board of editors want to talk, " Elliot said, "We are willing to make changes."

after the siege ended. "We can't let it stop here, this is only the beginning," he said.

Following the occupation Chancellor O'Brien praised the students for their courage and selflessness.

"In promising what I did I'm taking a bit of a risk," O'Brien said, "but considering we had a very inflammatory situation we had to make allowances for compromise."

Student leaders and activists are claiming Friday's events "a major victory" and said they are planning further actions on campus.

UMass may be violating Title IX legislation

sentation of the student body, they have been decreasing rapidly," Reith said.

Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff, who said the teams were cut due to lack of funds, said he feels the University is conforming with Title IX.

"The institution has a much more measurable commitment to Title IX that any other institution I know," said Bischoff. "There are a lot of mitigating circumstances. I prefer to look at the number of teams we sponsor."

However, Reith feels "there's no way you can justify the cuts, it's crazy. How can you justify cutting three women's teams and one men's team since 1989?

Former UMass women's tennis coach Edwin Gentzler, who said he feels there are some "serious problems" regarding Title IX agrees, "when you already have a disproportionate situation [with 70 percent male participation compared to 30 percent female participation] and you cut equal numbers of slots, then you create an even further imbalance which discriminates even more against women."

Apparently there is much confusion over the interpretation of the law — and with good reason.

According to the Women's Sports Foundation's new guide 'Playing Fair', the Office for Civil Rights compares the number of male and female participants in the athletic program with the number of full-time male and female undergraduate students. To determine compliance with Title IX in the area of competitive opportunities, the OCR checks the resulting ratios. If they are close, the school is probably in compliance.

According to the office of Institutional Research and Planning, enrollment for men equals approximately 50 percent of the undergraduate student body, and the percentage of women is roughly the same.

The number of different undergraduate women participating in varsity sports is approximately 30 percent of the total participation, compared to approximately 70 percent of the men, according to Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Paul Page.

In order to determine whether an institution is violating Tilte IX, OCR investigators are instructed to find out the following information:

- When did each men's and women's team begin intercollegiate or interscholastic competition? How did the sports get started, i.e., was there a club team first? intramurals?
- Has the athletic department dropped any men's or women's sports? If so, why were they dropped?
- How many participants were on each team dropped and how did that affect the percentage of athletes who are male or female?
- If sports have been added, what was the effect on and the percentage of gain to each program?
- If there have been unsuccessful attempts to add new teams, why were the attempts unsuccessful?
- What plans are there for adding new sports?
- Is there interest in any sport not currently being offered?

The guide says that facts that help determine if there is compliance are if the school turned requests from the underrepresented sex for competition in a specific sport.

It goes on on to say if the male to female ratio of the student body is not in proportion to the athletic ratio, then there may not be compliance with Title IX. It then recommends filing a Title IX complaint or lawsuit.

The guide also notes that cutting teams does not mean equally cutting opportunities.

- According to the Title IX Athletics Investigators Manual issued by the Dept. of Education, office of Civil Rights, if an institution offers a team for members of one sex, it must offer a team for members of the other sex when "opportunities for members of the excluded sex have historically been limited, and there is sufficient interest and ability to sustain a viable team and a reasonable expectation of intercollegiate [or interscholastic] competition.

The manual also said "the tendency is for institutions to eliminate a sport previously offered to women who are already underrrepresented in the institutions' athletics programs. The result has been that women are now more disadvantaged by the elimination of a women's team despite sufficient interest and ability to sustain a viable team. "

It says that if the participation rates of men and women are not proportionate to their enrollment rates so that women are underrepresented in the athletics program, and the institution is not meeting expressed interests and abilities of female students, the institution is not equally effectively accommodating the athletics interests and abilities of male and female students.

Currently former women's tennis team members are angry about the cut of their team and are fighting to get reinstated.

The real reason we're fighting is to get reinstated," said the former captain of the team, Pam Levine.

"No one questions decisions. It's about time someone did. No one knows what's going on," said Levine.

A senior on the team for four years, Gale Girasella remembers when the team was informed they were being cut.

"It was all shady. We were never given a precise reason. They were vague and they kept putting off meetings with us," said Girasella.

Girasella said the department said they weren't sure if the team could get reinstated when the team suggested raising the money themselves.

"So it's not just economic — it's just an excuse," said Girasella, adding, It was really unfair. It wasn't justified."

"It was the beginning of finals. They didn't want to hear protests and they knew we're leaving in a year," said former senior player Carrie Kiminsky.

The former tennis players decided to try and work with the University to get reinstated instead of filing a lawsuit.

But Kiminsky decided "it's all talk and no action.

"Do they really care about us?" asked Levine.

It also states that "where booster clubs provide benefits or services that assist only teams of one sex the institution shall ensure that teams of the other sex receive equivalent benefits and services.

It continues, "if booster clubs provide benefits or services to athletes of one sex are greater than wheat the institution is capable of providing to athletes of the other sex, then the institution shall take action to ensure that benefits and services are equivalent for both sex."

"The source of funds is irrelevant," said Reith, referring to the money receive by The World Cup Soccer Camp for the men's soccer team.

The athletic department has three choices of action regarding the money accepted for the men's soccer team according to Reith.

Reith said they could not accept the money, redistribute existing funds or raise more money for women's sports.

"He's [the athletic director] got to let the alumni know that he has to raise additional money fro women's sports or he can't accept the soccer donation The alumnus should know that he needs their help for creating equal opportunities for women athletes," said Reith.

"I would like to look and see if there are any other way s of creating equity - it's the right thing to do."

Reith added "There are ways. Schools who have been forced to create gender equity as a result of complaints or lawsuits have found ways to do it."

Reith also said the women's tennis team has a "very good case for reinstatement and to receive damages.

In 1982, a judge ordered a Washington University to provide equal "participation opportunity," ruling that the number of scholarships and slots for players must be proportional to al to the ratio of women and men in the undergraduate student body.

The Collegian has learned that the Office for Civil Rights for the department of Education is considering issuing a letter warning UMass of such cuts.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Verdict shows true U.S.

When the news broke last year of the brutal beating of the unarmed Black motorist, Rodney King, and the world saw the famous videotape, it was a shocking and embarrassing day for America. It was not nearly as shocking and embarrassing, however, as was Wednesday's acquittal of the four police officers charged with the beating.

Last year, our country sent a message to the world that the racism here must not be underestimated. On Wednesday of last week, a louder message was spread across the world: that our judicial system accepts racism with open arms.

We regret the destruction and loss of life which followed the verdict, but the anger and outrage that sparked this unrest is not difficult to understand.

On Friday night, Rodney King made a live, televised address calling for peace on the streets of L.A. His moving plea, along with the troops George Bush had sent into the area, has ended the majority of the unrest. The Rodney King beating, the not-guilty verdict and the rioting that took place in its aftermath will never go away.

We all saw the tape. Even if King was resisting arrest, there was no way he deserved the beating we saw him receive. By the time the camera started rolling, and we saw Rodney King being repeatedly kicked and hit with batons, he was not resisting arrest. He was hurt.

Wednesday's not guilty verdict is an outrage and a disgrace. We deeply regret this decision.

UMass deplores verdict

We students and faculty of the University of Massachusetts condemn the acquittal of the police officers in the case of the brutalizing of Rodney King. The blatant disregard for law, not to mention human dignity, by those in power can no longer be tolerated.

As usual, the government is reacting to symptoms, not problems. Society and the government cannot continue to ignore the problems of a racist, classist system; we can no longer pretend that these problems do not exist.

If the Law cannot respect their own legal system then how can we?

When asked during a press conference on Thursday (April 30) if he disagreed with the verdict, George Bush ignored the question. He pretends to be interested in civil and human rights. Why now, when he rarely has before?

The system DOES NOT WORK. Only in an election year can we expect any concern from our leaders for our needs, dignity, respect and rights.

We are outraged. We invite people of all races and classes to join in public displays of non-violent protest.

Editor's note: This is a letter that was written by a Collegian staff member. He started passing it around at Friday's rally and it has been signed by an estimated 900 people. The staff member plans to send copies of the letter to the Boston Globe, Chicago Tribune, Los Angeles Times, New York Times, Washington Post and 60 Minutes.

Collegian moves

The Collegian has moved its offices and is currently in hiding, but it is still being published - that is the most important thing at this point. The fairness of the press is irrelevant if it is not free.

We'll be back in our regular offices as soon as we can. We want to move back, very much so. But in the meantime, we want to keep producing a daily newspaper.

Friday, we were given the indication that we might encounter some resistance producing Monday's edition. More than 200 demonstrators occupied the Collegian's offices, made a number of demands, and left. During the occupation, a window was smashed, a stereo was broken, and some Collegian staff members' personal effects were destroyed. The staff was, obviously, shaken, scared and confused. The editor in chief had no desire to put the Collegian staff through anything like that again.

Saturday morning, we got wind that the protesters were coming back, in large numbers, to "shut 'em down," as they were chanting Friday afternoon.

When people chant "shut 'em down" while banging on the walls of the Collegian offices, it is safe to assume there is some danger that they might be back to prevent the Collegian from publishing its next issue.

So, we moved.

The protesting editors

"Why were the editors of color not informed of the move? And have they been fired?"

First of all; no, they haven't been fired. On the contrary, if we can get the Third World Affairs and Black Affairs editors to give us a hard copy of what they have planned for Tuesday and Wednesday, we'll still run those pages.

Secondly; no, the editors of color were not excluded from the decision to move the Collegian. Just the editors that participated in Friday's action against the Collegian. When you're trying to hide the Collegian from a group of demonstrators, it doesn't make sense to tell the people holding the bullhorns, yelling about how awful the Collegian is, where you put it.

Also, there have been rumors flying about campus that there was some sort of top-secret meeting of Board of Editors held somewhere in the Amherst area yesterday. Please, given the circumstances, we've been so busy trying to deal with our big move and at the same time put together today's paper, all we really talked about was where to put what and how to word this policy editorial.

Willing to make changes

Sure, we're willing to make some changes. But, like we said before, we'd like to continue giving the students of the University of Massachusetts the daily newspaper they deserve. We, the Board of Editors, want to meet with 10 representatives of the demonstrators to talk about their demands - whatever they may be (no one's given us any final list yet).

But, we won't be bullied. Some of the demands we've heard from the protesters are actually stepping away from the goals they supposedly wish to achieve. We're not a perfect organization. We make mistakes. We make lots of mistakes. We're students, and we're still learning.

But we still believe we know a little more about running a daily newspaper than these protesters. It's a lot of work. So much, in fact, that many of us have let our grades suffer in favor of our dedication to informing the public to the best of our judgment. After all, we are a volunteer organization and we're dependent on those who are willing to put in the time.

Unsigned editorials represent the views and opinions of a majority of the Board of Editors.

Notice:

The* Collegian *is still student accessible! We are still accepting submissions. Slip any editorials and news articles you want to contribute under the door of our former offices and we'll get them eventually.

Racist Collegian?

Racism pervades all of the United States society. We're sure the Collegian has elements within it that are racist. But what organization is totally free from racism? If you think your organization, or even your person, is totally free from all forms of prejudice, you're kidding yourself. We've been grappling with the race issue at the Collegian for years, but apparently not as successfully as we had hoped.

In fact, we've taken steps this semester to deal with racism and discrimination at the Collegian. One of the steps we've taken to this end was the women's issues page conversion, which was done with the consent of the women's issues editor — an action the demonstrators, oddly enough, have taken to be a step towards oppressing women. Before, women basically were told they would get news that concerned them once every two weeks. With the change we've made, the women's issues desk is required to write two to three news articles and an editorial for the editorial page once a week. It's important to note here that the editor is not limited to these numbers and is free to do more (but not less). Now women get news pertaining to them all week, right there with the rest of the news - no less important. We realized this was a radical change on our parts. That's why we ran a policy editorial earlier this semester explaining the situation and asking people who had concerns about it to come to the Collegian and voice them to our editor in chief. Not a single person said a single word about it - until now.

Now, we fail to see what the protesters hope to achieve by keeping us from printing. Indeed, during this past weekend, we've seen so many different lists of demands that we don't have any idea what exactly the protesters want.

Harrelson

by an unidentified young woman who informed him that his "remarks were construed as being racist by the crowd." Harrelson then came back on the stage.

"It was a race issue at first. We are being oppressed by the present regime. It shouldn't be 'white against black.' The people need to work together. Black people beating the shit out of white motorists — Is that what should be done?" The crowd then increased the volume of booing.

Obviously disturbed , Harrelson said later, "I expect to be given a chance to redeem myself. I was already hung before I started. They don't want to listen."

The trial was definitely racist. We have to lift this above an issue of race, " he said. Harrelson refered to Martin Luther King, Jr. and said Americans have to lose their focus on race and deal with each other based on their "content of character."

We need to deal with the system and join together," Harrelson said. He is working on a song called, " I Have A Dream" s is inspired by the violence in L.A.

After his second appearance on stage, Harrelson said, "I was afraid for my life."

"I worked a long time to eliminate racism from my life. Don't call me racist. I applaud the crowd their reactivity and passion, but when they stop listening it's wrong.

"We should focus on non-violence and joining together. I've been writing in my journal, in my speech and my song from a perspective of someone who wants to unify the country," said Harrelson. He also noted t he has been writing a play in which the theme is the bringing together of the races.

"You can call me an inarticulate idiot, but not a racist," Harrelson repeated.

Harrelson performed with his band Manly Moondog and the Three Kool Kats.

Harrelson said he has met with people that are sceptical of his musical talent because he is a television star. Harrelson said this was why he wrote the song "TV Star Blues." In an interview Thursday, Harrelson said, "I thought it was going to be harder than it has been. I thought about Don Johnson and Bruce Willis, and I thought, 'Is that going to carry over to me?'"

Harrelson, who writes the lyrics in all the band's songs, says on the cassette tape made available at his concerts, "One thing I'm learning to do myself that I forgot for many years, is to love myself. That's the beginning of all change I think. Stop being unkind to people because they have a different race, nationality or gender and learn to love yourselves first."

"It's a shame because we liked it here. We probably won't be coming back," he said.

MY GUM HAS LOST ITS FLAVOR
WHEN THAT HAPPENS, I DON'T SPIT IT OUT. I JUST ADD A NEW PIECE.
AFTER A FEW PACKS, IT'S LIKE CHEWING A BIG SOGGY SOCK! MY JAWS ACHE AND I CAN'T CLOSE MY LIPS, SO I WHEEZE THROUGH MY OPEN MOUTH AND DROOL!
AN ORIFICE IS AN AMUSING THING, ALL RIGHT.

JIM'S JOURNAL
By JIM

"I did it, Jim," Tony said today. "I finally quit the shoe store."
"My brother thinks he fired me, but really I quit," he said.
I asked him what he was going to do now.
He said he didn't know, but that there was a whole world out there.

CAST OF THOUSANDS
By BARRY DEUTSCH

THERE'S BEEN TROUBLE AT THE COLLEGIAN OFFICES LATELY...
RUMOR HAS IT THAT, AT TODAY'S SECRET EDITORIAL BOARD MEETING TO DISCUSS A COUPLE OF EDITORIALS OF COLOR OVER, SUPPOSEDLY NOT INVITED...
THE COLLEGIAN STAFFERS WHO PARTICIPATED IN LAST FRIDAY'S PROTEST/TAKE-OVER AT THE COLLEGIAN...
WILL BE FIRED!
YEAH, I DON'T EXPECT I'LL HAVE A JOB TOMORROW.
WOW!
NATURALLY, IF THIS HAPPENS, I'LL RESIGN FROM THE COLLEGIAN.
WHY, GET IN SOME MARCHS IN CAMPUS LUMBO?
OH SHUT UP!
BUT IN THE MEAN WHILE, I DON'T KNOW WHAT TO DO FOR TODAY'S COMIC STRIP!
SAY, WHY DON'T YOU DRAW SOMETHING FUNNY?
FUNNY, HUH?
IT'S A CHALLENGE!
SO I DREW THIS STRIP QUICKLY, IN BALL-POINT PEN, TO LET YOU KNOW THAT I KNOW WHAT'S GOING ON
ALTHOUGH THE COLLEGIAN STILL HAS PROBLEMS THAT NEED TO BE RESOLVED...
CIVIL RIGHTS WILL, IT'S BEEN FUN.
GOOD NIGHT.

Quote of the Day

"Can't we get along?"

– Rodney King

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will achieve more at work once you stop forcing issues. A change of lifestyle could reduce tension.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Remodeling could be a more practical idea than changing residences. Get several bids. Your personal relationships will become more satisfying when you allow greater give-and-take.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take an occasional break from a tiring task. It is so nice to spend time alone with the one you love. Savor a romantic evening away from ringing telephones.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Early this morning, enjoy some quiet time alone. Reading an inspiring article puts you in an upbeat mood. Join up with family or friends later today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Both mind and body shun into high gear at your command today. Solo projects are favored, as are meetings with business people who can help speed your rise. Pay bills on time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A big breakthrough takes place when you get a brainstorm today. Romance blossoms on the beaten path. Events at a distance sound promising, too. A telephone call brings welcome family news.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Loved ones may not be telling you all the facts. Be diplomatic and you will discover the best way to help your mate. Put your keen intelligence to the best possible use.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A charitable gift or deed will make you feel good inside. You spot a wonderful bargain in an unusual setting. Long trips are best postponed. Keep expenses down while you build savings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You find it easier to reach a meeting of the minds with people in power now. Career or status gains could result. A child will share an important secret.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are ready to clear the air or debate a serious issue today. Back off a little; then negotiate a key agreement. Do not let secret resentment ruin a friendship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A new partnership could ease a cash shortage. You are on the verge of a great discovery; leave no stone unturned. Embrace the great outdoors with open arms.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Travel snags may have you going around in circles or feeling flustered. Everything will turn out just fine. Avoid taking on more responsibilities than you can handle.

UMass football controversy abounds

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

Jim Reid's resignation as head football coach at the University of Massachusetts earlier this year has set off a series of events that is casting a dark cloud over both the program and athletic administration.

Mike Hodges, an assistant under Reid, was named as head coach of the Minutemen on April 22 when Chancellor Richard O'Brien and Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff announced that the ongoing search had been cancelled and Hodges was their man.

The decision angered some members of the search committee including UMass english professor Donald Junkins and set off a wave of alumni reaction.

"The democratic process was absolutely aborted by the very man [Bischoff] that charged the committee," said Junkins a former UMass football player. "Bischoff has not only bypassed university governance procedures, he has violated affirmative action procedures."

The search committee, appointed by Bischoff, held three meetings — the first of which convened on April 1. The committee was made up of the Dean of the School of Education Bailey Jackson (who served as chairman of the committee), Athletic Ticket Office Manager Thorr Bjorn, UMass football team member Steve Dembrowski, Joe Doyle, field hockey coach Pam Hixon, Junkins, Phil Roland and Pat Scavone.

Roland and Scavone are also members of the UMass Alumni Football group which composed a letter calling for, among other things, Bischoff to be either fired or for him to resign.

The Athletic Department has scheduled a press conference this morning to discuss the future of athletics at UMass and sources say it is expected that Bischoff and/or Athletic Director Frank McInerney will resign, although Bischoff said Thursday he would not retire until the Mullins Arena was operating.

The alumni letter was sent to over 400 people, including press, football alumni and present players' parent on April 16, according to the alumni group's president 1978 graduate Mike McEvilly.

Virtually everyone contacted said that Hodges is not the problem and that he deserves the full support of the alumni group and the administration. The sticking points for many lie with the handling of the continued "mismanagement of the program."

"I personally don't think they moved quick enough [in beginning the search]," said alumni group member Joseph Doyle, a 1965 graduate who now lives in Adams. "Most of the successful programs set a plan for down the road. There doesn't seem to be a plan.

"It takes strong leadership in these times of financial trouble and I don't think we've had that," he said.

At the search committee's third (and what became final) meeting on April 16, members voted 6-2 in favor of reopening the search citing a lack of advertising and some committee members belief that more qualified applicants didn't get a chance to apply.

The ad ran for one week in The NCAA News on Feb. 26 with an application deadline of Mar. 11. The Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Office states in its handbook "Professional Search Procedures" that two weeks is the minimum time allowed between placing the ad and establishing the closing date.

"It was advertised one week. . . the committee voted 6-2 that there wasn't a strong enough field," said Scavone, a 1971 graduate who played football. "That one single ad wasn't the way to go.

"Dean Bischoff established the search committee, that's how his empire works," Scavone said. "As soon as he got word [of the desire to reopen the search] he acted like a child, called off the search and named a coach."

Bischoff said he received a letter from Jackson dated April 17 giving him three options to the committee's decision to reopen the search. The letter stated that Bischoff could either accept the proposal, dissolve the present search and the present search committee and begin again or decline to reopen the search.

Jackson's letter went on to say that if Bischoff declined to reopen the search he could ask the committee to continue with the task. If a member can not proceed with the charge than he or she would have the option of resigning from the committee.

"We did not give Jackson the right to do that, we did not give the dean any alternative," Junkins said. "Jackson had no authority to do that and that letter was not cleared by the committee.

"It was pretentious of the committee chairman to give options to the dean," he said.

Numerous attempts to contact Jackson were unsuccessful.

Bischoff has heard the rumblings, including the notion that the athletic department's problems are more a reflection of Bischoff himself than the tough economic times, and dismissed them as "nothing new."

"The most important thing was to have a coach on board before school was out," said Bischoff. "The sports world knows when coaching positions are available."

Bischoff is aware of the alumni group's letter as well.

"It's too bad they're upset but there has been $700,000 cut in the last four years," Bischoff said. "If they don't think it's financial than we have a communication problem.

"All you've got to do is look at the facts," Bischoff said. "They [the alumni group] could have been infinitely more helpful if they had wrote to their legislatures [and other officials] and we would have been much further ahead now."

"Dean Bischoff has in his mind to make this a nice high school program," Scavone said. "The emperor said 'this is it,' but if they reopened the search there were endless possibilities."

The Collegian has learned that some of those coaching "possibilities" included former UMass football standouts Greg Landry (now a coach with the Chicago Bears) and Clarence Brooks, now a defensive line coach at the University of Arizona and a former coach under Dick MacPherson at Syracuse.

The decision to name a coach without consulting the search committee first irked many of the members including Roland, who graduated in 1975.

"I still have not heard of any explanation," Roland said. "I'm insulted. I was set up and used. How it was handled was unprofessional and uncalled for.

"I was teed off that a decision had been made and we weren't called," he said.

Bischoff, who has been at UMass since 1957, said he sent a letter to each member of the committee after the announcement was made thanking them for their time and effort.

Roland and many others see a need for restructuring the current athletic administration to bring it in line with many NCAA schools who use an Athletic Director as the major authority on sports issues rather than the dean of the school of physical education.

"I support a strong autonomous athletic director," said Roland from his Somers, Conn. home. "UMass is an anomaly, a throwback to 20 or 30 years ago. They need a strong, vibrant, business minded athletic director."

And if McInerney does resign today, the opportunity will be upon the school.

Other alumni refer to a lack of future planning on the administration's part for the demise of what has been one of the Yankee Conference's strongest programs.

"Let's face it, times have changed and there's no long-term plans," said Class of 1969 graduate and Northampton High School football coach Frank Trudyn. "Our [the alumni group's] original purpose was to see what we could do to help the administration, but we couldn't get answers to our questions."

McEvilly had been in communication with Chancellor Richard O'Brien, but after the groups' three-page letter was circulated, O'Brien has refused to have further communications, according to McEvily.

"One of our main goals is to raise money for football but we want to know what we are supporting," McEvily said. "They said there will be 'no significant cuts.' What are significant cuts?

"I'm just not sure the athletic administration is well-intentioned," he said.

Frederick Tillis of the Affirmative Action Office said the matter was "brought to my attention," and he would be reviewing the material.

Bischoff said last Thursday that Tillis had reviewed the information and there were "no problems."

Don't Boff at this new game

No, it's not another female columnist on the sports page, just me, but with a new caricature. Sure, leave it to a woman to change her picture, but everyone agrees this is more realistic. Thanks Chad Crossland, my personal artist and smile commissioner. The artist who drew the other caricature was in the process of experimenting with various forms of hallucinogens, so I really can't blame him.

But enough of the chit chat, let's talk sports.

I thought I had tried or at least heard of every sport, but last week, at a park in Amherst, I discovered a new one.

Felice Cohen

A group of about 20 men and women, dressed slightly different from the others, were not there tossing softballs or going down the slide. No, their intentions were a little different.

They had come to "Boff."

Now before you get the wrong idea, allow me to explain.

"Boffing," as it is called, is a spin off of the game Dungeons and Dragons (which should immediately create a picture of the type of people involved.) It is also the nickname for the UMass team, the Pioneer Valley Combat Club (PVCC).

Instantly attracted to the group because of their outfits or "Garb" as they call it, I approached and began asking questions.

I learned that dressing is only part of the game. They also create characters, said Shanti Fader, a sophomore who is a member of The Amazons, the combat club at Mount Holyoke College. They can either be kings, queens, nobles or knights. First they make up a name, a background and what they are; either a fighter, a Bard or a pirate. Once settled into a character, they are ready for the next step: putting the medieval garb together .

They usually make their own costumes or buy them from friends. Dressed in leggings, knee high boots, full length cloaks, large costume jewelry, tunics and leather arm bands, it should be easy to see why they caught my attention.

A major part of the garb are the accessories. There are swords, shields, daggers, axes, bows and arrows. Believe me, these people do not look the type you would want to mess with. Though before I scare you into fearing for your life from these Robin Hood merry men and women wannabees, allow me to explain. The accessories are made out of plastic tubing, insulation foam and colored duck tape. Very safe indeed.

So what do they do once dressed and accounted for? They Boff.

Clad in garb, they go onto a battlefield (any little league outfield will suffice) and boff away. It actually looks like a scene out of a movie.

The most important rule to remember, said Shanti, is "the lightest touch counts. The object is not to wack each other, but to have fun." The face, hands and groin are off limits and you will be eliminated instantly if you hit in those areas.

If you are hit on a limb you cannot use that part of your body. But if you are hit on the top of the head, the back or the torso, you are dead and must shout, 'dead.'

To add a little drama (or humor, whose ever point of view you take), when you are killed you can die as dramatically as you want.

Boffing is gaining popularity and is spreading quickly across New England . There are various tournaments in the area and, depending on the mission, they could be boffing to save a princess or to retrieve a treasure.

One of the terms I learned was "Nubie", which is anyone who is new to Boffing. Eagerly I asked if I could be called a Nubie and was immediately told, "No, you're just a reporter."

So much for their imagination.

Top-ranked Orangemen too much for Gorillas, 25-12

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Top-ranked Syracuse took an early 3-0 lead in the first eight minutes and never looked back en route to a 25-12 lacrosse victory over 13th-ranked University of Massachusetts yesterday before 4,783 at the Carrier Dome.

Sophomore midfielder Charlie Lockwood and senior attackman Tom Marechek led 11-1 Syracuse with four goals and three assists respectively.

Junior attacker Mark Millon, leading scorer for 9-3 UMass with 45 goals and 17 assists, had four goals and one assist in the visitors' final regular season contest. Senior midfielder John Schlipf added three goals and an assist.

Schlipf scored 10:59 into the game to bring UMass within two, 4-2. However, quicker Syracuse reeled off seven of the next eight goals on the way to a 13-5 halftime advantage.

"I thought we had a good opportunity to do well early," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "But we gave them too many easy goals in transition."

Syracuse, which had 11 different scorers, scored on 4 of 4 opportunities and outshot UMass, 48-47.

The Gorillas, however, failed to make the NCAA Tournament for the first time in eight years.

UMass assists rape, sexual assault victims

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

When we got to his room the only place to sit was on the bed. I didn't want him to get the wrong idea but what else could I do?

We talked for a while and then he made his move. I was so startled. He started by kissing. I really liked him, so the kissing was nice.

But then he pushed me down on the bed. I tried to get up and I told him to stop. He was so much bigger and stronger. I got scared and I started to cry.

I froze and he raped me.

This scenario is all too common to the estimated one in three women who will be raped during their lifetimes.

The statistics are grim, according to the Los Angeles Commission on Assaults Against Women.

- An estimated one out of every 12 rape victims is male, according to the National Crime Survey.
- Over 95 percent of the children, whose rapists were convicted, knew their assailant, often a relative or close friend of their family.
- And nearly 65 percent of all rapes occurred in the survivor's or assailant's home, according to the FBI.

Even in the face of these facts, the University is striving to help victims cope with the aftermath of sexual assault.

On campus there is a 24-hour support line for "anyone who is a survivor of rape, battering, sexual harassment and other forms of sexual violence," said Veronica Frenkel, coordinator of educator/advocate program at the Everywoman's Center. "It also provides support for close friends and families in dealing with a survivor of sexual violence. Anyone can call anonymously."

In addition to the support line, the Everywoman's Center offers short-term counseling with legal and medical advice, said Frenkel.

"There are support groups for rape and incest survivors at the beginning of each semester," said Frenkel.

However, counselors do not try to push the victims into prosecuting their assailant, counselors instead support them with whatever decisions they choose.

For those who decide to prosecute, the Victim Witness Unit of the District Attorney's Office provides support to not only the victims of sexual violence, but also to their witnesses, said Shelly Slabinski, an official in the office.

"We help victim and witnesses get through the legal system: We notify them of when their court dates are coming up. We also sit with them in court to provide support," said Slabinski. "We make referrals for alternative housing if they have to leave their home to go to shelters. We make all the arrangements.

"We practically give out a 209A — restraining order — on a daily basis," said Slabinski.

UMass senior Deidre Flanagan was assisted by the Victim Witness Unit when she prosecuted a man for indecent assault. The incident occurred in her residence hall.

He was banned from the campus, sentenced to 100 hours of community work and required to send a letter apologizing to Flanagan, she said. He later refused to write the letter.

She is currently checking into whether he has served his 10 days in jail for breaking one of the orders.

"Sometimes the legal system does work," Flanagan said.

Collegian still in hiding

By LISA FREIMAN
Union-News Staff

Editor's note: Due to the sensitive nature of the story, the Collegian has received the permission of the Union-News to reprint today's story about attempts to shut down the Collegian.

Protestors who say the Massachusetts Daily Collegian is racist tried to shut down the 19,000-circulation campus newspaper at the University of Massachusetts yesterday by removing copies of from distribution boxes.

Collegian Editor in Chief Marc Elliott said last night he has no way of knowing how many copes of yesterday's edition reached students, but about 3,000 copies were held back in the morning and distributed on campus about 5 p.m. yesterday.

"Every one of those made it into the hands of students," said Elliott.

Collegian staffers, who last night were putting the paper together at a secret location off-campus, called the attempts to block the paper's distribution a civil rights violation.

"Yes, there are problems of racism, but silencing us is not the way to correct them," said Tami Monahan, editor for Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual issues at the Collegian.

Heated verbal battles erupted throughout the day, as students gathered at a noon rally and an afternoon news conference to address the issue of racism at the Collegian, but both sides agreed to meet tomorrow to negotiate.

Protestors said they raised the issue because of the verdict in the Rodney King trial.

"We saw this as a historic opportunity because everyone was made aware of racism," said Martin F. Jones, newly-elected Black Affairs Editor of the who joined the protestors. "We saw we could do something about racism here at UMass."

Protest editor selection process

The protestors said they believe the Collegian's structure is racist because the editors of the Black Affairs, Multicultural Affairs and Third World Affairs pages are selected by all the newspaper's staffers rather than just minority staffers. They also said the choice of articles is racist, citing among other things a column advocating the construction of a 200-foot wall along the Mexican border to keep out refugees.

Angry protestors surrounded when he tried to leave a press conference he called after they filed in and began asking questions. Security officers had to step in when protestors moved closer to Elliott.

"Sit! Sit! Sit!" screamed one protester to Elliott.

The action against the Collegian was the second since the King verdict was announced. Last Friday after a rally protesting the verdict protestors marched on the Collegian, the Public Safety Office and the administration building to protest racism on campus.

After an eight-hour occupation of the Whitmore Administration Building by about 150 protestors, administrators agreed to hire 10 faculty members of color in the next three years.

Copies of the yesterday's Collegian were in great demand after the protestors removed newspapers from boxes and replaced them with a mimeographed newsletter slamming what they called the Collegian's alleged racist policies.

Conflict between the groups began Friday, when protestors demostrated at Collegian's offices and said they would return Sunday to talk with editors about racism at the paper.

On Sunday, however, they found the Collegian's operations had been moved to an undisclosed location, without the knowledge of Jones, and other staffers who had participated in the demostration.

Jones said the move represented the breaking of a good faith contract, but Elliott said he made the move because he had been told demostrators wanted to shut down the paper.

Elliott also said he did not want to jeopardize the safety of his 200-member staff since demonstrators had broken a window and a stereo and damaged staffers' papers Friday night, and defended his decision not to tell staffers who had participated in the demostration.

"It doesn't make sense to tell the people with the bullhorns," he said.

UMass professor delves into trauma study

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Traumatic life events shatter a person's fundamental assumptions about the world, according to a University of Massachusetts psychology professor in a newly published book.

Ronnie Janoff-Bulman, author of the recent book, Shattered Assumptions: Towards a New Psychology of Trauma said many people assume the world is benevolent and meaningful. These beliefs provide us with an illusion of safety, security and invulnerability.

"This illusion of protection is suddenly ruptured by a traumatic life event," Janoff-Bulman said. She said the process of recovering from trauma involves rebuilding these assumptions so that the world is once again comfortable to the victim.

Shattered Assumptions deals with the impact and recovery of extreme life events and presents a comprehensive framework for understanding the psychological upheaval and healing experienced by victims. Although the book is meant to appeal to a trade audience and the intelligent public, survivors have said the book was a framework to their experiences.

For the past 15 years, Janoff-Bulman has studied and researched the effects trauma has on survivors of rape, the unexpected death of a loved one, debilitating injuries or illnesses and natural disasters causing loss of life or property through conducting intensive interviews as well as large community surveys.

"Most people say [victimization] could never happen to me," Janoff-Bulman said.

Victims most often cope with trauma by using self-blame or alternately trying to see through the event. In a process called "emotional numbing," the victim's mind forces them to think of the event even when they do not want to.

"People don't ever go back to what they were, but it doesn't mean that they are psychologically worse then before," Janoff-Bulman. "A lot of survivors talk of a new wisdom, which leads them to an appreciation of life and their own inner strengths."

In the future, she would like to see why some victims are able to rebuild their world so easily and others are not. She is also interested in examining the inner world of the survivor.

This fall she said she hopes to teach a writing seminar on victimization. Other classes she teaches during the year include the psychology of humor, the psychology of women and a graduate-level class on adversity and social psychology. In some of her classes, she offers sessions dealing with coping and stress.

Janoff-Bulman first became interested in the subject of trauma in 1974 in graduate school through her work on stress, women and rape victims. She graduated from Smith College in 1973 and received her doctorate from Northwestern University, where she was National Science Foundation Fellow.

Janoff-Bulman has been married for 19 years and has two children, Jessica, 12, and David, 9.

"[Victimization research] really makes you understand what is important in life. For me my greatest is my family, it does put things into perspective," she said.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

The Collegian has moved its offices and is currently in hiding, but it is still being published - that is the most important thing at this point. The fairness of the press is irrelevant if it is not free.

We'll be back in our regular offices as soon as we can. We want to move back, very much so. But in the meantime, we want to keep producing a daily newspaper.

Friday, we were given the indication that we might encounter some resistance producing Monday's edition. More than 200 demonstrators occupied the Collegian's offices, made a number of demands, and left. During the occupation, a window was smashed, a stereo was broken, and some Collegian staff members' personal effects were destroyed. The staff was, obviously, shaken, scared and confused. The editor in chief had no desire to put the Collegian staff through anything like that again.

Saturday morning, we got wind that the protesters were coming back, in large numbers, to "shut 'em down," as they were chanting Friday afternoon.

When people chant "shut 'em down" while banging on the walls of the Collegian offices, it is safe to assume there is some danger that they might be back to prevent the Collegian from publishing its next issue.

So, we moved.

"Why were the editors of color not informed of the move? And have they been fired?"

First of all; no, they haven't been fired.

Secondly; no, the editors of color were not excluded from the decision to move the Collegian. Just the editors that participated in Friday's action against the Collegian. When you're trying to hide the Collegian from a group of demonstrators, it doesn't make sense to tell the people holding the bullhorns, yelling about how awful the Collegian is, where you put it.

Racism pervades all of the United States society. We're sure the Collegian has elements within it that are racist. But what organization is totally free from racism? If you think your organization, or even your person, is totally free from all forms of prejudice, you're kidding yourself. We've been grappling with the race issue at the Collegian for years, but apparently not as successfully as we had hoped.

In fact, we've taken steps this semester to deal with racism and discrimination at the Collegian. One of the steps we've taken to this end was the women's issues page conversion, which was done with the consent of the women's issues editor — an action the demonstrators, oddly enough, have taken to be a step towards oppressing women. Before, women basically were told they would get news that concerned them once every two weeks. With the change we've made, the women's issues desk is required to write two to three news articles and an editorial for the editorial page once a week. It's important to note here that the editor is not limited to these numbers and is free to do more (but not less). Now women get news pertaining to them all week, right there with the rest of the news - no less important. We realized this was a radical change on our parts. That's why we ran a policy editorial earlier this semester explaining the situation and asking people who had concerns about it to come to the Collegian and voice them to our editor in chief. Not a single person said a single word about it - until now. If people really had a problem with this where were they earlier this semester?

Sure, we're willing to make some changes. But, like we said before, we'd like to continue giving the students of the University of Massachusetts the daily newspaper they deserve. We, the Board of Editors, want to meet with representatives of the demonstrators to talk about their demands.

But, we won't be bullied. Some of the demands we've heard from the protesters are actually stepping away from the goals they supposedly wish to achieve.

We're not a perfect organization. We make mistakes. We make lots of mistakes. We're students, and we're still learning.

But we still believe we know a little more about running a daily newspaper than these protesters. It's a lot of work. So much, in fact, that many of us have let our grades suffer in favor of our dedication to informing the public to the best of our judgment.

We want more people to be involved in the Collegian and we've always encouraged people to participate. After all, we are a volunteer organization and we're dependent on those who are willing to put in the time.

Unsigned editorials represent the views and opinions of a majority of the Board of Editors.

Notice:

The Collegian is still student accessible! We are still accepting submissions. Slip any editorials and news articles you want to contribute under the door of our former offices and we'll get them eventually.

Bischoff, McInerney to step down from posts

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

David Bischoff, the dean of the School of Physical Education, and Director of Athletics Frank McInerney stepped down from their respective positions at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

McInerney, who turns 65 this month, has been athletic director at the University for 20 years and said he has made the decision to retire. He will remain at his position through Aug. 31 as the already-named search committee will look for a replacement.

Bischoff, who is also the associate chancellor for athletics, has given up his academic responsibilities and title as dean, but will still be involved in the athletic department as a liasion between the department and the management of the new Mullins Arena.

Bischoff, who was in attendance at the press conference at the Robsham Visitors Center along with Chancellor Richard O'Brien, denied his move was related to the recent call by football alumni for his resignation. O'Brien said McInerney's retirement wasn't prompted by pressure and he discussed his retirement several months ago.

"Three jobs is a bit too much," said O'Brien of Bischoff, who has been a dean for over 20 years. "It would be impossible to add this third major responsibility to his already full schedule."

"The need was to find somebody who was very familiar with the workings of the campus at every level, and have the necessary seniority to command the respect of the potential users" O'Brien said in a prepared statement. "And because [Bischoff] has been deeply involved in all aspects of the construction and operation of this new facility."

The restructuring of the atheletic department calls for a greater involvement of O'Brien in all decisions within the athletic department and the athletic budget will be separated from the Provost's Office and become part of the Chancellor's budget.

O'Brien also addressed the Mullins Arena and the establishment of a hockey program. He said the newly-established program will be a member of Hockey East and set forth a three-year plan for its formation.

A seven-member committee including faculty, coaches and administrators as well as head basketball coach John Calipari, has begun its search for a new athletic director. The committee is headed by Stevenson Fletcher.

"We want to move as quickly as possible to to get a new athletic director in here," said O'Brien.

According to O'Brien, one of the first responsibilities of the newly-appointed athletic director will be to hire a head hockey coach and provide the individual with a budget to allow recruiting to begin.

Part of O'Brien's three-year formation plan for hockey is for UMass to begin playing a modest schedule in its second year and embark upon a full schedule within Hockey East in the third year.

"I believe we are at last emerging from the budgetary shadows of the recent years," O'Brien said. "As part of this emergence we are detrmined to build outstanding athletic programs, with an emphasis upon academic excellence and program breadth."

Baseball headed to Boston for bout with Northeastern

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team travels to Boston today to take on the Northeastern University Huskies in the regular season finale at 3 p.m.

The game pits two of the top teams in New England, but it's safe to say UMass head coach Mike Stone and Husky coach Neil McPhee will be resting their best pitchers, if not their best position players. Both teams are fighting for elusive NCAA Tournament bids, but they must go through their respective conference tournaments first.

The Minutemen (23-14) are the second seed in the East Division of the Atlantic 10 Tournament, and they will play George Washington at 7:35 p.m. Friday in Boyertown, Pa.

Northeastern is a member of the North Atlantic Conference, and as teams like Maine and Delaware have been up and down all year, the Huskies have ridden the crest of the wave in the NAC and are one of the top four teams in New England. McPhee's team is strong in the outfield this season.

Senior John Buckley leads the outfield in the field and at the plate. Buckley is a definite pro prospect and hit .371 last season with seven home runs. Buckley roams center field and is the Huskies' cleanup hitter.

Hank Gibson and Dan Mahoney round out the outfield with both players producing in their senior years. On the pitching staff, Northeastern is led by two youngsters.

Steve Leonard and Bill Hartnett are the young guns that McPhee is relying on to win the NAC. Hartnett was 4-2 last year, while Leonard posted a 4-1 record.

As the regular season ends for the Minutemen, a few players are riding hitting streaks. Bill Knight, Greg LaRocca and Jeff January are the three UMass players that are on a roll.

Knight has come into Amherst from Holliston and has produced in his freshman year. He leads the team with five homers and is second with 23 RBI. Knight has filled in admirably in Brian Bright's place. Bright was the Minuteman right fielder last year, but he left for the pros after completing his junior year.

LaRocca, another freshman, has played great defense all year and has been a strength hitting out of the leadoff position. LaRocca almost always makes contact, striking out only nine times in 37 games. Since shifting from center field to shortstop, LaRocca has shown leadership, even as a freshman.

January is a sophomore who transfered from South Florida. He has shown pop at the plate, starting 34 of UMass' 37 games. January has also filled in for catcher Lou Olivieri behind the dish at times.

But without doubt, the offensive leader on the Minutemen is Steve Corradi. Corradi is second on the team with a .333 average, has three homers and three triples, and is leading the team with 18 stolen bases in 21 tries.

Since Stone moved Corradi to center to utilize his speed better, he has played better in all aspects. Corradi is UMass' cleanup hitter, and he is without a doubt the team's biggest offensive threat.

Softball falls flat at Classic

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The style in which the University of Massachusetts softball team lost its two games in the double-elimination Diamond Classic this past weekend at the University of Connecticut should have happened in reverse order.

Florida State University (60-7) was the undefeated (3-0) tourney champ, beating UConn (40-8) 4-3 in the finale.

The 22nd-ranked Minutewomen beat the University of South Florida 1-0 Saturday, as Holly Aprile (15-9) took the decision. UMass scored the only run it would need in the first as Rachel Lawson singled with one out, and was singled to second by Barbara Marean. The runners advanced on a fielder's choice grounder by Sherri Kuchinskas, and Peggy Bush singled to center scoring Lawson.

Aprile held the lead, allowing only three hits in the game, striking out two and walking none, and not allowing a runer to third until the bottom of the seventh.

The win had UMass facing 13th-ranked FSU later that day. The Lady Seminoles faced surprise UMass starter Kelly Daut, who held FSU to only three hits through three innings.

In the fourth inning FSU catcher Leslie Adams reached on a fielder's choice, was singled to second by Lisa Davidson and to third by Heather Conway. Center fielder Tina Gethwell then grounded to UMass second baseman Tracy Duest, who forced Conway at second as Adams scored. Jennifer Olow then singled to center, scoring Davidson and Susan Buttery singled to score Getherall.

Faced with a 3-0 deficit in their half of the fourth, the Minutewomen pushed its only run across as Kuchinskas and designated player Bush were walked by FSU pitcher Rebecca Aase. Jen Devlin then singled to right, and Stacey Nichols' hard grounder to center forced Devlin at second as Danielle Walsh, who was running for Kuchinskas, scored.

The loss meant UMass would face 19th-ranked and rival UConn, which had taken three of four from the Minutwomen earlier this season. UMass coach Elaine Sortino said the close game against FSU would provided her team with "a great experience, for tomorrow," against UConn, but she didn't imagine what would happen in Sunday's game.

UConn waxed the Minutewomen 10-0 in a five-inning, mercy-rule contest. Husky hurler Kim Mizesko, who shut out UMass for the third time this season, threw a two-hitter with five strikeouts. She has allowed the Minutewomen only seven hits in 19 innings this year.

"I don't let them rattle me," Mizesko said. "I really try to stay in control of the game. They get intimidated if we get a run under our belt," as the Huskies did in the first on two singles and a walk.

In the second UConn catcher Khrista Andrade singled and was forced at second by left fielder Michelle Santo. Center fielder Janna Venice then hit a pitch from UMass starter Darlene Claffey up into a strong wind blowing from first to left, and the ball sailed over the fence for a 3-0 UConn lead.

Leading off the top of the third, UMass' Holly Aprile was forced out of the game in a bizarre accident. The senior center fielder fouled an inside pitch into her own left eye, making a small cut. After the game the eye was swollen shut, and she said it was sore but OK.

UConn continued the onslaught in the fourth as it scored four runs on six hits, five of which were singles. Daut replaced Claffey after the junior gave up the first two runs, but it did not stop the runs.

In the sixth UConn crossed the plate three more times on five consecutive singles, ending the game.

Sortino offered a terse "no comment" on her team's fourth loss at the hands of the Huskies this season.

GAME NOTES: Yesterday UMass got back on the winning track as it swept a make-up doubleheader at Central Connecticut University, 11-4 and 13-0. Claffey increased her record to 11-4 in the first game, and Daut upped her record to 8-6 in the nightcap.

Tomorrow UMass will honor its graduating seniors, Holly Aprile, Barbara Marean, Jen Devlin and Peggy Bush in a ceremony in between games of a doubleheader against Alelphi. The twinbill will begin at Totman Field at 3 p.m.

Scouting the NBA draft

One underclassman who has already made noise by deciding to enter the NBA is LSU's junior center Shaquille O'Neal. Standing in at seven-feet plus and weighing 280 pounds plus, O'Neal definitely has the body to dominate in the NBA.

The big question about O'Neal is whether he'll develop the low post moves to compliment his assortment of thundering dunks. His defensive presence and physical skills alone should make O'Neal the biggest prize in the lottery since Patrick Ewing.

Two big men follow O'Neal in the upper echelon of the draft — Georgetown's Alonzo Mourning and Duke's Christian Laettner.

Mourning should blossom professionally like previous Hoya big men (Ewing and Dikembe Mutombo). Already a defensive giant, Mourning's offensive skills were good in college, but should be better in the pros because defenses will not be able to play a specific zone defense to shut him down.

As much as I hate Laettner, and I do mean hate, I must admit the man is a winner, plain and simple. He knows how to play the game and is versatile offensively.

Laettner's game fits the NBA much better than former Duke big man and NBA big joke, Danny Ferry.

Jeff Crofts

Two underclassmen who haven't made up their minds about the NBA are next — Ohio State's Jim Jackson and USC's Harold Miner.

Jackson, a jack of all trades — small forward/shooting guard, has the all-around skills to be a superstar right away. Jackson can do everything — shoot, pass, defend, rebound and most importantly take over in the clutch (forget the nine turnover effort against Michigan in the Big Dance, his teammates didn't show up).

As for Miner, the man is the two E's — Exciting and Explosive! If Miner can play tough defense in the NBA, we are looking at the next Michael Jordan. That is no exaggeration. The man is that good.

Up next — the trio of Razorbacks, Todd Day, Oliver Miller and Lee Mayberry.

At 6-8, Day moves alarmingly smooth, can bear down defensively, streak shoot with the best of them, and finish off the break like James Worthy.

With all that said, Day's attitude and disappearance in the tourney against Memphis State has many worried.

Miller looks to be this years' Victor Alexander (rookie center for Golden State). Like Alexander, Miller stands 6-9, weighs in at 280 to 880 pounds, and has incredibly soft hands (maybe holding Italian subs softens your hands.)

Other Miller attributes include deceptive speed, uncanny passing skills, and solid two-way post skills. But his weight and laziness have many worried.

Mayberry may be the most solid Razorback. He plays tough defense, can shoot the J and is a leader. The only knock on him is that his lack of size might be a hindrance to him in the NBA.

The last player I'm going to look at is Maryland's point guard Walt Williams. Once given contact lenses, Williams really came on as an outside shooter.

Along with his outside shooting, Williams brings his big-for-a-point-guard six-foot eight inch body and good passing ability to a draft stacked with talent. His lone setback is his lack of penetration.

Collegian distributed despite protests

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

AMHERST — The student newspaper at the University of Massachusetts distributed some copies Tuesday in defiance of campus protesters who were trying to shut it down.

The protesters, who are upset by the Rodney King verdict and accuse the paper of racism, snatched up most of the Daily Collegian on Monday from buildings where students ordinarily picked them up for free. A staffer said papers also disappeared from a loading dock where they were delivered from the printer.

However, Jenny Burns, associate production manager, said the paper's staff arranged for a security guard to be at the dock today.

"The production goes smoothly; it's just an added burden," she added.

However, the students are publishing without advertisements for fear that businesses would turn into targets of the protest. Some protesters Monday called for a boycott of advertisers in the paper, which normally circulates 19,000 copies.

The editors also said Monday they would close for the school year five days earlier than planned.

Rebecca Ewen, a worker at the Student Activities Office, said today's papers arrived at drop points in buildings around campus. It wasn't immediately clear if the protesters intended to remove them.

The protesters on Monday replaced the papers at some locations with fliers accusing the editors of "racist and oppressive discourse" and listing demands for change. The fliers carried a nameplate that said: "Daily Collegian."

The loosely knit group of protesters took shape in reaction to the acquittal Wednesday of the white policeman who beat King, a Black, in Los Angeles. The protesters overran the newspaper's office Friday, breaking a window and refusing to leave for a half hour. They later occupied the chancellor's office for several hours but left when University officials pledged to hire 10 more minority professors within two years.

The protesters, angry over the election last month of three new editors by a vote of the paper's staff, demanded that minority staffers make those appointments. "It was a completely racist act," protester Alex Delgado said of the vote. "How can a 95 percent white staff talk about multiculturalism?"

About 300 protesters, who rallied outside the student union building, also demanded that Managing Editor Dan Wetzel be fired.

Editor-in-chief Marc Elliott said Wetzel would stay. But he acknowledged there may have been racism at the paper in the past. He said he stood ready to negotiate over voting for minority page editors and other issues.

Wetzel said the 102-year-old paper's staff was trying to keep publishing through Friday as "a pride issue."

Students list demands

Amherst College takeover continues

By SARAH LEVESQUE
Collegian Staff

A group of 50 to 100 Amherst College students led in part by the Black Student Union have barricaded themselves in Converse Hall since 11:30 p.m. Monday night and will continue to occupy the Hall until their list of demands have been met.

The protesters announced their list of demands at 8:30 Monday morning and later met with Amherst College President Peter Pouncey and administrators, but no decision has been reached.

Copies of the protestors' list of demands circulated through the crowd of about a hundred students that gathered during the day and late into the evening to show their support of the takeover of the Hall, which houses the offices of President Pouncey and other administrators. Various student classes are also held in the building.

Amherst sophomore political science major Juanita Kennedy said she supported the students in Converse who have vowed to remain there until either their demands are met or they, the protestors, are removed by force. "The takeover is a good step," said Kennedy, "and a productive expression of their rage and feelings."

Amherst sophomore history major Elisa Murphy thought the protestors' demands were unrealistic and the students were "making a big deal out of nothing."

The group of students' first demand is "that the existing Affirmative Action Policy be revised, so as to stipulate that ALL academic departments advertise openings in publications directly geared towards Black, Latino, and Asian-American academia. This policy should be effective by September 8, 1992."

Student Spokesperson Keisha Lindsay, a senior at the private liberal arts college, said the students wanted the 1,575-student college to hire a full-time affirmative action officer, a Black professor of economics, and Black or Latino professors in the psychology, theatre, and dance and political science departments.

Bush seeking suspects in L.A. rioting, looting

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Bush said Tuesday the government plans to pursue and prosecute people who murdered, burned and looted in riot-torn Los Angeles and is reviewing videotapes to identify suspects, a California lawmaker said.

Bush consulted with Republican senators on Capitol Hill about the riots and also met for a second straight day with Cabinet advisors on the subject. He is to leave Wednesday for a two-day trip to Los Angeles.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the government was trying to match federal assistance programs with needs for food and other necessities in the city.

Bush plans to inspect neighborhoods ripped by violence and burnings on his visit to the city.

He is to arrive in Los Angeles late Wednesday and probably will meet that night with David Kearns, the deputy secretary of education who is coordinating federal relief efforts. A White House planning team is in Los Angeles surveying sites for Bush to visit.

On Tuesday, Bush went to Capitol Hill and spent an hour behind closed doors with Senate Republicans.

Afterward, Sen. John Seymour, R-Calif., quoted Bush as saying the Justice Department planned to "prosecute to the fullest" those involved in murder, looting, arson and other crimes.

The department is reviewing videotapes of the rioting in order to pursue its prosecutions, Seymour added. Bush went out of his way to pose for television cameras with Seymour, who is up for re-election this fall.

Seymour said, "His words were, that he had spoken with Attorney General (William) Barr and that he assured the president that they were going to fully prosecute those who had been involved in the looting, and the setting of fires and the killings and mayhem and property damage. He indicated they were viewing all the evidence now, including videotapes."

The Republican senator also said there is "a strong possibility of indictments being handed down" by a federal grand jury in the Rodney King case.

It was the acquittal of four white police officers in the videotaped beating of King, a black motorist, that led to three days of rioting last week that left 55 people dead, nearly 2,400 injured and more than 12,000 arrested.

After the verdict on state charges, a federal grand jury is considering whether lawmen violated King's civil rights.

Bush told reporters he was doing "a lot of listening. . . talking, and explaining where we stand on the federal side on L.A."

Later, Bush told a Cinco de Mayo ceremony at the Mexican Cultural Institute, "We must rethink and reaffirm the bonds that knit all nationalities together."

Festivities celebrate Israel's independence as Jewish state

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

On May 7, Jews all around the world will celebrate Israel's independence as a Jewish state, on the holiday known as Israel Independence Day, or Yom Ha-atzma'ut.

The holiday is one of much celebration and festivities. In Israel, the streets are transformed into a carnival-like atmosphere with dancing, music and art events.

It is a way of acknowledging Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state, said Yehudit Heller, program director of Hillel.

The holiday dates back to May 14, 1948, the day when Israel declared its independence, brought about by the United Nations Partition Plan, which proposed a separate Jewish and Arab state in Palestine, said Josh Slomich, a sophomore political science major at the University of Massachusetts.

Zionist leaders accepted the plan. However, Slomich explained the plan was rejected by Arab leadership in Palestine and surrounding Arab states.

When British forces withdrew from Palestine, the Arab forces attacked Israel from Egypt, Syria, Jordan and Lebanon. Israel fought back and emerged victorious, Slomich said.

"The establishment of a Jewish state was sort of the climax of 2,000 years of the Jews being in exile," Slomich said. "It was Jewish independence from living in the ghetto, a sense of pride for everyone. . .now the Jews have their own homeland."

"I can't really imagine the Jewish people around the world without a Jewish state," Heller said.

"I think the Holocaust was a very important lesson here, there were people and there was nowhere to go — no gate was open," Heller said.

Heller cited the recent influx of Soviet Jews into Israel. "For the Jews in Russia, Israel was a solution, it was life, as well as for Jewish people in Ethiopia," he said.

Heller, a native born Israeli, said she was optimistic about the recent Middle East peace talks, as well as the new rights for Syrian Jews to travel in and outside of Syria.

"I think peace can happen anywhere, it's about people growing up and acknowledging processes and being able to deal," she said.

"It will take a while, it's easier to take things apart than to put them together."

There will a fair to celebrate Israel Independence Day today in the Student Union Ballroom from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. There will be Israeli food, music and dancing.

ments. School spokesperson Doug Wilson said said 22 of the 185 faculty members and 13 of the 95 administrators are minorities, and the college has made various efforts to expand its minority hiring. Lindsay contended there were fewer than 10 black professors and "most departments don't have any Black or Latino representation."

At around 3 p.m., 25 University of Massachusetts students from the rally announced to be "in support of The Collegian Editors of Color" marched over to Converse Hall to show their support for the occupying students' demands. University student Jason McDonald, who participated in the march to Amherst said, "We are calling students to support them. This issue goes beyond just Amherst and UMass. . . Racism is a global issue."

Further signs of the protest and response to the Rodney King verdict can be found on the steps of the Robert Frost Library. "Support the occupation! Go to Converse," announces one sign. Also on the steps of the Amherst College library is an effigy of a lynched Black man, steps splattered with red paint, and an account of two lynch mob hangings taped to the handrail for people to read.

The visual statement was created by the Charles Drew House, the college's African-American center, as a political statement commemorating the victims of racial lynchings in the U.S. through out history.

New assault statistics use range of sources

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

The University has recently obtained the first statistics for reporting sexual assaults developed by the Sexual Assault Advisory Committee through the Sexual Assault Centralized Report.

"The report is really useful in helping us determine what areas on campus to target with our educational programming," said the coordinator of the Educator/Advocate program at the Everywoman's Center Veronica Frenkel.

"It just reinforces what we already know about women being afraid to report sexual assault, she added."

The new, more comprehensive system was designed to provide an increased accurate assessment of assaults on campus and increase victim services and awareness through education, according to the coordinator of the Counselor/Advocate program Debra Levy, from the Everywoman's Center.

Levy said the new statistics cannot be compared to past data because they go beyond police figures gathered from a broader number of campus and community agencies. The report form also adds to the definition of sexual assault to include obscene phone calls, rape, attempted rape, sexual harassment, physical abuse, and voyeurism.

According to the report, statistics reinforcing nation-wide figures show that a high percentage of assaults are committed by acquaintances.

The report states that one out of four women will be the victim of rape at some point in her lifetime and one out of two women will be the victim of attempted rape.

It goes on to say that rapes reported to police reflect only ten percent of women who have been sexually assaulted.

"We're still dealing with the myth that assaults are committed by unknown men lurking in dark alleyways," said Levy.

The reality is that sexual assaults are generally committed by people the victim know in the victim's home," she added.

Results of the report form on the frequency of sex-related assaults on women on campus show an increase.

The report shows that during the 1990-91 academic year, there were a total of 179 reported sexual assaults at the University. 79 percent of those assaults occurred during previous years and child sexual abuse.

Of the 100 assaults occurring during the 1990-91 academic year, there were 27 reported obscene telephone calls; 14 reports of physical abuse; 20 reported rapes; nine reports of physical sexual assault; eight reports of sexual harassment; three reports of verbal sexual assault; and five reports of other types of assault.

Of the reported assaults, 91 percent were undergraduates; 81 percent lived on campus; and 60 percent said they knew the aggressor. Sixteen percent of offenders were reported to be ex-partners; 15 percent reported were friends, 14 percent reported were acquaintances, and 13 percent were reported being strangers.

A mere 22 percent of those who reported they had been assaulted took legal action against their assailants and six percent went through the University to take action.

Seventy-five percent of all the sexual assaults that occurred within the last academic year happened on campus, according to the report. Residence halls were the location most often identified in the report.

The report notes that the number of reported assaults on campus is only a fraction of the national estimates of the actual frequency of sexual assaults.

The report concludes emphasizing the need to address sexual assaults on college campuses.

Crowd surge brings Funk-a-thon to abrupt end

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

An unexpectedly large crowd and outbreaks of alleged violence caused the annual "Funk-a-thon" in the Student Union Ballroom to be interrupted prematurely Saturday night.

The annual event, sponsored by the Black Mass Communications Project, was slated to run from 10:30 p.m. to 3:00 a.m. but was cut short at 1:00 a.m. when an immense crowd awaiting entry to the concert began to fill the Student Union and "a scuffle broke out," according to Auxiliary Services Director William Harris.

"There were no dire consequences," said Harris, who was present at the scene. "[The parties involved in the alleged fight] were just told to cool off and leave."

Student Activities Office Director Edward Korza said the major problem surfaced after the step show ended and a "surge of individuals" hoping to attend the Funk-a-thon "created a bottleneck effect." He said people in the crowd became impatient because of the wait to get in.

"In terms of planning [for security], it was sufficient," said Korza. "The sudden surge of people was the catalyst for the anxiety, friction and anger."

Harris said, "We did not try to drive them out. We just turned the music off and the lights on and opened the doors."

Korza said someone yelled that another person had a gun and a few people panicked, but he said there were "no guns, no knives, no arrests." Harris said hand-held metal detectors were used at the entrance to the Ballroom, and no one was turned away.

According to Harris, 1,100 tickets were sold, but he estimated approximately 1,300 people were present at the event. He said BMCP had 60 students on security duty, and had hired four UMass police officers for the evening.

However, Harris said, "There were a lot of oversights."

He said students who could not gain entry to the show were asking for a refund of the $6 ticket charge. He said around 60 to 70 students received refunds, of which about half were actually holding tickets.

Harris said no one was hurt, and the damage was limited to one broken window in the Ballroom itself.

Dean of Students Sharon Kipetz said Saturday night's events will be addressed at a meeting today with Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jo-Anne Vanin and several division heads.

Jolly Roger flies atop Butterfield once more

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

When Housing Services took down Butterfield residents' Jolly Roger flag last Wednesday and installed metal bars on stairwell windows, many residents were outraged and confused with Housing's behavior.

"The flag is a symbol of free thinking for Butterfield residents," said Marc Randazza, a junior journalism major.

A new Jolly Roger flag is now waving triumphantly on top of Butterfield Residential Hall's roof, defying all of Housing's attempts to keep residents off the roof.

Randazza said Housing thinks of the residents as a "pesky technicality."

"Housing has to realize that they work for the residents and the residents are their bosses, not vice versa," said Randazza, who is also House Council President of Butterfield.

Some residents said they were concerned that the metal bars installed on stairwell windows to keep students off the roof was a fire hazard.

Dave Beaudin, an associate fire prevention office, said the bars were not a fire hazard. "If the bars were installed on the dorm room windows then it would have been a fire hazard," he said.

There are discrepancies as to how the metal bars have since been removed. Brian O'Neil, a first year microbiology major, said the bars were removed by explosives. Another student, Randazza, said the bars rusted and fell out.

Residents said when Housing took away their flag they also took away Butterfield residents' individuality. "Housing is forcing the residents to obey and conform to their rules," said Georgina Grigson, a junior journalism major.

Residents said they couldn't understand why Housing focused so much attention and spent money to remove the flag and install bars when there are more important problems plaguing Butterfield.

O'Neil said there were five men welding all day to install the bars on the stairwell windows, a deadbolt on a door and a new lock on the trap door leading to the roof.

"It is petty of Housing to make such a big deal about the flag when they can't even fix the lawn outside of Butterfield," said O'Neil.

"I think it's cool that the flag is up on the roof again because it stands as an expression of freedom for the residents," said Mel Mooney, a junior comparitive literature major.

Housing Services was unavailable for comment.

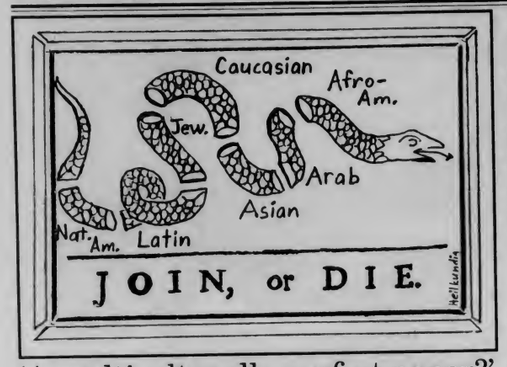
Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.



'A multiculturally perfect paper?'

As a member of the University's student population, I am extremely concerned by what I observe about campus regarding the attempted halting of the Collegian's publication. Racism and sexism are definitely present, and highly so. At the University, yet, censorship in any form will not solve any problems. When any on person or group of persons is not allowed to speak, it creates a standard that threatens the very possibility of righting a wrong.

If we are to assume that any of the editors or staff members of the Collegian, or any other publication, should not be allowed to continue to express their views solely on the basis that such views are offensive or oppressive to some, then the right is thus declared to prevent any voice to be heard. That is frightening.

Whether or not journalistic politics have oppressed any voices is a moot point. Preventing any voice from being heard will not solve any problems — it will make them worse. The Collegian has had problems in recruiting writers for all eight semesters I have attended the University, and it has written about it frequently.

Will racism and sexism lessen on this campus if the Collegian is not allowed to print articles? Certainly not. One cannot force a racist to change his or her mind; only teach them. Everyone is racist. We all have some bias, be it large and overbearing or slight and hidden, towards some culture or other, be it an ethnicity, religion, gender, sexual orientation or other difference. Any person who claims she or he judges each person solely on merit and character is a saint.

Is a multiculturally perfect paper possible? No. Should it be attempted? Of course. Nothing is perfect, however, and college students, from any walk of life, are no exception. Force breeds spite and censorship builds anger. It is in all of our best interests if a student with a grievance concentrates more on speaking louder than silencing another.

Censorship: an ugly form of protest

I would just like to take this opportunity to express my outrage at the actions of the students who have taken to throwing away all available copies of the Collegian. This is nothing but a blatant act of censorship. .

To those involved, I sincerely wish you would stop and think about what you are doing. Clearly, your actions are not the result of a well thought out decision. Please understand that you have to take responsibilty for your actions. I find it extremely ironic that the very people who are accusing the Collegian of censorship are blocking student access to the newspaper. Do you really feel that this is more justified than any other form of censorship? As UMass students, you have a lot of power on this campus. I urge you to use that power responsibly. You claim to be fighting oppression, but you are becoming the very voice of oppression by blocking the circulation of the Collegian.

I am very offended by your actions. Do you really think that you are the only intelligent people on this campus? Are the rest of us so incapable of thought that you feel the need to protect us from the 'oppressive' material that has been printed in the Collegian? I, for one, prefer to be able to read all material circulating about racism on this campus and make my own decision based on what I have read. Why are you so afraid of students reading the Collegian? Are you perhaps concerned that they might be able to make an unbiased decision about the issues at hand (a decision that may not necessarily coincide with your views?)

You probably do have the power to shut down the Collegian for a few days, but what I ask you to ask yourselves is, "Do I really want to do this?" Do you really want to condone censorship by blocking circulation of the Collegian? Realize that your actions have power, and think before you act.

For anyone who would like to read a copy of Monday's Collegian, I was able to get a copy. I brought it to the Archives of the Tower Library (floor 25) — no, that doesn't mean that floor 25 is racist and should be the next target of vandalism.

Let's take over a building!

So we were taken over. I was a Collegian editor for only one semester, my last one, and it was a calm and peaceful semester, as far as the Collegian goes. Who knew?

The last eight papers were to come out and I was ready to pluck things from my desk for memories, take photos of my fellow journalists and be a bit sentimental. Instead, the revolutionaries have acted.

I understand perfectly and I am not surprised by anything that happened. I don't mean to come off as holier-than-thou, but I've been on the other side and I know these revolutionaries well.

Ari Vais

My most recent encounter with them (before the takeover) was as editor of the Ed/Op page this semester. You know how you can tell a revolutionary? They're the ones who become vocally indignant if their submission isn't printed right away, or if it's printed, but has been edited for space. They are the ones who leave snotty notes full of accusations and bitterness and who seem to firmly believe that what they wrote is the gospel, a document far more valuable than anything I could ever hope to receive. But I'm a fossil, for cryin' out loud! I've been here since 1987, and I used to be one of their pawns.

Some of you may remember the building takeovers in the spring of '89 that called for an end of Department of Defense research at UMass. These things always start out as rallies, with the aforementioned revolutionaries clinging to the podium for dear life, inciting their soldiers-to-be to action. You see, these pawns would just be regular students looking for acceptance without their leaders, and the leaders would be frustrated eccentrics without their pawns. Each group is totally dependent on the other for its existence. But which is more vile?

There is perhaps no right answer to that question. Let's just say that it's a personal judgement call. How about a sweeping generalization? The pawns in a collegiate revolution can be compared to Greeks or hippies or any people that join a group for instant, feel-good acceptance. Go to a bunch of Dead shows and you're part of a big, happy family no matter who you are. Join a sorority or fraternity and you've got sisters and brothers for life. Take over a building with a large, shouting group and there's instant solidarity. College can be a lonely place. Surely, we can all understand this mentality. The leaders of these revolutions, on the other hand, have festering egos the size of Texas.

I'll probably make a ton of enemies among my fellow comrades of the '89 revolution as well as many others by saying these things, but a man with no enemies is not a man, and besides, I'm gone from the Valley dizzyingly soon.

When I took over the Graduate Tower with my loud band of peaceniks, it was strictly because this was probably the only time in my life that I would take over a building, complete with list of demands. It was all very exciting and, to tell you the truth, the solidarity among us was intoxicating. The cause? Come on, even then if you'd sat me down privately, I would have admitted that I didn't give a damn about the cause. I think most of us were even a little hazy as to what exactly the cause was because our leaders hadn't formulated a concrete agenda yet. All we know was that there were loads of cops outside, that we might be arrested. We faxed different publications with news of our revolution, made coffee as well as massive signs to stick on the windows calling for support. We made quite a mess of these people's offices, but it was in the name of The Cause. While we weren't paying attention, our leaders killed each other off until only one remained. Too many cooks spoil the broth, especially in a revolution.

I remember feeling a bit uneasy at the way our leader treated us: like a movie star would treat a petty fan. Too busy to chat, far too important to make eye contact, but evasively polite. If someone was to question or second-guess the leader, however, they were as good as dead. Out of the movement. Ex-comrades. Traitors! These leaders are effective at achieving what they want, but when it comes to seeing or hearing different views, they stink. Levelheadedness and down-to-earthness have absolutely no place in a revolution. Pumped up emotions and erect egos are the key ingredients.

I left the Grad Tower right before people started getting arrested, as some sense suddenly returned to me. And even though I still thought of my poor, jailed friends as comrades, I knew what was up. I knew all too well that our leader, when he got out of jail, would not remember who I was. I knew that when the workers at the Grad Tower rolled their eyes and began to pack their things upon our takeover, that they were being cynical/realistic, like I'm being now. I also knew that most of us sheep had gotten a kick out of challenging authority with so much back-up, even if it was short lived, and now fancied ourselves as 'enlightened' and 'aware.' Department of Defense? What's that?

"HEY HEY, HO HO, THIS AND THAT HAS GOT TO GO!!!"

Yeah, yeah, yeah! You're all the same. Different faces over the years, different causes, but everything else is exactly the same. Egomania, megalomania, and a desperate need to be liked. I'm not saying that all revolutions are just the flexings of ugly egos. Of course not — just look at Eastern Europe. But on American college campuses, revolutions tend to be a lot of yelling and very little thinking. The pawns, while rejoicing over their acceptance, don't realize that they have lost their identities. The revolutionaries become wasted on delusions of their own grandeur. It's a boring, trite and totally unoriginal scene.

Look at what's happened on this campus over the last few days, namely to the Collegian. Now pack up your emotions for a second, take neither side if you can, and look again. You rolled your eyes like I thought you would.

Look, I don't mean to rain on anybody's parade, and I would never discourage anyone from joining an uprising. I'm glad I did it. I really am. All I'm saying is that if you can't step in others' shoes and if you refuse to consider opposing views as possibly being valid, then you're a stupid, blind sheep.

See you in the real world.

Riots in L.A. to be expected, but violence will only polarize opinion

I am writing this letter in response to several comments I heard while attending the rally on Friday, May 1, to protest the acquittal of the four police officers accused of beating Rodney King.

The comments I am referring to were made by several speakers, including a professor from the Afro-American department. The comments were to the effect that the rioters in Los Angeles were 'soldiers' on the front line of the struggle for racial justice in this country.

One speaker went even further and declared that rioters were protecting the homes of their people in the only way they knew how. (It is only fair to state that most of the people I saw cheering the above statements were white. The large majority of the Afro-American demonstrators seemed to have reacted with much less enthusiasm.)

It is easy to justify the use of violence when all other avenues have seemingly been exhausted. Yet what may temporarily alleviate feelings of impotence and frustration will have repercussions that extend far into the future.

The violence in Los Angeles is the inevitable result of the political, economic and social disenfranchisement of large segments of the population of this country. None of us should have been surprised.

However, what began as an expression of justifiable rage clearly got out of hand. Looting and destruction of property and attacks on innocent people will not advance the cause of justice in this country. It is evident that for many rioters, a carnival atmosphere soon replaced the anger that was the original catalyst for the violence.

It is clear from events in Eastern Europe and within the republics of the former Soviet Union that violence begets violence. If riots should erupt in other cities it will allow the federal government to ignore the fundamental problems which face this nation, instead reducing the issues to a question of law and order. For many Americans, the violence will only justify the status quo.

It is understandable that many Black leaders are unwilling to condemn the actions of the rioters. But there is a difference between withholding one's condemnation and expressing one's approval. Veiling the brutal chaos that took place in Los Angeles in a cloak of decency will only contribute to the polarization of opinion, and could stimulate further outbreaks of violence.

All that I believe I need to know, I'm learning at the Collegian

All that I think I need to know I am learning it at the Collegian. Well, at least what I believe I need to know. . . for my journalistic career.

To love the press as myself. To make it be my life, my food, my reason for doing well in school so that I can continue writing.

To love my opinions and value them as the other's.

To leave my beliefs to one side when I am writing a story, but never to forget my morals.

To not take it personally when people write nasty articles asking me to resign. On the contrary, to take it constructively and respect them (that includes University staff).

"Cooperation, not competition."

To want the same people who scream at me at press conferences and call me names at rallies to come and work with me.

To know that the majority of those same people who do that will not be willing to work with me, or take my job because they are not willing to work 10 hours doing a page, or are afraid of being criticized by people who won't care about it.

To check my sources. . .

To know that freedom of the press is not to write what I like, but to accept the consequences of what I write.

Evelyn A. DeJesus

To think not only for myself, but for the paper.

To work under stress. . .

To listen to critics. . .

To be proud of my work. . .

To be polite. . .

To not to take things personally, just professionally.

To look for both sides of the story.

To be objective.

To report not what I believe, but only what happened.

To be professional.

That you will not always have the time to use the writing process you learned in College Writing 112 and high school.

To look for the best way to communicate a story. To ask myself how a Pulitzer prize journalist would write.

To be a journalist, a glamourous one or a not-so-glamourous one.

To not print internal gossip.

Headlines have to fill all the space laid out for them.

To listen to different opinions of the definition of multiculturalism.

To distinguish between a constructive critic and an "I want to screw you" one.

To be creative within my job description.

To recognize that I do not always know it all.

To not to act like I do.

Of all that I am stating on these lines there are things that I am forgetting now. After all, I am always in the learning process. I am learning to distinguish who is my friend and who is not. To know who is envious of me and to believe in my potential. To never forget my convictions and principles and never any one question them.

Collegian, get your facts straight

Here's just a few things I'd like to tell you sorry little Collegian 'reporters':

1) You people are the farthest thing from 'radical'—changing a women's issues page into articles mixed in with the rest of your pathetic 'news'paper is not radical! (Learn the real meaning of the word.)

2) Do you have trouble hearing, or are your brains simply not processing information correctly? It's very nice of you to tell us demonstrators that 'you are not removing the Third World Affairs, Multicultural Affairs and Black Affairs pages from the paper,' but in case you don't remember, we never accused you of doing that — that wasn't the issue, fools!! The issue is that we want people from those communities, and ONLY people from those communities voting for editors for those pages — doesn't that seem just a little, eensie, teensie bit more logical than letting a bunch of White, mostly male people vote in sellouts who won't represent the students the way they want to be represented? Think about it!

3) Learn some manners — that was extremely rude for you to have the gall to interrupt our meeting by yelling over and over again "Can't I read a statement from the Collegian?" during a woman's speech! That shows how much respect you have for women of color — if you want respect, you have to show it!

So . . .before you write about us demonstrators again in your racist paper as unorganized, uninformed idiots (which is basically what you said), get your own sorry ass [expletive] together and your facts straight.

Proud of the Managing Editor

Who is Dan Wetzel? If you listen to the rantings and ravings of a bitter and extremely jealous fanatic named Trystan Skeigh, you might think that he is a 'racist,' a 'Nazi,' or a 'fascist.' You see, Ms. Skeigh is very insulted by the fact that Mr. Wetzel defeated her in a landslide victory of 51 to 3 in the Collegian elections. Unfortunately for Mr. Wetzel, his opponent has not been a graceful loser.

This individual has begun a smear campaign on one of our paper's most respected writers. She has used the horrible situation in Los Angeles to achieve her own selfish political agenda.

Due to the fact that Mr. Wetzel did not have enough signatures on last week's policy editorial concerning the court's decision on the trial, he was unable to print this opinion. This had nothing to do with his personal viewpoint, but rather the majority of the Board of Editors. Now we seem to have a very passionate mob of citizens with the need for a scapegoat. Imagine yourself unwillingly being thrown into the center of such a heated issue.

For those of you who don't know who Dan Wetzel is and what he stands for, just refer to his writings. After reading such articles as 'Group saves men's soccer from demise' and 'Welcome to the People's Republic of Amherst, B.Y.O.B.', it is very clear that he is not concerned with creating political controversy. He is a hard working undergraduate doing his best to contribute to the success of the Collegian without allowing his personal feelings to interfere with his work.

We the undersigned are proud to have Dan Wetzel as Managing Editor of the Collegian. We also feel that he has been unfairly judged by a misinformed public and should not be a target of their frustration. Dan Wetzel should not be associated with the beating of Rodney King, or the acquital of the L.A. police officers.

Local business owner threatened

It's time for a serious reality check. Once again, a perennial group of students searching for a cause have chosen a target. That the target is the 'racist' Collegian is the amazing thing. Racist? I've heard the Collegian described in many derogatory ways in my four years at UMass, and I've participated myself on a number of occasions, but that's too much.

What I find most offensive about this group of individuals is that they feel a need to export their biases across the widest spectrum possible. They seem to take pride in claiming on the one hand that all opinions should be respected, as they simultaneously threaten and coerce those who disagree. I work at a business here in town and on Monday I was subjected to a verbal barrage from one of these social militants, who ineptly tried to convince me that our advertising should be withdrawn from the Collegian. When I told him that we had no intention of doing any such thing, he proceeded to threaten me with boycotts and claimed that "We'll be back later to see if you've changed your mind." Great, now we have strong-arm tactics from a bunch of people who are so enveloped in a fog of social consciousness that they can hardly see straight. The consolation for the rest of us is that these people will have to get a job someday and maybe the strain of real life will quiet them down a little. I can't wait.

A link between the beating of King and the murder of Chin

What lessons do you draw from the April 29 acquittal of the four white L.A. police officers in Ventura County, and the fire storm that followed? I would like to emphasize a particular linkage between race and justice by recalling the case of Vincent Chin. Chin was a Chinese American man in his early twenties, who was bludgeoned to death by a laid-off auto worker in Detroit in 1981. The media, especially in Japan, made much of the allegation that he had been mistaken for Japanese. The particulars of the incident are worth reviewing. Mr. Chin was celebrating his birthday with a few male friends at a strip joint and had exchanged words with the auto worker inside the bar. The disagreement was moved outside where Mr. Chin bested the autoworker in a fist fight. The auto worker and his adult son, seeking revenge, retrieved a baseball bat from their car and searched for Mr. Chin soon after. They found him alone, having a hamburger inside a nearby McDonalds, and chased him into the center of a busy avenue where he was clubbed to death. The auto worker was found guilty if manslaughter but received only the most minimal of penalties; as I recall, a fine of a few thousand dollars and a suspended sentence of five years, meaning no jail time at all. The Chinese American community, among others, was outraged and the mother of Vincent Chin helped to lead a campaign to retry the murderer for violating Mr. Chin's civil rights. After several years, the federal authorities did prosecute on those grounds but, after the trial venue was moved to Cincinatti, the defendant was found not guilty. A fine documentary, "Who Killed Vincent Chin," aired on PBS Point of View, and was an Academy Award nominee in 1989.

Vincent Chin's death is relevant to the L.A. case in two ways. It illustrates the difficulties of securing a conviction for violating civil rights (not impossible, of course; this was the statute used to finally bring to justice in the mid-80s the bomber of the Birmingham Church in 1964 after earlier acquittals). But the second point, often lost in the media discussion and political posturing, is the bias in the American judicial system, based on the race of the victim.

Jim Matson

This is a point well-documented in the sociological literature, e.g., the study by David Baldus of University of Iowa that demonstrated that the administration of the death penalty in Georgia was racially discriminatory, i.e., taking into account over 200 other factors, such as brutality, extenuating circumstances, etc., those who kill Whites are four times as likely to be sentenced to death. (60 percent of Georgia homicide victims are Black, but all seven put to death from '76-'87 were convicted of killing a White. Six of those seven were themselves Black.

This point was used by the NAACP to challenge Georgia's death penalty law in the case of Warren McClesky. He was an African-American male, convicted of killing a white policeman in a robbery in 1978, and had been condemned to death in Georgia. The NAACP's appeal to the Supreme Court argued that since the judicial system was racially biased, at the very least, his death sentence should have been commuted. The state of Georgia did not contest the statistical evidence, but argued that the disparities were accounted for by differences in kinds of homicides: Blacks are more often killed in "family disputes, lover disputes," barroom fights and the like, while Whites are more often killed in robberies and other crimes more likely to provoke "the moral outrage of the community." The Supreme Court also did not challenge or reject the statistical evidence, but on April 22, 1987, by a 5-4 decision, found the statistical record not relevant — appeals, they ruled, must be based on particularized objections to individual sentences. (Their logic was reminiscent of 1896 Plessy v. Ferguson, which cemented segregation of public facilities in the South — separate but equal was judged discriminatory only if blacks chose to see it that way.) In the face of telling evidence that the victim's race is decisive in capital cases, the court seems to be saying that, well, it's just a theory. Use of the study would, in Justice Powell's majority opinion, "challenge the principles underlying U.S. criminal system, especially the discretion of prosecutors to seek death penalty and of juries to impose it. . ." It may lead to disparities, but "to be found unconstitutional racial discrimination, defendant must prove the decision makers in his case acted with a discriminatory purpose."

Seen in this light, the Ventura jurors who exonerated the police officers were only following in the practice, embraced at the highest levels of the judicial system, of devaluing the lives and constitutional liberties of non-White citizens. The prospects for eventual justice through the federal court are far from guaranteed.

Spring Concert '92: Something for everyone

By LISA J. CURTIS
Collegian Staff

The Beasties are coming!

The Spring Concert is coming to you this Sunday, May 10, by the campus pond, has a small change in its line-up. The show, sponsored by UPC Productions, has announced that the band Black Sheep, previously part of the line up, was unable to come in order to film a video with MTV. Thus, the Beastie Boys were recruited.

Local band Rippopotamus will start off the concert to be followed by Boston's Mighty Mighty Bosstones, Firehose, Phish, Fishbone and the Beasties.

The Beasties, consisting of those crazed college kids responsible for the 80s rebel yell, "FIGHT FOR YOUR RIGHT TO PARTY!" released their new album, Check Your Head, two weeks ago.

Mike D, MCA and Adrock went into this last album with an entirely different approach. "We recorded it live as a four-piece band because we wanted this shit to be fat in both sound and attitude," said Mike D. "We went for a whole nine of fatness and I think we tipped the scales."

Fishbone hails from Los Angeles with an original style. As Kendall Jones, Fishbone's guitarist, explains, "This ain't no Bobby Brown, it's not a rap group. . . It's like a whole new radio terrorism. We play our music. We produce it ourselves. It comes from our souls. This isn't something that's sampled from somebody else's own stuff. This is our music."

Fishbone's lyrics make their case on a number of societal ills such as crack addition, racism and ignorance.

Phish are local favorites from Vermont. Trey Anastasio, 27, calling from Cincinatti yesterday, defined his band as "Something you've never heard before. People know we jump on trampolines and we play a vacuum, but that is not the band's main focus."

Anastasio, lyricist and lead vocalist, says he's been inspired by everything from Bobby McFerrin to the Flying Karamazov Brothers.

Phish's major label debut, A Picture of Nectar has songs that span the musical spectrum, including rock 'n' roll, reggae and a meticulously structured atonal fugue.

"FIREHOSE are the most powerful rock 'n' roll I have ever heard," says Ami Bennitt, Promotions Director at WMUA FM. "What other band makes an EP that covers Superchunk and Public Enemy, as well as Blue Oyster Cult and Butthole Surfers? Who says Corporate Rock has to be bad?"

The Mighty Mighty Bosstones are a nine-piece, plaid-clad group whose influences include rock, hard core, metal, reggae and ska.

For the first time in their 15 year history, UPC, the largest entirely student run production company on the East coast, will be selling tickets to the general public. Two thousand tickets are on sale for non-students. These tickets will not be available the day of the show, says Karen Signorelli, Promotions Manager for UPC.

"The whole point in selling tickets is so everyone can go to the show and not have to worry about sitting on the lawn. Every year people complain," says Signorelli.

UPC's budget for the Spring Concert this year $113,000. "We have huge expenses you would never think about," says John VanLokeren, Finance manager for UPC. "We spend $30,000 in production costs no matter what."

For the stage UPC is shelling out $10,750 and for sound between three and four thousand.

As for the bands coming, no strange requests have been put in except by the Vermont natives, Phish.

"They want dog food," says Signorelli. The Beastie Boys want nothing less than "A room with a rug, couches and end tables."

Softball sweeps Adelphi on Senior Day

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team celebrated Senior Day in style yesterday, sweeping a doubleheader from Adelphi, 5-1 and 2-0 before a good crowd at chilly Totman Field.

The wins end the 20th-ranked Minutewomen's regular season record at 31-13, 10-0 and regular season champs in the Atlantic 10.

"I'm glad for [the seniors]" said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "It's a nice way to close out their regular season home careers."

The Minutewomen now turn to defending their Atlantic-10 Conference Title this weekend in Allentown, Pa.

There is a slim chance that UMass would host an NCAA tournament game, but that is a decision the committee will make soon. UMass, which has played 10 games in the past five days, has a few days off before defending its A-10 Championship this weekend in Allentown, Pa. for that chance to become reality.

"I don't know what frame of mind I'm going to find them in [at the A-10s]," Sortino said. "They're going there to defend their title. They also have an NCAA Tournament bid on the line. If that isn't enough to put a fire under somebody's butt, I don't know what would."

The first game was truly a game for the seniors. Senior pitcher Holly Aprile, questionable for the twinbill due to an eye injury sustained over the weekend, improved her record to 11-3 as she tossed an eight-hitter with four strikeouts and two walks.

UMass jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first thanks to Aprile, who singled up the middle on the first pitch she saw, and another senior. Slugger Babara Marean, who finished the season with the highest batting average in the country, stepped to the plate with Aprile on second and hit her third homerun of the season. It was a majestic shot that cleared the fence in almost dead center field.

Aprile was setting Adelphi down to the tune of one baserunner in each of the first three innings. Adelphi rightfielder Valerie Muller walked in the fourth, was singled to second and advanced to third on a wild pitch, but Aprile got the last two hitters of the inning on a pop-up and a called third strike.

In the UMass third senior Jen Devlin hit a long triple to right center with two outs, but didn't get to cross the plate as Stacey Nichols bounced back to the pitcher.

In the fourth right fielder Angyla Brumm doubled, was sacrificed to third and scored on a single by Rachel Lawson. After Marean singled to put runners on second and third, catcher Sherri Kuchinskis blooped a single to center, scoring both runners.

A UMass softball player slides into second during yesterday's sweep of a doubleheader over Adelphi at Totman Field.

Adelphi scored its lone run in the fifth on two singles, a walk and a fielder's choice.

The fans at Totman got a good look at the future in game two as freshman pitcher Kelly Daut tossed a two-hitter with three strikeouts and three walks.

UMass again got on the board in the first as Aprile singled off the second baseman's glove and was sacrificed to second by Lawson. Marean then hit her 16th triple of the season, setting an NCAA record. Kuchinskas then brought her home with a single to right.

There was some outstanding defense played by the Minutewomen in both games.

In game one, Devlin made a great running, over-the-shoulder catch to rob Hiromi Sugiyama of extra bases. In game two Marean made a leaping snare of a liner. Secondbaseman Tracey DeEst made a nice back-handed stop of a grounder. Aprile made a nice running catch to end the Adelphi sixth.

GAME NOTES - The four seniors, honered between games with appreciation and roses from Sortino, made these comments: Jen Devlin — "It's really depressing. It's unbelievable I've gone through four years here already." Barbara Marean — "It's sad. I feel that I've done what I can do, and I feel pretty good about that." Holly Aprile — "It's just another game." Peggy Bush — "I found it very depressing. It's depressing because it's my life."

Pro basketball draft notebook: Who will do well in the NBA?

Well, it's time for the second installment of Crofts' Poor Mans' NBA Draft Handbook. Here it goes:

Up first is UCLA's power forward/whiner Don McLean. A smooth shooting stroke is what had the scouts eyeing him over his career at UCLA.

The big question is whether or not his strong senior season is enough to overcome his fragile psyche and make him a lottery pick. McLean's poor shot release reminds me of former Cletic Michael Stiff. . . I mean Smith.

Jeff Crofts

Byron Houston, a rugged power forward out of Oklahoma State, started out this past year like the NCAA insulted his mother. I mean he was awesome. However, by the end of the year, some poor performances tarnished his overall season.

At only 6-7, Houston will have a tougher time overpowering NBA players like he did college hoopsters.

It will be interesting to see if Houston has the all-around game to allow him to star in the NBA like current undersized power forwards Charles Barkley and Larry Johnson.

Stanford's Adam Keefe is another power forward who could be a lottery selection.

Standing in at 6-9, Keefe is solid fundamentally in the low post. Keefe reminds me of a young Kevin McHale with a little less presence on the defensive end.

Chris Mills, a 6-8 junior small forward out of Arizona, is a versatile talent. However, after a strong sophomore campaign, Mills slumped a little bit last year. He is definitely a talent, but his maturity remains a question.

Turning the page. . . to Notre Dame's power forward Laphonso Ellis. Ellis has the athletic talent to play in the NBA, but with an Ed Pinckney-type body, he's going to have to learn how to play with his face to the basket.

A strong senior season did wonders for Ellis' stock.

Malik Sealy, a small forward for St. John's has a vast variety of offensive moves and skills and is adequate defensively.

In the NBA, Sealy won't have to force nearly as many shots as he did at offense-starved St. John's. The big question about Sealy is if he'll maintain his explosiveness at the pro level.

Another Big East star waiting to hit the pro scene is UConn guard Chris Smith. Smith is a definite talent who must settle down a bit, and hit his outside jumper with regularity.

It will also be interesting to see if he has the ability to be the floor general for an NBA club.

Speaking of floor generals, it has been said that Memphis State sophomore point guard Anfernee Hardaway should enter the NBA right now.

Talent-wise Hardaway is ready for the NBA, but one more year of seasoning isn't going to hurt him. The one thing Hardaway has that is tough to find is the ability to make his teammates better. But he should still wait a year.

Out of the basketball hotbed of Murray State comes power forward Popeye Jones. Jones is a BIG man (6-8, 280 pounds), who uses his mass to bull his way for garbage hoops. Despite his massive girth, it is doubtful Jones will shine in the NBA if he doesn't develop a more rounded game.

Bombing away all season long for Dean Smith's North Carolina Tar Heels was the streak-shooting off-guard Hubert Davis. Davis has NBA bloodlines (uncle Walter Davis is an NBA great) and can certainly shoot the rock. However, Davis' physical skills remain unproven, so he won't be picked up until late.

You want a center? How about UNLV's irrepressible Elmore Spencer? The man can talk, but the man can also play. At around 7 feet, Spencer can dominate defensively and offensively — when he wants to. The rigors of the NBA will make Spencer play hard, and make him a solid player. The Celtics could be looking at him to eventually replace old man Robert Parish.

That about does it for the second installment of Crofts' Poor Mans' NBA Draft Handbook. In the third installment, I'll look at more potential draftees, some in the spotlight, some darkhorses. I'll also look at the chances of the three Minutemen playing pro basketball. See you soon.

Daly leaves as head man for Pistons

By HARRY ATKINS
Associated Press

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. — Chuck Daly stepped down as coach of the Detroit Pistons on Tuesday after nine playoff appearances in as many years and two NBA titles.

"It's kind of an evolution," the 61-year-old Daly said. "You just know when it's time. They need to hear another voice. Maybe they needed it two years ago. It's just time. That's all I can say."

Many thought he would move on two years ago after the Pistons won their second consecutive NBA title.

NBC offered Daly a two-year guaranteed contract starting at $400,000 and the TNT cable network offered him a four-year, $1.5 million contract.

Billy Cunningham, one of the owners of the Miami Heat, told Daly he had to be selfish this time. He had to do what he really wanted to do.

Daly, calling himself a basketball "lifer," stayed.

"What we've accomplished, it'll be a long, long time before any team does what we've done," Daly said. "But I'm confident it'll happen again here with this organization."

Daly will coach the U.S. team in the Barcelona Olympics.

Speculation on a replacement centers around former Pistons assistant Ron Rothstein. He was hired by general manager Jack McCloskey as a broadcaster this season after being fired as coach of the Miami Heat.

"It's going to be difficult," McCloskey said. "It's going to be hard for that individual, whoever it is, because we've been so successful."

McCloskey said he had a list of candidates and hoped to name a new coach before the NBA draft on June 24.

Protests continue at local colleges

By JESSICA CLARKE
Union-News Staff

Editor's note: Due to the sensitive nature of the story, the Collegian has received the permission of the Union-News to print today's story about negotiations over the future of the Collegian.

Several dozen students took over a classroom and administration building at Hampshire College early yesterday to demand a greater committment to multiculturalism, while students with similar demands at Amherst College ended their 38-hour building takeover.

The takeover of the Cole Science Center at Hampshire College marked the third student occupation of a campus administration building in this town in the week since the April 29 acquittal of four Los Angeles police officers in the beating of Black motorist Rodney King.

Meanwhile, at the University of Massachusetts, where a similar takeover of the administration building ended after eight hours last Friday, protesters gained a concession yesterday on how minority editors are elected at the Daily Collegian student newspaper.

At UMass, staff members at the Collegian agreed to a demand by protestors that the editors of the Black Affairs, Multicultural Affairs and Third World Affairs pages be selected by the staffs of those pages, Managing Editor Dan Wetzel said.

Protestors had charged that the paper's structure and choice of articles are racist.

Collegian staff members moved back into their office in the campus center Tuesday, after publishing Monday's and Tuesday's editions from undisclosed off-campus locations to avoid protesters who threatened to shut the paper down.

At Hampshire College, a group of mainly minority students occupied the Cole Science Center at about 5:30 a.m. and chained the doors.

The students' demands include hiring four part-time coordinators for Asian, Hispanic, American Indian and Black affairs and a full-time coordinator of the foreign students' organization, more office space for minority student groups, and hiring at least two minority faculty members over the next five years.

They also demanded more money

UMass ranked in report

School cited for graduating minorities

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will be listed in the May issue of Black Issues in Higher Education, ranking 12th among national universities in graduating minority Ph.D. students.

"It is incredible that we were chosen, because most top schools which graduate minority graduate students are located in the south or the west coast," said Judith S. Toyama, assistant dean of the graduate school and the director of the Office of Minority Graduate Student Recruitment.

The annual publication reports on which higher education institutions produce the most ethnic minority graduates. These minority graduates include students who are African- and Asian-Americans, Hispanics and Native Americans.

The Office of Minority Recruitment was established at UMass in 1978 and serves three functions, according to Toyama.

She said the first is to recruit minority students. The second is to keep all the statistics on minority students. These statistics include how many students are attending UMass, how many applied to be students and how many have graduated.

The third function is to help about 40 students find funding through state appropriations.

"This past year we were successful in getting funding for 13 new students," said Toyama.

The Office of Minority Recruitment was able to do this by receiving money from the Patricia Robert Harris Fellowship Fund. This fund was set up by the United States Department of Education. The total grant equaled over a quarter of a million dollars.

"Applications were up this semester and this success should lead to more applications next semester," said Toyama.

"In times of all the bad news that is happening at UMass, this is one bright spot," Toyama concluded.

In other University news, the United Asia Learning Resource Center will hold its second annual graduation celebration with two guest speakers addressing the audience.

The guest speakers are Dr. Chhor Kylin, of Cambodia, who is the deputy director in the department of public information at the United Nations and Dr. Nguyen Xuan Vinh, of Vietnam, who is a professor of aerospace engineering at the University of Michigan.

"These students, who are receiving both bachelor's and master's degrees, illustrate the high level of achievement possible through hard work, proper guidance and assistance," said Lucy Nguyen, director of the United Asia Learning Resource Center.

Story back on election trail in no time at all

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Democrat Ellen Story of Amherst hasn't taken very long to announce her plans for seeking reelection to the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Story, sworn in approximately one month ago as state representative for Amherst and Pelham after a special election to fill the seat vacated by state Sen. Stanley Rosenberg, announced last week she will run in the November general election.

Story, who faced a tough three-way fight from Amherst's Jon Hite and Pelham's Norman Page to gain the Democratic nomination for the seat in February, will run unopposed, according to a statement issued by her office.

The legislature is currently in the process of trying to decide on a budget for the 1993 fiscal year, which begins July 1. Story said she met yesterday with University of Massachusetts Chancellor Richard O'Brien and several members of the University's Board of Trustees to request supplementary funding for the University library and financial aid.

The Trustees voted last October to request $235 million for FY 1993, but Story said that was not enough money to meet the University's needs.

Story, who stressed making her campaign accessible to a wide range of people during the election campaign, said the efforts she has made have led to concrete results for the district.

"My campaign got people interested and involved — it got them excited about civic issues," Story said, pointing to the Former Soviet leader says world still divided

By SCOTT CHARTON
Associated Press

FULTON, Mo. — Mikhail Gorbachev took the lectern Wednesday at the college where Winston Churchill warned of the East-West chasm he called the "Iron Curtain." The former Soviet leader said the world was still divided, between North and South, rich and poor.

"Humanity is at a major turning point," Gorbachev said. "This is a turning point on a historic and worldwide scale."

Gorbachev spoke at Westminster College, where Churchill warned on March 5, 1946, that, "From Stettin in the Baltic to Trieste in the Adriatic an iron curtain has descended across the Continent."

He used the same lectern as Churchill. Next to it was a statue of the wartime British prime minister.

Gorbachev stood before a chunk of the Berlin Wall, painted red and scrawled with yellow and black graffiti. Before he spoke, he was presented an honorary doctor of law.

Speaking in Russian, he said the demise of the Soviet Union had exacerbated the globe's other divisions.

"The ending of the global confrontation of the nuclear superpowers, and of the ideological opposition between the two world systems, has rendered even more visible today's major contradiction — between the rich and poor countries, between the 'North' and 'South,'" he said.

"The correlation between poverty and wealth in the modern world. . . has actually deteriorated due to the profound crisis in the countries which have emerged from the U.S.S.R.," he said.

Churchill's speech hailed the U.S.-British alliance that emerged from World War II to oppose the Communist threat. Gorbachev proposed broadening that alliance to build a world that is "democratic for the whole of humanity."

Such a world could work to solve global ecological problems, crime, terrorism and other common woes that cause a "poisoning of the spiritual sphere," Gorbachev told a crowd of about 15,000.

"An awareness of the need for some kind of global government is gaining ground, one in which all members of the world community would take part," he said.

"Today, democracy must prove that it can exist not only as the antithesis of totalitarianism," he said. "It must move from the national arena to the international. On today's agenda is not just a union of democratic states but also a democratically organized world community."

Gorbachev said rigid controls should be implemented to prevent the spread of nuclear and chemical weapons, and governmental exports of conventional weapons should be abolished by the year 2000.

He drew loud applause when he said: "An agreement must be concluded between all presently nuclear states on procedures for cutting back on such weapons and liquidating them. Finally, a world convention on chemical weapons should be signed."

"But today, global climactic shifts, the greenhouse effect, the ozone hole, acid rain, contamination of the atmospher, soil and water by industrial and household waste, the destruction of the forests. . . all threaten the stability of the planet," he said.

The United Asia Learning Resource Center is an academic support office serving Asian and Asian American students at UMass.

Special awards of recognition will be given to two UMass professors.

Luis Fuentes, School of Education and Joel Halpern, anthropology, will recieve recognition awards "for their services to campus and community minority groups," said a prepared statement.

The event will focus on the accomplishments of the graduates, primarily Cambodians, who only recently immigrated to the United States, Nguyen said.

"They embody the ideal of success through education, and will serve as role models in their respective ethnic communities," Nguyen said.

SGA passes FY'93 budget by landslide

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last week overwhelmingly approved a budget of the Student Activities Trust Fund for Fiscal Year 1993, although SGA leaders said they believe the University administration will not approve the budget so easily.

The proposed total budget of $2,107,635 was passed by a vote of 34-0 with one abstention. Saying "this is the first time in a while" that a budget has passed through the senate without controversy, Budgets Chair Rob Witherell said he wasn't overly optimistic about Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jo-Anne T. Vanin approving it.

"I think Director of the Student Activities Edward Korza is going to recommend against it," Witherell said. "My guess is Vanin is going to follow along with Korza's recommendations."

Witherell said he believes conflict will arise over two major budget issues — the Budgets Committee's allocation of $52,993 to SCERA, a student advocacy organization which the SGA has not funded since FY '90, and the proposed decrease in the Student Activities Office Budget to $470,444.

The drop from the FY '92 allocation of $524,660 to SAO is attributable to the SGA's decision not to fund the presently vacant Associate Director's seat next year.

SCERA, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, was originally conceived as a body to organize the undergraduate community to research and lobby against tuition and fee increases.

However, it was shut down in the mid-1980s when then-coordinator Ellen Olmstead was accused by senate members of promoting her own political agenda over the expressed interests of the campus community, SGA officials said.

The SGA, however, has now determined that SCERA needs to be reformed. They have also said, in an April 15 memorandum from Witherell to Vanin, that SAO Director Ed Korza's suggestion that an administration-run "Super-SCERA" be formed in place of SCERA is not acceptable.

"To put it quite simply, the "S" is for Student," wrote Witherell. "There are a plethora of unions on campus, but as of now there is nothing which directly advocates the needs of undergraduate students at the Statehouse. In order to be effective in Boston, the students must have the vehicle of SCERA to mobilize against further cuts to the University."

Ted Chambers, acting Commuter Area Government president, said student advocacy is crucial in these lean budget times, and the administration should not try to block student organization.

"The purpose of SCERA is to organize," Chambers said. "It is being recommissioned to organize parents, alumni and the hundreds of thousands of people affiliated with public higher education to lobby for more funding from the Statehouse.

"If the administration says they're not willing to let students fund this organization, what they're telling us is that they're happy to keep us powerless to do anything about budget cuts."

The SGA also decided not to fund the Associate Director position of SAO currently filled by Suzanne Jean, who has been on medical leave since October. Thus, the balanced budget does not include Jean's salary of approximately $47,000 for the next fiscal year. If Jean does return, Witherell said, her salary will be paid out of the SGA contingency reserve fund.

Reserve funds may be strained in the coming fiscal year, according to Witherell, since a projected decrease in enrollment has meant that $59,473 was allocated from reserve accounts to various student organizations "so as not to cripple activities and services."

UM receives federal contract

Professors knee-deep in Salem archaeological dig

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts recently received a contract from the federal government to fund an archaeological dig at Derby Wharf in Salem.

The one-year contract, awarded by the U.S. Department of the Interior's National Park Service through the Denver Service Center on Sept. 4, 1991, is expandable to five years with an upper limit of $300,000 a year.

The University's Archaeological Services applied in March 1991 for the contract and competed against a number of archaeological laboratories.

The dig involves rehabilitating Derby and Central Wharfs, according to Mitchell T. Mulholland, director of Archaeological Services and professor in the anthropology department.

At one time, the wharf was filled with warehouses. It now has a lighthouse at the end, and is flat, long and covered with grass. Mulholland said the wharf, which is open to the public, is a popular walkway for jogging and walking dogs.

"We must be careful to leave [the wharf] open for the public while excavating," Mulholland said. "We don't want to inconvenience them in any way."

Jim Garman, the project archaeologist and a graduate anthropology student, hopes to better understand the way in which people have changed the landscape of the wharf over time. He is also interested in "finding out how different agendas have changed the physical layout of the land to what we now see as the wharf."

The federal government has operated the 300-year-old Derby Wharf, which is part of the Salem Maritime Historic site, as a tourist attraction since the 1930s. The National Park Services own the wharf and maintain it.

The first phase of the dig began in March 1992. "The National Park Service wants to take into consideration any historical site that might be below the surface," Mulholland said.

Mulholland and a team of 10 University experts began the first phase of the dig this spring with two separate two-week excavations. The group is surveying vation to see if any of the original wharf was left.

The group has found remnants of several early wharf construction episodes dating back to the early 19th century. An intact warehouse with a foundation and steps and an "interesting" stone pavement has been found, which Mulholland believes was used as an attempt to control the tide.

"They [warehouses] were important for Salem's economy and would have stored goods from all over the world," Garman said.

"The main artifacts are the foundations and remnants of the earlier wharf," Garman said. He added these remnants have allowed the group to date the site.

All the artifacts found have been fragmentary. Mulholland said he hopes to recognize their historical trade significance and style and will make recommendations about certain portions of the site. Most of the material found had originally been discarded and include such things as broken ceramic pieces.

Artifacts found will be kept by the National Park Service for display and curation. The information will be used as part of the National Park Service exhibit.

Garman said he anticipated the group would spend at least two months analyzing its newly-found data.

"The information from a project like this goes a long way," Mulholland said. The information found will be used in scholarly articles for a long time after the project is over, he said.

Future plans for the wharf include docking a 19th century ship and restructuring sample warehouses. Mulholland said the goal is to enable the public to feel what the wharf was like several hundred years ago.

This fall, the University will be evaluating and monitoring further construction sites. The UMass group will work with the construction members to "try to understand how wharf construction and technology changed throughout time," he said.

Mulholland said he first became interested in archaeology at age five. He has since pursued anthropology and received a B.A. from Connecticut College and a M.A. and a Ph.D. from UMass. He and his wife, Sue, have two daughters, Christie, 5, and Julie, 3. When not working on archaeological projects, he enjoys sailing and cross-country skiing.

Local garage is classroom for non-mechanics

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Is your car sick? That's not a question — it's a class.

Kevin Michaelson, owner of Kevin's Auto Repair in Hadley, has been opening his garage doors to students for the past five years — teaching everything from transmissions to fuel systems, as well as giving students an insider's view on how repair shops operate.

Taught through Continuing Education, the class meets for either four or six weeks during the semester. The meetings alternate between classroom instruction and under-the-hood experience at Michaelson's shop.

Before he began teaching, Michaelson said his customers were always urging him to start a training school on cars.

"They asked me to teach a course for UMass, so I did it. I was terrified at first," he said.

Now a seasoned instructor on the intricacies of the automobile, Michaelson said he enjoys dealing with students. "I like the class because people get to know you for who you are, and you don't take their money," he said.

Indeed, Michaelson is very aware of the "pay me and I'll fix it" attitude of many garages, where mechanics don't take the time to explain matters to their customers.

Michaelson, whose shop has the slogan "The alternate in the Pioneer Valley," said he takes a much different approach. A plaque on the wall of his waiting room reads:

Shop Policies
YOU HAVE
The right to know what repairs are needed and the estimated cost.
The right to Understand, so just ask Kevin. . .

Michaelson's motto is a guiding force in his class. Some of the topics he covers include how to buy used cars and the laws of garages. This allows students leave the course with greater strength as consumers.

Because the course is so short, there isn't time to do many repairs. Students are taught the basics, such as what the different parts of the car are and how they work. They can also bring in their own cars for Michaelson to "troubleshoot" during the lesson.

Student Rich Buyer feels that Michaelson's course helps relieve the confusion of unhelpful mechanics, who charge and don't explain.

"When I go to a mechanic, I always feel like I'm signing a blank check and saying, 'Here, you fill in the rest,'" said Buyer.

Another student, Diane Demaio said, "Now, when I take my car to get fixed, I won't get ripped off."

Editorial/Opinion

Problems at Collegian

There are many misunderstandings going on right now about the "protesters" against the Collegian — who they are, what they want. This is my version of events, as a white lesbian ally to the editors of color who were denied access to their desks after they led a group of 300 supporters to the Collegian office Friday afternoon.

Friday during the noon rally protesting the Rodney King verdict, an American flag was burned, symbolizing this country's lies and broken faith with people of color. Collegians were burned too, symbolizing the Collegian's broken faith with students of color. Alex Nyugen, former Multicultural Affairs Editor, talked about the paper's long history of racist coverage and racism within the staff. One story was about Pratip Dastidar, former editor from India, who endured the humiliation of running for reelection one year against his White-nominated opponent "Bozo the Clown." Pratip won by two votes. Afterwards editors of color led supporters to their paper to protest the racism they've experienced there.

Trystan Skeigh

Three editors of color spoke about the extreme racism they had experienced. One angry supporter, out of the 300 there, broke a window. The editors of color apologized to Marc Elliot because they had not intended for any destruction to happen.

To be an African-American and work at the Collegian is to go through hell, as Black Affairs editor Sondra Sutton and Black Affairs editor-elect Martin Jones explained during the protest in the paper's empty Friday afternoon offices.

They have to battle White night editors sabotaging their stories after they go home, laughing and snickering when they're not around, putting out false information about them at election time to attempt to influence the vote. Third World Affairs editor Madonmohan Rao talked about his deep pain and anger about losing the recent staff election to a candidate favored by the 95 percent White staff of the Collegian who said there was "no longer apartheid in South Africa." All the editors of color have had to endure blatantly racist material submitted by their co-workers, some of whom are blatent, dyed-in-the-wool racists.

I can testify racism, homophobia and sexism run deep in the Collegian office. Last semester I worked as GLB editor. My desk, which was home to a dismantled computer, was part of what the editors of color call "the ghetto." [Home of all six special issues editors (Black Affairs, Multi-Cultural Affairs, Third World Affairs, GLB issues, Jewish Affairs and Women's Issues)]. Located in a corner of the room, walled off from the rest of the staff with all the editors of colors' desks placed in the back, we only had one working computer.

The rest of the all-White, nearly all-male "normal" news department resided two sections away, behind another partition.

It looked, smelled, tasted and felt like apartheid. The editors of color and I yelled and screamed about it throughout last semester, but the walls stayed up until January.

Now the wall is down, but the ghetto is still in the corner, and editors of color are still in the back.

For me, working as a White lesbian ally with my brothers and sisters of color, feeling in my heart our oppressions are one in a society that teaches fear and hatred of difference, this whole protest is about journalists of color getting mutual respect, equal access and support for their work on the Collegian, a paper supposedly committed to all students on this campus, not just White, straight males. The environment needs to become safe and welcoming for staff writers of color to come down and write without feeling hated, belittled or scorned. Their work needs to be treated with the same respect by the night editors as that of the White writers. And hopefully, this paper can become a better place for GLB staff writers as well as Womens' Issues staff.

All the journalists who work for the Collegian need to become more kind to each other. The editors of color and I have experienced a lot of pain working here — we've been the butt of jokes, been the targets of a lot of cruel, cutting remarks and been the innocent victims of a lot of irrational phobic fears.

This column is only running if the nearly all-White, straight, mostly male Collegian staff agrees to open this paper up to the voices of people of color. I don't want to write for a blatantly racist, homophobic and sexist newspaper anymore.

Kennedy Thirteen victimized

The Kennedy Thirteen are the latest victims in Housing Services' legacy of tyranny, incompetence and immorality. Not only have these innocent young men been subject to the humiliation of the inane 'relocation' process, but have had their current situations thrown into jeopardy as well. Why? Because they may or MAY NOT have been involved in prior incidents of vandalism on the sixth floor of Kennedy Residence Hall.

Certainly, if a student is found guilty of vandalism, then the university has the right and the responsibility to take appropriate action. But what about Brian Johnson? He claims he was not even in the building the weekend of the vandalism in question. If this man can be penalized without any formal accusation, who else is being unjustly accused? Is Housing's criteria for punitive sanctions simply suspicion?

Apparently, Resident Director Paul Vasconcellos and Associate Director of Housing Services Anne Miller are not interested in answering that question. The Kennedy Thirteen were thrown out of their dorms only two weeks before final exams, without any sort of hearing, fair trial, or even questioning. Mr. Vasconcellos, Nazi Germany this is not.

But let's put that point aside for the moment and assume that the Kennedy Thirteen are the wild, uncontrollable hooligans that they are accused of being. Does this mean that their constitutional rights are automatically forfeited? Apparently, Mr. Vasconcellos is trying to cover up his own incompetence at failing to solve the problem by passing his own problems to other dorms. Ms. Miller and Mr. Vasconcellos, it's your duty to solve these problems, not shuffle them off to other Housing officials.

For the sake of the University community, we implore Mr. Vasconcellos and Ms. Miller to dutifully submit their resignations.

Vais is patronizing: I am a protester, not a hippie or a radical groupie

This letter is being written after reading Ari Vais' editorial. First of all, it is clear to me that there are personal problems within the Collegian that have been coming up in the midst of protests and in the midst of my involvement with protesting the Collegian. Maybe Ari Vais has faces to go along with his argument, and maybe he had personal problems as well. However, Ari Vais does not know my face, which is why I'm writing, because I don't think that he, or anyone else with an argument similar to his, knows my face.

I think there is a lot of generalizing over the actions that have been taking place. I am not a hippie, I am not part of a trend. Racism is not the political topic of the week, folks. True, there may be some sheep marching or protesting, but really: screaming, fighting, missing class, marching and continually putting forth the effort is not fun. This is about belief in change, and no longer accepting racism as an all right kink in our system. Passive behavior is what the status quo wants, and if you ask me, I think you who choose to ignore racism are the sheep. Again, I'm not some groupie radical in this for a rush. Think about the lives involved instead of trivializing us with your patronizations.

Columnist waves fond goodbye to UMass

This is it.

My last column for the UMass Daily Collegian or, The Column That Almost Wasn't.

How ironic that with all the words built into the electronic dictionary of this computer, I seem to be at a loss to pick the right ones. . .

Endings are not necessarily sad nor even bitter sweet — they are simply endings. One hears the standard litany from every senior: "My last class. . ., my last final. . ., my last meal at the D.C. . . ."

But there is a certain sameness to this observation which means that it is probably meaningless. For me at the Collegian, I have my own "last" thing.

This last column almost did not make it to press, for reasons of interest known ultimately only to historians. (A few kids who don't know how to behave tried to rip off our freedom to publish. Thank goodness we hid the machines and the computers and the writers somewhere.)

As for my own goodbye, operating under the real life pressure of a forcible takeover is probably the most eloquent way of saying so long. In anticipation of our parents urging us out of the house upon graduation, we were treated to the wonderful rehearsal by a few window breakers, who had definite ideas of easing us out of this school experience.

So I, and my fellow staff members, amid the scared frenzy of saving computer programs ("F10 And Run! Hit F10 And Run!") have been scrambling around typing articles, developing photos and designing page layouts in order to meet deadlines.

We could have walked away and said, "Great, now we have more time for our homework and our friends." But instead we put even more time into this paper. Finding ways to continue to be published, despite the inconvenience of having to move to a new location, we never walked away.

Felice Cohen

They could have taken our machines and our paper, taken the keyboards which are our pencils, and it would not have forced us to edit even a single line of what we knew the truth to be, and our duty to report it.

In other words, we've learned some grace under pressure.

Maybe that's the great lesson that we will take with us, along with our diplomas, when we walk away from UMass.

At our final Collegian meeting a couple of days ago with over 40 concerned members present, I realized what it is that makes this paper and university continue to run and remain alive.

It's survival.

After the first round of budget cuts we didn't burn down Whitmore and loot the Munchy stores. Despite tuition increases, we keep going. Professors continue winning awards, contractors continue creating buildings and eager students continue applying. Does this look like a place that collapses in the face of hard times?

Hardly.

To make a change in this world we cannot begin by fighting with each other. We learn early on that it is better to reason with words than with fists.

Whenever mobs ensue, their first targets are sources of communication. In this case the Collegian. Is this because they like to bully reporters or because they know how much power comes through words?

We, like this school, this home, this University at Amherst, have earned and now possess a resiliency and the will to proceed to become the very best we can.

Even with budget cuts, which are the equivalent of attacking an office by force, we continue. Professors will publish, students will dream and employers will continue to find that graduates of UMass are some of the single best investments in the future of their enterprises.

Thank you. Goodbye and good luck. (F10).

Felice Cohen is a Collegian columnist

Something completely unrelated to recent campus turmoil

Oh, happy spring is here! Sunny days and clear, starry nights are bound to fill our heads with sweet and chipper romantic notions. Strolling about hand in hand with a significant other, and smiling at absolutely everyone in the most maple syrupy way because you are just so filled with joy.

Someone get me a bucket, please. After little observation, even the really recently happy people are having a difficult time staying gleeful with the infamous "F" word hanging ominously in the soon-to-be-humid air. You know the word. FINALS.

Needless to say, a lot of us are already getting more than a fair share of stress over these nasty glitches in our academic careers. I would go as far to say that the overall grade point average of UMass would probably increase by at least a whole letter grade if final exams were suddenly abolished. Wouldn't it be nice if we could do away with them as easily as Amherst has done with kegs? But I am not here to gripe, I'm here to help you de-stress yourselves with my never ending helpful hints.

While it may be almost unheard of to waste an entire evening doing something that pertains to nothing academic, trust me on the one. I scrounged together some cash Tuesday night and trekked off to Northampton to see a most intense concert by my favorite alternative college band: The Samples. I elbowed my way all the way to the front of the stage, attached my ear to the nearest amplifier and danced my heart out. Of course, I'm having a little trouble hearing people who don't shout, but it was well worth it. All of the annoying frustrating occurrences that happened to me in the past two weeks were left on the dance floor. I didn't know you could headbang to a reggae-rock group, but it felt good.

Lorrie Cozzens

Perhaps you are spending a quiet evening inside reading that book you've been blowing off all semester, but are now forced to read because of the "F" word. Take a cue from my dear pal Goose, who reportedly flung his 600-page anthropology book off the sixth floor balcony upon reading it straight through to completion. It's nice to know that there is a small revenge for needing these books, no matter how trivial it appears. I take a less drastic approach and simply fling my book across the room at the end of each chapter, and each time I do, it never fails to shock the hell out of my poor unsuspecting roommate.

Invest in something stress-relieving, like those chiming meditation balls that are used to exercise the muscles and nerves in your hand. They are supposed to work very well if used properly. They come in a pretty box, too.

One of those environmental tapes does the trick just as well. A tape filled with the sounds of the ocean crashing softly against the sands with the faint sound of seagulls in the back can send you reeling into a chilled-out state of mind.

Better yet, beg or plead one of your friends to give you a back rub. I'll bet your neck feels like steel. Just be careful who is giving you the back rub. A good friend once informed me (while giving me a back rub) that 80 percent of all back rubs lead to some form of sexual activity. I jumped up mighty quickly after that. So, unless it's your intention, don't get too comfortable. (Snicker, snicker.)

Simplest of all, just laugh. If nothing else, you can laugh at the absurdity of this whole mess called college. My roommate and I spontaneously decided to laugh until we almost cried in the D.C. the other day. Even now, I cannot recall what exactly we were laughing over. I think it was something about citrus fruits. I'm sure that out of context it wasn't that funny. But it certainly was for that 20 minutes or so when we cackled to our hearts content, drawing much attention to our little table in the corner. (Much to the dismay of our other friend present, who was not laughing.) People may think you're just as crazy as a loon — whatever that means, but who cares what people think? The worst they can think is that you've lost your mind, something that is not entirely unheard of at an establishment as large as ours anyway. Just toss your head back and laugh, cackle, giggle, chuckle, snort and guffaw. Just remember to breathe.

In essence, don't take these academics so dangerously close to heart. Despite my often cynical rantings, even I can admit that it is better to be at ease. It's my belief that when your conscience is clear, you don't babble or grind your teeth in your sleep. You've got my advice now, that and 35 cents will get you a bagel from People's Market. Enjoy the weather and loosen up, babe!

Signing off. . .

California resident's reaction

What a frightening and wicked world we are living in! What started out as someone toying around with his camcorder ended up videotaping a group of White policemen clubbing a Black motorist. Soon, the videotape was copyrighted, distributed coast-to-coast and aired by every T.V. station in the country.

Eventually, the policemen were put on trial, but a verdict of acquittal a year later sparked off a race war that engulfed not only Blacks and Whites, but the entire world; in other words, the entire humanity in Los Angeles.

As a resident of California, I was saddened beyond description. This was not Johannesburg, Cape Town, Little Rock, New York or Miami, but in Los Angeles — the city of angels, the city of hope, the city of Western ideals. Needless to say, I was embarrassed and shocked. What happened in Simi Valley last week?

The message was clear. It seemed to have reaffirmed that, even in the state of California, that if you were of European descent, you belonged to a privileged class and had a state-sponsored right to dehumanize, humiliate and inflict violence against any non-European person with an absolute impunity.

Protesters: come down and write

It seems to me that I've been missing something in this latest round of protesting. Watching good friends all fired up about the absurd decision in the Rodney King case shouting their anger anywhere and everywhere. When I heard about the Whitmore takeover on Friday night, and the protesters' simple demand of more minority faculty, I was very excited. The administration has agreed to make the faculty more multicultural, excellent!

Walking around campus the past few days, listening to speaker after speaker denounce the 'racist' Collegian. I'm beginning to figure out what's missing: real issues. There are so many bigger issues this university needs desperately to deal with, why bother with an already besieged Collegian? If every protester were to write one article for the Collegian, there would be no need for any anti-Collegian rallies. I hear friends complain that the Collegian isn't covering certain issues and that they are 'stealing' university property when they moved the office. Yet, I've never seen any of those same friends' names in print.

The real question for me is, why the Collegian? Why not attack some real issues that will hit the race and class problems right here in Massachusetts? Increasing the number of minority faculty isn't going to do much good if the only place students see minorities is at the lectern. Why not pressure the administration to increase minority recruitment? Why not hit the state and Federal government for more (any) financial aid for lower-income students? This University is fast becoming a middle and upper class school, so where is the uproar about budget cuts?

If the Collegian is truly a priority for improving race relations at UMass, and not just a vehicle for the personal vendettas of a few individuals, then it should be made a priority for those existing groups on campus who deal with racial issues.

On the other hand, if the Collegian is just a convenient target for student rage, then we must refocus our energies on long-term change. Such as a more diverse faculty, more minority recruitment and more accessible financial aid.

Over my four years here, I've watched student organizations come and go. Each spring they take over a few buildings, and each fall all is forgotten. I've seen the PSRU fight the SGA, the Republicans fight the LBGA, and everyone fighting the Collegian. If this latest round of protesters wants to leave a lasting organization, they should organize around real issues, instead of just fighting other students.

Channeling the energies raised by the King verdict into fighting an RSO is only a dead-end. Let's fight the real causes of our problems, a government that consistently cuts higher education, financial-aid, welfare, public housing; a government that is dividing us into black and white, have and have-not; a government that is trying to get us to fight ourselves to protect its own power. Let's make a real impact, not just fight against ourselves.

Hullo . . .and goodbye. No, it ain't over 'til it's over; negotiations will be continuing today, tension is getting less heavy, which is a relief for everybody. You and I, my friend, have tomorrow as our last day together. It's been amazing — live long.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Time for another Notes from the Campus Center Basement. I know, you're all thinking it's going to be another boring column, well you may be right. Then again you could be wrong. Anyway, I'm new to this writing stuff, I'm normally a photographer. It seems they were real desperate for people to do this — I mean they had to be – they are letting me write it.

First I think I will ask some of those questions that you only think of when it's real late at night. WARNING: this may look like a test.

- 1) What does the edge of the universe look like?
- 2) What's beyond the edge of the universe?
- 3) What is the ultimate question of "Life The Universe And Everything?"
- 4) Why Ask Why?
- 5) Why not?
- 6) Who asked me to write this column?
- 7) And what were they on?
- 8) Which picture would the last 10,000 words printed in "The Collegian" represent?
- 9) Who names the culinary delights that are served in the D.C.s?
- 10) Is there life on any other planet?
- 11) Does it wonder what the answers to these questions are too?

The answers to these questions — you want answers? HA HA HA — there aren't any. If you do have one, especially to numbers six and seven, please let me know.

Now for my next bit of random rambling. To those of you building the elevator in ECE 305, good luck and do you know where all your wires are?

Have you ever noticed that almost all of the rallies on campus happen at "Noon on the Student Union Steps"?

Matt Kahn

Also, what ever happened to the People for a Socially Responsible University — did they get trapped in the hole in the ground that is now Knowles Engineering Building? After they took that over they completely disappeared. Next on Geraldo, "PSRU: The Real Story" did they disband, or were they buried alive when Knowles was built?

I can't think of anything to write right now. So I think I'll fill up some space with my three favorite quotes from various staff from through the semester.

- 1) "Excuse my moronic question." — Dave
- 2) "When you shoot a mime, do you need to use a silencer?" — Jeff
- 1) "Photos are our friends" — Dan

Well what did you expect — I'm a photographer, remember. And speaking of that, I have message for all of the people who's pictures I took that didn't get in the paper, "FRED."

Here's a bit of information that y'all could probably use about now — Spring Concert is this weekend, finals are coming soon and Puffers Pond is a nice place to go and relax if you're stressed. A nice way to study is on a hammock stretched between a couple of trees, especially now that it's warm enough.

Now I'd like to make a request of the people who are responsible for closing the Hatch each night — if you guys could dim the lights briefly five minutes before closing, those of us studying there would appreciate it, we don't like trying to find all our stuff in the dark. Thanks. Now to all the other people who are there studying that late, get some sleep!

Now for a quick "Hello" to my housemates, John and Kimberly. Hi!

And finally on a serious note, this is a message to all of the people in the area protesting things. Do you really know why you are protesting? Do you know what you hope to change? Have you thought about what the results of the changes you are asking for will be? Do you know what the motives of your leaders are?

Canine Bastards reflect on music, life

BY ALYSSA R. MARCHESE
Collegian Staff

The evening that I spent talking with the Canine Bastards provided me with an experience I will likely relate to my offspring. Why? Well, think about this. When was the last time you were in a room surrounded by five people who know how to whistle along to the introduction of "Tapioca Tundra" by the Monkees? How many people do you know who can sincerely appreciate Sammy Davis Jr. singing the theme to "Shaft?" And can you count among your relatives a member of the cast of the made-for-TV tragedy "The Boy in the Plastic Bubble?"

In between rapidly fired jokes and obscure television references, this interview was just barely conducted with those boisterous boys. Individually, they are vocalists Sharkey Favorite and Butterfly Styles, drummer GeeP, guitarist Joeman and bassist Peterbonz. Collectively, they are Canine Bastards, a temporarily transplanted Amherst band whose "Naked and Loud, Vacant and Proud" attitude has earned them a faithful following in the area, as well as in Boston.

Originally from Boston's North Shore, Canine Bastards began performing together about three years ago, playing random-yet-seminal punk rock covers, which Joeman describes as "the easiest songs we could play."

The band relocated to Amherst in 1991 to sporadically attend UMass, with the exception of two members. "Butterfly was on an overseas lark," says singer Sharkey. "And Bonz was still wearing his buckles in high school. The rest of us were prim and proper, ready for college."

According to GeeP, Canine Bastards are influenced by everyone from ABBA to Zappa. But they don't want to talk about their influences. They's rather talk about near-death experiences.

"At the Battle of the Bands in Southwest," explains GeeP, "Bonz got so excited near the end of our set, he threw his bass in the air, and as it came down, it landed directly on Joeman's cheekbone. I honestly don't think he's ever recovered since that day."

Electrocution, as well as airborne items like full beer cans and lightbulbs have also caused certain members' lives to pass before their eyes. "Maybe we need chicken wire, like the Blues Brothers," GeeP muses.

Canine Bastards have three EPs, including It's Big, now an unofficial collector's item. Their 1991 EP Stitchgobbin was produced by former Boston Rock guru Joe Harvard in Roxbury's now-defunct Fort Apache South studio.

"The Pixies record Come On Pilgrim was one of the first albums recorded there," says Bonz. "And Stitchgobbin was one of the last."

The band will resume studio work next month with the producer of their 1990 EP Lum, Dan Isaacs, with one exception, says Sharkey. "This time we'll have complete artistic control." Their new EP will be entitled Da' Milk.

Are all these technical facts getting dull? The Bastards think so too. They want to talk of loftier, more spiritually oriented things, like a) famous people they've met and b) famous people they've seen naked. "I've met Mickey Dolenz and Davy Jones," boasts Sharkey. "And I've seen the Drifters naked. They sing "Under the Boardwalk." Not to be outdone, GeeP chimes in that he's met Don King, "and I have the pictures to prove it. I've also seen Mojo Nixon naked twice," he continues. "On two different occasions. Months apart."

Canine Bastards want you to disregard whatever you've heard about them, and go and see them play live. "Even though there's a lot of buffoonery, we're a tight band, and we're proud of our music," says Butterfly. "But you have to see us live to get the joke."

You can help make their dreams come true (like Laverne and Shirley) by checking them out this Saturday, May 9 at the Central Spring Fling, with Bim Skala Bim. Both gigs start around noon and are free.

Theatrical lo's and highs of semester past

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

With another semester of student theater over, and the polls closed, Tales of the Lost Formicans has proven to be the stand-out production — the only show in recent memory to combine comedy, drama, aliens and blowtorches, and still have time for a dilly bar. Now, let's take a look at some of the highlights and lowlights of the theatre season past.

Best Star Turn: Joan Jubett, for her sensitive and rewarding portrayal of a harried divorcee in Formicans. Runner up: Frank Daniels, whose carefully-shaded performance rescued a somewhat convoluted script in Like Them That Dream.

Best Theatre Without Words: Brick (Robert Corddry) touching Big Daddy's (Joseph A. Mulligan) shoulder in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof. Director Michael Puopolo proved that actions sometimes do speak louder than words.

Best Dysfunctional Family: Cat's vicious and vacant Pollit clan, who elevated greed to an art form. ("Do I smell mediocrity?") Runner up: the unnamed Buried Child family, which featured a psychopathic one-legged man, and a lumbering half-wit straight out of Deliverance.

Best Transformation: Lynda Newton, who went from a simpering British stagehand in last semester's Noises Off to a willful Southern Belle in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, to a sex-crazed Northern Teen in Unspoken Thoughts. Is there a role this woman can't play?

Most Pious Fraud: The Christopher Columbus Follies, which endlessly berated its audience for using plastic products, only to close the show by unveiling a 10 foot puppet made of (what else?) plastic. Uh, guys. . .?

Best Diamond in the Rough: Steven Matulewicz, whose brooding performance as the corrupt Judge provided one of Sweeney Todd's few delights. He can sing too!

Busiest Actor: Robert Corddry, who starred in Tales of the Lost Formicans, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, and Unspoken Thoughts and still managed to find time to eat and sleep. I hope.

Best Excuse For Seeing a Kid's Show: Are You Ready My Sister? which featured winning performances, great music and impressive shadow puppetry.

Funniest Tunester: Bradford Potter, who composed the whimsical score for In My Abyss, and dazzled audiences at Working Titles with his hard-rocking "Acoustic Panic."

Finally, the coveted award for Best Bird Impersonation goes to Ed McCarthy, for his hilarious "flamingo" dance in In My Abyss. What more could anyone want?

Minutemen head to A-10s as pro scouts await

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

When Ron Villone of the University of Massachusetts baseball team said after last week's home finale loss to Siena, "This is the last time we're gonna lose all season," he said it like he meant it.

The Minutemen won their next game against Northeastern 5-3 thanks to Jay Dodig's eighth inning homer Tuesday, ending the regular season on a positive note. So far, so good.

"It was nice to win there," said UMass captain John Carelli, a former Husky player. "It's always nice to beat (Northeastern head coach Neil) McPhee." UMass embarks on its journey to Boyertown, Pa. today, ready to take on the best in the Atlantic 10. Rutgers, West Virginia and George Washington round out the teams competing in the A-10 Championships. UMass will play GWU on Friday at 7:35 p.m.

In other UMass action, Villone was invited by Team USA coach Ron Fraser to the Olympic trials June 8-14 in Millington, Tenn. Villone is one of a select forty collegiate players who will compete for a roster spot on the U.S. baseball team that will be playing in Barcelona, Spain this summer.

The one problem with the Olympic trials is that they fall exactly one week after major league baseball's June 1st draft. By then, Villone may be off playing rookie league or Class A ball.

Peter Gammons of The Boston Globe reported Sunday that Villone has already received his Topps baseball card contract. Topps is the biggest manufacturer of baseball cards in the country, and is undoubtedly waiting to take Villone's snapshot for its "Top Draft Picks" series after the fateful June 1st draft.

Speaking of the draft, there are a few other Minutemen players who could be get a good look from pro scouts this weekend, and could be drafted. Villone is a lock at one of the top five picks in the first round, but a few other players need strong outings in the A-10s to assure themselves of professional contracts.

Steve Corradi, the Minutemen's big bat, will probably end his career at UMass by the end of this month. Corradi, a junior, is a fleet outfielder with a smooth stroke, and has started every game since his freshman year. A pro contract awaits him, if not this year, then next year for sure.

Rich Graham needs a strong performance this weekend, and a repeat of last year's performance in Boyertown (a complete game 6-hitter) will help his cause. Although not an overpowering pitcher, Graham uses his slider and curve effectively. Scouts won't be overly impressed with his velocity (low to mid-80s), but if they stick around, they will be impressed by his grit.

Jeff Toothaker has been one of the team's biggest surprises this season, notching a perfect 6-0 record with his deceptive sidearm delivery. Toothaker, a junior from Lunenburg, may need another year in college. Scott Meaney and Jim Telgheder are potential pros also, but probably need another year.

Seniors Carelli, Lou Olivieri, Jay Dodig and Rob Graziano will be playing their final games this weekend, unless the Minutemen grab the automatic berth to the NCAA Regionals.

Ron Villone has had both a Topps baseball card contract mailed to him and an invitation to the U.S. Olympic trials in the last week. He's pitching Friday at 7:35 p.m. in the A-10 Tourney.

Poor Man's guide to the NBA draft: the finale

Okay, it's time for the third edition of Crofts' Poor Man's NBA Draft Handbook. Today I'll look at more players who are in the spotlight for some big schools and some lesser-known talents for smaller schools.

Also, I'll look at the pro chances of the three graduating Minutemen: Anton Brown, Will Herndon and Jim Mcoy.

Tracy Murray will be announcing soon whether or not he'll be entering the draft or returning to UCLA. Murray has one undeniable talent — he can shoot the rock like there's no tomorrow.

Murray plays a very similar game to a former UCLA star and now Indiana Pacer star, Reggie Miller. It will be interesting to see if Murray will work as hard as Miller has to develop a better overall game.

Dennis Johnson's alma mater, Pepperdine, has produced a player who will definitely be heard from come draft day. Doug Christie, a small forward, plays a Scottie Pippen-like game, who should be given a chance to show off his all-around game.

Bryant Stith, another small forward, excelled in the tough ACC, while playing for Virginia. Despite his six-foot-five inch frame, Stith is a winner who can like Christie, do many things well.

Jeff Crofts

Anyone who saw the Umass-Syracuse NCAA battle is well aware of the Orangemen's six-foot-seven inch David Johnson. While a great talent, Johnson's lack of bulk will prohibit him from playing the same game in the pros that he did in college.

Tom Gugliotta, a six-foot-ten inch forward from N.C. State, has a game which has been improving consistently since he was a freshman. His size and impressive shooting touch should make Gugliotta a mid-first round pick.

Other players to watch out for include Ohio State point guard and floor leader Mark Baker, Wisconsin-Green Bay's point guard and shooting machine Tony Bennett, Lasalle's diminutive guard Randy Woods, Depaul's paper thin forward David Booth, and Arizona's huge Sean Rooks.

Now about the three Minutemen. Anton Brown looks like he could eventually make the NBA as a Kelvin Upshaw-playalike.

Will Herndon's lack of size will hurt him, but perhaps some time in the CBA or USBA will allow Herndon to work on or show off his other skills to get an NBA team interested.

Jim McCoy's jump shot, athleticism and first step should get him some interest from an NBA club—it's just a question of whether or not he works hard enough on the other parts of the game to stick.

Here's a prediction though — Harper Williams will make the NBA in two years. That does it for this year's Crofts' Poor Mans NBA Draft Handbook.

Women's crew rows to gold at New Englands

The women's crew team rolled in the New Englands last weekend. Overall, the women finished first in points and dominated opponents, including MIT.

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

This past weekend at the New England Championships, the University of Massachusetts women's crew accomplished the inevitable: a gold medal in both novice races and the varsity final, along with the overall point trophy awarded to the top school in the women's division.

The UMass varsity women, led by coach Stefanie Moore, finished second in the heat, which qualified the boat for the finals.

The qualifying heat was not a good row for UMass, but the top two in the heats advanced, giving the boat another chance in the finals.

"In the heat, we did not have a good row, but we changed what we needed in order to compete in the final," said team member Jennifer Lambert.

The UMass women fixed what was wrong in the period between the heat and the finals as they defeated URI. In the first heat, URI had defeated UMass to advance to the finals.

The varsity final proved to be a fight in which no boat pulled ahead until the last twenty strokes.

UMass and URI battled neck and neck as the two leaders began to pull away from the rest of the pack. Every stroke was contested as the two crews approached sprints.

However, in the end, it was the strong sprint by UMass which gave them the victory over URI, Tufts and Wesleyan.

The victory not only meant a gold medal for the UMass women, but a top six seed at the Dad Vail Regatta this weekend.

"It gives us a better position strategically for the Vails," Lambert said.

In attaining the overall point trophy, the UMass novice women A boat had a solid row in defeating Tufts, Coast Guard and Williams. The UMass novice B boat also won, defeating M.I.T, Tufts and Williams.

The UMass varsity men's boat succumbed to the dominant crews in the heat, failing to qualify for the finals. However, UMass competed in the petite finals, a consolation race for the boats who did not qualify.

UMass controlled that race early, and continued to dominate throughout. In the end, UMass finished ahead of Wesleyan, seventh overall.

"If we row as well as we did in the petites, we have a good chance of medaling at the Vails," said varsity member Steve Duval.

In other races, the UMass novice lightweight men finished fourth, behind Holy Cross, Boston College and WPI.

The JV women finished in fifth, with Wesleyan the eventual winner, and the JV men finished fourth, with Coast Guard the eventual winner.

UMass crew travels to Philadelphia this weekend for the Dad Vail Regatta, in which the league championships are contested by over 100 schools.

"UMass crew is making improvements every day, and we're very excited about the varsity women's chances at the Vails," Moore said.

Collegian staffers evacuate offices

Marjorie Decker, participating in negotiations on the future of the Collegian, addresses the community.

By JESSICA CLARKE
Union-News Staff

Editor's Note: Due to the sensitive nature of this story, the Collegian has received the permission of the Union-News to print today's stoury about negotiations over the future of the Collegian.

Negotiations between the staff of the University of Massachusetts" Daily Collegian and protesters whyo contend that the paper is racist turned ugly yesterday afternoon when protesters reportedly stormed the student-run newspaper office and threatened staffers.

Meanwhile, about 50 minority students who took of the Cole Science Center at Hampshire College remained in the building for a second day yesterday while negotiations continued.between administrators on demands to increase hiring of minorties. At press time, Hampshire spokeswoman Lee Wicks said there were no new developments to report.

Collegian staffers said last night they were shaken by whet they described as a takeover, and that they were dicussing the possibility of a mass resignation and the possibility of starting anew as an off-campus publication next fall.

"It was disgutsting and scary," said Collegian Editor-in-Chief Marc Elliott, speaking last night from a secret off-campus location where the paper's last issue of the year was being compiled. "I don't feel the staff of the Collegian will ever feel safe in the Campus Center again."

There were no injuries in th incident, said Collegian staffers.

Managing Editor Daniel Wetzel said that nearly four hours of the negotiation, in a Campus center meeting room, over Collegian policies turned sour after weary negotiators attempted to terminate their talks for the day.

"One gentleman from the audience said 'You can't leave, the people won't accept this' and then, they stormed down to the offices," he said.

"It got very violent," said Collegian reporter Christina Rothwell, who had been working on a news story when the protesters arrived.

"I was very scared, people were being physically harassed."

But Dean of Students Sharon Kipetz, who sat in on the negotiations yesterday, said that the reports of physical harrasment were being exaggerated by the students.

"It got loud, people raised their voices," she said, adding that she did not see any physical confrontation between the two groups.

"This has been a very difficult process," she said," she said. "Unfortunalty it is goin to take a little longer to resolve."

Conflict between the two groups began Friday when a demonstration at the Collegian offices resulted in frayed tempers and a broken window.

The Friday demonstration was an offshoot of a rally protesti9ng the aquittal of four White Los Angeles police officers charges with beating Black motorist Rodney King. later Friday, about 150 prtester occupied the Whitmore administration building for about nine hours untila the administration agreed to hire 10 minority faculty members over the next three years.

"This was uglier," said Wetzel of yesterday's incident. "They were grabbing [Collegian staffers] and throwing them to the ground.... Violence is not the answer to this."

After the Friday protest, Collegian staff, fearing the shutdown of the paper, moved their operations to secret off-campus locations. On-campus production of the Administration plans to layoff 28 professors

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts announced yesterday the layoff of up to 28 employees in academic departments in order to cover a budget gap caused by cuts made last year, according to Provost Glen Gordon.

The administration hopes that alternative positions will be found for 17 of the 28 positions slated for cuts. "I regret having to make this announcement," said Gordon. "It's especially distressing because we haven't had the budget turmoil this year as we have in the recent past.

"However, despite this false feeling of stability, we still have financial problems dogging us from the last round of budget cut s," Gordon said.

Cuts will affect 5 professional and 23 classified positions among the School of Public Health, College of Food and Natural Resou rces and the School of Public Health.

This recent round of budget slashes will save the University $607,270 for Fiscal Year 1993. Gordon said he hopes the University will be able to realize the savings of cutting positions while moving some of the targeted e mployees to vacancies which need to be filled.

Although 57 professional and classified employees were laid off last year, the administration eventually reassigned 32 of those employees to other positions.

Gordon, the University's chief academic officer, said this round of layoffs is a result of a $20 million budget shortfall in FY'92. The campus raised tuition and fees to erase half of the gap and ordered budget reductions in both the academic and non-academic areas to cover the rest.

The academic area acheived its $5 million share of cuts by severely reducing support accounts by $1.3 million and by using one-t ime funds in order to avoid disrupting the 1991-92 academic year.

Those revenues are not available for FY '93, and in the face of no additional state revenues for FY '93, the academic area had to turn to faculty attrtion savings (an anticipated $3 million from approximately 60 faculty positions becoming vacant) and staff lay offs to make up the difference.

Gordon said he hoped no further cuts will be neccessary for the fiscal year beginning July 1. Robert G. Helgesen, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, said that despite the layoffs, which include a number of farm support workers.

in the department of veterinary and animal sciences and the department of plant and soil sciences, the college "remains firmly committed to its agriculture program and will continue to support a farm operation."

Gordon also said the South Deerfield dairy and Belchertown Horticulture Research Center will continue.

In addition, University administrators also agreed on Friday to increase the number of minority professors on campus from 142 to 152 within three years.

In fact, for the last seven years, the University has been successful in recruiting minority professors -- on average, 10 new minority professors have been hired each year since 1985.

An account set up five years ago was designed to attract minority professors to departments which suffer from minority under-representation.

Exhibit explores the Gulf War

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

Iraq is still suffering from the effects of the Gulf War as a result of the United Nat ion's sanctions which prevent Iraq from buying food and medical supplies, according to Jill Castek, who spoke at the Student Union Ballroom on Monday night.

John Schuchardi, who stood up to George Bush in a church against the war in Kennibunkport Maine and visited Iraq, also talked. A ttorney George Nassar and his son Micah, both visited occupied territories in Israel.

They also joined the panel. And Francais Crowe , an area representative of the American Friends Committee, added to the discussion.

Jill Castek spent three months in Iraq soon after the War delivering medical supplies, donated by priva te organizations, to needy hospitals throughout Iraq. She is now touring the nation with her photo exhibit, Through Iraq Eyes, which is being held at the Cape Cod Lounge today.

"These pictures show what was not covered on television," said Castek. According to Castek, 50 percent of the children are starving from malnutrition. "750 children die a day as a result of the United Nation's sanctions," said Castek. "Cleaning and sanitation supplies could not (and still cannot) be imported or manufactured. I saw infants in soiled beds, dying in their own diarrhea."

It is a military estimate that 70 percent of the United State's missiles missed their targets. Iraq's water treatment plants and electric generators that were hit during Speech spurs city riot

Deposed Haitian president speaks

BY KETHIA NAZAIRE
Mass Media Staff UMass Boston

As I stood in line in front of Roxbury Community College, waiting to get inside the gymnasium to see deposed Haitian president J ean Bernand Aristide, a riot broke out between Aristide supporters and about 11 detractors.

I spoke to Evelyn Prophet, one of the people on the anto-Aristide side. She stated tha she had no problem with the Aristide gove rnment per se but she did have a problem with the embargo taht he was encouraging the international community t9o impose on Haiti.

The Aristide partisans overpowered the demonstators with their chants that "Arsitide is Life." One of the things that brought a smile to my face wwas that a policeman, there to keep peace between the two sides, started to chant, "Aristide, Aristide."

It kind of stunned me because he was not a Haitian cop. Finally I went inside the Art Center of Roxbury Community College and wa ited anxiously to see the president whom tne Haitian people had put so much faith in.

When he finally appeared, there was a surge ofexcitement, exemplifying the popular Hatian analogy that Aristide equals democracy and democracy brings life. For democracy will br ing an end to the death squad killings that are so rampant in Haiti today after to September 30 coup d'etat.

President Aristide received an honorary associates degree in arts from Roxbury Community College. The president of RCC, Mr. Hubi e Jones, stated taht Aristide is not only the president of Haiti, but of teh whole Western Hemisphere; he does not just speak for th e plight of the poor in Haiti, but throughout the world.

President Aristide also received a citation for his leadership of the Lavalas moverment. The president of the Haitian club at RC C presented him with a plaque praising him for his outstanding work with homeless orphans as a priest, and for his continued work wi th the Haitian resistance.

The representative of the African National Congress in Massachusetts, Themba Vihkazi, addressed the audience. Vilikazi linded te h struggle for democracy in Haiti with the struggle in South Africa- for one person to have one vote.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Gayle Long's final farewell to friends and neighbors

Well, it's the moment you've all been waiting for — my last column.

I always wondered if writing my last column would be like accepting an Academy Award. I'd say after this week, it's more like writing a living will.

There are some people I have to thank, so here goes:

• I'd like to thank all of those who make a multicultural education possible — there are more bigots coming out of this place (against every group) than coming in.

Regardless of what those sexist pigs preach — the ones who think they are for equality (read: men's equality). You must remember, of course, women in most non-industrial countries (the ones classified third world) are not given the right to vote, own property or the right to stand up to their 'oppressed' husbands.

• I'd like to thank the 'conservatives' who turned out to be okay after all the nasty things I used to say about them. They are pretty interesting people — although I don't agree with everything they say. They're fun to chat with, and okay by me.

• After four years at this place, I can safely say there is more of a problem with people screaming about this newspaper than with the other problems, such as budget cuts and financial aid. What a bunch of morons.

• I'd like to address one more thing about the multicultural atmosphere we are told we have to uphold; it has nothing to do with journalism. The weird thing is that all of the people who want to keep their 'politically correct' friends in office have no desire to cover their communities, only to purport their political agendas.

These people have no clue what it takes to run a daily newspaper, or to work here 40 hours a week. To them I say — thanks, but NO thanks.

• I have to thank all of the people who worked with me this year — without them, I would have forgotten what teamwork is all about. Thanks, you crazy people, for your strength, support, morals, ethics and dedication. Friendship, I know, will last forever when you are passionate about the same things. Friendship, therefore is OUR struggle — to become reporters and best we can. The most important thing to know is who we really are. No one can take that away from us. No one.

Gayle Long

• To my roommate and all of the people I know outside of the Collegian and who still talk to me — a million thanks. How could you put up with me after argument after argument about what this newspaper is all about? I guess after the arguments ran out, I had nothing else to talk about. Pathetic, eh?

• Thanks Mom and Dad. My education was invaluable, to say the least.

• Special thanks to all the professors who cut me a break because of all the crazy things that happened to me over the past four years — and to those who actually made me earn my grade. It was worth it.

• I'm sure this is not the first time, but Thank God for Newman. Father Quigley, if I ever make millions, you can come knocking — I owe you and the rest of the great people there. (I hate to break this to you, but as a journalist, I'll never be rich.)

• Thanks, Dr. Scott. You know why.

• My grandmother gets honorable mention for always being happy to hear my voice on the phone. Thanks, grandma.

• Side note: thanks to all the journalism majors who sat in my classes and trashed the Collegian instead of writing for it. I hope you are unemployed.

• I have to thank Preston for telling all new staff members: "The two things you never talk to Gayle about are unions and the telephone company." Very wise advise.

• Tamir, thanks. You've got to be happy about this.

• Finally, thank you to my best friend in the entire world. Thanks for showing me the only boundaries are the ones I put up myself, and forcing me to believe in myself. Your faith in me is astounding. Thanks for always being there. I love you more than you'll ever know.

And these, my friends, are my parting words — as Felice says, "F10 and run!"

Gayle Long, a weary, tired Collegian columnist, bids everyone good-bye

Using journalism and the truth to fight the true fight

This past week on campus, and around the country, I have seen how the judicial system isn't just. I've also seen that dispite the Civil Rights act of the 60s, we are still a racially divided land, with problems and ignorance deeply rooted in our country.

I've spent the last week fielding death threats, and insults because I believe The First Amendment is one of the avenues to creating a truly colorless society.

Everyone agrees that institutionalied racsim is present at this University which of course means the Collegian has those very same problems.

Peoples of color, for which firmly consider myself one, are feeling the frustration and anger of centuries of racsim. The Puerto Rican Community have long been the brunt of rascsm of evry kind.

The first time I was called a "spic" I was nine. Not Knowing what it meant, I asked my mother. She just told me to forgeet about it. And I did, but it happened again. And being nine, I thought that's the way things were.

But as I grew and learned that ignorance and racsim are interwoven into our society, a society that was strenghthened economically through slavery and genocide. If you've never seen an American Indian reservation and how native Americans are treated — then you need to.

David Rivera

Our problems here are very old and complex. The University has to do more than just promise ten new faculty of color in just three years.,

From what I hear 20 will most likely leave in that three years time.

In one of my classes I asked my fellow students at what age were they when they had their first non-white teacher or professor.

No one, out of 20 students, had ever had a teacher of professor of color until college, and most said they never have had one. That's a critical problem in our educatonal system and if we don't work to change it, then in we'll be back right where we are.

As a student of journalism I hope to go into the world and make a difference in the media. I want to see changes in my life time that will effect the good of all people. I might be naive in thinking that I can change the world with my pen, but I have to try.

Where do we go from here? I have never seen such frustration and outrage, I look at those who follow the Bullhorn pack and see no difference in from those that follow the media pack.

Who makes the decisions? Who's telling lies? Who's distorting the facts we all have to look at ourselves and and honestly ask: "Am I a racist?".

Two years ago I lost a dear friend to street violence. There was a question whether it was racially motivated. Did I want to know that? Will I change if it was. These are the questions that I asked myself — and no it wasn't racially motivated. But it did change my thinking.

David Rivera is a Collegian columnist

The picture the public will never be allowed to see

Yesterday I was assaulted and my life was threatened. I am the current photo editor at the Collegian. I was locked in the Collegi an darkroom with another staff member. Only the loose hinges on the door and a half-inch of fiber board separated us from a demonstr ator who threatened that we would not leave the offices alive.

For me, these were the results of yesterday's negotiations. At 5:45 p.m., after the closing of our second negotiation session due to time constraints, hostile audience members ran to the Collegian offices.

Josh Reynolds

The managing editor, the news editor, and several other members of the staff were confronted by demonstrators who a ttempted to physically force them back to the negotiation table.

Being a photographer, I reached for my camera to get photographic proof that demonstrators were verbally harassing, physically i ntimidating, and committing assault and battery in the name of peaceful demonstrations and negotiations in good faith.

Before I coul d raise my camera, I was confronted by a man obviously physically stronger than myself who tried to bat the camera from my hand.

"What are you going take a picture of?" he demanded. "You aren't going to take a picture of this." That constitutes not only ass ault, a physical threat to my person, but is an obstruction of the freedom of the press and an attempt to prevent the true picture f rom being seen.

Luckily, another staff photographer managed to take a few shots before being chased by a group of 20 into the protec tion of two nearby police officers.

The entire anti-Collegian protest has been dri ven by two-faced demagogues and supported by a vicious slan der campaign of half-tr uths, unjustified accusations, and facts distorted to suit the purposes of those more interested in advancing their own personal agendas than telling the whole story.

They are not journalists — they are advocates. They are more concerned with retaining their soap boxes and excluding points of view which do not agree with their sense of public relations. They are not concerned with reporting the news accurately and allowing the readership to draw their own conclusions.

The Collegian is not a public relations firm — it is anewspaper. For now.

A member of the opposite panel said to the Collegian representatives at the negotiations: "You all are some of the nicest guys d own there and honestly I don't think our problem is with you." Our panel representatives make up half of the Collegian editorial sta ff. If we aren't the problem, then who is?

This same member of the opposing panel sexually harassed a member of the Collegian staff to the degree that she was too embarrassed to return to the negotiating table on the second day.

I challenge any member of the opposing panel to point out any racist, sexist or discriminatory behavior of which I am guilty. Ye t on the opening day of negotiations, I was hissed by members of the audience for stating that I was not defending racism and wantedto work towards a solution.

I admit that discrimination exists at the Collegian, as it exists throughout society, but the Collegian is only a symptom of a larger problem. There are no easy fixes. If there were, they would have been discovered long ago.

The dealings we have had with the demonstrators in the last two days were not negotiations — they were a witchhunt. The present staff of the Collegian has been accused of and held accountable for not only events taken place before we were at the University but also the inherent flaws in our society.

Selective memories, closed-minded intolerance intimidation, backstabbing and insensitive ignorance are not character flaws uniq ue to white straight males.

Collegian staff chased off campus once more

We, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian staff, have once again been driven off-campus by the inability of the admi nistration to deal with the very serious racial problems that persist at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Our strongest desire at this point is to avoid further violence on campus linked to this matter, and we believe strongly that fu rther negotiations would not neccessarily accomplish much more than escalated tension and emotions.

Our goal throughout this ordeal has been to try to hear and resolve the community's problems and concerns while still producing a daily newspaper for the community. However, our efforts to participate in good faith negotiations with concerned members of that community have unfortunately resulted in great distress to both parties, and attempted impedement of the production of a daily paper.

In addition, the staff of the Collegian strongly believe that the apparent disinterest of the administration throu ghout this short yet tumultuous ordeal has been shocking. We are appalled at the lack of attention given to a matter of such importa nce and delicate nature. We hereby condemn the abandonment of the community's struggle by the administration.

Racism on this campus is but a taste of the disease rampant throughout America, crippling it from the inside out. We sincerely h ope the administration's inaction is not an indication of how racism will continue to be dealt with by America. Ignoring the problem does not diminish it, and disinterest is deadly.

America is a sewer of racism. Racism is so deeply entrenched in the day to day existence that it will take continous struggle a nd a relearning of what it means to be a human being to finally eradicate it. The tradition of racist values will be eventually repl aced with a tradition of humanity.

Our strongest hope is to be a part of a world like that in our lifetime. We, the (ital) Collegian (ital), are tired. We are growing weary of answering for a problem much larger than us or those protesting our operations. We are tired of trying to be students and journalists while being responsible for the world's most debilitating and sickening disease.

Peace.

Professional protesters ruin my Thursday night

I've been at the University for almost two years now, but no matter how much I keep seeing it, it never fails to surprise me when I walk by the the Student Union and see the professional protesters out there, rallying for this cause or that one. At UMass, the causes may change, but the protesters stay the same.

Unfortunately, I wouyld've loved to fill my last column of the year with positive notes. I would've wrote of how the whole paper would miss Gayle Long, the Collegian's matriarch, and how much the paper would improve for the Fall. And then I would've put my editorial pen down; for good.

Michael Morrissey

You see, I felt that although I had only written for one year, I had pretty much said what I had to say, and that, quite frankly, I was getting on people's nerves in and outside of the office. I was worried about doing more harm than good.

And the [expletive] went down. That's the only way I can describe it. A few professional protesters saw the verdict of the Rodney King incident as a vehicle to propel their own agendas. They successfully shoved their agenda down Whitmore's throat last Friday night, and they were attempting to do the same to the Collegian on Sunday.

Fortunately, we did what we had to do. We moved our equipment and kept printing. The charlatans stole our papers and your First Amendment rights on Monday, but we were undaunted.

You see, certain people tried to distort the issue of race. I think it's an issue of hidden agendas.

I saw this whole charade, this committee, a corrupt coalition of different interests. There were some protesters that were professional graduate students who thought that they could represent the 17,000 undergrads. Other rabble-rousers weren't even students but were telling the students to destroy our campus and stop the paper. Why would someone 28 years old want to be the "spokesperson" for the 19 and 20-year olds at UMass?

Because they want a forum. They want to use the pages as a personal soap box to tell us all what they've learned while being a student for the last seven years.

These people have said that they represent their community, but when we offer to let their whole community vote for an editor they want, these propagandist editors refuse.

I thought the pages were started in order to represent the community. That was our intention, and that was their intention. So if the community wanted a good representative, they should have a right to vote, correct? Wrong.

These rabble-rousing protesters don't want to represent the communities they write for, they want to lead them like lemmings off a cliff. But these charlatans stay on the cliff, saying, "My, what a view."

You see, I don't understand this protest movement. I don't understand the coalition of convenience. I don't understand why non-students are leading students in an issue between other students. I don't even understand the drugged masses being led down the primrose path.

I guess what I want to say is this: for the past year, I've written what I wanted because I wanted to. I wasn't looking for followers, and I didn't care if the readers agreed with me or not. I don't believe in being a follower, I believe in critical thinking and self-reliance.

And it made me think: If those professional protesters have been around forever and will be around a while longer, spreading lies and crying "racist" towards us and trying to stop the students First Amendment rights, then it's not time for me to stop writing editorials. Not just yet.

We need to hear both sides. I have to keep writing, if only to give someone, anyone, an alternative to the professional protesters. I gotta write about how I feel, even if it doesn't change a gol-darned thing. Maybe it will; I don't know.

Decide for yourselves. If we're all racists, don't read us. But don't let some protesters who've been at college for eight years now dictate what you're gonna do. Don't decide with only half the information. Think. That's why you came to college. I can't quit now, even if I piss people off. You have to hear both sides, and then make up your minds.

I don't care much if you believe in my views or not, and my editorials may not change anything. But I'm gonna keep trying. I have to write on what I feel. That's the First Amendment, and that's what the U.S. is all about.

The next day, about 15 to 20,000 people wited anxiously in front of City Hall Plaza to hear from Aristide "that the Haitan peopl e elected to bring democracy to a country that has been ruled for so many years by tyrants."

From 6:30 p.m. until 7:30 p.m. there was a multitude of artists that kept people entertained. Ratrick Lacroix and his dancers ga ve an outstanding performance. Lacroix sang "Pacompren'n on kapab empeche soleil leve (Don't think that you can keep the sun from ri sing)" and then President Aristide strode up to the podium The crowd stood on its feet and started to scream "TITID, TITID."

When th e crowd finally quited down, the president rreceived a proclamation from the mayor of Boston. It was presented to him by Mr. Yves Da mbreville, a Boston policeman and the mayor's liason with the Haitian community of Greater Boston.

"Jon va, jou vien, jon alle, jou vini, jou saa ah" (it refers to the joy that the people will feel when he returns to Haiti), st ated President Aristide in his opening remarks. Aristide also stated the role that the church should play in reinstating democracy i n Haiti.

Aristide paid tirbute to Antoine Thurel who had immolated himself in front of the State House. In a note that he had left, he d eclared that Father Aristide was the only leader that can bring the demmocracy that Haitans so yearn for.

Collegian resumed Wednesday.

Collegian staffers who participated in the negotiations yesterday said that progress between the two groups was being made, but then members of the audience got out of control.

According to Wetzel, the protesters agreed burying the first half of the negotiaitons to submit a letter of apology for calling him a racist.

The latter half of the negotiators covered the protesters' demands that ta women's issues page be reinstated at the newspaper.

Also yesterday, the Civil Liberties Unionof massachusetts issued a statement noting that while those who critisize the Collegian have a constitutional right to voice their concerns peacefully, the newspaper has a right to publish.

Physical threats to Collegian staff members or obstructing publication of the newspaper wouls violate the state's civil rights act, according to the statement.

the Iraq War, still have not been fixed, according to Castek.

"I saw children wading up to their knees in sewage and they can't rebuild," said Schuchardt. Many civilian buildings were destroyed. A large community center in Ameriya, near Bagdad, that served as a shelter ignited into flames when hit by a U.S. missile.

About 900 women and children were burned to death at 4:30 a.m. on February 13, 1991, according toCastek.
Only 358 bodies were able to be recovered from the ashes, Castek added.

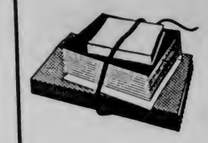
"That evening was an Islamic holiday, everyone was invited to use that shelter," said Castek. "The basement was used as a hospital."

According to Castek, hours later after the bombing an Iraq General showed CNN the entire shelter.

"You never saw that on T.V.," said Castek. The story about how the Iraqi Army was taking babies from incubators during the war, was a lie made up by the U.S. government, according to Schuchardt.

"U.S. bombing of electric plants has unplugged life from all life - support," said Schuchardt. "I believe that people are slowly putting this all together," said Crowe. "Britain and the United States were the only countries in the United Nations that voted to keep the blockade."

"The power structure gives us in the United States a feeling of helplessness, because it is failing us," said George Nassar. I urge everyone to write to their legislatures to end the U.N. sanctions," said Castek.



What is a Textbook Buyback?

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

When is the next Textbook Buyback?

The end of the semester Textbook Buyback is:

at the Textbook Annex:

May 13-15, 9:00 am-4:00 pm
May 16, 11:00 am-4:00 pm
May 18, 9:00 am-4:00 pm

RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT SIGINING INFORMATION

Important, Please Read Very Carefully

The University requires all students living in the residence halls for the Fall 1992 semester to sign a 1992-1993 Residence Hall Contract Card. Any student wishing to live in the residence halls for next fall should be aware of the following:

- Residence Hall Contracts and Contract Cards were mailed to you in your residence hall on or about April 22, 1992.
- Contract Cards must be completed, signed and returned to the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore, by no later than Thursday, May 21, 1992.
- Assignments for students failing to return a signed Contract Card by May 21, 1992 may be subject to cancellation.
- Students returning Contract Cards in person will recieve a "Contract Receipt". Students who return Contract Cards by U.S. Mail must use Certified Mail Return Receipt Requested. Returning a Contract Card by either of these methods will ensure a receipt for your records. It is for this reason that we strongly advise against using Campus mail.

If you still have questions about Contract signing procedures, call or stop by the housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore (545-2100).
Thank you, and have a great Summer!

DOONESBURY

By GARRY TRUDEAU

MR. PEROT, IF I COULD FOLLOW UP ON THE DRUG WAR ISSUE, IT'S BEEN REPORTED YOU ONCE SUGGESTED CORDONING OFF MINORITY NEIGHBORHOODS TO CONDUCT HOUSE-TO-HOUSE SEARCHES...
WELL, NOT EXACTLY...
WHAT I WAS TRYING TO SAY IS THAT IF YOU'RE FIXING TO MAKE A LAW ENFORCEMENT OMELETTE, YOU BETTER BE PREPARED TO BREAK EGGS, ESPECIALLY THE BAD ONES!
THE KIND OF CAMPAIGN I WOULD WAGE AGAINST DRUGS WOULD BE MASSIVE, RELENTLESS AND TOTAL! WE WOULD TAKE NO PRISONERS.
WELL, THAT SHOULD RELIEVE THE OVER-CROWDING.
HEY, IT'S JUST A COLORFUL FIGURE OF SPEECH!

CALVIN AND HOBBES

By BILL WATTERSON

HERE'S AN AD FOR A NEW GUM CALLED "HYPERBUBBLE," AND IT SAYS, "IF YOU'RE NOT CHEWING HYPERBUBBLE, YOU MIGHT AS WELL BE CHEWING YOUR CUD." OOH, GREAT COPY!
GOSH, AM I COOL ENOUGH TO CHEW HYPERBUBBLE? MAYBE I'M NOT! MAYBE IF YOU CHEW HYPERBUBBLE, YOU BECOME COOL!
OR MAYBE IF YOU CHEW IT, EVERYONE ASSUMES YOU'RE COOL. SO IT DOESN'T MATTER IF YOU ARE OR NOT! WHAT DO YOU THINK? SHOULD I BUY SOME?
IF YOUR EMOTIONAL SECURITY DEPENDS ON SATISFYING A NEED YOU DIDN'T HAVE UNTIL YOU READ THE AD, GO AHEAD.
I THINK I WILL! BOY, I'M GLAD I GET THIS MAGAZINE!

JIM'S JOURNAL

By JIM

Today Tony and I played darts at one of his hangouts.
He complained about the plastic ribbed dart board because the darts didn't always stick in it.
Then he hit the bullseye with a dart, but it bounced right off. "That was in!" he said. "That was in!"
Then he asked if he could have the points for it anyway.

JIM'S JOURNAL

By JIM

Today I was thinking of driving really fast.
It was like one of those video games where you drive a car.
I kept going faster and faster screeching around curves and oil slicks.
I wanted to keep going, but my imagination kept crashing the car.

JIM'S JOURNAL

By JIM

Today I played some classical music on the radio.
Mr. Peterson slept on top of one of the speakers, like she sometimes does.
I was going to wash a load of clothes today.
But all the washing machines were being used.

ADVENTURES OF FRED

By CHRIS SHADOIAN

WELL, THIS IS THE LAST STRIP FOR THE SEMESTER AND FLESH AND I JUST WANT TO SAY...
HAVE A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR!
WHAT?
HAVE A GREAT SUMMER! -Sandy

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Mom! We were all singing 'She'll Be Comin' Around the Mountain,' but Randy won't stop with the 'whack, whack' part!"

Quote of the Day

FROM AN UNDISCLOSED LOCATION WITHIN THE COLLEGIAN OFFICE - No, I don't understand the whole situation either, but I do know there are better ways of achieving a goal.

Regardless, we present this space's Last Waltz for the current semester and if my professors cooperate, we shall return.

• Applications are now being accepted for a UMass hockey coach and for an athletic director. We propose Bobby Orr oversee both positions. 'Walk softly but carry a big hockey stick.'

• You know things are all screwed up when my first blurb is about hockey.

• I'm awaiting arrival of my brain from Syracuse, where I returned this past weekend (Sunday to Wednesday is the new weekend) to do an in-depth expose on the bars.

Talk about sore losers. We made one simple toast to Harper Williams and the bartender decides to shut us off. So we toasted John Calipari in the next bar. Still more jeers. We were running out of bars by the time we got to Francois Firmin. Nice place to vi sit, but I wouldn't want to be an Orangehead.

David Scott

• Wouldn't it be nice to see Da Bulls Da-molished by Da Knicks?

• I guess the hockey strike is over, but I still have reason to believe the games being shown are from last year's Stanley Cup playoffs. No one would even know.

• Admit it, there could be nothing more fitting than Larry, Kevin and Robert bringing home the banner. Let's not over look the accomplishments of Reggie, Bags et al (minus Stojko who is about as useful as chewed gum).

• Some of you seem to be under the impression that I sponsored a losing team in Haigis Hoopla II. Maybe you are the same people who judge winning by the final score. Listen up and maybe you'll learn something.

When I assembled my world-class team of Kevin 'Give me a pain killer' Miller, Greg 'Ball-handler' Alexander and Tamir 'I play better in the afternoon air' Lipton I was looking for lovers of the game. Guys that would give me 110 percent, who would dive for every lose ball and who would use all their fouls.

I've never been more proud. Well, that's a lie, when my dog, Bo learned to roll over I was so overcome I cried. Thanks for y our time and effort. All three of you are fired. You'll never work in this town again. Bums.

• The surprise of the Hoopla had to be The Time-Outs, a group assembled at the last minute made up of Matt 'Hulk' Hogan, Mark 'I'll Hack 'em' Hashem and Rich 'Look at the elbows he's throwin" Cohen. This was the team I originally had hoped to spons or but Cohen was already under contract with Nike.

• Get the feeling Mike Hodges stepped into the lion's den when he accepted the head coaching position? The entire foo tball situation is in total disarray and the rift between alumni and administration officials is only adding to the problem. Why can't we all just live together?

• Looks like my horseback riding career is quickly winding down. After my disheartening last-place finish in the Kent ucky Derby it might be time to call it quits. I'll still train horses in the finer points of eating carrots and grass, but the ridin g days are over.

To Becky and Heather I must say thank you. I came in as a tremendous prospect and if it wasn't for minor setbacks (read:hang overs) I'd be well on my way to the Triple Crown.

• Word has it that Mark McGwire has twice as many homeruns as the entire Red Sox. My mother (you remember The Shirl) has twice as many stolen bases as the Red Sox. Should be an interesting summer.

• Spanning the campus this week we find a most intriguing softball team by the name of 'Don't Stop at Third.' Get you r mind out of the gutter, it's their aggressive base-running that makes the name so appropriate. Lauren Doyle and Marci Blacker lead his team in stolen bases.

• Patriots mini-camp already? Playoff-bound baby. • John Calipari hasn't officially signed his new contract yet. Getting nervous about next year's tie contest? • If you need me I'll be with Garth Brooks, wearing a stetson and riding the range. Keep your feet in bounds. Enjoy.

UMass plays in Atlantic 10 Tournament for NCAA bid

Minutemen to face George Washington in 1st round

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Is the third time the charm?

For the past two seasons, the University of Massachusetts baseball team has travelled to Boyertown, PA for the Atlantic 10 Tournament. For the past two seasons, UMass has lost. Arch-rival Rutgers University provided fatal blows in the last two years, and the Scarlet Knights will be there again.

UMass head coach Mike Stone has taken the Minutemen to the A-10 Tournament in 4 of his five seasons. But he has yet to go to the big dance — the NCAA Regionals — and if he doesn't do it this year, he and his team could have the "can't win the big one" stigma attached to them.

The tournament is double elimination, and last year the Minutemen needed only to win one game in the championship to advance to the NCAAs. They lost a double-header to Rutgers, and the Minutemen went home.

It's put up or shut up time for UMass as they face West Division champion George Washington (23-24, 12-4 in the A-10) tonight at 7:35 p.m. UMass lefty Ron Villone will start for the Minutemen, and Matt Aminof (7-1) is the Colonials' probable starter.

The Colonials are slumping, having lost three out of their last four games. But Aminov is the key for the Colonials, along with the Colonials' bash brothers, Allen Browning and Mike Welch. The two have combined for 29 home runs and with Bear Stadium's short fences (380 feet to center), they will pose a threat.

Welch is first in the A-10 with 17 doubles, second in batting with a .424 average, and his 13 homers also place him second in that category. Welch will see time either in the outfield or at first base.

Browning is first in the Conference with 16 home runs. He also has 16 doubles, good for second place. Browning will patrol the outfield for the Colonials.

"George Washington is a quality team, year in and year out," UMass captain John Carelli said. "They'll be tough."

The Minutemen will face either Rutgers or West Virginia on Saturday, depending on who beats who. Rutgers is probably the stronger team, and UMass could face the Scarlet Knights for the third year in a row.

UMass is well acquainted with the Rutgers squad, and there is some bad blood between the two. Last year at the A-10s, Rutgers players called Stone in his hotel room the night before the deciding game and said, "You're gonna lose."

Stone didn't complain. "They were right. We lost."

Rutgers has their pair of home run hitters in third baseman Jay Marchase and right fielder Angel Echevarria. Both teed off on Villone the last time they faced each other.

Echevarria is a sure draft pick, even though he is only a junior. Expect Marchase to be drafted on June 1st also.

The pitching satff of Rutgers has done the job, and they are riding a six-game winning streak. Mike Barckley (5-3, 2.73 earned run average) is their number one starter, but the Minutemen will probably see Neil Ioviero (6-1) if they play on Saturday.

Steve Corradi crosses home plate as John Carelli prepares to congratulate him in a recent Lorden Field contest. The Minutemen will compete in Boyertown, PA this weekend for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Although the pitching staff is young (there are no senior hurlers), they have big game experience. Still, the Minutemen have done what no other big team has done: they've beat the Scarlet Knights.

Doug Alongi and Doug Meiner are Rutgers' top hitters, with averages of .352 and .344, respectively. Rich Graham will have to shut down the Scarlet Knights on Saturday.

West Virginia is the fourth team in the tourney, and they could upset Rutgers if Dan Barry (7-1) has a big game. If not, the Mountaineers will have to slug it out, with only Bill Reep (10 HRs) as bait.

The Minutemen have the pitching to win the A-10s, the only question is whether they can get by Rutgers. The split in the regular season sent a message to Rutgers, according to Carelli.

"The split didn't neccesarily show that we have the momentum, he said. "But it proved that we can play with Rutgers and that we can bounce back."

Red Sox fail to capitalize on walks, lose 7-6 to White Sox

15 free passes not enough to hold onto 6-0 lead

CHICAGO (AP) — Not even walking 15 Boston batters could keep the Chicago White Sox from winning their fifth straight game.

Donn Pall, Scott Radinsky and Bobby Thigpen pitched shutout relief as the White Sox rallied from a 6-0 deficit created by 10 walks in the first two innings to beat Boston 7-6 Thursday.

"I don't think a team ever feels it is out of a game," White Sox manager Gene Lamont said. "A lot of times it has to do with who is pitching. If your pitchers can hold 'em, you can kind of feel it. The key is to hold the other team down and our pitchers did just that."

Joey Cora's sacrifice fly in the sixth drove home the deciding run after starter Matt Young had squandered a lead presented him by the wildness of Charlie Hough and Wilson Alvarez. Chicago pitchers allowed only six hits.

"The White Sox are a tough team," Boston manager Butch Hobson said. "They just keep pecking away." Pall (1-1) went 3 1-3 innings, allowing two hits and striking out four; Radinsky went 1-3, and Thigpen retired one batter for his seventh save.

Hough lasted a third on an inning, wasking home three runners and giving up ne hit. Alvarez walked Tony Pens with the bases loaded to make it 4-0 in the second. a one-out single by Herm Winningham and four straight walks by Alvarez produced two more runs.

But Young gave up three runs in the second on Frank Thomas homer, his second: and RBI double by Shawn Abner and Craig Grebeks in field single, which drove home a third run.

The White Sox tied in the third. One run scored on Young's wild throw attempting to force Thomas at second; another on a double play. and the third on Abner's RBI single.
